CERTAINLY—WHY NOT?

I am ever warring against secrecy. Perhaps we will some day gain the victory.—M. MATHIESON, Sacorro, N. Mex.

OUR GREAT MISSION.

Whoever in any way supports the Christian Cynosure, Chicago, Ill., serves God, his country and his fellowmen. Every colored subscriber helps to redeem his race from bondage. Ignorance, the saloon, the lodge, and caste are the colored man's worst enemies. That paper opposes all these. Fill your community with copies of the Cynosure.—The Aurora, Knoxville, Tenn.

GOD'S HAND IS IN IT.

The paper (Cynosure) is like the weekly visits of an old friend, highly prized, and generally read before any other paper. Sometimes I think anti-secrecy work moves very slowly, and secret societies are constantly iecreasing; but it is surely God's work, and I pray that he will speed it on.—MRS. M. W. BINGHAM, Mallet Creek, Ohio.

"HONORABLE MENTION."

The India Watchman for May thus refers to Rev. Dr. Carradine's sermon on secret orders in St. Louis, recently published in this paper: "Some heavy shots against secret societies have been given by a leading Methodist in St. Louis, in his sermons. His D.D. does not mean 'Dumb Dog.' See Isaiah 56: 10."

THE A. O. U. W.—INSURANCE ORDERS.

There is quite a revival in the discussion of lodgery in the West, and especially during the past year as to the A. O. U. W. as an insurance order. Who can tell us what the order is, and what are its oaths or obligations? Will some one write, through the Cynosure, giving Scripture proof that God is pleased with life insurance companies, even without secrecy. Does such insurance harmonize with Psalm 37: 3; Jer. 17; 5 and 49: 11?—W. C. NORVAL, McCook, Kan.

OBITUARY.

REV. JEFFERSON R. JOHNSON

was born in Butler county, Ohio, December 29, 1808, and was married to Miss Elizabeth B. Ashlands, April 28, 1829. Through his wife's influence he was converted in September, 1829, and united with the Methodist Episcopal church the same fall. In the autumn of 1836, he emigrated to Logansport, Ind., and, eight miles north of that place, helped to build up a church. In the fall of 1859, he removed to Fort Wayne, Ind., where God wonderfully blessed him and his labors in his cause. In the summer of 1860 he moved to Iowa, and was licensed to preach January 28, 1865, at Burlington, under the pastorate of L. B. Dennis. In the fall of 1879, he left Morning Sun, Iowa, and returned to Peru, Ind., where his wife died, February 1, 1880. About two years afterward, in April, he removed from Peru to Washington Territory, landing at La Conner, Skagit county. On the 5th of May, 1882, he was united in matrimony to Miss Sarah L. Wallace, at Whatcom, and with her he lived happily until his death. In the following September he was sent as a supply to Dungeness Circuit, Clallam Co., Washington, which station he filled with great acceptability. During his ministry he was a burning and a shining light, filled with Christian zeal and everyday piety, enjoying the fellowship of the Holy Spirit and the love of God. He was strongly opposed to all secret societies, believing them to be contrary to the Word of God, utterly opposed to the church of Jesus Christ, and inconsistent with Christian living and our republican government. His death occurred at Morning Sun, Iowa, May 15, 1891. His affectionate wife and six children, the fruit of his first marriage, mourn his loss.

"Gone to the grave is our loved one,
Gone to the silent tomb;
Now when we meet,
We never shall greet
This loved one again in our home.
He has gone down the valley—
The dark death valley;
His face we shall see nevermore
Till we pass down the valley,
The dark death valley,
And meet on the other shore."

LITERATURE.

The sixteenth volume of Alden's "Cyclopedia of Universal Literature" begins with a notice of Fitz James O'Brien, the Irish-American poet, journalist and soldier, who died from a wound received in the war of the Rebellion, in 1862—and 116 other noted authors, ending with Rabelais. The work is peculiarly one for the times, both in contents and condensation, and serves to introduce and perpetuate the biographies and writings of literary men and women whose fame the world is not willing to let die. Its price places it within the reach of nearly all classes of readers, and professional men will find it extremely convenient for ready reference. Published by John B. Alden, New York and 242 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

A cluster of eight able articles maintains the high literary and religious character of the Evangelical Repository for June, and these will attract the thoughtful reader and insure their careful perusal. They are: The Necessity of Religious Work Among the Negroes of the South, Rev. T. L. Cook; The Gospel for Wealth, Bishop Henry C. Potter; The Worth of the Old Testament, Canon Liddon, D.D.; Christ's Power of Observation, Rev. Dr. Selah Merrill; Recent Egyptian Explorations, Rev. Dr. H. B. Tristam; The Revival of Ultramontanism, Rev. Dr. Philip Schaff, and How to Deal with the Indians. T. J. McKalip & Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Craig Press, Chicago, will shortly issue a book entitled, "Chicago's Dark Places," personal investigations by a corps of specially appointed Commissioners, superintended, arranged and edited by a prominent reform worker. The book has comprehensive chapters on poverty and the poor, saloons and their habitues, theaters, concert halls and museums, immoral dives, the social evil, procuresses and abductors, obscene books, pictures and advertisements, etc.; together with observations on the making of criminals, the agencies of reform; with suggestive remedies as to the removal of the evils which exist. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly for June, has for its frontispiece a finely tinted cutting of "Clothilde Soupert," a dainty specimen of the Rose family, accompanied by an interesting paper on rose culture. Other illustrated articles are "Our Native Plants, II.—The Indian Turnip;" "My Amaryllis Plants;" "The Chinese Sacred Lily;" "Greenhouses," and "Potato Rot," etc., with considerable other interesting and timely matter. Rochester, N. Y.; published by James Vick.

The American Garden for June has a portrait and sketch of the late Lawson Valentine, formerly of the Christian Union, and a great variety of timely Horticultural papers and notes. The illustrated articles are: The Gardens of Newport—I., L. D. Davis; The South in Summer, James K. Reeve; Economic Plants of Japan, continued, Prof. Georgeson; The House Garden, R. Shore; Crossing Raspberries, and Windfalls. New York: The Rural Publishing Co.

The Norfolk and Western Railroad Company is distributing a pamphlet edition of articles printed originally in the American, Wool, Cotton and Financial Reporter (Boston, New York and Philadelphia), on "Sheep Husbandry in Virginia," setting forth the advantages offered to wool-growers in that State. It can be obtained by addressing Charles G. Eddy, V. P., N. & W. R. R. Co., Roanoke, Va., from whom we have received a copy of the pamphlet.

The June number of the African (monthly) "devoted to all Africa" and its development, begins a new series. Readers interested in African Missions will find in its pages much to entertain them. Dr. C. E. Welch, publisher, Vineland, N. J.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. THOMAS H. STOCKTON, D.D.:—Religion is as open as the sky and bright as the sun. As a man, an American, and a Christian, I love true manhood, true Americanism and true Christianity too well to approve of secret institutions of any kind.

L. L. HAMLINE, Bishop M. E. church, in his diary, 1848: "North Ohio Conference has progressed very rapidly till this time, but Masonry and Odd-fellowship have arrested us." At another time: "I have enjoyed and suffered much during its session. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil."—Life, pp. 323, 4.

A. M MILLIGAN, D.D :—Thus I have shown that Masonic oaths and obligations are not obligatory; that God has no part in them; that they are a profanation of his ordinance of the oath, and a usurpation of the prerogative of government under the wrath of an insulted God and the ban of outraged society: a great sin to make them but no sin to break them.

REV. J. P. LYTLE, D D.:—We could fill a volume with extracts of the same tenor, showing, as these have shown, that Freemasonry is a distinct and positive religion with a promise of salvation; yet rejecting and denying the Lord Jesus; a religion which claims to have borrowed its principles and rites from those heathen institutions so abhorrent to God and corrupting to men.

REV. JOSHUA BRADLEY, a renouncing Mason:—A lying spirit is abroad, and speaks through all Masonic presses, and this spirit influences all who hate the truth, and will make them wax worse and worse, till sudden destruction shall overwhelm those workers of iniquity, to the astonishment of every beholder. Then Masonry will rise no more to trouble Zion, and spread delusion and death amid civilized nations.

C. B. WARD, missionary in India:—When men get saved out here they get out of the lodge of necessity. We are personally acquainted with a barrister, a doctor, a locomotive fireman, a station-master on a railway, a principal of a high school, a commissary officer, a military officer, and others who when saved at once quit the lodge for Christ's sake without any one saying much to them. The evil of the institution is too apparent to need pointing out in India.

JOSEPH S. CHRISTMAS, Pastor Bowery Presbyterian church, New York, 1830:—If these remarks should meet the eye of any follower of the Redeemer who still worships at the altar of Masonry, I beg him once more to consider whether, imposed on by the mock solemnities of the lodge and the pompous pretensions of the craft, he is not really attempting to effect a concord between Christ and Belial; and whether he does not owe it to the souls of Masons, to the honor of the church of Christ, and to the good of mankind, to come out and be separate.

DRS. LEONARD WOODS, EBENEZER PORTER AND THOMAS H. SKINNER, Professors at Andover to the Massachusetts Legislature:—Praying for a full investigation into the nature, language, ceremonies, and form of rehearsing extra-judicial oaths in Masonic bodies; and if found to be such as the Memorialists describe them, that a law may be passed prohibiting the future administration of Masonic, and such other extra-judicial oaths, as tend to weaken the sanctions of civil oaths in courts of justice; and pray also for the repeal of the charter granted by this Commonwealth to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.

REV. MOSES THATCHER:—Our Saviour declared to the Jewish high priest, "I spake openly to the world; and in secret have I said nothing." What now would be thought of the church if she should "tyle" her doors, impose obligations in secret, and place a perpetual seal upon the lips of her members? Would it any longer be believed that her sole object is to promote the religion of the Gospel? Now if the church, which is the purest body on earth, could not and would not be trusted as a secret society, who can blame conscientious and judicious men for drawing the conclusion that any secret society, of whatever description, is altogether unnecessary and cannot exist without becoming an object of suspicion, if not an engine of wickedness.

COLLEGE FRATERNITIES.

The press reports are giving us the usual list of college barbarisms. Year after year, with slight variation, we have the accounts of drunken brawls which disgrace our institutions of learning. They seem to spring, in general, out of a desire to be smart and funny on the part of young men who do not know how, and who accordingly blunder along into cruelties and outrages which the college authorities are unable or indisposed to prevent.

The specific instances this year are not superior in quality to those of the past. A young man is being seized by members of another class who desire to prevent him from attending a supper. He shoots and wounds one of those who are seeking to kidnap him. The disturbance continues until the police are summoned to quell it. A number of college students are having a banquet in a Boston hotel. Wine flows freely and certain of the revelers seek to force their way into private rooms. They are ejected from the hotel, the proprietor being reported to have said that they cannot turn his house into a brothel if they do belong to the best families. On another occasion some twenty students hire a tally ho! coach for a ride into the country. They compel the driver to ride while some of them drive. He objects to their lashing the horses along the road. They organize a court, try him for insubordination, tear his livery off from him, batter him, throw him over a fence and leave him to get back as well as he can. They drive into town, the coach damaged and the team injured.

A group of several hundred New York students attend a theatre. They shout, stamp, whistle, sing and pelt the actors and actresses with cabbages, turnips, potatoes, etc. They are ejected, but remain about the stage entrance until the actresses come out, when they pursue them through the streets, until citizens open their doors and receive the frightened women. In New Haven, a menagerie is parading the streets for the purpose of attracting attention and securing custom. The college students are said to gather on the streets blowing fish-horns and pelting the animals with torpedoes until the attendants are almost unable to prevent a stampede of the procession. Of course, had it occurred, life would have been endangered.

And now, as a fitting finale to a week of such dispatches, comes the news that the police, breaking into the rooms of one of the Greek-letter societies of an Eastern college, find liquors enough to stock a large saloon. Twenty-five members of the society are fined $65 each by a justice's court for maintaining a liquor nuisance. We do not, of course, know how accurate these reports are. They come in the telegraphic columns of the daily press. We do know, however, that secret fraternities exist in all the schools from which the reports come, and that the tendency of such societies is toward just such abuses as are indicated. Youth is hasty and foolish, but young men do not naturally organize in drunken mobs. Open societies, subject to all the restraints of publicity, while they would not prevent all evil, would at least not foster and promote it. In order to run a saloon stocked with wines, beers, whiskies and other liquors, college men need a secret society. If the endowments, created by pious men, and the buildings erected by their generous gifts, are to be devoted to the uses of such well-dressed rioters, it will raise serious questions as to the real value of the college.

It is not to be forgotten that there are hundreds of gentlemen connected with these institutions, who have no part in such proceedings; that the rioting minority are more conspicuous than the law-abiding majority. It is to be hoped that the societies which train young men for such exhibitions may be prohibited by all college authorities. Thoughtful readers of these reports have also observed that the rule is that institutions discredited by such students are generally wealthy, are, or have been until recently, exclusively for young men, and are in most instances near to large cities. Each one of these facts may be significant. We need at this time multitudes of colleges, near to the people, for men and women, not so heavily endowed as to foster idleness and speculation, not so large as to prevent acquaintance and supervision, outside of large towns, and free from secret organizations.

PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

How shall righteousness be established and evils overcome? As always, so now and in the times to come. It is by the performance of personal duty that God's kingdom is extended among men. How frequently are we tempted to say: "If the church would unitedly do its duty, the world would be saved; if all voters were intelligent and honest, political corruptions would end." But the church has never unitedly done its duty, and all voters are not intelligent, nor are they all honest; yet the evils that blight and ruin have some of them passed away; good things which once were not, now are.

Noah was one man in a world of lost sinners, yet he perpetuated the race and the knowledge of God. Abraham was only one man, yet simple obedience and faith made him the father of the faithful, and one in whom all the nations of earth should be blessed. Paul was only one man, yet he carried the standard of a new faith through the known world, and his words echo through millions of human hearts to this day. Luther was only one man, yet he broke the chains of ignorance and superstition which bound down the inhabitants of Europe. Knox was but a single man, yet he drove the priests and nuns out of Scotland. Washington was but one man, yet he was the hinge on which turned the destiny of the new world.

These words will probably be read by five thousand people,—men and women whose heads are silvered and whose steps grow feeble; middle-aged men and women bearing the burdens of the religious, social, and political world; young men and women filled with lofty aspirations and looking out with trembling eagerness over the wide tossing ocean of human life. There is danger that these immortals shall fail of the work which they may do, by unbelief. The only victory that overcomes the world is our faith. The man with the drawn sword whom Joshua met, is Captain of the Lord's host. He has made his plans, disposed his forces, knows all the resources of the enemy, and intends utterly to destroy him.

As Babylon is buried, and Tyre is a place for spreading nets, and Egypt is the basest of the kingdoms, and Jerusalem is trodden down of the Gentiles, and Macedonia is divided, and the iron scepter of Rome is broken; as the liquor business has become detestible, and slavery has been destroyed, and absolutism dwindled, in "Christendom" to Russia, so lodgism, and the legalized liquor shop, and the tobacco business, and commercial oppression, and slavery to amusement and fashion, and slavery to vice and crime, also are doomed. Nothing can save them. God is against them. Good angels are against them. Pure men and women are against them. The wrongs of the poor and oppressed cry out against them. The sorrowful faces, the bloated faces, the tear-stained faces, the hunger-bitten faces, the wan and wasted faces of women and children, are testifying against them. Satan is for them. Demons are for them. The skinny, clutching fingers of avarice are with them. The lusts and passions of evil men are on their part, but they are destined to the pit.

The day may linger, but it will come. The foot of evil men and corrupt institutions will slide in "due time." When Belshazzar's feast is spread, in that same hour will Belshazzar be slain. Thank God, the time will come when no honest poor man will be hungry, when no little child will reel from the blow of a drunken father, when no pure wife will suffer at the hands of a licentious husband, when no rotting nobility shall prey upon the toilers of nations. God's plans were laid in eternity, and they are working out perfectly. He is not a man that he should lie, nor the son of man that he should change his mind.

Meanwhile, what have we to do? Nothing but daily duty. The home altar, the prayer circle, the place of worship, the ministry to the sick, the gift to the school, the testimony against the iniquity, the day of honest toil, the song of praise, the voice of thanksgiving. We do not have the duty of others to do, the accounts of others to give. "Every man shall give account of himself to God." Each one who reads these words will, if he so live, be a light shining in the darkness, salt preserving the earth from putrefaction, a member in the body of Christ, doing his work on the earth, destined to his glory in the heavens.

MASONRY AND JUSTICE.

The continual interference of the lodge system with the functions of justice has been illustrated time and again by the testimony of competent witnesses, and receives new development whenever the subject is agitated. The press has recently published the details of an alleged embezzlement of some $20,000 from a business firm in Southern Kansas by C. G. R. Pond, National Secretary of the Grand Army of the Republic, whose home is in Detroit, Mich. The sheriff of the county in Kansas where the firm does business followed Pond to Detroit, to secure his arrest, but when he reached there Pond had flown. He next traced the alleged embezzler to Coldwater, Mich., where Pond had shrewdly hired every lawyer in the place to aid and defend him. Not one could the Kansas sheriff engage to assist him in taking the necessary legal action. Finding himself thus foiled, the sheriff hastened to Lansing, obtained an interview with the Governor and asked him for the services of the Attorney General of the State. His request was granted, and, with his influential ally, he returned to Coldwater and instituted the necessary proceedings against Pond. The latter's lawyers, however, resisted them, and succeeded in gaining a continuance for a fortnight, and the sheriff was obliged to return to Kansas without his man.

While on his way home on the cars, after being thus baffled, he was pleasantly accosted by a stranger, a prominent officer of the N. C. A., who handed him a copy of Rev. Dr. Carradine's great St. Louis sermon on secret societies as a curse or a blessing. The sheriff read it through attentively, and in the course of the subsequent conversation acknowledged himself a member of both the Masonic and Odd-fellows' fraternities. But he was a man who had "the courage of his convictions," and seemed to have derived a pretty strong one from his own recent experiences in Michigan. At any rate he not only expressed his opinion that he had been thwarted in his duty by the secret influences of the G. A. R., but frankly admitted that he believed that lodge influence is too often exercised to shield offenders when brought to trial, or to aid them in escaping from the officers of justice. Another journey or two to Michigan will probably still further convince him that the "Grand Commander," or the "Grand Master," or the "Chief Patriarch" of the lodges is a greater man than a county sheriff, even when armed with the weapons of justice and engaged in the authorized duties of his office.

MORMON PROPERTY.

The recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the suit arising out of the confiscation of personal property belonging to the Mormon church in Utah, affords little comfort to the "Latter-Day Saints." In substance, the conclusion reached is, "that there does not exist any person or corporation legally entitled to any of the personality as the successors of said church;" and that there does not exist any trust or purpose for which any part of the personal property was originally required, to which any part of it can be used, that is not in whole or in part opposed to public policy or good morals. This decision sounds very much like the verdict of a coroner's jury—that the church is dead and has no further use for its property.

On the other hand, the Mormons, represented by the Deseret Weekly, claim that although polygamy in Utah is abolished, the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints" still lives and is engaged in preaching the Gospel, baptizing repentant believers, holding services in meeting-houses and ceremonies in temples, and maintaining church organizations, and inquires how it is "opposed to public policy and good morals?"

The Supreme Court evidently believed that the property confiscated to the United States was not acquired in the performance of the good works enumerated by the Deseret Weekly, but in the prosecution of a religious system that has always been a disgrace to Christianity by its criminality. In sweeping away the evil of polygamous marriages the ill-gotten gains of the system also went into the dust-pan. The government cannot prevent the exercise of religious worship by any denomination; it can only regulate the members of that denomination and require them to be honest toward other people and the religion they profess.

The whole career of Mormonism, under the old regime, was a system of secret plotting and works of darkness. But the light has been let in upon its hidden mysteries, even as were those of the Spanish Inquisition by Napoleon.

Since the above was written, it is announced that the political power of Mormonism in Utah has been totally eliminated; the snake has lost its fangs.

BURLESQUE SECRET ORDERS.

An esteemed clergyman sends us an illustrated exposition of the initiation of a member into a nameless comical or burlesque secret society in Chicago, and asks: "Doesn't this indicate a growing popular contempt for such performances?" We are sorry to say that it does not. Forty years ago, or more, in the Western town where the writer was employed as a clerk, and when his associates were members of Masonic and Odd-fellow lodges, these men conducted a weekly secret orgie, under the name of the "One Thousand and One." The writer never joined the "order," but sometimes aided in arranging the program of "initiation" for some deluded mortal, and from his position was familiar with the various follies enacted in the burlesque "lodge." Its object was "fun"—wild, uproarious fun—indulged in by Masons and Odd-fellows on "off" nights of their own real lodges, assisted by others, presumably, who were not their genuine "brethren." The document sent by our correspondent is probably an exaggerated account of a "Thousand and One" or a "Sons of Malta" performance, or it may have originated wholly in the brain of a fanciful reporter. It will take something stronger than these "comic" expositions to pour contempt on the work of the real Christless secret orders. The burlesque sent was copied from the Chicago Tribune.

COMMENCEMENT AT WHEATON.—Commencement occurs at Wheaton this year on Thursday, June 25. The exercises begin at 10:30 A. M. The meeting of the Board of Trustees occurs on Wednesday, June 24, at 10:30 A. M., in the President's office. On Wednesday afternoon, in the College chapel, will be held the graduating exercises of the Preparatory School. On Tuesday evening, June 23, at 7:45, the graduating exercises of the Musical Conservatory and the Art School will be held in the College chapel. On Sabbath evening, June 21, an address before the Society of Missionary Inquiry. Sabbath morning, June 21, at 10:30 A. M., the Baccalaureate sermon will be preached by Pres. J. Blanchard, the address to the class being given by the President as usual.

All friends of the institution are invited to attend the exercises, in whole or in part. We shall be glad to make the provision for the entertainment of all who will notify us beforehand of their coming.

—The Cummings-baccarat-gambling scandal has come out of the English court without a satisfactory result, except to the lawyers. The suit cost Sir William $25,000, besides his losses in the gambling game. The reputations of the Prince of Wales and the other witnesses of the game are badly smutched. "Put not your trust in princes," especially when they carry with them the implements of a professional gambler.

—Batavia, Ill., has tried high license as a curb upon the evils of the saloon for several years, without discovering the great benefits credited to the system by the secular press and lecturers, and has now elected an anti-license council. She will henceforth try prohibition, and find it, undoubtedly, a great improvement on the old plan. High license may reduce the number of gin-shops, but it never made one less drunkard.

—The Baptist Standard, commenting on a recent strawberry festival given under the auspices of a Baptist church, at which a fine gold watch was voted to the most popular young lady, with other presents distributed in the same manner, while a secular orchestra discoursed sweet music, thinks (and rightly) "that in such a case the line of distinction between the church and the world has grown so faint as to be almost indiscernible." What other conclusion can be reached?

—The inconsistent and lawless spirit of the age receives another pointed illustration in the action of the trustees of the New York Museum of Art, who have decided to open it to the public on Sunday afternoons, although those who endowed it made a condition that the museum should not be open on the Lord's day. This decision may lead to suits at law by the heirs of the generous donors, for non-fulfillment of duty, and a restoration to them of the endowment, which the trustees, by their action, have placed in jeopardy.

—It is announced that Edison's phonograph is to be applied to a curious scientific experiment. The instrument is to be subjected to the conversation of many monkeys, and from their sayings it is proposed to formulate a written language that may be interpreted into modern dialects, for the purpose of throwing light upon the history of this peculiar race. With the exception of the theory of man's evolution from monkeys or other inferior creatures, and the one that attempts to show us how Masonry improves human character, nothing more absurd has recently been let loose upon the credulous believers in "science, so-called."

—The fatalities which have overtaken the instigators and participants in the murder of Dr. Cronin by the Clan-na-Gael have been so remarkable as to inspire a belief that the hand of Providence was instrumental in bringing calamity upon them. The subject is revived by the death of Edward Spelman, the wealthy distiller and head of the Clan-na-Gael, on Wednesday last. The event was caused by a fall from a ladder, about a week previous, at his distillery. A few days ago his son was arrested for alleged mail robbery, but escaped from the officers on the cars; he was recaptured, however, and sent to the Insane Asylum at Jacksonville, Ill., a maniac. The list of these retributions is not yet complete; the blood of Cronin still cries from the ground.

—The Northwestern Christian Advocate is authority for the following statement, which reflects no lustre on the event or on those under whose auspices it occurred: "On June 3 the monument to the memory of Gen. Grant (the gift of Mr. Kohlsaat, of Chicago), was unveiled at Galena, Illinois. Dr. H. W. Bolton (M. E.), of Chicago, was to have been the chaplain of the day; but at the last celebration of Washington's birthday, in Chicago, Dr. Bolton expressed his ideas plainly on the Romanist question; and at a late day he was informed that if he did not decline to fill the position assigned him in the ceremonies at Galena, there would be disturbance and perhaps serious trouble, because Roman Catholics protested against his occupying the position." Freedom of speech and honest expression of opinion are death to the policy of the Jesuits, and threaten, also, at an early day, to destroy the man who dares to exercise his right to use them. Both General Grant and Rev. Mr. Bolton were Methodists, and the Romanists had no claim upon either. The latter, however, have a "pull" on the political partisans; hence the snub.

—The annual convention of the American Protestant Association, which met at Buffalo, N. Y., last week, recalls the ostensible object and alleged condition of this secret order, which was organized more than forty years ago, now numbers 100,000 members, and has lodges in sixteen States of the Union. Its purpose, it claims, is to elevate American citizenship and prevent the encroachment of any religious denomination upon the governmental functions of the nation. To this end it closes its doors to Romanists and aliens. It is also ostensibly neutral so far as any existing political parties are concerned. With these objects and policy in view, it is evident that privacy, rather than secrecy, should distinguish its deliberations; for there are many true American citizens who would be glad to unite with the society and maintain its professed objects, if the mysteries of the lodge room were expurgated from its rituals. What is needed in these days, is the perpetuation of a government in which pure Christianity shall be a principal and honored element, sustained by a Christian and patriotic people.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Dr. William R. Lee, who went out to Siam in connection with the Presbyterian Board of Missions, has resigned and become physician to the royal family with residence at Bangkok.

—The Rev. Dr. Thomas O'Gorman, Professor of Recent Ecclesiastical History in the Catholic University, Washington, is at present engaged upon the history of the Catholic Church in the United States.

—The Rev. Phillips Brooks is descended from a line of clergymen, one of them being the Rev. John Cotton. When he was in England, in 1882, he preached in the pulpit of his ancestor, John Cotton, in old Boston.

—Bishop Potter, of New York, has taken prompt action in the case of the charges against the Rev Dr. R. Heber Newton, having addressed a letter to the rector of the Church of the Transfiguration announcing his intention to investigate Mr. Newton's heretical course.

—Bishop Doane, of Albany, recently received double honors while in England. To the degree of LL. D. conferred by Cambridge, Oxford has added that of D.D. The London Telegraph says that no other American prelate has been similarly honored by both universities.

—It is the understanding that the Rev. William Arthur of England will preach the opening sermon at the Second Ecumenical Methodist Conference to convene in Washington, October 7. It is also announced that the great historian of Methodism, Abel Stevens, is to have an important place on the program.

—Among the callers at the Cynosure office during the week was Rev. J. W. Kilbourn, of the United Brethren, whose home is near Dayton, Ohio, but who is now engaged in Moody's Bible Institute in this city, where he will probably remain until August. Mr. Kilbourn is with us, heart and hand, in the effort to keep young men out of the lodges, and from his position enjoys excellent opportunities for disseminating the truth concerning the secret orders.

—The pleasure of a call from Rev. Wm. Fenton, pastor of a Baptist church at St. Paul, Minn., was accorded to us last week. Mr. Fenton has recently been engaged in lecturing against secret societies in his vicinity, and has succeeded in creating a healthful interest in the subject. Sabbath afternoon, June 7, he spoke in the public square to a quiet and attentive audience of about 200, on the Religion of Freemasonry. At Litchfield, Minn., he informs us, the Episcopal clergyman is not only a strong Freemason, but so in love with the gospel of secrecy that in his parish he has recently instituted a new secret order—"The Golden Cord"—for boys, and another for girls. The infatuation of lodge jimcrackery is indeed surprising.

THE HOME.

THE CALM OF THE SOUL.

When winds are raging o'er the upper ocean,
And billows wild contend with angry roar—
'Tis said that far beneath the wild commotion,
A peaceful stillness reigneth evermore.

So to the heart that knows Thy love, O Purest!
There is a temple sacred evermore,
And all the babble of life's angry voices
Dies in hushed stillness at its peaceful door.

Far, far away, the roar of passion dieth,
And loving thoughts rise calm and peacefully,
And no rude storm, how fierce soe'er it flieth,
Disturbs the soul that dwelleth, Lord, in Thee!

O rest of rests! O peace serene, eternal!
Thou ever livest, and Thou changest never,
And in the secret of Thy presence dwellest
Fullness of joy forever and forever.

LOOK OUT FOR MOTHER.

Many wives and mothers are laboring with hand and brain almost incessantly, day after day and year after year, to supply the oft-returning wants of the family; no other class lead such lives of daily self-sacrifice as do our patient, plodding mothers. They anticipate our wants and needs, come and go at our slightest wish, with untiring love and interest in all that concerns us from early infancy, until they sink beneath the burdens and cares of this life.

From force of habit brought about by the tender devotion of their hearts they are always thinking and doing for others. Yet in many homes no one seems to think of the mother's comfort or that she can have any need of relaxation. Now every woman who leads an active life needs to be released from constant toil by the time she is forty years of age. Those who love her should learn this before it is too late, and make it possible for her to take life easier and lay by a store of physical force against a time of need fast approaching.

The much-needed rest the mother will always protest against taking so long as she feels that any of the family needs her care and labor, but her future health and in many cases her life depends upon a few years of rest, rest!—physical and mental. Who would say she has not earned it? Can you let the time slip quietly by and do nothing while the life of one you dearly love is slowly wearing away in treadmill round which seems a daily necessity to the family?

Arouse yourself; see that your mother gives up her cares entirely for a time even though your comforts are lessened. Send her to visit a sister or some dear friend and make her stay a good long time—six weeks or more. When she returns see that some one is installed to share the burdens that have always fallen on mother. Take her out to ride often. Encourage her to take walks and call on her neighbors and friends. If she has long regretted that she was always too weary to attend church, see that she has a day of absolute rest preparatory and then offer to accompany her. Make her feel young again by your thoughtful care; she has done so much for you.—Selected.

"THE HEART OF A PIOUS WOMAN."

Luther, when a lad away at school, had a hard time of it. His father, being a poor man, was unable to afford him much assistance, and the son was obliged to resort to begging for a subsistance. "Often the modest, poor boy, instead of bread, received nothing but harsh words." One day, in particular, after having been repulsed from three houses, he was much disheartened. Standing before the house of an honest burger, he was lost in painful reflections. Suddenly the door opened and a woman appeared upon the threshold. She took pity on the forlorn youth, spoke kindly to him, invited him to enter, supplied his present needs, and gave him a temporary home. Luther never forgot her kindness. It was in allusion to it that in after years he was heard to say, "There is nothing sweeter than the heart of a pious woman."

Many a woman is amiable by nature. She is possessed of much natural sweetness. She thus draws toward herself the love and esteem of all that know her. By her kindly words and deeds she multiplies her friends. But when the natural amiability of such a woman is sanctified by grace she becomes doubly attractive. Her excellence is so increased and refined that she becomes angelic. She becomes heavenly in her disposition, and doubtless, like Enoch, has the testimony that she pleases God.

Such women, though none too numerous in this imperfect world, there have been and there still are. Such a woman, we think, must have been the mother of Samuel. From the little that we know of her, we think that she must have been a woman of no ordinary excellence. During the brief time that her beloved Samuel, whom she had asked of the Lord, was with her, she trained him up with such affectionate fidelity, and was habitually to him an example of such sweetness of temper, and so impressed upon him her own faultless image, that he became the noble boy, and the noble man that he was—one of the noblest that the world has known, highly esteemed and honored by all that knew him.

A woman of this character well fills her sphere in all the relations of life—as a daughter, as a sister, as a wife, as a mother, and as a neighbor. Her children rise up and call her blessed. Her husband says of her: "Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all." By her death a great loss is sustained. Many are the warm tears that are shed. Truly, "There is nothing sweeter than the heart of a pious woman."—Selected.

THE MINISTER BEATING HIS WIFE.

The story was all over town. Everybody was talking about it. It was too bad, they said. What was too bad? Why, the new minister had been beating his wife! Was it possible? Yes, there could be no doubt about it. Mrs. S———, who lives next door, heard a shriek about ten o'clock last night—a woman's shriek—from a chamber in the parsonage. She looked across, and through a curtain she could see that a man and woman were running about the room in great excitement. He was flourishing a stick and striking with it. The blows could be plainly heard. And as he struck she screamed.

Mrs. S——— could hardly sleep that night, she was so excited by what she had seen. She was up early next morning. She hurried through her breakfast, and then started out—to see the poor, abused minister's wife, and comfort her? Not a bit of it. She went to elder A———'s, found the family at the table, and told the news. Then she footed it on to elder B———'s and deacon C———'s, and over half the town. The half that she had no time to call on, soon heard it from the other half, and before noon there was great excitement in Ballville.

The officers of the church discussed the matter with heavy hearts. Such disgraceful conduct could not be endured. Something must be done. But what? Call at once on the minister and his wife, and inquire into the matter? Oh, no; that would not be dignified and official. Besides, there could be no doubt about it. Did not Mrs. S——— see the beating with her own eyes? So they called a meeting of the session, and summoned the minister and his wife. He had to answer a charge of unministerial conduct, and she to testify in the case.

They came, greatly puzzled and surprised. The case was gravely stated by the senior elder, when the culprit and witness burst into a laugh. Checking themselves, when they saw how serious and sad the session looked, they explained. The minister's wife, though an excellent woman who loved everybody, and especially her husband, did not love rats. But the house having been vacant for some time, the rats had taken possession. When they went to their chamber a huge rodent ran under the bed. The wife screamed. The husband caught up a stick and struck, but missed the rat, and the lady screamed again. How could she help it? It was an exciting scene, and must have looked very funny to their neighbors who were watching through the curtained window. They laughed heartily when it was all over and the rat was dead; and they could not help laughing whenever they thought about it.

The session were in a fix. They were down on Mrs. S——— for making fools of them. They asked her:

"Why didn't you go over to the minister's and make sure about the matter before you reported it?"

And she retorted:

"Why didn't you go and inquire into it before you called a meeting?"—Selected.

BE GOOD-NATURED.

Every time you are tempted to say an ungentle word, or write an unkind line, or say a mean, ungracious thing about anybody, just stop; look ahead twenty-five years, and think how it may come back to you then. Let me tell you how I write mean letters and bitter editorials, my boy. Sometimes, when a man has pitched into me and "cut me up rough," and I want to pulverize him, and wear his gory scalp on my girdle, and hang his hide on my fence, I write a letter or editorial that is to do the business. I write something that will drive sleep from his eyes and peace from his soul for six weeks. Oh, I do hold him over a slow fire and roast him! Gall and aqua fortis drip from my blistering pen. Then; I don't mail the letter and I don't print the editorial. The vilest criminal is entitled to a little reprieve. I put the manuscript away in a drawer. Next day I look at it. The ink is cold; I read it over and say: "I don't know about this. There's a good deal of bludgeon and bowie-knife journalism in that. I'll hold it over a day longer." The next day I read it again. I laugh and say, "Pshaw!" and I can feel my cheeks getting a little hot. The fact is, I am ashamed that I ever wrote it, and I hope that nobody has seen it, and I have half forgotten the article or letter that filled my soul with rage. I haven't hurt anybody, and the world goes right along, making twenty-four hours a day as usual, and I am all the happier. Try it, my boy. Put off your bitter remarks until to-morrow. Then, when you try to say them deliberately, you'll find that you have forgotten them, and ten years later, ah! how glad you will be that you did! Be good-natured, my boy. Be loving and gentle with the world, and you'll be amazed to see how dearly and tenderly the worried, tired, vexed, harrassed old world loves you.—R. F. Burdette.

THE WAY WILL BE CLEARED AS WE GO.

The driver of a tram-car through the streets of our city starts with his car upon a line which runs continuously to his journey's end. If he goes on straight ahead he will surely come to the destined place. Should he be able to see all the route at once he would observe many coal-wagons, furniture-vans, timber-carriages, brewers' drays, and the like, blocking up his road along the rails, and he might mournfully ask, "How can I move all these?" But he takes no such lengthened view and asks no such useless questions. As he moves along all sorts of obstructive traffic gives way before him—even the van demons yield him the road. When one of them is a little slow in getting out of the way, our driver blows his whistle, and after two or three shrill appeals, the obstinate vehicle retires. As the rails run all the way, so does the car. Just so we are on the rails of eternal life. Between us and heaven there are a thousand obstructions, and, if we think of them all, we may well be fearful; but they will one and all disappear as we come to them. If they should seem likely to bar our progress, we must sound the whistle of prayer, and in due season they will turn aside, and leave us a clear road along the lines of covenant grace. Therefore, go ahead, and fear no impediment; for the line is laid, and we have a legal right to travel along it, and none may lawfully hinder us. This is what I learned from the driver of the tram-car.—C. H. Spurgeon.

BOYS AND MEN.

There is a difference between boys and men, but it is a difference of self-knowledge chiefly. A boy wants to do everything, because he does not know he cannot; a man wants to do something, because he knows he cannot do everything. A boy always fails and a man sometimes fails, because the man knows and the boy does not know. A man is better than a boy, because he knows better; he has learned by experience that what is a harm to others is a greater harm to himself, and he would rather not do it. But a boy hardly knows what harm is, and he does it mostly without realizing that it hurts. He cannot invent anything, he can only imitate; and it is easier to imitate evil than good. You can imitate war, but how are you going to imitate peace? So a boy passes his leisure in contriving mischief. If you get another fellow to walk into a wasp's camp, you can see him jump and hear him howl; but if you do not, then nothing at all happens. If you set a dog to chase a cat up a tree, then something has been done; but if you do not set the dog on the cat, then the cat just lies in the sun and sleeps, and you lose your time. If a boy could find out some way of doing good so that he could be active in it, very likely he would want to do good now and then; but as he cannot, he very seldom wants to do good.—Harper's Young People.

A CROSS WORD AND A KIND WORD.

One day a harsh word, rashly said,
Upon an evil journey sped,
And like a sharp and cruel dart
It pierced a fond and loving heart;
It turned a friend into a foe,
And everywhere brought pain and woe.

A kind word followed it one day,
Flew swiftly on its blessed way;
It healed the wound, it soothed the pain,
And friends of old were friends again;
It made the hate and anger cease,
And everywhere brought joy and peace.

But yet the harsh word left a trace
The kind word could not quite efface,
And, though the heart its love regained,
It bore a scar that long remained;
Friends could forgive, but not forget,
Or lose the sense of keen regret.

Oh, if we would but learn to know
How swift and sure one word can go,
How would we weigh with utmost care
Each thought before it sought the air,
And only speak the words that move
Like white-winged messengers of love!

THE BEST HELP.

"I ain't anybody. I'll never be anybody. I'm at the bottom of the ladder, and there's nobody to help me up."

It was Ed Barrows, the oldest pupil in a district school on the Illinois prairies, who said these words to his teacher, one noonday recess, as the two were talking together about Ed's prospects, and what he was to do in the world.

He was a strong, ambitious young man, who studied during his winters, but worked through the summers on Squire Harmons's farm, where he had lived since he was a very small child. He had been brought to the farm from the Chicago home for foundlings, and felt keenly that he had no special claim on his friends, and no chance to "be somebody."

His teacher, Miss Stewart, had long wished to speak a "heartening" word to him. This was her opportunity, but Ed's face was so doleful that she could not help laughing to begin with. It was such a merry, kindly laugh, however, that Ed could not possibly resent it. He laughed a little himself.

"I s'pose it does sound like a green thing to say," he admitted, "but I often think it, though," he added, with some bitterness.

"Ed," said Miss Stewart, her face glowing with enthusiasm, "it is impossible for any human being to be at the bottom of the ladder without any help to climb up. We are all children of one Father. That old saying, 'God helps those who help themselves,' means a good deal more than just the words."

"You look as if you believed 'twas so," said Ed, gazing respectfully at the earnest little woman.

"I know it's so. If you help yourself, by a single good action, up one round of the ladder, you feel life and strength and ambition rushing in to make the next round easier."

"I don't know but that's so."

"Of course it is. That's the way God helps us when we help ourselves. The strength and courage and life are parts of his own life, and that comes to us freely as fast as we use it."

"I'm going to get up on one rung of the ladder, and see, Miss Stewart," said Ed, with a serious smile.

"You'll find you'll have the best help there is," she responded, turning to answer a question of one of her smaller pupils who just then came to the desk.

Years afterward, in a political crisis, Edwin Barrows was called upon to break a tie in the Legislature of his State. It was a question of party expediency as opposed to abstract right, and it was urged upon him that the side of expediency must have his vote. A committee waited upon him.

"We need you, Mr. Barrows. This thing must go through with the best sort of help," said one of his strongest political friends.

"Well, then," he replied, with a dignity and gravity that left his advisers nothing to say, "if that is the case, the best help helping me, I shall be obliged to give my voice against the measure."

He had made those three words of Miss Stewart's the keynote of his life, and their seemingly accidental utterance at a moment when he was perplexed, made plain again the path of his duty.

The best help—help to do right—is never far away from any who truly desire it. It is the one thing that is always to be had by any one who will earnestly ask for it at the Source of all good help.—The Companion.

TEMPERANCE.

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE

[Copyrighted by "The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association," 161 LaSalle St., Chicago. Printed by permission.]

I.

It was a cold, drizzly, cheerless November afternoon. I could not go out, having a bad cough, and even if I could, there was not a companion available, nor the hope of a neighbor's baby to be borrowed for an hour or so, as was my delight and custom to do. However, I was not entirely forlorn, for there was a bit of excitement under way.

Mother and I lived in the upper half of a tenement house. There had been a good-sized yard in the rear, but our landlord was of an economical turn of mind, and had recently built there a diminutive brick house of four rooms, two down stairs and two above. It had four windows and a door, being built exactly on the plan of certain doll houses, with blank walls on three sides. It had been completed and to rent for some time, but was taken now, and the tenants were expected from the country that evening.

With my nose patiently flattened against the window pane, I watched for the arrival. Just about tea-time a cart drove up to the gate leading into the yard. In it were two grown people—father and mother—and two children, one of them to my delight, a baby. But instead of taking immediate possession of their house, the party remained on the sidewalk, evidently in some dilemma, anxiously talking and gesticulating. Even the driver seemed concerned, for he took out his watch and appeared to grumble a little, finally seating himself on the curbstone. I called to mother, and when her wiser eyes had taken in the situation, she went down to speak to the new comers. I followed her to the head of the stairs and listened, hearing only her remarks, made in a thoughtful, sympathetic tone:

"Too bad! What are you going to do? Drive back in this cold rain?"

(Wasn't I to have that baby after all? It was just too mean for anything, when I had the coveted pleasure all planned out so nicely!)

"It might not hurt you, but the children will catch their deaths of cold. Can't you arrange some way? I wish our house was larger."

My excitement increased. The very thought of having strangers stay all night was delightfully romantic. Where would mother put them? Would that baby sleep with me? What should we have for breakfast? The next words mother uttered sent me rushing down the stairs, utterly forgetful of the last night's battle with a hacking cough.

"We might take one of the children for the night; they really ought not to be exposed to the cold any longer."

"Oh, mother," I cried, "do take the baby. I'll mind it, and it can sleep with me. Oh, mother!"

She smiled down at me, patted my cheek lovingly, and continued the conversation.

"My daughter says she will take care of the baby, if you can leave it. Perhaps it would be the best way to do."

After a little more talk, a young, pleasant-faced woman came the door with the baby in her arms. It was a girl about seventeen months old.

"Will you go to the young lady, Duckie?"

Duckie was too sleepy to make objections to anything, so I carried off my treasure, leaving mother to conclude civilities. I can not remember now—it all happened thirteen years ago—why these people had to go back instead of taking possession of their new quarters; indeed, I do not think I ever knew, and I certainly cared very little, so wrapped up was I in my dear baby. Not even knowing her name, I called her Duckie. She was a very pretty child, though delicate looking. Her skin was white as alabaster, only her dimpled fingers and toes being of a faint rose tint. Golden hair clustered in tight rings over her head, and no amount of tossing could do aught but render it more bewitching than ever. Mother did not interfere with me in my care of the little one, beyond a gentle suggestion now and then, though I am sure now that her watchful eye kept guard over my ignorance, so that no harm could come to the trusting, defenseless child. I had a diminutive bed of my own in the corner of mother's room, and for the first time some one was to share it with me. I do not see how mother dared let me keep that frail bit of humanity with me all night, but to my great happiness, she made no objections. Didn't I feel grown up, though? I wakened ever so many times in the night to look at my little bed-fellow. I've seen numberless sleeping babies since then, but not one of them begins to compare with Duckie. One wee hand was tucked under her chin, and an occasional smile rippled over her unconscious little face. Thus I watched my baby, mother watched over us both, and the Heavenly Father cared for us all.

Early next morning,—it was Saturday, and there were no school duties to take my attention—my charge awoke. She fretted awhile for her mother, but I soon pacified her, and the process of washing and dressing went on charmingly. I fed her a bowl of bread and milk, aghast at the amount she disposed of, for she seemed almost too ethereal in my eyes even to need food. However, this was the sole particular in which she disappointed me. Soon after breakfast the cart came again with the family, and very reluctantly I gave up my darling, after many grateful words from the mother, and promises to be allowed to borrow the little one very often.

Many times during that day and the next mother had to call me away from the windows, for I could not, or would not, see why it was "rude to watch people so."

Monday morning, just as I was getting ready for school, there came a knock at the back door. I opened it, and there stood Duckie's little sister, a child of about five years. She was as unlike Duckie as could be—as sturdy a child as I ever saw, with the merriest, sauciest face imaginable. Her skin was very dark, her hair curly and jet black, her eyes black and sparkling.

"Mamma says, 'ill you please lend her some soap. It's wash day and s'e don't have none 'tall."

Mother went for the soap and I questioned her. She was not a bit shy, neither did she impress me as forward. Her name was "S'fia—S'fia Clarke." She was "one, two, free, four, five yearses old." No, she didn't "go to kool—wasn't never goin', 'less Delia could go too." Who was Delia? Why, sister, of course; mamma called her "Duckie," but her "truly name" was Delia. The soap being ready, mother put it into the little arms, and stopped the rosy mouth with a lump of sugar, sending her off smiling and crunching.

The better we came to know our neighbors the better we liked them. Mr. Clarke had been a stone cutter, but since his marriage had tried farming to please his wife. It did not suit him, however, and at last he persuaded her to come to the city, where he soon obtained work. They were poor people, but not in any actual need. Being total strangers in the great city, they were glad to have mother friendly to them, and often when I was at school she carried her sewing into their diminutive, but exquisitely neat, sitting-room. I had charge of the baby to my heart's content, and Sophia and I were firm friends. These new neighbors seemed models in every way, and my careful mother was glad to have me intimate with them, as she did not care to have me too friendly with chance school acquaintances.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON XII.—Second Quarter.—June 28.

SUBJECT.—Quarterly Review: God's Warning and Overthrow of Israel and Judah.

[From Light and Life Teachers' Quarterly, Published by T. B. Arnold, Chicago—Rev. C. H. Rawson, A. M., Editor.]

Lesson I.—Saved from famine (2 Kings 7: 1–16); or, the flight of the Syrians.

Golden Text: O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men.—Psa. 107: 8.

Analysis: 1. Elisha predicts plentiful supplies on the morrow. 2. Four lepers decide to give themselves up to the Syrians. 3. They feast and hide the spoils. 4. They inform the city porter. 5. Jehoram's messengers confirm the report. 6. The people spoil the Syrian camp.

Central Truth: God will humble us when we sin, and succor us when we repent.

Lesson II.—The good and evil in Jehu (1 Kings 10: 18–31); or, destroying the prophets of Baal.

Golden Text: Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart.—1 Sam. 16: 7.

Analysis: 1. Jehu summons the worshipers of Baal to Samaria. 2. Their execution. 3. Temple of Baal degraded. 4. God rewards Jehu. 5. Jehu follows the sins of Jeroboam.

Central Truth: God often employs unworthy men to accomplish his design.

Lesson III.—Jonah sent to Nineveh (Jonah 1: 1–17); or, fleeing from duty.

Golden Text: Preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee.—Jonah 3: 2.

Analysis: 1. God sends Jonah to Nineveh. 2. Fleeing from God's presence. 3. The storm at sea. 4. Jonah's sin exposed. 5. Pronounces sentence on himself. 6. Sentence executed. 7. A provided salvation.

Central Truth: It is harder to disobey God than it is to obey him.

Lesson IV.—Nineveh brought to repentance (Jonah 3: 1–10); or, God's mercy to the penitent.

Golden Text: The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it; for they repented at the preaching of Jonas, and behold a greater than Jonas is here.—Luke 11: 32.

Analysis: 1. Jonah recommissioned. 2. He warns the Ninevites. 3. They repent. 4. Their destruction averted.

Central Truth: Salvation from the sinner's doom is by way of repentance.

Lesson V.—Israel often reproved (Amos 4–14); or, the curse causeless never comes.

Golden Text: He that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.—Prov. 29: 1.

Analysis: 1. Ironical appeal. 2. Famine, drouth and pestilence came at God's command. 3. Prepare to meet thy God.

Central Truth: God uses severe measures, when entreaties fail.

Lesson VI.—Israel's overthrow foretold (Amos 8: 1–14); or, sin ripened for destruction.

Golden Text: Whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have.—Luke 8: 18.

Analysis: 1. Basket of summer fruit—and Israel's sins. 2. Direful calamities shall befall those who oppress the poor and are covetous and dishonest. 3. Famine for God's Word.

Central Truth: Though dishonesty and oppression may be concealed by religious forms, they shall not escape unpunished.

Lesson VII.—Sin the cause of sorrow (Hos. 10: 1–15); or, the result of perfidy.

Golden Text: Your iniquities have separated between you and your God.—Isa. 59: 2.

Analysis: 1. The empty vine. 2. The divided heart. 3. Covenant breakers. 4. Idols captured. 5. Ephraim like a well-fed heifer. 6. Son in righteousness. 7. The coming massacre.

Central Truth: Sowing in righteousness, and not unholy affinities, will save from the power of sin.

Lesson VIII.—Captivity of Israel (2 Kings 17: 6–18); or, the fruition of sin.

Golden Text: Because ye have forsaken the Lord, he hath also forsaken you.—2 Chron. 24: 20.

Analysis: The king of Assyria captures Samaria, and takes Israel captive. 2. Because they sinned in practicing idolatry, and refusing to be warned.

Central Truth: When God's mercy is slighted beyond remedy, speedy destruction is certain.

Lesson IX.—The temple repaired (2 Chron. 24: 4–14); or, free will offerings to God.

Golden Text: God loveth a cheerful giver.—2 Cor. 9: 7.

Analysis: 1. First method: Priests going among their acquaintances. 2. Second method: According to the law of Moses. 3. Final success.

Central Truth: God endorses well organized efforts for raising money.

Lesson X.—Hezekiah the good king (2 Chron. 29: 1–11); or, renewing the covenant.

Golden Text: Them that honor me, I will honor.—1 Sam. 2: 30.

Analysis: 1. Opening and repairing the temple doors. 2. Consulting with the priests and Levites. 3. Hezekiah's address.

Central Truth: A genuine revival will reform a backslidden church.

Lesson XI.—The Book of the Law found (2 Chron. 34: 14–28); or, the penitent king.

Golden Text: The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver.—Psa. 119: 72.

Analysis: 1. Hilkiah finds the Book of the Law. 2. He delivers it to Shaphan. 3. Hearing the law, Josiah humbles himself, and sends to inquire of the Lord. 4. The prophetess and her response.

Central Truth: Humility shall be rewarded, though sin shall be punished.

Lesson XII.—Captivity of Judah (2 Kings 25: 1–12); or, Nebuchadnezzar taking Jerusalem.

Golden Text: Come, and let us return unto the Lord.—Hos. 6: 11.

Analysis: 1. Nebuchadnezzar besieges Jerusalem. 2. The city broken up, and the people flee. 3. Zedekiah is taken, judgment given him at Riblah, and he taken a captive in chains to Babylon. 4. Nebuzar-adan destroys Jerusalem. 5. The poor left for husbandmen.

Central Truth: God's Word shall be fulfilled to the letter.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Notice is given that Mr. Moody will conduct the services at the Round Lake camp-meeting this year.

—The Salvation Army, which has flourished in Berlin only a short time, has already drawn members of the nobility to its ranks. The Baroness von Liliencranz is now an officer in the army.

—The British and Foreign Bible Society has an army of 150 colporteurs working in towns and villages of India, together with 330 Bible women, all scattering the Word of God.

—The general synod of the Reformed Church in America completed its eighty-fifth annual convention at Asbury Park, N. J., Wednesday evening. Prof. Stebbins, of the Western University, resigned his position and accepted a pastorate. The synod passed a resolution requesting Prof. Stebbins to withdraw his resignation and return to his college work. The synod will meet at Asbury Park again next year.

—The extent of the exodus of Jews from Russia, on account of persecution, may be better appreciated when it is known that 5,000 Hebrew families (from 20,000 to 25,000 souls) left the provinces of Volhynia and Podolia immediately after the Feast of the Passover, on April 22nd. From the district of Balta alone about 1,500 persons will emigrate. Their destination is the Argentine Republic, where the agents of Baron Hirsch and others are at present occupied in making preparations for them. They are leaving Russia in batches of fifty families.

—The first convention of Christian Endeavor Societies in England was held at Crewe, May 13. Dr. Clark and Mr. Dickinson gave addresses; the Mayor of Crewe presided and spoke in hearty commendation of the society. A member of a society in Australia was also present, and reported great interest in the movement in that land. Rev. J. L. Hill of Medford, Mass., and Rev. Nehemiah Boynton of Boston, are assisting Dr. Clark and Mr. Dickinson in answering the many calls for addresses in all parts of England.

—Five thousand baptisms are reported at the Baptist Telegu Mission in India within the last five months.

—The thirty-third convention of the Illinois Sunday-schools took place at Danville, seven hundred delegates being present. Twenty-five counties reported that every township had regular Sunday-schools. It was reported that there are 700,000 scholars in the schools and 600,000 children outside. In thirty minutes $8,000 was raised for State work. It is proposed to build a $200,000 children's temple in Chicago.

—The Young Men's Christian Association, of Chicago, is to erect a magnificent building at a cost of $1,400,000. The building will have fourteen stories, three of which will be devoted entirely to the work of the Association.

—Prof. N. Butler, of the Illinois Industrial University at Champaign, has been chosen assistant pastor at the Tremont Temple in Boston—the pulpit of which is occupied by Dr. Lorimer, recently of Chicago.

—A notable trick is credited to Cardinal Lavigerie. He organized a great crusade against African slavery, got regiments of soft-shelled Protestants to co-operate and sympathize, induced all the anti-slavery societies in Europe to unite in one league,—and then placed the whole business under the patronage of the Pope!

—The various Lutheran bodies in this country have 22 theological seminaries, with 68 professors, and 1,032 students; 25 colleges with 205 professors and 3,483 students, and 38 academies and seminaries with 3,500 students.

—The Reformed Church in the United States (German) reports 1,556 congregations and 203,852 members.

—England has 8 Jewish missionary societies, Scotland 5, and Ireland 1, the entire 14 societies employing 312 agents. There are also 27 societies on the continent of Europe. In our own land we have barely 7, with 34 agents. Taken together, there are thus 48 societies, with 377 agents.—Presbyterian Observer.

—The conferences of the Methodist Episcopal church in Germany and Scandinavia are rapidly increasing. That of Sweden has 15,997 communicants, that of Norway 8,842, and that of Germany 10,231. There are also 2,053 communicants in Denmark.—New York Independent.

—The Mormons of Utah, last October, voted to pledge their church against the doctrine and practice of polygamy, and in favor of the laws against it. As there were strong Republican and Democratic political parties in Utah, the Mormons formed a third, or "people's party," which, it is announced, has now been dissolved, and they will affiliate, more or less, with the other parties. Mormonism, as a dominant religious and political system, is practically dead in Utah.

—A convocation of eight Roman Catholic Bishops and one Archbishop recently met at Cincinnati and selected three names, which were forwarded to Rome, from which the Pope will select a successor to the late Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland.

—The Christian missionaries in Nanking, China, have been attacked by a mob. The missionaries escaped without much injury, but the Girls' School of the Methodist Mission was pillaged and set on fire. Order, it was reported, had been restored.

The National Christian Association owns a quarter section of land in Morris county, Kansas, four and one-half miles west of Council Grove, the county seat, a village of 2,300 inhabitants, with water-works, electric lights, and street-car line.

The nearest railroad station is only three miles away. There is a school house within half a mile. There is not over ten acres of this 160 that cannot be plowed. From five to ten acres are too stony for cultivation.

Some forty acres have been plowed and cultivated for several years, but not during the past two or three years. There are some 40 peach trees with a good show of fruit at the present time. Some of the apple trees have fruit upon them; there are in all about 25 apple trees. A few shade trees are about the shanty, which, however, is only a piece of a shanty, though residents in that vicinity claim that $50 would put it into condition for tenancy. A well some 25 feet deep has water in it during a portion of the year. Quite a quantity of stones have been gathered together near the house.

Any one going there in July next could put in winter wheat, which ought to yield 20 bushels per acre, if the season should be favorable. A good quantity of upland hay could be gathered, and some fruit.

The Association does not wish to hold land for speculative purposes, as that would be foreign to the object of its organization. The money is needed to carry on this great reform, and hence those having money to invest can benefit themselves and aid the Association by purchasing the above described quarter section.

There will be four insertions of this notice, with the amounts any are willing to pay for it. Eight hundred dollars has already been offered for it. Please send your offers at once.

The Board of Directors have appraised the place at $1,500.

Peter L. Osborn, Council Grove, Kan., will answer correspondence, and show parties the place.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Orders have been given that all saloons frequented by women shall be kept under due surveillance and a strict observance of the ordinances demanded.

A new Jewish temple, Kehilath Anshe Maariv, was dedicated last week.

A comparative increase of 200 per cent in the movement of wool in Chicago is reported by Dun & Co's agency.

Italians propose to erect a monument to Columbus.

Gideon C. Johnson, the Fort Worth, Texas, traveling man who disappeared from the Palmer House June 5, was brought back to the city.

The annual report of the South End Flower Mission shows that 16,437 bunches of flowers were distributed.

Prominent citizens of the North Division met at the Church of the Covenant on Sunday evening to discuss the question of Sabbath observance, under the auspices of the branch American Sabbath Union. Rev. Dr. Breed, pastor of the church, presided. After religious exercises, addresses were made by President Bonney, of the World's Congress Auxiliary, on Civil and Religicus Liberty; Rev. Dr. N. H. Axtell, on The Sabbath in Relation to Our Civil Institutions, and Rev. Herrick Johnson, who summed up the question as follows: 1. The Sabbath was an American institution, and should be exhibited as such. 2. Sunday opening would bring a rabble into the city on that day that would make pandemonium of our streets. 3. The after effect of Sunday opening would be to give unbridled license to amusements of all sorts. At the close of the meeting a vote was taken, and the audience was unanimous against Sunday opening.

WORLD'S FAIR.

An embassy from Washington, comprising the representatives of foreign governments at the capital, arrived in Chicago on Friday morning. The party included the ministers from France, Nicaragua, Switzerland, Belgium, Sweden, Spain, the Charge d' Affaires from Corea, Secretaries of the Chinese, Russian, British, Spanish, Austrian, and Swiss legations, attaches, etc., with attaches of the State Department. They came to investigate the progress and prospects of the World's Fair, and were luxuriously entertained by prominent citizens and representatives of the Columbian Exposition. The British minister was detained at home by official business.

Columbian Director E. M. Phelps resigned, and is succeeded by Andrew Mc Nally.

Large contracts have been let for the World's Fair manufactures building and the woman's pavilion. Plans were also adopted for the forestry building.

Fatal opposition was made to the confirmation of Walter S. Maxwell as chief of the Bureau of Horticulture of the World's Fair by a committee of nurserymen direct from the convention of the American Association. The delegation represented all the States in the Mississippi Valley and New England.

COUNTRY.

The June report of the Statistician of the Department of Agriculture makes the area of winter wheat, as compared with the breadth harvested last year, 111.5; spring wheat, 103.4; barley, 107.1; rye, 101.5; oats, 97.9. The condition of winter wheat is 96.6; spring wheat, 92.6; barley, 90.3; rye, 95.4; oats, 85.

Prohibitionists at Jamestown, North Dakota, have succeeded in closing every saloon in the city.

Iowa crops are reported in excellent condition, corn coming along nicely, and small grain promising a large yield.

There are prospects of the construction of a railroad to connect Muskegon, Mich., Duluth, Minn., and Milwaukee with Norfolk, Va., and other points on the Southeastern coast of the United States.

Striking street-car employes at Grand Rapids, Mich., Wednesday morning, were preparing to blow up a power-house when they were attacked by police. Several men were injured, but none fatally. Thirteen strikers were arrested.

The Dallas (Texas) Land and Loan Company assigned Wednesday. The liabilities are $300,000 and the assets $1,500,000.

Articles of incorporation of the Champion Watch Company, at Rockford, capital stock $250,000, to manufacture watches and machinery, were filed with the Secretary of State of Illinois Thursday.

At a meeting of representatives from Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee, held at Chattanooga Wednesday, it was decided that the three States should unite in preparing exhibits for the World's Fair.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from June 8 to June 13, inclusive:

Mrs H E Powers, Rev J S Rice, W R Morley, A G Cutler, W L Bitley, S Ensley, J W Wood, H Fry, Mrs M L Smith, R Jones, C Atwood, Rev R R Whittier, Mrs A F Rider, H Cole, Rev W O Norval, C H Fields, D F Pratt, T C Rodabaugh, Mrs M P Blount, E Umbaugh, D H Harrington, J Stradling, H Van Blarcom, Mrs C Shank, J Hart, J Wilson, J C Young.

All profits on the sales of books swell the Cynosure receipts, and reduce the definite in the cost of publishing the paper. Hence the Association is aided in a financial way by every one who keeps a few of the N. C. A. books on hand to sell as occasion occurs. The net profits, last year, on sale of books, was $615.38.

But, as with the Cynosure, so with books; they are God's agencies for giving light to those who sit in darkness. There are many, like Mr. W. W. Payne, of the Indian Territory, who keeps a few books on hand, and has the satisfaction of having saved a number from joining the lodges. He says: "I can't make a business of selling them, but can sell a few."

How many will invest $5 in a stock of N. C. A. books, and supply the demand of their neighborhood? A discount of 25 per cent from retail prices is given to such agents.

Christian Boys and Girls may begin missionary life in their own neighborhoods, during vacation, as tract distributors.

Send 25 cents for a sample package of N. C. A. tracts. Did you read, in the last Cynosure, what some of these little leaflets did for Mr. Geo. E. Bear?

Why did the Kansas Sheriff exclaim: "I would not like to have my wife get hold of that?" (Rev. Dr. Carradine's Sermon.) If you read it you will understand. Price, 5 cents per copy. Supply the wives of your neighborhood; 25 copies, postpaid, for $1.

BEULAH SEMINARY.

SUMMER NORMAL JULY 6 TO AUG. 29.

This school is located at Clarksville, Ionia Co., Mich., 25 miles out of Grand Rapids, on the D., L. & N. Ry. The buildings are new; they were erected about two years ago at a cost of over $6,000. The society that owns the school is Methodistic in doctrine but unsectarian in spirit. The past year has been a prosperous one. The

SUMMER NORMAL

Is the place to prepare for effectual work as a teacher. Prof. J. J. Sadler and the principal will have charge of this department. Teachers and others can prepare (according to their present ability) to receive third, second or first grade certificates, in the least possible time and at the least possible expense.

COMMERCIAL DEPARTMENT.

The regular Commercial department will continue open during the summer. The Business course is fully equal to that of the best commercial colleges in the State. Those who wish can take Phonography and Typewriting.

EXPENSE.

Good board for normal or commercial students $1.50 per week including furnished rooms. Tuition 50 cents per week. If paid in advance $15 for the term of eight weeks. Children from 5 to 12 will be received into the children's department at $1.50 per week, including their tuition and board, with furnished room, or if paid in advance $11 for the entire term. All students must pay four weeks in advance. Write for further information and reasons why students can do better and more thorough work in less time and at less expense at Beulah than elsewhere. Address, MRS. ETTA SHAW, Principal, Clarksville, Mich.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer who will send me their Express and P.O. address.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HYGIENE OF THE EYES.

Dr. Lincoln, of Boston, in "The Annals of Hygiene," formulates the following rules to be observed in the care of the eyes for school work:

1. A comfortable temperature, and especially let the feet be warm and dry.
2. Good ventilation.
3. Clothing at the neck loose; the same as regards the rest of the body.
4. Posture erect; never read lying down or stooping.
5. Little study before breakfast or directly after a hearty meal; none at all at twilight or late at night.
6. Great caution about study after recovery from fevers.
7. Light abundant, but not dazzling.
8. Sun not shining on desk, or on objects in front of the scholar.
9. Light coming from the left hand, or left and rear. under some circumstances from in front.
10. The book held at right angles to the line of sight, or nearly so.
11. Frequently rest by looking up.
12. Distance of book from the eye about fifteen inches.

HOT WATER REMEDIES.

In many emergencies hot water is not only easily obtainable, but also the very best remedy that could be used. Hall's Journal of Health enumerates some instances in which it is of great benefit. A strip of flannel or napkin folded lengthwise and dipped in hot water and wrung out, and then applied around the neck of a child that has the croup, will usually bring relief in ten minutes. A towel folded several times, and dipped in hot water, and quickly wrung, and applied over the toothache or neuralgia, will generally afford prompt relief. This treatment in colic works like magic. There is nothing that so promptly cuts short a congestion of the lungs, sore throat, or rheumatism as hot water, when applied promptly and thoroughly. Tepid water acts promptly as an emetic, and hot water taken freely half an hour before bedtime is the best cathartic possible in the case of constipation, while it has a most soothing effect upon the stomach and bowels. This treatment, continued a few months, with proper attention to diet, will cure any curable case of dyspepsia. Headache almost always yields to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and back of the neck.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

Rub black walnut furniture, or any wood finished in oil, with cloth slightly moistened with kerosene oil, to remove scratches and restore polish.

In bottling catsup or pickles, boil the corks, and while hot you can press them into the bottles and when cold they are tightly sealed. Use the tin foil from compressed yeast to cover the corks.

Grease spots, if old, may be removed from books by applying a solution of varying strength of caustic potash upon the back of the leaf. The printing, which looks somewhat faded after the removal of the spots, may be freshened by the application of a mixture of one part of muriatic acid and twenty-five parts of water.

A recipe for cleaning marble, etc.: Mix up a quantity of the strongest soap-lees with quick-lime to the consistency of milk, and lay it on the stone, etc., for twenty-four hours; clean it afterward with soap and water and it will appear as new. Note.—This may be improved by rubbing or polishing it afterward with some putty powder and olive oil.

Persons who have had new windows to wash will be sure to recollect the botheration caused by the streaks of putty oil and drops of paint. More than half the labor of removing these may be saved by taking a wet cloth, dipping it into ordinary baking-soda, and rubbing the paste thus made thinly over the glass. After this has remained about fifteen minutes, it can be easily removed by washing in warm, soft water, without soap, bringing oil and stains with it. If the glass is then rubbed dry, and afterwards polished with dry whiting and chamois skin, the most fastidious eye can discover no blemish.—Boston Beacon.

When the carpet and straw have been removed, before attempting to sweep up the dust, scatter a good allowance of damp sand over the floor, and you will find that it can be thoroughly cleaned without raising dust. This is a vast improvement on the old method of filling the house and the lungs with dust every time a carpet had to be taken up. Do try it at the spring house-cleaning, and you will, I am sure, never go back to the old way. Sawdust is equally good, but not always as readily obtained.—Ex.

SIMPLE REMEDIES.

For neuralgia, bruise horse-radish and apply as a poultice at the wrist.

When suffering from tired and overstrained eyes, bathe them in hot water several times a day.

For a slight cut, bind on a piece of common brown wrapping-paper—such as butchers use for wrapping meats.

For a cold on the lungs, lay a cloth on the chest, which has first been wrung out of boiling water and then sprinkle with turpentine.

For rheumatism, take half a glass full of lemon juice and water for ten nights before going to bed. Wear flannel next the skin, and in cold weather sleep in warm woolen blankets.—Good Housekeeping.

Convincing Evidence

That Ayer's Sarsaparilla cures Rheumatism and kindred complaints is abundant. This medicine eradicates from the blood all trace of the disease, and so invigorates the system that a perfect restoration to health is inevitable.

"In Oakland, La., 22 years ago, I had been sick a year and a half with sciatic rheumatism. The extreme pains that I suffered wasted my flesh to the bone, and my strength and vitality were well nigh exhausted. My skin was yellow and rough, showing a bad state of the blood, and it is more than likely that blood poison existed, as I have taken large quantities of mercury. After the sciatica was in a measure under control, I was put under treatment to cleanse the blood and give me strength. This was continued several weeks, but to no purpose. My physician then suggested the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and it is to this medicine I owe my restoration to health. From actual experience in the use of various blood-purifiers, I am confident that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has no equal."—J. W. Pickle, Farmerville, La.

"I have known Mr. J. W. Pickle for many years, and consider him a truthful man."—R. B. Dawkins, Mayor of Farmerville, La.

☞Be sure, in making your purchase, that the druggist gives you

Ayer's Sarsaparilla —FOR— Rheumatism.

"During the past year my joints, which had become stiff and sore, caused me great pain, especially at the close of a day's work. At times my fingers were so lame I was unable to hold a needle, while the pain at night prevented my sleeping. I suffered also from nervous chills and a want of appetite. I tried outward applications and took remedies prescribed by my doctor; but all to no purpose. A short time ago my son-in-law, Wm. Woods, of Hollis, N. H., was cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla of an inflammatory disease of the eyes, and seeing him so much benefited, I thought I would try this medicine for my own trouble. The result is a complete cure of the pains, stiffness, and swelling from which I suffered so much. The Sarsaparilla has had a good effect on my appetite and nerves, so that I have better strength and no more chills."—Eliza Halvorson, Nashua, N. H.

"After being many years afflicted with rheumatism, I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great success."—J. B. Bridge, Boston, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Price $1. Six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

We'll write it down till everybody sees it
Till everybody is sick of seeing it
Till everybody knows it without seeing it—that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of chronic catarrh in the head, catarrhal headache, and "cold in the head." In perfect faith, its makers, the World's Dispensary Medical Association of Buffalo, N. Y., offers to pay $500 to any one suffering from chronic catarrh in the head whom they cannot cure.

Now if the conditions were reversed—if they asked you to pay $500 for a positive cure you might hesitate. Here are reputable men, with years of honorable dealing; thousands of dollars and a great name back of them and they say—"We can cure you because we've cured thousands of others like you—if we can't we will pay you $500 for the knowledge that there's one whom we can't cure."

They believe in themselves, Isn't it worth a trial. Isn't any trial preferable to catarrh?

Farm Notes.

CARE OF CHICKS IN SUMMER.

Attention must be given to the food of young chickens in hot weather. Many will mix up a portion of corn-meal, feed it quite wet and then wonder why their pets died. Chicks do not fully digest this, and it passes from the crop to the intestines where little white worms are bred, which cause an irritation of the alimentary canal, resulting in diarrhœa and death. Any one can satisfy himself of the presence of these pests by examination. Meal should never be used in hot weather until the chicks are of good size, and then it should mixed up stiffly. Stale bread is excellent for them. Feed dry and give what they will eat several times a day. Follow this with wheat, oats and cracked corn. Be sure they have good, fresh, drinking water and plenty of it. Disease is often caused by filthy water in the drinking vessels. Provide a daily ration of some kind of green food if they cannot procure this for themselves. Always be sure they have some means of shelter from the sudden storms and shade from the hot sun. Animal food in some form must be provided also, or they will actually eat each other if it be withheld. I have seen chicks nearly scalped by their fellows. A feed of raw meat or beef scraps and dessicated fish mixed stiffly with meal will satisfy the craving they have for this food. Their houses should be thoroughly cleansed and all the droppings should often be removed. If the above rules are followed, I see no reason why you should not raise good, strong, healthy chicks, with little trouble from disease.

TO INCREASE THE YIELD OF BUTTER.

To get more butter from cream, says the Orange Judd Farmer, take wheat bran, 6 quarts; oats, 2 quarts; corn meal, 2 quarts; water, 6 quarts; common salt, ½ an ounce. Mix, and give the full dose to each cow night and morning. In addition give plenty of good, clean hay, and pure water twice per day—the temperature of the latter to be not less than forty-five degrees; and a warm, clean, well ventilated stable for the winter months. For the summer months the corn meal may be omitted, and the temperature of the water should not be over fifty degrees. Give plenty of grass and a good shade. Try the above, and if it does not fill the bill write us for a different prescription.

EARNINGS OF DAIRY COWS.

That dairy cows yield far less profit than they should in this country is evident. For example, the secretary of the New York Dairymen's Association estimates from careful statistics that the cows of the Empire State average only $40 earnings per year, while some successful dairymen make their cows average from $90 to $100. One reason why so low an average is made is that few farmers really know what is a fair day's work for a cow, and consequently do not know whether their cows are good or not. The spread of dairy knowledge will kill off a great many cows that have been counted fairly good, and insure better feeding and care to those which prove worth keeping.

"SHORTS."

Do not depend on borrowing the ordinary farm tools from your neighbors. Own them and keep them in good condition.

The virtue of dry sand as a deodorizer is not properly appreciated. It ought to be used more freely in coops and houses. Store it now if you have leisure.

A woman much engaged in agriculture, and stung frequently, tells the American Bee Journal that the best treatment in her experience is "hot water, applied at once."

Zion's Herald truthfully and pointedly says that in hiring farm hands, where there are boys, it would be preferable to bring a man with small-pox into the family than one with defective morals.

Whenever you are compelled to allow a field to remain uncultivated for want of time or labor it indicates that you have too much land, and that it will pay you to sell a portion, in order that your efforts may be devoted to a smaller area.

The common disease of the feet of cattle known as "foot-ail" is caused by neglect to keep the feet clean. Filth and sand getting between the claws of the hoof soften, irritate and grind down the skin, which becomes sore and then ulcerates under the constant irritation. A cure is easily made by washing the feet clean, keeping them clean, and applying healing applications.

It is conjectured that a specific may yet be found for every ill that flesh is heir to. However this may be, certainly the best specific yet found for diseases of the blood is Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and most diseases originate from impure blood.

Some of the herbs in Hall's Hair Renewer, that wonderful preparation for restoring the color and thickening the growth of the hair, grow plentifully in New England.

BUSINESS.

NEW PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

THE BEST OFFER YET MADE.

During June and July we offer to each NEW subscriber for the Christian Cynosure the following liberal premiums:

One copy of Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary, neatly printed and bound in half-seal covers, and one copy of "The Life and Words of Christ," by Cunningham Geikie, D. D., a larger volume, equally well printed and similarly bound.

Smith's Dictionary has long been a standard publication for Bible students, and is especially rich in trustworthy biography and geography, indicating a vast amount of study and research. It contains 468 pages of closely printed, double-column pages, and, with its thousand references, will be found a useful help in studying the Scriptures.

Geikie's Life of Christ is also very rich in Biblical information, combining the history of our Lord and his disciples with reliable descriptions of the manners and customs of the times in which they lived, the worship of the Israelites, and other matters of interest for careful students. Its reputation as a literary work is excellent. It contains 826 pages.

For persons who have never taken our paper and desire to subscribe for one year, we consider this the most generous offer that has ever been made by this office. On receipt of two dollars, both books will be forwarded, with the paper, to the address of any actually new subscriber. For three dollars and the names of two new subscribers, the books will be sent free, during June and July.

We offer as a PREMIUM for subscribers to the Christian Cynosure the choice of nearly

The Rev. J. Kossbiel of above place writes: I have suffered a great deal, and whenever I feel now a nervous attack coming I take a dose of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic and feel relieved. I think a great deal of it and would rather be without bread than without the Tonic.

CURED AFTER THIRTY-TWO YEARS.

MILWAUKEE, May 25, 1887.

REV. KOENIG:—I am personally acquainted with a man who (in the year 1878, then forty-four years of age) commenced to take your medicine for epilepsy, which he had had for thirty-two years. The attacks which he had formerly every four weeks diminished as soon as he took your medicine and disappeared entirely since August, 1880. The man is so healthy now that he can attend to his business without fear. By this wonderful cure a large family has been made happy, and of this he is convinced and gladly testifies.
REV. PATER AEGIDIUS.

Our Pamphlet for sufferers of nervous diseases will be sent free to any address, and poor patients can also obtain this medicine free of charge from us.

This remedy has been prepared by the Reverend Pastor Koenig, of Fort Wayne, Ind., for the past ten years, and is now prepared under his direction by the Canton and Northern Central Ohio, on Friday evening last, suffered severely from a disastrous rainstorm. More than three inches of water fell on a level within an hour, and considerable damage was done to property. The press announces that a peculiar feature of the storm is the claim of one Frank Melbourn, an Australian, now residing at Springfield, O., that he produced the storm by a patented machine which will cause rain to fall anywhere at any time, within an area of 250 miles. He also claims that if he had shut off the machine a day sooner, the severity of the storm would have been less! Either Mr. Melbourn is a humbug, or a philanthropist.

Fairfield, Iowa, is to have a thoroughly Masonic Fourth of July celebration. The Clinton Masonic lodge of the place is to lay the corner-stone of the new court-house in due form; and has invited a hundred other lodges in that section to come and see it done. Here will be another opportunity for some lodge orator to tell the people that George Washington was a Freemason, and how much the country owes to the order. Also to boast of the antiquity of the order—which Secretary Parvin of the Masonic Grand Lodge says is something that no one but an idiot would claim. It necessarily requires considerable prevarication to glorify Masonry in this direction, but the Masonic conscience is very elastic.

Another new secret society—"United Sons and Daughters of America"—auxiliary to the "Patriotic Order of Sons of America"—held its National Camp in this city on Wednesday of last week. About 500 persons were present. The Second Regiment Band discoursed patriotic melodies, and there were, in honor of the Battle of Bunker Hill anniversary, songs, prayer, and an oration by Dr. Albertson on the "Danger of the Hour." These were interspersed with a flag drill, calisthenic exercises, a recitation, singing by fifty children, etc., and a finale of dancing. This society seems to be an outgrowth of Rev. Mr. Brushingham's patriotic meetings at the Ada Street M. E. church on Sunday afternoons. It is composed of men and women, and Mrs. Geo. P. Smith is the National President. Unrestricted immigration of foreign paupers is opposed by the order. But why secretly?

The Free Press, published at Birmingham, Iowa, which has heretofore been the organ of the American party, in its recent issue declared that the American party is practically dead, and announces its intention, henceforward, to advocate a non-partisan warfare against secret societies in all forms. On this subject it says, editorially: "However desirable the American party, as it was, would be at this hour and in the near future, it is gone, and doubtless gone forever." As nearly as we can understand the position of the Free Press, it now occupies the same vantage ground as the National Christian Association in its Anti-Secrecy League. We commend this as a wise movement, and are certain that on this line there is a great and good work to be accomplished. The ultimate result to be sought is the organization and successful operation of a powerful political party holding to the tenets of the late American party, and arraying itself triumphantly against the influences of lodgery.

Northwestern University students, at Evanston, Ill., on the recent occasion of "the burning of Trig," disgraced themselves and the institution to which they belonged. The affair is thus briefly described by the Evening Journal: "The freshman class of the University had planned a harmless and jovial celebration in connection with its studies; and the sophomore class conceived that the proper thing for it to do was to prevent the celebration by force. In pursuance of this plan, they kidnaped one freshman, and carried him miles away into the country; they stole from another (a young lady student) the manuscript of an address that was to have been delivered; they seized two more, bound them and imprisoned them on top of a six-story building, where a fight ensued with a rescuing party and nearly precipitated them all to the ground; they stole the fireworks intended for the occasion by telling a lie; they boarded the train by which the freshmen were coming to the city, and attacked and beat them, and tried to throw them off the train, and they committed other similar outrages, for which the freshmen were compelled in self-defense to retaliate by equally disgraceful performances. All of these antics they seem to have regarded as immensely 'cute, funny, smart, manly and creditable." The Journal suggests in view of these outrages, that the Northwestern University "appoint a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer."

The Geneva (Ill.) Patrol reports a visit to the creameries of J. C. Carr & Co., at Sandwich, Kane Co., which are ably conducted and pleasantly noticed. Bro. Carr has for a long time been identified with the N. C. A. and its work, and is, furthermore, a consistent observer of the Christian Sabbath. Nearly eight years ago, when entering upon his present business, he resolved that he would not open his creameries on Sunday. Many said that this observance could not be sustained, and others wondered how it could be done. Mr. Carr's idea was that the way to observe the Sabbath was to observe it. Saturday's latest milk crop could be received at the creamery on Saturday evening, but on Sunday, never. This rule, notwithstanding the vigorous opposition with which it was received, has been inflexibly maintained. That his business has not suffered by his Christian consistency in this direction is abundantly attested by the fact that it has increased to six creameries, having about 300 patrons, none of whom have been served on Sunday. Indeed, the neighboring farmers have learned that the right way is the best way; and while some of them have churned at home, others, by exercising ordinary care, have been enabled to keep their milk sweet until Monday morning, and then delivered it at the creamery. If a few men like Mr. Carr lived in every community, the Sabbath-observance cause would be greatly advanced. All that is needed is determination to keep the Sabbath holy—and then keep it.

DANGER TO THE LODGE WITHIN ITSELF.

The frank avowal of Past Master Ronayne to the members of his Masonic lodge, several years ago, that he considered the order a humbug and proposed to leave it, was an act that, while it did him honor, also brought upon him heavy censure and liability to a sudden and violent death, according to the three Masonic obligations which he had taken upon himself, and which, in his office of Worshipful Master of his lodge, he had repeatedly administered to others. Many deemed it an injudicious step, if not a criminal act; but the good use he made of his freedom from lodge tactics inured to the benefit of many other persons whom he has since then persuaded to keep out of the order.

A question, however, has arisen whether he might not, as an active Mason, remaining in his lodge, have been equally beneficial in preventing the accession of quite as many aspirants for Masonic favors from becoming their recipients. Every Master Mason, actively engaged in his lodge work, possesses a secret power in that lodge in this direction, whenever he chooses to exercise it. The plea that the Masonic order is invulnerable; that it cannot be invaded by "cowans" and other intruders, or destroyed by influences outside the lodge, may be true to a certain extent; but the very fact that hundreds of its members, like Ronayne, have withdrawn from it and given the world their experiences within it, to the disparagement of its character, is evidence that, after all, its invulnerability is controlled by individual members whom the officers of the lodge may never suspect of infidelity to its interests.

For instance: Take two Master Masons, who, like Ronayne, have become thoroughly disgusted with the order and its secret machinery; who see in it a source of evil to our American institutions, and of danger to the moral integrity of the young men who are persuaded to enter the lodge. These two Masons are honest in their convictions that they are engaged in a work of doubtful utility, even when measured by the best benefits that accrue to those who participate in its ceremonies and practices. They see in its lodge play a great amount of puerility; in its obligations a horrible disregard of humanity and a remarkable contrast to the teachings of their religion—supposing them to be civilized and not heathens. They see in their lodge associates men of vicious reputation, and engaged in disreputable vocations—men whose secret habits, if divulged to the world, would shut them out of the pale of even irreligious circles of society. Seeing all these things, and feeling that they have been deceived, they confer together as to the best methods of procedure.

To withdraw quietly from their lodges with demits is easy enough, but the fact that they still remain in the order will detract from their usefulness in persuading others to refrain from connection with it; to come out from it and openly denounce it, as have Ronayne and many others, requires a moral courage which they do not possess, and which would result in much unpleasant notoriety and personal opposition, which they would avoid encountering if possible. So they determine to remain quietly in their lodge, continue faithful to its requirements, and be prompt in their attendance and specific duties, but equally determined to wreck their lodge in a thoroughly lawful manner, and prove that it is less invulnerable than most Masons suppose.

There is only one lodge of the first three degrees acknowledged by Freemasons—and that is the Master's lodge. Every Master Mason must of necessity have been first an Entered Apprentice, and a Fellow Craft as well. Therefore a lodge of Master Masons comprises all three degrees, and controls the admission of all applicants for Masonic benefits. On this subject, Mackey's Cyclopedia of Masonry is very explicit:

"All modern lodges, wherever Masonry has extended, are Masters' lodges, and nothing less. Sometimes secretaries, ignorant of these facts, will record in their minutes that 'the lodge of Master Masons was closed, and a lodge of Entered Apprentices was opened.' Neither written nor unwritten law sanctions any such phraseology. If the lodge of Master Masons is closed, there is an end of the Masonic congregation. Where is the warrant under which a lodge of Entered Apprentices is opened, and how can a lodge in which there is not, probably, a single Apprentice, but where all the officers and members are Master Masons, be called a lodge of Apprentices? The ritual has wisely provided for the avoidance of such an anomaly, and seeing that the warrant says that the lodge of Master Masons is empowered to make Apprentices and Fellow Crafts, it says, 'the lodge was opened on the first degree.' That is to say, the lodge of Masters, still retaining its character as a Masters' lodge, without which it would lose its legality, and not venturing to open a kind of lodge for which its members had no warrant nor authority, simply placed itself on the points of a degree in which it was about to give instruction"—or initiate a candidate in the first degree—or the second, if the lodge is re-opened in that degree instead of the first. In either case the Master Masons are those who initiate the novice into the first degree, or the Apprentice into the second, or the Fellow Craft into the third. The hand of the Worshipful Master and his lodge peers is visible in the conferring of the lower degrees.

"In the election of candidates, lodges have recourse to a ballot of white and black balls," says Mackey's Cyclopedia of Masonry. "Unanimity of choice in this case," it continues, "is always desired and demanded; one black ball only being required to reject a candidate. This is an inherent privilege not subject to dispensation or interference of the Grand Lodge, because, as the Old Charges say: 'The members of a particular lodge are the best judges of it; and because, if a turbulent (sic) member should be imposed upon them, it might spoil their harmony, or hinder the freedom of their communications, or even break or disperse the lodge, which ought to be avoided by all true and faithful.'

"In balloting for a candidate for initiation, every member is expected to vote. No one can be excused from sharing the responsibility of admission or rejection, except by the unanimous consent of the lodge. Where a member has himself no personal or acquired knowledge of the qualifications of the candidate, he is bound to give faith to the recommendation of his brethren of the reporting committee, who, he is to presume, would not make a favorable report on the petition of an unworthy applicant."

"Different lodges adopt different methods of balloting," says Doesburg, "the especial point in all being that no member or officer shall know how any one else votes. A very common way is to pass around a box having two compartments in it, one containing black and white ballots" (beans or boys' marbles) "mixed, the other being empty when the ballot is begun. The box containing the mixed ballots has a sliding cover, and the other an aperture large enough to admit a ball. The Senior Deacon hands this box to the Worshipful Master, who examines it to see that the receiving compartment is empty, when he selects a ballot, deposits it, and the Senior Deacon proceeds around the room, by way of the south to the west. . . . . The better way is to place this ballot-box on the altar, after first the Junior and Senior Wardens, and lastly the Worshipful Master, have examined it, to see that the receiving compartment is empty, when the roll of officers and members is called, and each as called steps to the altar, makes the due-guard and sign, and then selects and deposits his ballot."

When the ballots have all been cast, there is a formal removal of the ballot-box to the Worshipful Master, who, upon examination of the ballots, if all are white, declares the ballot "clear;" if one or more black balls are found among the ballots, the result is denominated "foul," and the applicant is rejected.

Perfectly aware of all the rules and formality attending the acceptance or rejection of a candidate for Masonic initiation, the two disgruntled Master Masons above referred to, make a solemn compact and vow that henceforth there shall never be another applicant admitted, nor a candidate initiated, within the walls of that lodge. Ostensibly, to all men, brethren and "cowans," they are enthusiastic, consistent Freemasons. At every lodge meeting, each of them is pledged to the other to be present, and at every balloting for the admission of an applicant one of them will deposit a black ball in the ballot-box. One such ball rejects the applicant. One of the conspiring twain casts a white ballot. No one can tell who cast the black ballot. These two traitors hold the key to the situation. Without them no one can become a Mason. No candidates are initiated. The lodge has become, veritably and merely, a degree lodge, although the traitors can also prevent this by their ballots. They give no one reason to suspect their antagonism to the lodge. They talk right, they perform their work Masonically, they vote right upon all questions except that of admitting applicants to the order, they pay their dues, and in everything are esteemed "bright" and worthy Masons.

Note the consequences. No candidates; no initiation fees; no new members by initiation; a depleted treasury; a lodge shorn of its income and an important part of its work; crippled and wrecked, with an unenviable reputation among the brethren of being a very "exclusive" lodge—and a wonderment to all its members except two, whom the brethren would like to discover and punish—a consummation which the secrecy of the lodge ballot effectually prevents. ZABDIEL.

LODGE OATHS UNSCRIPTURAL AND ILLEGAL.

BY CYRUS SMITH.

The oaths and obligations of secret societies are all of the same nature, from Freemasonry down to the Good Templars lodge. The little temperance lodges are Satan's most convenient mode of appearing as an angel of light, to deceive the prohibitionists.

In taking the lodge oath, it obligates one not to reveal a secret which has not yet been received. Such an oath God forbids in Leviticus 5: 4, whether for good or evil. Then, if God's Word is true, all lodge oaths are wicked. A wicked oath cannot rightfully bind, because it is a mortal sin to hold to anything evil. "Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good."

If the lodge oath was righteous those who do not keep it would be prosecuted in the civil courts, and the penalty for violation would be inflicted according to constitutional law. But the cut-throat penalties of Freemasonry are unknown to civil law. Any institution with an oath that cannot be protected by the courts has no constitutional right to a charter. Lodges dare not appeal to the courts for protection in inflicting the punishment they invoke for violation of a wicked oath to secrecy. But, on the contrary, the murderers of Dr. Cronin would have been glad to keep clear of the courts.

The oaths of all lodges are either so barbarous, Satanic or murderous that the civil law cannot be invoked in their enforcement. The lodge oath is "an agreement with hell and a covenant with death."

Those who were deceived and no longer keep their lodge oaths are denounced in the most bitter terms, and yet there is no appeal by lodge men to that law which is the protection of justice to all. No one thinks of calling upon those learned in law to show where it favors enforcing lodge obligations.

Lodges have no more legal right to administer an oath than private citizens. The lodge seal (if they have any) is not respected by the civil law any more than one of a citizen not an officer of the State. A citizen who is not the proper officer to administer an oath can be fined for so doing. But the lodge should be subject to a much larger fine because its laws and oaths are antagonistic to the civil law, and an oath in court.

What I have said is in charity and with due respect for those who are so unfortunate as to be members of any lodge, big or little, and I give no personal thrusts. But I defy any of them to show me the foundation for the lodge oaths either in civil law or in the Bible.

The lodge is fitly compared to the man who "built his house on the sand." "Great was the fall thereof," and so it will be with lodgery. It has no foundation anywhere on the solid rock of truth.

THE MARK OF THE BEAST.

A bookseller confronted with a book taken from one of his shelves, and charged with the crime of selling books that are manifestly the work of unclean spirits, for the destruction of the race, affirmed that he sold such books to church pastors, who kept them in their libraries as classic works of art.

It appears that this bookseller is a Freemason; and when we reflect that so many church pastors are Freemasons, the apparent anomaly of obscene books in pastors' libraries is not so greatly to be wondered at; for surely Masonry, by degrading the Bible to the level of the obscene, lying principles of its religion, is seen to be also the work of unclean spirits engaged in the destruction of the souls of mankind.

The bookseller confirmed the justness of the above observation by boasting of Masonry, while he said that he would not allow portions of the Bible to be read in his family because of its obscenity.

How far is this man and true Mason from the state affirmed by Christ of those who said that he had an "unclean spirit," i, e.; the state of a blasphemer of the Holy Ghost, who can never be forgiven. See the Gospel by Mark, chapter 3, verses 28, 29, 30. F.

ITALIAN SECRET SOCIETIES.

[L. Wolffsohn, in the London Contemporary Review.]

The Mafia and the Camorra, the one peculiar to Sicily, the other to Naples, owe their origin to the necessity, in past times, of the exercise of individual action against the evils of bad foreign government and the failure of justice. The habit of tyranny, gradually acquired by the two associations in certain circles, very soon resulted in the establishment of an illegal government carried on at the same time as, and within, the legal government.

The Mafia and Camorra of to-day, now that the original cause of their being has ceased, have few, if any, members among the higher classes, and derive the greater number of their associates from the prisons. Thence the evil again filters into the civil administration and courts of justice, where often, even now, favor and protection are bought and sold.

Since 1881 the Camorra has been declining in Naples. The "High Camorra"—that is, certain closely united circles formed of men of position, who recurred to the Camorra proper to assist them, or who personally practiced intimidation, making life difficult to any who in any way opposed them—has almost altogether ceased, unable to face the severe punishment and public indignation which follow any discovery of its deeds. But the Camorra proper has been very active within the last ten years and no doubt still exists.

It is a custom in old Naples to play cards in cafes. When a game is finished it is quite common to see a looker-on walk up to the winner and claim and receive a certain portion of the profits. This bold fellow is a Camorrist. At the city limits, near the custom-house, where the town dues on country produce are paid, may be remarked daily groups of men waiting to levy a second and illegal tax on the vegetable carts entering the city. These, too, are Camorrists. The same thing obtains in the public market; Camorrists demand and obtain a percentage on the sales.

In this and similar ways every kind of humble industry pays tribute to the association; a small sum where the industry is honest, an exorbitant sum in the case of prohibited trades which are obliged to hide from the police, such as clandestine lotteries, houses of prostitution, receiving of stolen goods, gambling houses; and the very thieves, when not themselves members of the nefarious association, are forced to yield up a portion of their booty.

As recently as 1885 the head of the society was well known to the police of Naples, but succeeded in keeping himself out of reach of the law. The discipline of the association was then very strict. The city was divided into districts, each one having its chief of the Camorra. Every morning he received reports from members, and if any forgot to fold his hands in the prescribed fashion, or spoke before he was addressed, he received a violent box on the ear from the chief. A member betraying any fact damaging to the society was ignominiously punished.

At one time the society was very numerous in Borgo Loreto, a low quarter of Naples, and a zealous policeman, named Borelli, was the terror of the quarter. An aspirant for membership in the Camorra, named Eposito, offered to remove this pest. He shot the policeman dead in one of the dark streets, and was immediately advanced to full honors in the Camorra. A banquet was given in his honor, and upon his arrest, money was raised by subscription to defend him. The authorities, realizing that a Neapolitan jury would not be likely to convict him, removed their prisoner to Viterbo, where he was convicted and sentenced to thirteen years' penal servitude.

The Mafia and Camorra, attacked by vigorous and repeated prosecutions, are now passing through a process of evolution. The members of the Camorra, as it is now, avoid actual crime, but profit in many ways by the criminal class, and by every political agitation. The recent assassination of the Chief of Police at New Orleans has again raised the question in Naples whether the Mafia is as powerful as it used to be. That it still exists to some extent, there is no doubt; but it has undergone a modification, and is no longer practiced by any but the lowest class, while the Mala Vita (bad life) is the name now given to all bands of malefactors throughout Italy.

The Mala Vita is supposed to be divided into two portions, the smallest of which consists of neither forgers nor thieves, but only of accoltellatori (literally, "those who wound with the knife"); the other portion, much more numerous, has a certain resemblance to the old Camorra of Naples.

A characteristic of the members of the Mala Vita is their practice of tattooing the skin with the strangest patterns, the favorite figure being a heart transfixed by an arrow. One man was tattooed with the figures of a man and woman fighting a duel. Tattooing is considered a proof of scorn of pain, and it seems a point of honor with the chiefs to be tattooed on a larger scale than the others.

A PROPOSED IMPORTANT EXHIBIT AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

About the time this issue should reach a large number of our readers (3 o'clock Thursday afternoon, June 25), there will be an important conference of representatives of the various religious, benevolent and reformatory organizations of the country in the Manager's Room of the Bible House, New York City, to discuss a plan for exhibiting at the World's Fair in Chicago the ideas and institutions which lie at the foundation of our American civilization, and are the chief sources of our material prosperity.

The call—which should have been issued much earlier to afford opportunity for its wider circulation and consideration—is signed by the following gentlemen: Cephas Brainerd, Chairman International Committee Y. M. C. A.; F. F. Ellinwood, Secretary Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions; A. B. Leonard, Secretary Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church; Joseph Bourne Clark, Secretary American Home Mission Society; H. L. Morehouse, Secretary American Baptist Home Misssion Society; G. L. Shearer, Secretary American Tract Society; Josiah Strong, General Secretary Evangelical Alliance for the United States.

The objects of the conference will be better understood after a perusal of the call, which is as follows:

"Although the religious life of the people and its most precious fruits are among 'the things not seen,' our Christianity has produced important results which appeal to the eye. Our interdenominational associations, our many missionary societies, our evangelistic, philanthropic and reformatory organizations, together with our great religious papers and publishing houses, could, by the aid of charts, photography and other means, make an exhibit which would do much to inform the public touching the nature, magnitude, condition and results of their work.

"A number of organizations are talking of erecting each a building for its own use during the Exposition. It has, however, been suggested that one large building, in every respect worthy of the occasion, would possess obvious advantages over several small and scattered ones. It could be better located, it would economize money and time, it would be far more impressive and attractive, it might contain audience rooms for great religious conventions, it would afford facilities for a united religious exhibit in which all Christendom might be invited to participate. A comparison of methods of Christian work might result in greatly increased efficiency, and the closer relations into which the various denominations and interdenominational organizations would be brought might prepare the way for fuller and more important co-operation in the future. A number of prominent men, East and West, who have given the matter some thought, consider the project both practicable and desirable."

We shall look for the results of this conference with interest, and gladly report the progress of the movement.

A WORLD'S LABOR CONGRESS.

The world's congress auxiliary of the World's Columbian Exposition has issued an address on labor congresses, including all germane industries and economic problems. It is urged that in addition to the exhibit of industrial results the interests of the laborers themselves should be given the fullest consideration, and to that end there will be a general labor congress arranged with the co-operation of the most distinguished students of labor problems. It will consider the steps in industrial advance from slavery to the wage system, profit-sharing, voluntary co-operation, etc.; the conflicts of labor and capital; public economics as related to labor; labor legislation; woman's labor; and whatever will tend to the betterment of existing conditions.

NO TIME NOW TO LAY DOWN OUR ARMOR.

"It is always a time of war with the church of God on earth. Conciliation is only possible by the surrender of one of the opposite parties. Peace can come only by conquest. Anti-Christian forces have always been implacable. The cry is, 'Crucify him,' whether the lips that utter the cry be those of animalized unbelief, mournful agnosticism, or flippant rationalism. The assault upon Christianity is in effect the old cry, 'Crucify him.' Christians are almost guilty of treason to their Lord if they allow their martial spirit to decline in such a contest as is upon us, and which few seem to realize. Christianity has nothing to fear in the crucible of honest comparison. But Christians are called to be stubbornly faithful to truth rather than amiable toward error. We are now menaced by a 'new philosophy' which would sweep away Christianity and agnosticise the race."—Bishop McLaren's address before the recent Episcopalian Diocesan Convention.

IMPROVEMENT IN THE TASTE FOR GOOD BOOKS.

One of the encouraging signs of the times is the growing taste among the book-buying public for better made books, and, above all, for better books. This public seems to have broken away from old traditions, or at least traditions of ten years standing, and is calling, not for what has been lauded in threadbare phrase as "the books no self-respecting person can very well be without," but for the best in literature, and in the best shape obtainable. The sale of standard books—of works in the department of philosophy, poetry, and good literature generally—during the past three months at least, has been encouragingly good, and promises to continue. The publishers who have been in touch with the public seem to have taken their cue, and are making every effort to supply this demand for better books. The season just past has brought out better books in more appropriate forms than ever before. There have been fewer books of elephantine or microscopic form, and the edition de luxe seems more and more to become a realization of the true meaning of the term. It was once thought that an unwieldly book with a profusion of ill-adjusted margin, a smattering of blurred daubs designated as etchings, a hideous binding, and a limited number of copies made up an edition de luxe. The public for awhile accepted this form because it was the "fad." But that has passed away, and what is now called for are books, printed in legible type, on paper of the best quality, and put up in exquisite and appropriate shape, regardless of the number printed. For this class of books enough buyers can be found willing to pay any price within reasonable bounds; and on this line the publishers can and will make money. It has taken the trade years to learn this lesson. We trust its experience will be used to lasting profit.—Publisher's Weekly.

THE SABBATH QUESTION IN EUROPE.

Those alone who spend their lives in constant work (says the Rock, a Church of England magazine) can understand the literal meaning of the word "Sabbath." The rest which is desired is one which brings with it a feeling for a total change of occupation. The antithesis of labor, therefore, according to the workingman's ideal, is a restoring power in the ceaseless round of toilful existence. The cry for the opening of museums, which means an increase of unnecessary work, is on every account a misleading one. Neither the workingman's comfort, nor his art education, will be promoted by the Sabbath opening of museums and art galleries.

WHERE IS THE BOASTED "BENEVOLENCE" OF ODD-FELLOWSHIP AND MASONRY?

Any brother who is in good standing in his lodge—that is, who is not in arrears, and against whom there is no charge "for conduct unbecoming an Odd-fellow"—is entitled to receive from his lodge, in case he should be sick or disabled, a sum of money weekly. The amount varies in extent—some of the lodges giving twenty dollars per week, and others, four or five. The usual allowance, however, is five dollars per week. Those lodges which give large benefits charge large initiation fees and dues. Every worthy brother has a positive right to his weekly allowance. Neither is its payment to him a matter of charity. It belongs to him as really and unqualifiedly as would insurance-money, due from the insurer of property against loss by fire. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon the minds of Odd-fellows that there is no humiliation in receiving the lodge benefits.—Odd-fellows' Text-Book.

There is a common idea that lodges of Masons and other Masonic bodies are, by some secret law, organized forms of benevolence, relief and charity. There is no greater mistake. . . . . There is no law of Masonry which compels a Masonic lodge to contribute one dollar to support an orphan, a widow, or even a brother.—H. G. Reynolds, Grand Master F. & A. M., Illinois.

MISSIONARY WORK NEEDED AMONG THE SOUTHERN NEGROES.

There are to-day 8,000,000 Negroes in this country, 4,000,000 of whom profess no religion. Of the other 4,000,000 very few have any definite knowledge of revealed truth. The Trinity, redemption, the Ten Commandments, the existence of God, are unknown to whole families in some Southern districts. A large portion of their ministry can scarcely read the Word of God (says Rev. T. L. Cook in the Evangelical Repository for June), to say nothing of understanding the truths contained therein. Their religion is highly emotional, mixed largely with superstition. Thus a large mass of the Negroes of this Christian land of light and truth are groping in darkness and sin. Is there not a necessity for religious work among the Negroes of the South?

Trust not to the promise of a common swearer, for he that dares to sin against God, for neither profit nor pleasure, will be very likely to trespass against thee, for his own advantage.

VERMONT.

BY PRESIDENT J. BLANCHARD.

Hills of unfading green! whose summits proud
Whisper the things of earth unto the sky,
When on your lonely peaks the mantling cloud
Forewarns the traveler that storms are nigh,
Say what the legends ye have told on high!
Break! Break your lasting silence! For, too long,
Your voiceless dells have heard the eagle's cry,
Or they, perchance, an echo wild have flung
As through your silent glens the panther's scream hath rung.

Hills yet unsung but by the wild winds' moan,
Hills where the sea-fowl resteth on her way—
Hills where of old the Indian stalk'd alone,
And stole upon his unsuspecting prey,—
Repeat your heaven-told tales! Ye mountains! say
What are the tongueless wonders ye have seen
Since first your shaggy tops were gilt with day?
For many a sad and many a joyous scene
Hath been o'erlooked by you, hills of unfading green!

And many a sad and many a joyous sight,
Though but the feverish offspring of a day,
Hath been o'erlooked by each unlettered wight,
Who dwells, or dwelt, beneath thy summits gray;
For life is not all fun'ral, or all play,
But, strangely blended to the curious eye,
Its whole vast tide bears rapidly away
Chaotic elements of joy and grief that lie
In wild confusion as they drift in noiseless tumult by.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

An outing at home.—The Traveller's new management.—Schools of drunkenness at Harvard.—The clergy and the endowment orders.—A new co-operative Association.—A sad case.—Rev. J. M. Gray on theosophy.

"The heated term," following close on a week so chilly that fires were needed, has come, evidently to stay; and the keepers of the various summer resorts are counting on a golden harvest. But is the prevalent idea that one must necessarily rush off to the seaside or the mountains, or take a trip to Europe, in order to enjoy the holiday months, an altogether logical or reasonable one? I wonder how many of all the multitudes who periodically crowd the cars and steamers when the grand rush of summer travel comes on, know how little their lot is to be envied beside that of the stay-at-home who has learned how much comfort can be taken under one's own vine and fig-tree, and what a world of wonder and beauty can be seen without going beyond one's own door-yard. Lying in a swinging hammock, without any of the disagreeable accessories and abetments of foreign travel, one can visit every country on the globe. Any old apple tree will show us marvels of insect life for new Hubers to note. Even the swallow's flight through the air is a mystery that, as Ruskin has said, no student of mechanics has ever yet been able to explain. What opportunities for acute and loving observation of these many marvels around us; and what a chance to get acquainted with the master-minds of literature, by banishing the "summer novel" as we would the plague, and choosing the books that at whatever page we open will not jar on Nature's most ideal mood, but be, instead, her gracious interpreters! While the same sky bends over the tourist and the stay-at-home, and the same sun rises and sets, the advantages cannot be all on the side of the former.

The Boston Traveller, after a variety of changes in its management, has passed into the hands of the Committee of One Hundred, with Dr. Dunn at the head. This will be pleasant news for reformers, as the Traveller, on account of its literary merit and high moral excellence, has always been a favorite in conservative New England families. According to the prospectus, it will be non-sectarian and non-partisan, advocating the protection of our common schools, the rights of the colored race, the suppression of the saloon, and be opposed to all trusts and monopolies, and "all anti-American organizations that interfere with the order and peace of society." This would seem to imply opposition to the lodge. I cannot yet say with certainty how the paper under its new management will treat the anti-secret question; but we have reason to believe, from its very radical platform, which takes in all the reforms of the day, including woman suffrage, that it will be, at the very least, candid and fair when the subject comes under consideration. Leading women, like Miss Willard, Alice Stone Blackwell, and Mrs. Eliza Trask Hill, give the Traveller their most cordial endorsement under its new policy; and if every Christian family would take it in preference to other papers that will only print temperance news at advertising rates, and are doing all they can, by their slavish truckling to Rome, to pave the way for papal rule in America, it will be demonstrated that patriotism and religion can be made to pay, even in a daily newspaper.

The late revelations of the Cambridge police court concerning the bar-rooms which Harvard College has so long protected under the name of Greek-letter societies, and the fining of twenty-five prominent students, who were members of the Alpha Delta Phi, sixty-five dollars each, will not tend to make these secret college organizations any more favorably considered by the public. Harvard's good name has suffered immensely of late by displays of drunken rowdyism which do not seem inexplicable in the light of the recent police raid on her secret club-rooms. As literary societies, they have proved a decided failure, but as schools for drunkenness and general hoodlumism they may be called a grand success—in Harvard, at least.

It would seem to be the place of the clergy to warn their people against engaging in lottery schemes by investing their money in the endowment orders; but, so far from being awake to their demoralizing nature, many have themselves been caught in the snare. One order, in Northampton, has on its membership roll the names of five ministers of that place. The Springfield Republican is authority for the statement that the little suburban village of Florence has more shareholders in these schemes than actual inhabitants, even if the women and children were all counted. A lodge writer states that there are 703 ordained ministers in Massachusetts who are Freemasons, and if this be so, it is not a matter of wonder that so many should be caught in the lesser trap of the endowment orders.

An association has lately been incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts which seems to be a worthy one. It is for working people, and has no insurance or assessments, its chief object being to prevent sickness among its members, as far as possible, by sanitary efforts and a careful watch over their environments. It is called the Medical and Sanitary Aid Association, and by paying six cents weekly, each member can command, in case of sickness or accident, the attendance of a skillful physician, Such associations, it is said, have worked successfully in England, and if they did no other good than to spread among working people a knowledge of those hygienic conditions on which health depends, they cannot fail to do a much-needed work. But, however mighty the co-operative system, it cannot reach all cases; as, for instance, that very sad one of the poor woman who starved to death last week in—shall we say it?—charitable Boston. Not because the city's charitable associations are all dead, but because they are bound hand and foot with miles on miles of red tape. The woman's husband was an old soldier, who received a pension, but as soon as he got his money he spent it in drink, while his sick wife was left entirely destitute of food or medicine. The police claimed that it was a case outside their jurisdiction; the paymaster of the soldier's relief department did not consider it within his province; and the overseers of the poor marked the case as beyond their reach, because her husband was drawing State aid, while the Associated Charities, although notified, for some other reason equally good and sufficient, no doubt, neglected to do anything—with the sad result named above. And the question is, "Who is to blame?" How at the bottom of almost every case of want and suffering, innocent as the immediate victims may be, we find the omnipresent liquor fiend! Senator Donavan is said to be receiving a very handsome reward from the liquor-sellers for his work in getting the public bar law repealed. I wonder if the Senator ever thinks, when accepting the wages of unrighteousness, of another reward and the kind of coin it will be paid in, when the day of vengeance shall overwhelm alike the Babylon of the liquor traffic and all her helpers.

Rev. James M. Gray preached quite a noteworthy sermon last Sabbath, on "Theosophy," the much-talked-of subject, which, as he well said, "has as many names as it has various forms of expression," thus showing the essential unity of all false religions. He quoted the opinion of Dr. Pembes, an English writer, who says that theosophy is simply a revival of a philosophy communicated unto men in the earlier ages of the world by fallen angels, and stated that there were strong intimations in the Scriptures of the truth of this theory. He gave a brief sketch of Madame Blavatsky's history (the great exponent and priestess of this new-old religion), whose picture in the newspapers give, one such a mingled impression of the slovenly and the uncanny. What a strange creature she must have been! If she looked like her portraits, I should not have cared to have her sit next to me at dinner; but how fitted seemed her whole personelle for dabbling in occult mysteries! As much so as Shakespeare's witches. The theosophists not only make every man his own Christ, thus fulfilling our Saviour's prediction that there shall arise false Christs, but they also say that there is no devil. Satan exists, but he is not the devil, according to their view. The mystery of Satan is reserved for the initiated. Can it be, asked Mr. Gray, that that mystery is the worship of Satan himself?

The Scriptures constantly teach that in every form of false worship Satan is the real object of homage, and it may be yet demonstrated that theosophy, which has so much in common with the Rosicrucian mysteries, is really the worship of Satan in its baldest form, without that veil of symbolism which Masonry throws over it in order to keep this appalling fact from the neophyte.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June, 1891.

The first annual assembly of the National Chautauqua at Glen Echo was formally opened on Tuesday afternoon. All of the contemplated permanent buildings are not completed, but the mammoth stone amphitheater, with a seating capacity of 6,000, was, by hard and constant work, finished in time for the dedicatory ceremonies, and Tuesday night, for the first time, it was completely illuminated by electricity. One of the largest pipe organs in the country, thirty feet wide and twenty-seven feet long, graces the interior of the amphitheatre, just back of the speaker's platform, and in the hands of Professor Harry F. Brown, organist of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, its grand tones in the opening hymn—"From All that Dwell Below the Skies"—filled every portion of the great building and delighted the assembled hundreds.

Rev. Dr. Talmage, who delivered the dedication address, spoke in his happiest vein, and seemed thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the occasion, and he had spoken but a few minutes before his hearers all shared his sentiments. He was followed by Rev. Drs. T. S. Hamlin, Elliott, and S. H. Green. Those who heard the long meter Doxology, with which the dedicatory services were closed, sung by the entire audience and accompanied by the grand organ, will remember it for many a long day to come. It was a most fitting and impressive ending to the very interesting ceremonies.

At four o'clock in the afternoon there was a grand concert, consisting of selections of appropriate music by the United States Marine band, a cornet solo by Miss Alice Raymond, and selections on the grand organ by Prof. Brown. In the evening, at 7 o'clock, services were held, and at 9:30 the day was closed with an eventide concert by the Rogers band, which is regularly stationed on the grounds. Every one who attended votes the opening day a great success, notwithstanding the unusually warm weather, and the managers are complimented on all sides for the wonders they have accomplished in such a short time.

Many Washington people are living in tents upon the grounds where all the conveniences of the city may be had, including meals ready cooked. Last night the entire grounds were illuminated by electricity, and presented a very brilliant and beautiful appearance. The facilities for reaching the grounds, which are about six miles from Washington, include about every known vehicle and a newly-completed electric railway, which, owing to an accident the day before, could not be tested as to its capacity to accommodate the crowds that wished to attend the opening. Strangers are loud in their praise of the beauties of the grounds and surroundings, and predict a successful future for the new Chautauqua, and all speak of the three weeks' program as being exceptionally good.

Children's Day was celebrated in quite a number of our churches of various denominations last Sunday, and the attendance was generally reported as unusually large.

Rev. F. D. Power delivered a powerful and impressive sermon upon the sin of gambling, on Sunday night, taking the English royal scandal, to which the American newspapers have, unfortunately, devoted so much space in giving all the details, as a text. "What an awful mess," said Mr. Power, "for the vision of a civilized world!" What a fearful example this hereditary sovereign of a great people, the future head of a great established church—a companion of blacklegs, destroyer of youth, and traveling Monte Carlo. An earnest prayer should go up from the hearts of all Christian people that such a man may never come to the English throne. It is plain that the world has no conception of the extent and demoralizing influence of this vice. Through all grades of society and among all classes of the community, the horribly fascinating evil has spread, until it is almost impossible to eompass its dimensions. At one time the gambler was a mere blackleg, a creature unknown to virtue or to shame, sunk so low in the social scale that conscience was dead, and intelligence become mere cunning; a man wholly given over to dishonesty, trickery and falsehood. . . . To-day princes indulge in this sin, in the full view of nations. Merchants, with earnest faces and courtly manners, and pews in leading churches, who would resent with scorn any implication of wrong-doing, will take a hand in this business. . . . . The axe should be laid at the root of the tree. This infernity should be condemned by law." *

REFORM NEWS.

LODGERY ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

CENTRALIA, Wash., June 2, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I went, to-day, to Chehalis, on foot, the round trip fully ten miles.

My first interview was with Bro. Atkins, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church. He is from Canada, but a native of New York; and his birth-place was near the scene of Morgan's murder. He said that he was taught to detest Masonry and secret societies in general, and confessed that Masonry was still looked upon with abhorrence in both Canada and New York, everywhere near the Falls of Niagara. But, notwithstanding his early training and predilections, he had, some years since, decided to see for himself, and accordingly had gone to the top of the ladder in Odd-fellowship, and had taken one degree in Masonry. He claimed to understand the position of the N. C. A. on the question, and asserted that, as to Odd-fellowship, it had been grossly misrepresented; that in his initiation into Masonry, he had not been denuded of his clothing to such an extent that he would have been ashamed to appear upon the street dressed as he was in the lodge.

Under pretence of wishing to be set right, if convinced that he was wrong, this youngster started out to question me as to my objections to Odd-fellowship. He said he had gone clear through the order, but if I had anything new to impart, he would be glad to hear it. I had asserted that Odd-fellowship, like Masonry, was a false and anti-Christian religion; that it had mock-solemn rites, altars, and priests, and claimed to fit men for all their duties to themselves, to their fellow-men and to God. He denied it, and demanded the proof. Neither one of us had a Manual, so he could deny anything he pleased. He wanted to know in what degree Odd-fellowship teaches regeneration without Christ. I referred him to that part of the initiation in the first degree, where the Noble Grand, instructing the initiated Odd-fellow, explaining the hoodwinks, chains, coffin, corpse, etc., says to him: "After this representation you have been restored to light and liberty, which," he says, "is emblematical of the light of that truth which reveals to us love as the grand remedy for all social evils, as, indeed, it is the foundation of all good towards God and man." I told him that this was an imitation of the devil-regeneration of the Masonic lodge, and a vile substitute for Christianity; that the order stole such of the parables of Christ as that of the Good Samaritan on which to build its degrees, then banished Christ himself out of the lodge, and, loading the parable with falsehood, fired it at all the benevolences of Christianity, virtually saying to the Christian church: "You represent the priest and Levite, who came and looked on the man who had fallen among thieves, and then passed by on the other side; but we are the Good Samaritans of this age and generation, who alone take care of the poor and unfortunate, sick, wounded and half-dead, and their widows and orphans." That is, said I, of all able-bodied white men over 21 years of age, who are able to, and who pay their dues, and accept the lodge religion, keep the lodge secrets, and implicitly obey the officers and rulings of the lodge. Then they receive Christians who will submit to their rites and take their obligations—thus canceling their obligations taken as Christians by accepting of another religion—together with Jews, Turks, infidels and heathen, and on the same footing. I told him that it was of the same spirit as Masonry, which substitutes Hiram Abiff for Christ, converts men with the stone hammer, and sanctifies them with the implements of Masonry; that its prayers were Christless, and its whole spirit and purpose anti-Christian; in short, that it claims to do all that Christianity proposes or promises, and that without the Word of God, Christ or the Holy Spirit.

This lodge-enlightened youth acknowledged that some things I had said about Odd-fellowship were true, but that much of what I had uttered was false. He denied that it is a religion, and that it excludes Christ; and said that in his lodge they prayed every week for the conversion of all the members of the order, and prayed in the name of Christ. He denied that infidels, Jews, Turks, and raw heathen could join the order—and yet it is not a religious institution! He denied that it has any mock regeneration; and asserted that it is purely and solely a charitable and benevolent institution. I demanded of him to state wherein I had misrepresented Odd-fellowship, but he refused to do so. He replied that he hoped I might give him some additional light on the order, but that I had only displayed my ignorance and had lied about it; that if he were to tell me wherein I had misrepresented it, it would enable me to avoid exposing my ignorance in my warfare against the lodge. He asserted that, not having been an Odd-fellow nor a Mason, I could not understand them! He forgot that he, an Entered Apprentice, had lectured on thirty-two of the degrees of Masonry. This young fellow prides himself on his learning, and is, I judge, something of a student. He entertains his Sabbath-evening audiences with such delectable stuff as his lectures on Masonry, of the real nature of which he himself confesses his ignorance. Thirty-two lectures on and in favor of Masonry, in quick succession, from a Methodist pulpit, in a little moss-back, lodge-ridden town of unpainted houses, of some two thousand population, where, as the preacher himself said, "Nearly every man and woman belongs to some lodge and wears its badge." I referred him to what Bishop Hamline wrote in his diary, about the injury done to the church in the North Ohio Conference by Odd-fellowship and Freemasonry, which he pronounced "a bane in our midst." He said that he had small reverence for Episcopal prerogatives; he had had enough royal dictation in Canada. I told him that I had no respect for Freemasonry bishops who were upholding infidels and scoundrels in Methodist pulpits because they belonged to the lodge. Then he came to the rescue of his Masonic brethren in the Episcopal office. He thought that God was in all this secret society business and would get glory out of it. I told him that especially Masonry and Odd-fellowship were devil-inspired; and that secret societies in general constituted an organized conspiracy against Christ; and that these orders were doing the Methodist church more harm than everything else put together.

The next and only other man upon whom I called was Rev. W. B. Williams, pastor of the Presbyterian church. He is outside of and opposed to the lodge. But he knows nothing of the lodges, except from an outside view of them, never having studied the question. I gave him a copy of the Cynosure, and he bade me God-speed in my work.

The schools having closed, there was no chance to advertise a lecture, and no probability of getting an audience. I did not try. I am not able to pay printers' bills, hire halls, and pay my own personal expenses in these towns, filled with wolves in sheep's clothing—and the wolf's tail is plainly visible in all these churches, especially in the pulpits.

As might be expected, Catholicism is strong in this place. The Baptist church is unable to support a pastor.

I lectured at two other places—Rochester and Oakville,—at one of which I got seventy-five and at the other fifty cents. At Rochester some boys threw stones against and inside of the house, but when I stepped to the door and denounced their cowardly and disgraceful conduct, they desisted. There are several other places down here, but as I have to walk back, and it would be necessary to travel by boat to the other places, I will wipe the dust off of my feet against this section of the country, and return to Centralia.

I go from there to Portland, where please send my mail until further orders. How I am to get through such a country as this with nothing except what I get from these lodge-ridden communities and churches, I don't know. When I was in India, I had a first-class free pass over the Great Indian Peninsular Road—English—and a second-class pass on a native king's road; but here I must pay five cents a mile. There I was entertained free; here I have generally to put up at hotels, and they are nearly always owned by secret society men. There I had the co-operation of earnest Christian English men and women in my work; here I am undermined and scorned by preachers and members of orthodox churches, especially the Methodist. M. H. NICHOLS.

ETHIOPIA REJOICING IN THE TRUTH.

PINE BLUFF, Ark., June 15, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Inclosed you will find a list of ministers, with their postoffices, who I think will be benefited by reading the Cynosure. I am truly glad in my heart that God has put it in the minds of our brothers in the North to give of their means to send this glorious paper to the homes of the poor colored ministers of the South. This lodge deviltry has done more to curse and ruin our people than anything I know of. I was once a slave, too, having been blindfolded and hoodwinked away from the truth. But, thank God, I am now free. It was the dear old Cynosure that saved me from the worship of Baal. When I received the first copy of that dear blessed paper, I was then Chaplain of the Masonic lodge and Noble Grand of the Odd-fellows' lodge in this city, with 105 members. When I had read the third copy I saw my mistake, and I went into these two lodge rooms and told them that I could not be a Christian and remain with them. I left them then and there, once for all. They threatened my life, but I trusted in God, and I am yet alive. I never preach a sermon without striking a blow at these wicked and false institutions. No man or woman can join the church of which I am pastor until he leaves the worship of Baal.

While I live I shall ever raise my voice against this lodge deviltry. The orders are fast declining in this city. My little church is small, and I am very poor; but we feel that we are right, and

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, June, 1891.

The "thunder of the captains and the shouting," of which Job speaks in his day, have been heard here in different camps of the church militant, the past month or two, with unusual distinctness. There is now a grateful lull. Several of the leading ones have gone abroad. A hot wave has wilted energies. Moral responsibility is said to cease when the mercury gets to eighty. It has been higher than that for several days.

The week's trial in which the Prince of Wales and his fellow-gamblers figured, has elicited wide comment in the daily and religious press. Monarchy has had a shock, and democratic ideas a new impulse. The English people are doing a deal of sober thinking just now. Some six years ago, a London preacher, referring to acts of the royal libertine, exclaimed, in my hearing, "We'll kick him out if he does not change." The Chris- tian World now puts the same idea into other words in saying that Edward VII. is not likely to be crowned, if things continue as now. The outspoken juror and the outspoken press, the past week, have opened many English ears and eyes. Ominous words have been uttered by socialist clubs before this, but disaffection now is expressed by individuals and public bodies whose loyalty to the throne has never been questioned.

The Congregational pastors had their closing meeting for the season last week, and discussed the proposed united Christian exhibit at the Columbian Fair at Chicago. Dr. Josiah Strong, of the Alliance, thought that a union of Protestant denominations would make a more effectual showing in a spacious building than if scattered in various parts of the grounds. Such a building, 250x500 feet, with corner towers, gateways, porches, great auditorium, smaller halls and offices, built about a quadrangle, could be put up for $250,000, and furnished and carried on for as much more money. If each Christian Endeavor Society gave ten dollars, $150,000 would be realized. If half the Christian people in the country helped, over six million contributions would be received. Brethren were about equally divided in opinion, some seeing in it a wise and practical exhibition of what religion was now doing in this land and worth what it cost. Others thought the scheme a worldly concession to those who think the kingdom of God comes by observation. The deficit in our mission boards and clamorous calls for needy fields, point to a better use of the Lord's money. Bro. S. said that men of the world would pay for this building who give nothing to missions; one such promised him $10,000. One brother suggested that Christian people should have nothing to do with this scheme till it was settled that the show would be closed on Sundays. If the protests coming in from all parts of the land against Sunday opening be disregarded, as quite likely they may be, Christians, it was said, should keep away entirely from the fair. A conference meeting is to be had soon, and delegates invited to discuss the matter. The great difficulty is to find a body of men who would take the risk of such a huge speculation. Of course, men like the Alliance officers are not supposed to turn aside from their religious work to build, furnish and supervise, in such a vast undertaking, which inevitably, like the rest of the exhibition, will wear a mercantile character. It is doubtful whether any large number of religious bodies will endorse the movement.

The Art Museum, in this city, has now been open two Sundays, and thousands have crowded the building. The protests of clerical bodies availed nothing. Drs. Rainsford, Heber Newton, Lyman Abbott, and men of that class used their influence in its favor. To open theaters on the Lord's Day will now be an easier thing. Supporters of Sunday newspapers, band concerts and open museums are ready for the further secularization of the day. The Boston Congregationalist says, very gingerly: "If it is improper, Christians should protest" against this museum opening, clearly showing that they are not opposers. So with Sunday travel. So long as preachers freely use railroads on the Lord's Day, they are dumb on the subject of Sabbath-keeping. But this is an age of free thinking. What of the Bible is agreeable to our reason is to be retained. What suits our ideas as to our modus vivendi, that we do. As Lyman Abbott emphatically said at the State Conference, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," a very convenient motto.

OCCASIONAL.

DANGERS OF GROWING SOCIALISM IN THE UNITED STATES.

CINCINNATI, O., June, 1891.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—There is a striking article in the Century for June, by Prof. Wm. M. Sloane, on "Pensions and Socialism." Here is the way he sums up our folly: "At this moment the 62,000,000 people in the United States are annually paying $44,000,000 for a military establishment, $22,000,000 for a navy, $160,000,000 for pensions, including deficiencies—a total of $226,000,000, which is 80 per cent of what the combined 86,000,000 people of France and Germany, together, pay for their armaments. We bemoan their sad fate, the oppressive burdens under which the men, women and children of old Europe groan. But this is the pass to which we have come: Eighty-six millions of French and Germans pay $265,000,000 for armaments and pensions; 62,000,000 of Americans already pay $226,000,000—a simple sum in ratio. At our rate they would disburse $308,000,000—about $40,000,000 more than they actually do."

This lavish expenditure of public funds he attributes to the socialistic spirit which has taken possession of the public mind, and which, if not checked, will work our ruin. Next year, $200,000,000 will be expended in pensions. It is proposed to increase this to seven or eight hundred millions, in order "to be noble." What will be the end? "A most striking historical parallel can be drawn. Rome won her great and early wars, in contrast with Carthage and other nations, by the valor of her own citizens. But no reward was too great for the generosity of the nation to bestow on her victorious legions. Expectation and performance finally laid such a burden on her that mercenaries had to be employed for economy's sake, until at last the professional soldier realized his power and became the arbiter of her sinking destinies. Since then the tale has been more than twice told. Let this policy go on, and the utmost resources of this rich land will be taxed beyond endurance, unless we come to our senses and retrace our steps." We can readily see what our condition will be when this socialistic spirit has gone to seed.

REFORM, A REMEDY.

Americans are learning the same lessons that France has been taught, that institutions can be over-ridden and people crushed to the wall by would-be rulers goaded on by greed for gain and love of power. In France, to some extent, this evil was stayed and overcome by revolution. Americans will pursue another course, and release will come through reform.—Pacific Ensign.

SHARP CRITICISM.

Albert Pike's funeral: "The whole ceremony is a mixture of folly, superstition and profanity. This single public performance ought to give any sensible man a horror of the whole iniquitous system. And, worse than all, the abominable service was held within the walls of a Christian church."—Associate Presbyterian Magazine.

A blow struck, a word spoken, a dollar given for Prohibition now will count ten given next year.—California Voice.

A MATTER OF INTEREST.

The fact that it is the Roman Catholic church that is the head and front of the opposition to the public school, to the compulsory teaching of the English language and to the spirit of American institutions, makes it a matter of interest to every one.—The Advance.

A REASONABLE SUGGESTION.

Perhaps the cheapest way out of the Italian imbroglio is for the United States to pay Italy what the lynched members of the Mafia were worth to her when they were at home.—Boston Transcript.

TOO GOOD TO LAST.

One hour of some days is as good as a half dozen of others. If we could always have the life of that one, the earth would become a half heaven, full of peace, happiness, and even rapture.—United Presbyterian.

SOUTHERN RHETORIC.

Strong editorial expression anent missing papers: "The complaint about failure of papers is all moonshine. .....The papers are all there, or there is no devil in hell."—Galveston (Tex.) Test.

MORE "FANATICS" NEEDED.

John Brown was a fearfully-in-earnest man, for he staked his life on the cause. They put the poor old fanatic to death, because he sought to free the slaves—but his soul went marching on till every slave was free. Would that we had more such fanatics in the cause of religion, as he was in the cause of human freedom.—H. F. H., in the Vanguard.

HAPPY THOUGHT.

Millions of persons who are now unhappy would be happy at once if they would only agree to it.—Advance Thought.

TOO MANY NOW.

If there is any one thing this country doesn't need it is more secret so-called benevolent societies which gobble the dollars from the poor and promise results that common sense business principles would pronounce vain and illusory.—Sandy Lake (Pa.) News.

THE END OF SELFISHNESS.

Let a man live for himself all his life, and the only pleasure he will have left when he is fifty is that which he finds in hating his enemies.—Atchison Globe.

A WORTHY CAREER.

If you would carry your name worthily upon the roll of history, you will have need of all your energy to dare; all your cultivation to refine; all your charity to ennoble.—Thomas Hughes.

OBITUARY.

GERARD CUTLER

died at Powell's Valley, Oregon, June 6, 1891, aged 92½ years. He was born at Guildhall, Vt., January 10, 1799. At 18 he was converted and at his death was a member of the Congregational church. At the time of the murder of William Morgan, he was residing near Batavia, N. Y., and was acquainted with all the circumstances connected with that affair, and also some of the persons implicated in it; consequently he was a strong Anti-mason, as well as an anti-slavery man. He had been a regular subscriber to the Cynosure for at least eighteen years, and possibly longer—I do not remember exactly how long. He was one of the handful that founded the Republican party, and voted with it until it had outlived its usefulness and become a mere political machine. Then he saw the need of a new party—one that would take hold of the new and living issues of the day; then he voted with the American party. A few days before he died he said he wanted me to have his Cynosure and a copy of Finney's Sermons, and that he was trusting in Jesus. I trust that his mantle has fallen on me, and as I read the Cynosure I shall feel that he, "being dead, yet speaketh."

JACOB MILLS.

The Rev. Jacob Mills, probably the oldest Negro preacher in the United States, died at Charleston, S. C., a few days ago. He was ninety-one years of age, and had been an exhorter even in slavery times. He married half the colored people in Charleston, and was the spiritual adviser of four generations of Negroes. Since the close of the war he had been connected with the Centenary church. Funeral services took the form of a public demonstration. Mr. Mills was given his freedom when a young man. His master and mistress died soon after, and Mills's wife and five children were put upon the auction block to be sold to settle the estate. He bought them himself and paid for them out of his earnings.

NATHAN MINER

died on the 23d of February last, aged fifteen days less than 81 years. To the last he was true to the cause of anti-secrecy and his Maker. His venerable widow survives him, and sustains the high standard of principle which he maintained.

LITERATURE.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA of Knowledge and Language; with illustrations. Vol. 28: Palmistry—Perseus. Revised Edition. New York: John B. Alden, Publisher.

A great deal of useful information has been crowded into this volume, relating to numerous topics of general interest. Among others, the history of the United States Patent Office and American Patents; the Peasant War of Germany; Pelagianism and Pelagius; the statistics of Pelts; Pennsylvania; the doctrines and history of the Perfectionists, etc., are given in sufficient detail for reference. The evident care taken by the editors, and the attractive appearance of the work in its half-seal covers, make this miniature library a desirable acquisition in every intelligent family, seminary or high school. It can be obtained on application at 242 Wabash avenue, Chicago.

The July Century is to contain an article on "General Miles's Indian Campaigns," by Major G. W. Baird, one of his former staff-officers. Since 1874 General Miles has been an active agent in the settlement of the Indian question. His numerous campaigns against the hostiles, from that year down to the operations that culminated in the death of Sitting Bull last winter, are described in this article, which is illustrated by a recent portrait of General Miles, and by several typical drawings by Frederic Remington.

LODGE NOTES.

John L. Sullivan, it is said, has not been expelled from the order of Elks, as reported. We have our opinion of the elk or the moose or any other horned game animal that would fraternize with Sullivan.—Northwestern Mail, Madison, Wis.

The Masonic Grand Lodge of Iowa elected the following officers while in session at Cedar Rapids: Grand Master, R. G. Phelps, of Atlantic; Senior Grand Warden, W. L. Temple, of Osceola; Junior Grand Warden, J. E. Nye, of West Union; Grand Treasurer, F. W. Chase, of Cedar Falls; Grand Secretary, T. S. Parvin; Custodian, George B. Van San, of Cedar Falls.

The receipts of the Odd-fellows' Grand Lodge of Ohio for the last fiscal year were $21,478.29; disbursements $24,491.69, or $3,013.40 more than receipts. The increased expenditures are accounted for by the payment for returned D. of R. ritual of the old edition and the payment of the expenses of the D. D. G. M.'s which heretofore has been paid in the year following.

The Grand Templar's report to the Grand Temple of Honor of Wisconsin, in session at Janesville, showed an increase of over 40 per cent in membership during the year, and he says all the subordinate temples are reporting large numbers joining and an increased interest shown in the cause. The treasury shows a very healthy financial footing of the grand and subordinate temples.

The Masonic Grand Lodge of Wisconsin, at its June session, elected the following officers: Grand Master, N. M. Littlejohn, Whitewater; Deputy Grand Master, Fred Ring, La Crosse; Senior Grand Warden, W. W. Perry, Eagle; Junior Grand Warden, Aldro Jenks, Dodgeville; Grand Treasurer, F. H. Starkweather, Beloit; Grand Treasurer, John W. Laflin, Milwaukee; Grand Trustee (three years), David H. Wright Madison.

The oldest fraternal beneficial society in the world is the Count de Winton Society, organized in 1178, and is still in existence. The next oldest is the Loyal Evanus Society, established in 1358. The register of England reports eighty-nine friendly or beneficial societies in existence that were organized in the seventeenth century, and over 1,000 such societies that are over fifty years old. In England 10,755 friendly societies are reported, with 7,000,000 members. The Royal Liver Friendly Society, organized in 1850, reports 865,076 members.—American Odd-fellow.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year at the recent meeting of the Grand Orange Lodge of the United States, in session at Detroit: W. J. H. Traynor, Detroit, Grand Master; R. G. Paden, Pittsburg, Pa., Deputy Grand Master; Thomas Milligan, Massachusetts, Grand Secretary; James Caldwell, Philadelphia, Grand Treasurer; William Russell, Chicago, Deputy Grand Secretary; S. A. Rogers, Pittsburg, Deputy Grand Treasurer; James Dyer, Pittsburg, Grand Chaplain; A. S. Fuller, Minneapolis, First Deputy Grand Chaplain; Vance Copeland, New York, Second Chaplain; William Gillen, Philadelphia, Grand Lecturer; John Dawson, Grand Trustee; Timothy French, Grand Director of Ceremonies; Alexander Clydesdale, Grand Inside Tyler; William E. McCartney, Grand Outside Tyler. The next meeting will be held in Allegheny City, Pa.

When you're languid and dull in the spring of the year,
When stomach and liver are all out of gear,
When you're stupid at morn and feverish at night,
And nothing gives relish and nothing goes right,
Don't try any nostrum, elixir, or pill, "Golden Medical Discovery" just fills the bill.

The surest and best of all remedies for all disorders of the liver, stomach and blood, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. LEONARD BACON, D. D.—Wishing you good success in your war against secret societies.

REV. B. P. AYDELDOTTE, D.D., former president of Woodward College, O., (a renouncing Mason):—Freemasonry is a lie all over.

REV. JUSTIN EDWARDS, D.D., author and head of Andover Seminary:—Whenever the cause of temperance is veiled in darkness and secrecy, it must lose its hold on the public confidence and sympathy.

REV. M. BENNETT, long presiding elder M. E. church.—I am pleased to be counted in for the movement which is being inaugurated against tyrannical organizations and factitious distinctions in society.

DR. THOMAS SCOTT, the great commentator:—Rash oaths are above all things to be avoided; but if men are entangled by them, they ought rather to infringe the sinful oaths than to add sin to sin and ruin to their own souls.

REV. J. C. K. MILLIGAN, editor of "Our Banner:"—Through such silence, secret connivance and horrid oaths "ever to conceal and never reveal," the state of our country is rapidly becoming such as to alarm every Christian philanthropist.

REV. B. T. ROBERTS, editor of the Free Methodist:—For us to keep silent respecting Masonry, and thus tacitly endorse the idea that a man can both accept Christ and deny him—that is, be a good Mason and a good Christian at the same time, would be treason to Christ.

JOHN G. FEE, Berea College, 1868.—It is Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and kindred associations that have spawned and now lend respectability to "Regulators," "Ku Klux Klans," and other bands of midnight assassins now ranging through Kentucky and other portions of the South.

REV. J. P. LYTLE, D. D.:—Masonry has damned all who ever trusted in it for salvation. It is now leading away thousands from the church, and from paths of virtue by association with the intemperate, unclean and profane, and is dragging them down the road which leads to the chambers of eternal death.

REV. EDWARD BEECHER, D.D.:—If on such anti-Christian grounds, prayers are framed, rites established and chaplains appointed, ignoring Christ and his intercession, God regards it as a mockery and an insult to himself and his church. In it is revealed the hatred of Satan to Christ. By it Christ is dethroned and Satan exalted.

REV. W. W. PATTON, D. D., 1869:—However secret societies may differ among themselves, yet they are all anti-republican in their tendencies; and are all leading to the same results, viz., a substitution of worldly and selfish innovations for moral and religious influences, and, ultimately, to the theoretical and practical neutralization of Christianity.

REV. JAMES H. FAIRCHILD, D.D., Pittsburg address:—The point is not that the working of a secret organization may be perverted to selfish ends, but that in its very nature it strongly tends to such perversion. A worthy institution may be perverted, but an institution in which the tendency to perversion is inherent and constitutional, is not a good institution.

REV. DR. JAMES. B. WALKER, author of "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation."—There is probably not one in a thousand who enter the lodge, who know, when blindfolded they take the terrible oaths, that Masonry is an anti-Christ and one of the most powerful enemies of Christ that exists. But this is put beyond the possibility of a doubt by the highest Masonic authorities.

REV. NATHAN BROWN, Editor "Am. Baptist" and missionary to Japan.—If Freemasonry had existed in the days of Christ, and in the same form that it exists with us, he could not have condemned it more distinctly than he did in his Sermon on the Mount: "If ye do good to them that do good to you, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans the same?" The Gospel is at war with every system of clique or clan, caste or combination that seeks to create distinctions in the human family.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 25, 1891.

A CHARACTERISTIC ACT.

Some time since Rev. Dr. Parkhurst was invited to deliver an address on Memorial Day at the Soldiers' Home in Milwaukee. After a time the subject came up for re-discussion, and the invitation which had been given and accepted was withdrawn. The supposed reason is the fact that some months since Dr. Parkhurst said, in a temperance sermon, that many old soldiers were too much given to the use of intoxicating liquors. It seems that one who would make such a statement, though himself a soldier and a member of the Grand Army lodge, was not deemed a fit person to deliver an address commemorating the work of the armies of the Republic.

Thoughtful members of the Grand Army, of course, all know that the statement attributed to Dr. Parkhurst is true. A leading officer in that order recently said to me that his gifts to old soldiers had averaged $1,500 per year for ten years, and that more than one-half of all those who were in need were so because of their own bad habits. All secret societies, however, teach that the great test of character is fidelity to the order. If the man is a good lodge man he is on the way to "the grand lodge above." If he has been a member, and for conscience' sake abandoned it, he is a scoundrel. Thus the same Freemasons who would curse Charles G. Finney would send a poor drunken brother Mason straight to glory.

This spirit is abroad, and when lodgemen secure speakers, they desire, not those who will seek to make them better men, but those who will encourage them to remain as they are, and assure them of earthly and heavenly honor and immortality. It is to be regretted that it is so easy to find men who profess to be called of God to preach the Gospel who are willing to gratify them. These brethren preach on ordinary occasions that men are sinful, and that they must repent, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, confess him before men and follow in his steps in order to salvation. On the lodge occasions they are understood to teach that if men are patriotic, kindly in disposition, and fairly honorable in their business transactions, they are as good as they need to be and that all persons of this description dying are saved from the wrath to come.

It is needless to say that both these modes of thought and speech cannot be correct. Men are saved by Jesus Christ or themselves. If the Bible is true, men are saved by Jesus Christ. If men are saved by their patriotism, or benefactions, the Bible is not true. It is greatly to be desired that the number of ministers should increase who will decline to preach universalism and suppress needed truth in order to please some secret society. There is plenty to be said that is important and true. It is not needful to submit to the humiliation of publicly contradicting one's life-teaching simply because some members of secret societies desire a religious or semi-religious address once a year.

Let us love soldiers and all other men well enough to speak needed truth, and while we praise them for all public services and honorable acts, let us not deny the Word of God and thus imperil their souls. We are thankful to Dr. Parkhurst for his public testimony to needed truth. We believe that he is in every sense of the word a truer friend of the soldiers than are those who do not wish to hear him speak on one occasion because of his effort to do good on another.

THE GERMAN LUTHERANS AND SECRECY.

There is something exceedingly commendable in the stand taken by the German Lutheran churches in discountenancing secret orders, and quite as much to commend in the methods which they employ in the investigation of these societies.

Take our own city and State for an example. In Chicago these churches embrace a membership of 20,000, and among all these not one belongs to any secret society. One of their pastors, who has the religious supervision of about 500 families, reports that among them he has known of but three individuals belonging to lodges. Upon all such cases the influence of the church and the Bible is brought to bear, to convince the wayward ones of their wrong-doing, and generally with gratifying success. If a lodge member has by any means become a member of the Lutheran church, he must either relinquish the lodge or suffer expulsion from the church. Such thorough inspection results in the perpetuation of a religious society free from the contamination of lodgery, and leaves its membership untrammeled for the performance of every Christian duty. In this State there are not less than 40,000 German Lutheran voters arrayed against all lodge systems.

The investigation of the secret orders, as before stated, is very thorough. All possible information concerning every lodge system is sought and gathered by an appointed "respondent," who arranges and condenses the entire subject into a number of theses, each of which is to be discussed separately. Each thesis is then explained fully and discussed by the whole conference, the "respondent" being expected to be familiar with every detail that comes into consideration during the deliberations of the conference. Thus the subject is not only treated in good order, but also very exhaustively.

These theses are, as a rule, never printed, and it even depends wholly upon the secretary of the conference whether the deliberations will be fully reported in the minutes, or not. If so, they are written in the German language.

In the system employed by the German Lutherans to understand and oppose secret societies intelligently, they manifest a truly Christian spirit—not to condemn the orders without putting them upon trial. The very fact that they are secret societies, however, militates against them, and this fact, taken in connection with their constituted character, and the social standing of their memberships, is sufficient to array the churches strongly against them. Our English churches, by exercising similar zeal in cleansing their sanctuaries, would soon rid themselves of the incubus of lodgery.

ROMISH HATRED OF THE BIBLE.

American prosperity owes much to the Protestant churches, the common schools, the free study of the English Bible, and the Sunday-schools, in connection with the simple, informal doctrines of our Lord Jesus Christ. The influence which these have had upon the welfare of our whole people, the support of our federal, state, social, religious and civil institutions, and the enormous increase of our manufactures and commerce, is inestimable, and inimitable under any other course of civil or religious teaching. The whole world may be challenged to produce a nation that under any other regimen has advanced in equal proportions to the United States during its first century, in these respects. The changes in these conditions during the past ten years, however, owing to unrestricted immigration and the consequent introduction of doctrines and practices inimical to our cherished institutions, should warn us as a people of the danger with which we are now confronted.

These insidious attacks upon our civil and religious liberty grow stronger, hourly, in encroachment and defiance, and should teach us that nothing less than our subjugation to Romanism will satisfy our enemies. Rome is the octopus of nations, and always has been since the days of Constantine, twining her tentacles around her victims, scorning their pretensions, and laughing at their calamities. Once or twice, as in the days of Luther and Napoleon I., have these tentacles been amputated, and her tyranny destroyed. At this date, it may be safely said, these tentacles have grown again, and what Protestantism gained in the great European Reformation, is in danger of being lost to us in the near future, unless by zealous watching, earnest praying and heroic energy, founded upon our faith in God and his power to deliver us, we overcome the influences that threaten again to enslave us.

A recent number of the North American Review contains an article entitled, "A Catholic on the School Question;" and if he had not told us that he was a Catholic, the reader would have soon discovered the arrogance of the Jesuit that everywhere pervades it. The paper is nothing more nor less than a virulent attack upon the American public school system and the Holy Bible. On the first subject he need not have been so violent in his denunciation, since the Protestant public school is becoming rapidly Romanized by the appointment of Catholic teachers, through the influence of the priests and the saloon-keepers. This statement can be proved at sight, in Chicago and Joliet, and, we believe, in Cincinnati also.

Mr. Catholic pronounces the public school "a failure," because it has not yet adopted the ave Maria, the scapulary and the confessional—he calls them the sacred mysteries of the church; but we will let him speak for himself, and the American people can judge for themselves the danger into which our educational, republican and Christian institutions have been thrown by our excessive indulgence to foreign immigrants:

"Where can a father turn if he believes that the infallible Christian faith taught by the infallible Church is the only salvation and safeguard for his children? Where is he to turn for that strengthening of character, spiritual and moral, which he feels his children must have in order to save themselves and to be conservative Christian forces in society? He cannot depend on family teaching only, for fathers are busy and mothers careworn. Such teaching, at best, would be intermittent. He knows that an hour a week in the Sunday-school devoted to the preservation of the religion which Christ died to promulgate, which is the only refuge from anarchy and despair and destruction, is like a mere scratch on the surface of that tabula rasa, the child's heart. He knows that a school, public or private, in which the only acknowledgment of the great force that raised earth to heaven and brought heaven to earth is the recitation of the Lord's Prayer and the perfunctory reading of a translation of a book that, humanly speaking, is contradictory and incomprehensible; cannot fill his child with a sense of the preciousness of Christianity, of admiration for its awful mysteries, of reverence for its rites, or arm him with that safeguard of safeguards, the habit of frequenting the confessional. A Catholic would rather see his only son die in the flower of youth than know certainly that that son would never use the means provided by the church for the cleansing of his soul from the sins which kill its life."

Yet the history of the United States is filled with hosts of honored names borne by the best and wisest men, who were graduated from the old red school-house by the country roadside, never confessed to a priest, and were taught to revere the Word of God, and to read it in their own language without fear of receiving contamination from its teachings.

The Bible never hurts any except those who oppose and defy it.

THE NATIONAL LEAGUE.

The National League for the Protection of American Institutions advocates the preservation of the American common schools, no division of the common school funds with sectarian and private schools, American education for the wards of the nation and state, intelligent citizenship, no sectarian appropriations from the public funds, no union of church and state, a free church in a free state, and regulated immigration. The twelfth document given to the public by the National League, just issued, contains a statement concerning the first year's active work of the League and its purposes in the immediate future, by James M. King, its general secretary. The primary object now to be attained by the League is the speedy adoption of a sixteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, to read as follows:

"No State shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or use its property or credit, or any money raised by taxation, or authorize either to be used, for the purpose of founding, maintaining or aiding, by appropriation, payment for services, expenses, or otherwise, any church, religious denomination or religious society, or any institution, society, or undertaking which is wholly, or in part, under sectarian or ecclesiastical control."

The League has apparently done a good deal of satisfactory work in preparing for the vote upon this amendment, and in other duties pertaining to its objects. The pamphlet, and all necessary information concerning sectional work in the reforms proposed, may be obtained from James M. King, 43, 44 Morse Building, 140 Nassau Street, New York City.

"PEACE ON EARTH."

The Departure of Brother Henry L. Kellogg and Family for California—A Marked Reunion of a Christian Family—The Brotherhood of the Gospel Surpasses that of the Lodge in Strength and Beauty.

[Reported by a Friend.]

The family were on the eve of starting for California—father, mother, and seven children. For about two-score years the parents had dwelt in their quiet home, and now health and other causes urged them away.

The train was to leave fifteen minutes before midnight. The children were prepared for the journey, except outside garments, and sent up stairs to sleep. The parents received many kind messages and loving good-byes from relatives and friends, and in a restful way completed preparations for departure. At a quarter to 7, Elizabeth, the eldest, rose and completed her toilet for the journey. Then Ellen was called and Louis awakened himself. Thomas responded promptly, and Geraldine and Albert, six and four years old, wept from the shock occasioned by the abrupt termination of their sleep. Samuel, the youngest, in composure was rolled "this way and that way," in preparation for his long ride.

Everything was in its place, and loving words, accompanied by the swift, thoughtful movements of the older members of the family, completed the unfinished work for departure.

"I believe," said the father, "we are all ready."

"Are we not to have prayer first?" said his wife.

"Oh, yes;" and the family quickly seated themselves in a loving circle for worship.

Can you in imagination see them, as full of reverence and sweetness, the voices of adult life and of infancy blended in that grand song of faith, the 121st Psalm?

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help.

"My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth.

"He will not suffer thy foot to be moved; he that keepeth thee will not slumber.

"Behold, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.

"The Lord is thy keeper; the Lord is thy shade upon thy right hand.

"The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night.

"The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil; he shall preserve thy soul.

"The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even forever more."

The father then voiced the feelings of his family in a prayer of thanksgiving for the mercies which had ever followed them in their dear home, and prayed that those who succeed them might know that "surely God is in this place."

Then, in ample time for the train, they departed.

The majestic locomotive, with a long line of palace cars, rolled up to receive that royal family, children of the living God, in a royal manner, and a witness of the scene turned away mentally exclaiming,

"Thy God shall be my God." Glory be to his name.

THE "ALLIANCE" FAMILY.

The National Citizens' Alliance, organized at Ocala, Fla., Dec. 6, 1890—non-secret—headquarters at Washington, D. C.

The National Citizens' Industrial Alliance, organized at Topeka, Kan., Jan. 13, 1891, by delegates from the Citizens' Alliances of that State—secret—headquarters at Topeka.

The National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, formed in October, 1889, out of a heterogeneous mass of alliances, unions and wheels, many of which began their existence as non-secret bodies as long ago as 1873.

Respecting the first two Alliances above named, their aims do not materially differ. The Washington body has adopted as its declaration of principles the St. Louis platform of the Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union. The object of both bodies is to take the place in the cities and towns that the Farmers' Alliance does in the country. A union of the two was proposed, and we believe, adopted at a joint convention in Cincinnati, O., May 18.

The Colored Farmers' Alliance and Co-operative Union of Arkansas recently absorbed the Colored Agricultural Wheel, of that State.

The farmers of Ontario, Canada, have a society similar to the Farmers' Alliance, known as the Ontario Farmers' Union.

—B. L. McFadden, in a recent number of the Lever, claims to have discovered in the first plank of the platform of the People's (Alliance) party, a crytogram (a la Donnelly), which when studied out—the writer gives the process in detail and in full—reads: "We want the Saloon Vote." By the way, whether this is true or not, this cypher business gives remarkable results wherever applied. It is all in the types—no shadows about it.

—The letter of our agent on the Pacific coast, containing his interview with a Methodist minister on the religious character of the I. O. O. F., printed in this issue, will interest those readers who have been led by members of the order to believe that it is both a religious and a non-religious institution. Like the boy's aunt in the story, it would seem to be "religious,—not too religious—but just religious enough" to suit its motley membership. Seriously, there is not an obligation in the Odd-fellow's ritual, religious or benevolent, that is not imposed upon every true Christian by the Bible, and is there expressed in a much more gratifying manner. Beside, its application in the Scriptures is not confined to one class, but to all men.

—The anti-secrecy meeting at Allegan, Mich., this month, was held under rather trying circumstances, but was in the main a success. The rain of the previous thirty-six hours had so softened the roads as to prevent many persons from coming to town, and a local celebration, with numerous noisy demonstrations, occurred on the same evening. Music Hall, however, where President Blanchard had been announced to lecture, was the centre of attraction for a number of intelligent men and women, who listened attentively, as well as they could amid the external interruptions, and went away benefited by the object lesson in reference to secret societies which they received. Among those in attendance were Rev. W. A. Day, Mr. Peter Caulkett, and others heartily interested in the cause, whose presence added to the enjoyment of the exercises.

—The transfer of the Signal Service weather observations from the War Department to the Agricultural Department will occur on the 1st of July, and it seems to be a proper occasion for a brief review of the system and the work it has accomplished since it was established. It was really an outgrowth of the telegraphic signal service inaugurated by the War Department during the Southern rebellion, and while it has done much good in warning mariners and farmers against storms and inclement weather, very many of its predictions have proved to be incorrect and misleading. No doubt the best judgment of the weather bureau has been exercised at all times; but the conditions and changes in atmospheric phenomena are problematic and uncertain, and are not easily compassed in so large a field of observation. Under the supervision of Secretary Rusk, it is to be hoped a better understanding of meteorological combinations will be reached, and the service made more efficient.

—An article in the last New York Witness, by Geo. R. Scott, administers a just and well-timed rebuke to the "ruffianism"—the phrase is appropriate—exhibited by the students of Yale College during the recent public parade of Barnum & Bailey's circus on entering New Haven. The details are disgraceful to all the participants in the attack on the cavalcade and exhibit a heartlessness that demands more than a censure by the faculty or the press. Mr. Scott denounces the affair in strong language, and says: "Yet it is not a thing to be wondered at; for when a young man enters one of our colleges the first thing he finds there is an atmosphere of do-as-you-please. Why should they not be cruel to animals when they practice such cruelty upon one another—as is often shown by accounts of atrocious hazing?" He also says: "Fathers and mothers, there are good schools for your boys in America, for I have visited them, where they will be made better and wiser boys. And there are colleges (especially some of our noted ones) where to send a boy is to give him an education that will be largely in the wrong direction." The conclusion reached is that the boys educated at any college will grow up as they have been taught, and live accordingly, either as good citizens or scourges of society. The necessity for Christian teaching is daily becoming more and more apparent.

—Last week, in this city, "The Grand Tabernacle and Temple of the International Order of Twelve" for the State of Illinois and jurisdiction of Iowa, Indiana, and Canada convened in Apollo Hall. There were present "Sir Knights,' and "Daughters" many; "Sir Rev. Moses Dickson, International Grand Chief, Grand Mentor, and Founder of the International Order of Twelve," St. Louis; Sir Dr. G. W. Bryant, International Grand Chief Judge and Commissioner General of National Emancipation Monumental Association, St. Louis, Mo.; Daughter S. F. Hayes, Grand Chief Recorder of Kentucky and National Organizer of Patriotic Colored Ladies of America (auxiliary to Emancipation Monumental Association), Louisville, Ky.; Daughter Susie Payne, P. G. C. R., Louisville, Ky. There was also the dedication of the hall, music by the Chicago Quartet; welcoming address by Sir E. A. Payne, Chicago; music, response by Dr. Rhoda M. Johnson, Quincy; routine business of the order, a banquet, singing of religious hymns, addresses, etc. The order has Temples, Tabernacles, Palatiums and Tents. The annual sermon was preached at the Olivet Baptist church. Now will some one tell us what all this fuss and feathers means; what it is all about? The order is in its fifth year. Do these men and women have any useful employment, or do they live on the profits of the lodge? Who can tell?

PERSONAL MENTION.

—It is stated that Mr. Morris K. Jessup, of New York, has given to Yale Divinity School $51,000.

—Caprivi, the German chancellor, is a warm friend of the mission cause. He sent an official representative to the Mission Conference held recently in Halle.

—Bro. C. Quick, an old and earnest worker in the cause of anti-secrecy, whose home is at Weston, Mich., and who was at one time president of the N. C. A. in that State, visited this office last week.

—Mr. and Mrs. George Parsons Lathrop were recently received into the Roman Catholic church. Mr. Lathrop is a well-known magazine writer, and his wife is a daughter of Nathaniel Hawthorne.

—Mr. A. A. Low, of Brooklyn, has added $10,000 to the fund which he created in 1878, and which thus becomes $20,000, to be used in assisting boys of his native city (Salem, Mass.) to obtain a college education.

—Ex-Gov. John Evans, the founder of Evanston, Ill., and the liberal promoter of its interests, but who has for many years resided in Colorado, has recently presented the University of Denver with $100,000 for its further endowment.

—Ex-President J. Blanchard is to leave Wheaton to-day (June 25) for Vermont, for his summer vacation, intending, also, to be present at the approaching Commencement at Dartmouth College. The readers of the Cynosure will surely bid him Godspeed and a safe return.

—Our esteemed co-worker, Henry L. Kellogg, and his family, started for a six months' sojourn on the Pacific coast, on Monday night of last week, carrying with them the best wishes and heartfelt prayers of a large circle of friends. A description of the last re-union of family friends on the eve of their departure will be found in these columns.

—Of the Chicago delegates to the London International Council, Dr. E. P. Goodwin, of the First Congregational church, accompanied by Mrs. Goodwin and their daughter, recently sailed by the White Star line. Dr. Simeon Gilbert, editor of the Advance, sailed on the 13th by the Etruria. Rev. J. A. Adams was to sail June 24 by the City of Paris, and Dr. E. F. Williams July 1 by the Teutonic.

THE HOME.

THE SABBATH.

O pearl of days, the best;
The softest blue o'erspreads the sunlit skies;
In the still lake heaven's perfect likeness lies;
And balmy air all fragrant breath supplies.
O holy, holy rest!
Toil folds its hand, its six days' work is done,
And heaven and earth, embracing, blend in one.

Touch not this holy day!
Off, vandal hands, and let it all alone!
Still let it shine as it has always shown,
Each loyal heart its ever royal throne.
Hold! touch it not, I say.
Ordained of God, on Sinai's granite height
It still shall stand in more than granite might.

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE

[Copyrighted by "The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association," 161 LaSalle St., Chicago. Printed by permission.]

II.

Monday morning found me at school, where I was soon telling the scholars of the events that had come to pass since we had separated on Friday. "Sounds almost like a romance," said one of the older girls. "How is it to end?"

"I guess it won't end; nothing does except the stories in books," I answered.

"What an idea! Why everything ends sometime."

"What is it, girls? What end are you driving at now?" It was my particular chum who spoke, she having just joined us.

"Why, Fanny, here, says things don't end. Did you ever?"

"End? No, I haven't ended yet, that I know of."

A chorus of exclamations greeted this.

"Well, there's one thing ends," chimed in a boy's voice, "and that's school. It ends for keeps this year, too, so far as I am concerned."

"It doesn't, either, Tom Dixon; you've got college next. Oh, I do wish I was a boy."

"Guess you were meant for one, Gussie Mills. Oh, say! who's going in for the prizes this year?"

"Grace Darling, of course. Don't you want to stay out this year, Gay, and give the rest of us a chance?"

"No, sir!" she answered promptly, "I have no intention of staying at home; besides, you've as much chance for prizes as I have, or any one else, if you'll only work for them."

"Grace deserves all the prizes she gets,' said one of the girls, protectingly.

"But she gets them all!" groaned Tom, good-humoredly. "If I didn't believe in being a good Sir Knight, I'd get jealous."

Grace disliked this personal talk. It was a fact that she was the aptest pupil of us all, and year after year easily drew most of the prizes. But she was shy of the glory rather than proud of it, and now turned the conversation by a question to me.

"What were you saying about a baby, when I passed the door awhile ago, Fanny?"

"Oh, she's got a new one to go crazy over, that's all," volunteered some one.

"I don't know what the neighbor's infants would do for fresh air if Fanny didn't look after them sometimes. You have one out most every afternoon, don't you, Fan? Is this a nice one?"

"A perfect darling," I said, enthusiastically. "She's a——"

"Itty-bitty, ovey-dovey, sweety-eety pet," broke in Tom Dixon, in tones meant to be girlish and coaxing. I made an advance in his direction, from before which he fled in mock terror, while the bell for assembling ringing at the same time prevented further talk.

Grace Darling, my one intimate friend and constant companion, lived about two minutes' walk from my home, so that we always came and went together on school days. Tom Dixon and Grace's brother Robert were intimates, too; and as Tom lived in our direction, it not infrequently occurred that we made a quartette on the homeward walks. It was so this afternoon. The boys usually did most of the talking, but this time Grace questioned me on the interrupted topic of "the baby," teasing me a little.

"So it's the very prettiest one you ever saw? Let me see. Wasn't Mrs. Armor's the 'very sweetest that ever breathed'? And I know that little Hastings boy was 'too lovely to live long.'"

"Hush up, Grace! They're all darlings, every one of them!"

"Oh, me! I hope not. I never could stand such a lot of Darlings. Bob is all I can look after."

She would not be serious, so I went on, paying no heed to the mischief in her face.

"You come over Saturday, and see for yourself. Sophia has big black eyes, and curly black hair; I know you'll love them both."

"Oh, do, Grace," said Tom, "love them to distraction, and then I hope the fates will be kind enough to afflict them with measles or something, so that you'll stay to take care of them and relieve the worn-out mother."

"Why, Tom! Are you crazy?" asked Grace.

"No, ma'am, I'm not. There's method in my madness. This must all happen during examination time, so I can have a try for that prize in geometry. You're the only one who can beat me. Bob, here, isn't any good; you and I can beat him all hollow."

Bob resented this by a friendly cuff, and the two set off on a run, leaving Grace and me to finish our walk together.

I wish I could show you my friend just as she was, for you must know that she is no "make-believe" girl—she really lived. When a baby, through some accident, her hip-bone had been so injured that it never got well, and she was slightly lame, besides suffering more or less all the time. She was very small,—petite, we used to call her, for we were French students, and never missed an occasion to bring in a French expression. At fourteen, she was scarcely as large as a child of nine or ten. The picture I hold in my hand, that she gave me ten years ago, brings before me, very vividly, her face as it looked on that bright November day, as we walked together arm in arm, kicking before us the many-hued maple leaves at our feet. She had a small face, quite in keeping with her small body. When you looked at the funny, upturned chin, as saucy as could be, and the diminutive nose, a most decided "pug," you could not help smiling, they suggested so much of fun. But over these features reigned the fairest, noblest forehead I have ever seen,—unspoiled by bangs or crimps—high and broad, thoughtful and calm. From beneath that brow shone large, brown eyes full of life and lustre, that attracted you to look into them again and again. Her hair was dark brown, glossy as satin, always brushed straight back, and falling over her shoulders. Her hands and feet were so small that she said she was ashamed of them, but we thought them something to be proud of. Think of her as always dressed in black, for the dear mother who had been taken from her, and you have her portrait.

She came on Saturday, as she had promised me, and we went in to see our new neighbors. Mrs. Clark welcomed us brightly. "It's nice to have young folks around," she said. "I've a lot of little brothers and sisters at home, and miss them ever so much."

Grace was on easy terms with the little people in a very few minutes. They looked into her loving eyes without a particle of shyness as she told them a story of a beautiful dollie she had once, which a big dog had shaken to pieces, making her feel so sorry that she had never wanted a dollie since. That story opened forever the way to their hearts. We stayed quite a long time, and when we were leaving, Mrs. Clark said, cordially, "Come in again, whenever you can, girls. If I'm busy, there are the children, you know."

"Fanny cannot stay away from children," answered Grace, "and we're mostly together, so I guess you'll see us as often as you care to."

Thus it came about that we went in and out of the little home quite as if it belonged to us, never failing to find a welcome and a good time.

Winter came and went, and spring was making all things beautiful. We had had a hard year's work, but were now looking forward to the last months with a mixture of pleasure and fear; fear for the dread examinations to come, but pleasure for the triumphant closing day, with its music and speeches, flags and flowers, laughing farewells to the old rooms, and delicious sense of freedom for weeks to come.

Some of us had a bad habit of "cramming" during the last weeks; to this class, I am sorry to say, I belonged, so that, buried in my books, I saw but little of the Clarkes for some time, and hardly did more than nod from the window to Delia and Sophia, who called to me to "come over and play."

One morning before school I was watering my plants in the dining-room window, while mother was putting up my lunch, when there came to us the sound of discordant voices. There was but one source for them—the little home across the yard. I could distinguish Mrs. Clarke's voice raised in shrill, angry tones. We listened in dismay to what was evidently a fierce quarrel between the hitherto happy husband and wife. As the language grew more and more abusive, mother drew me away from the window. In a few minutes we heard the front door slam and quick, angry steps go out of the yard. It was Mr. Clarke. What the trouble was I could not imagine, and mother would not talk with me about it. I carried the perplexity to Grace. We walked home from school very slowly that day. I remember the cloud that overshadowed her eyes as I repeated to her some of the dreadful things I had overheard.

"Shall you go to see them the same as ever?" she asked me.

"I don't know. I'm afraid mother will not let me. Why?"

"I was thinking of the children. She wouldn't hurt them?"

"Oh, no! How could she? But what good will it do to go?"

"We promised her we'd be there to-morrow."

"Do you want to go, Grace?"

"It won't be as nice as it was before, but I guess we'd better."

"All right, I'll ask mother."

Mother did demur a little, but finally consented, and when Grace came we went together. We knocked at the door as usual, then turned the handle at once to go in. There was no one to be seen, and not a sound in the house. As the silence continued for some minutes we exchanged looks of dread. Then Grace pushed open the kitchen door and we went in. On the floor, half lying down, half propped by an overturned chair, was Mrs. Clarke. Little Delia had fallen asleep, too, with her bright head cuddled against her mother. Sophia, with traces of tears on her face, was amusing herself with a couple of clothes-pins rigged up to resemble dolls. Her eyes brightened at sight of us, but with unchildlike caution, she raised her hand and shook her head that we might not disturb the sleepers. We stood there for a few minutes, and then stole out, saying little to each other. The truth was too sad for many words. Brought up in the great city, we had looked on such sights before, and knew that Mrs. Clarke was in a drunken slumber.

It was a very warm, trying day, and when we reached Grace's house she sank down as if exhausted and in pain.

"Aren't you well to-day, Gracie?"

"Not very. I was hardly able to walk over there this afternoon, my side hurt so, but I thought we'd better go, and now——"

She finished by crying, something my brave little friend very seldom did.

"Anyway, Mr. Clarke doesn't drink, I'm sure," I said, by way of comfort, "and maybe she won't again."

Grace shook her head, hopelessly. "If she drinks at all, she can't be safe. Oh, I wish I was a man!"

"Why?"

"I'd work so hard against everything wrong."

"Girls aren't much good," I said.

"I don't see why. Why can't we help?"

"Who? You and I?"

"All of us."

"I don't know. Gay, you are as white as a sheet. Won't you go in and lie down?"

"Yes, I'll rest awhile. You find out how Mrs. Clarke is before night, if you can, and run over and tell me."

"All right, I will. Good-bye, dear."

"Good-bye."

A DISTANT OUTLOOK.

Far down the bay where earth and sky are blending,
A sail is reddening in the western light;
The waters calm reflected hues are sending
To add new glory to the raptured sight.

While underneath the nearer waves are heaving,
All dark and stormy like a sinful breast;
No ruddy gleams their foaming crests relieving
To soothe the trouble of their vague unrest.

But far beyond the golden sail is lifted
By the surrounding calmness of the bay,
In high relief with newer charm is gifted
With deepening color from the dying day.

So human souls, whenever calmly resting
By simple trust in the Almighty power,
Thus raised above all worldly tumult's breasting
Have heavenly light though earthly clouds may lower.

WOMEN AT THE BARGAIN COUNTER.

I really think bargain-hunting has produced a spirit of gambling, and that women are responsible for the disgusting variety and outrageous number of shoddy goods, glass diamonds, pinchbeck ornaments and vulgar imitations and flaring cheats of all sorts that are placed on the market to-day. They have created a demand for bargains, and it is impossible to conceive of the manufacturers turning out anything more absurd and unneeded than we already have.

To a woman, a bargain means the purchase of something for half its price or less. What is this but gambling? If the article is up to the standard, it must be worth a certain price; and if less is paid for it, either the thing itself is a cheat, or some one has lost by the transaction.

Bargains are deleterious in another way: they cause, by their delusive cheapness, a careless and reckless expenditure, and engender a spirit of dishonesty. This is the tendency, with an ever-increasing greed for more and greater bargains. —The Voice.

WHAT MARY GAVE.

She gave an hour of patient care to her little baby sister, who was cutting teeth.

She gave a string and crooked pin, and a great deal of good advice to the 3-year-old brother who wanted to play at fishing.

She gave Ellen, the maid, a precious hour to go and visit her sick baby at home; for Ellen was a widow, and left her child to its grandmother while she worked to get bread for both. She could not have seen them very often if Mary had not offered to attend the door while she was away.

But this is not all that Mary gave. She dressed herself so neatly and looked so bright and kind and obliging, that she gave her mother a thrill of pleasure whenever she caught sight of the young, pleasant face.

She wrote a letter to her father who was absent on business, and gave patient attention to a long story by her grandmother, and when it was ended made the old lady happy by a good night kiss.

Thus she had given valuable presents to six people in one day, and yet she had not a cent.—Pacific Ensign.

SHOW YOUR LOVE "NOW."

"I have a little story to tell you, boys," our old neighbor said to the young people the other evening. "One day—a long, hot day it had been, too—I met my father on the road to town.

"'I wish you would take this package to the village for me, Jim,' he said, hesitatingly.

"Now, I was a boy of twelve, not fond of work, and just out of the hay-field, where I had been at work since daybreak. I was tired, dusty, and hungry. It was two miles into town. I wanted to get my supper and to dress for singing-class.

"My first impulse was to refuse, and to do it harshly, for I was vexed that he should ask me after my long day's work. If I did refuse, he would go himself. He was a gentle, patient old man. But something stopped me—one of God's good angels, I think.

"'Of course, father, I'll take it,' I said, heartily, giving my scythe to one of the men. He gave me the package.

"'Thank you, Jim,' he said. 'I was going myself, but somehow I don't feel very strong today.'

"He walked with me to the road that turned off to the town, and as he left he put his hand on my arm, saying again, 'Thank you, my son. You've always been a good boy to me, Jim.'

"I hurried into town and back again. When I came near the house, I saw a crowd of the farm hands at the door. One of them came to me, the tears rolling down his face.

"'Your father!' he said. 'He fell dead just as he reached the house. The last words he spoke were to you.'

"I am an old man now, but I have thanked God over and over again, in all the years that have passed since that hour, and those last words were, 'You've always been a good boy to me.'" —Selected.

TEMPERANCE.

AN INTERNATIONAL MEDICAL CONGRESS.

The managers of the National Prohibition Park, of Staten Island, New York, invite representative medical men from all localities in the United States and the Dominion of Canada to meet in conference on the 15th and 16th of July next, in the great Auditorium building of the Park. The chief object of the meeting is to be the comparison of views on the relationship of physiology and alcohol. Among the questions to be discussed will be the following:

What are the Hereditary Effects of Drunkenness?

Are there any Hereditary Effects that Follow Moderate Drinking?

To what Diseases are Inebriates More Especially Exposed?

Is Alcohol a Poison?

Is Alcohol in Any Sense Food?

What are the Proper Uses of Alcohol as a Medicine?

Is there Danger of Producing the Drink Habit from the Prescribing of Alcoholic Medicines?

How Large a Percentage of Deaths May be Attributed, Directly or Indirectly, to the Use of Strong Drink?

Should Alcoholic Liquors Ever be Used Except under the Direction of a Medical Adviser?

At this conference, all views will be given an Impartial hearing. No restraint will be placed upon the discussion, save that of the time limit. Many well-known medical men have already signified their willingness to participate in such a conference.

The Congress will assemble at 10 A. M., July 15th and 16th, and continue its session for two days. It is expected that arrangements will be made for reduced railroad fares.

CHARLES F. DEEMS, Pres. Park Ass'n.
R. S. CHEEVES, Secretary.

HOW TO DECLINE A TREAT.

The following conversation was heard between two collegians, who were discussing a class dinner:

"Of course," said one (with a consequential touch of self-complacency and patronage which students call "fresh," and which only length of days can cure), "if a fellow hasn't wit enough to know when to stop, he'd better be careful at first. Some heads are built weak, you know."

"Careful in what?" interpolated I, and both laughed.

"Why, drinking, of course," said the first speaker. "A fellow has to take his seasoning sooner or later. Some cannot, at least for a while."

He was, as I have intimated, a freshman. His friend, a bearded senior, the only son of a rich man, slapped him good-humoredly on the shoulder.

"When I was your age, old fellow, my father said to me: 'If I had my life to live over, I would never take a glass of wine or smoke a cigar.' I have never tasted wine or touched tobacco, and I am glad of it—gladder of it every day I live. I might have been built with a strong head—and then, again, I might not."

"What do you say when you are offered a treat?'

"I say: 'No, thank you. I never take it.' Generally that settles the matter quietly."

"And if they poke fun at you?"

"I let them 'poke,' and then stand ready to put them to bed when their heads give out."

There are—for the comfort of many mothers—many "fellows" strong enough to maintain his stand, and sensible enough to see that the risks are not worth taking. It is the fool who meddles with fire-arms, the coward who carries a loaded revolver.—Home-Maker.

INTEMPERANCE IN LONDON.

London contains 918,289 householders, and recently a very interesting canvass has been made among them. The drinking houses of this greatest city of the world are open all day Sunday, and the question addressed to the householders was, Should the drinking houses be closed on Sunday? In reply, 745,171 of these people said, Yes, close the dens on Sunday. Of the total, 67,793 said, We have no opinion. This left 95,325 to say, Keep the saloons open on Sunday. And the 95,325 householders have their way—the saloons are kept open on Sunday—and the law, the Parliament, and the government stand behind the saloons and this minority of people. This is a crying shame but the vote and the sentiment would be found to be much the same in our American cities pretty generally if taken on the same question. When it is remembered that in London five-eighths of all crimes are committed between Saturday night and Monday morning—that Sunday is made to be the great crime day of all the week by the open saloon—how weak is the moral purpose of England and how feeble is the arm that promises to protect the home, that such dens of defiance, such sinks of shame and iniquity, are allowed to desecrate the holy Sabbath, in a professedly Christian land, and brutalize and criminalize the people!—Exchange.

WOE TO THE LICENSER.

Rev. DeWitt Talmage, in an address to saloon keepers, closes with this strong paragraph: "I tell you plainly that one day you will meet your customers when there will be an account between you. When your work is done on earth, and you enter the reward of your business, all the souls of the men whom you have destroyed will crowd around you, and pour their bitterness in your cup. They will show you their wounds, and say, 'You made them;' and point to their unquenchable thirst, and say, 'You forged it.' Then their united groans will smite your ear; and with the hands out of which you once picked the sixpences and the dimes, they will push you off the verge of great precipices, while rolling up from beneath, and breaking among the crags of death, will thunder, 'Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink!'"

The Voice correspondent asked United States Senator W. A. Peffer, the Alliance statesman from Kansas, the question, if there had been 5,000 legalized saloons in Kansas last year, each one free to transact all the business it could get and each one a "political club-house," such as the saloon is elsewhere, how much chance would the People's party have had of electing five Congressmen, one Senator, and a good working majority in the State Legislature?

"There wouldn't have been any chance," said the Senator. "It would have been a failure."

To the question, if the nation is to be redeemed from ring politicians and corruptionists, isn't the first thing to do to clean out the saloons? Senator Peffer said:

"If it is saloon politicians you mean, I should say yes. There are two classes of corruptionists—one is the money and one the whisky corruptionist, and both should be routed!"

What the saloon is to a great majority of our cities of over 20,000 population may be seen from a consideration of its position in New York City. There are 10,000 saloons in New York—one for 140 of the population, including men, women and children. The proportion of saloons to population in other cities is as great, and in many mining towns in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois it is much greater. In the mining and lumber towns in northern Michigan and Wisconsin there is as high as one saloon to every thirty inhabitants. In New York City there are twenty-three times as many saloons as there are churches, and eighty-four saloons to every public school, or eighteen times as many schools of crime as there are churches and public schools combined.

that God is on our side, and we will not stop. We intend to wage war upon the lodges in our church, in our associations, and in our State conventions, until the last altar of Baal shall be torn down, and the truth of the Lord, which was established without secrets, shall be maintained.

Please excuse this long letter. I could not help writing it. My heart is glad for the light that the Cynosure is bringing to the homes of my people. May God bless the Cynosure—bless the publishers, and bless those who give of their money to bring this glorious news to us. Brethren, pray for me, that I may be enabled to offer to my people the religion whose Author said, "In secret have I said nothing." Yours for the down-all of Baalism, (Rev.) J. C. BATTLE.

PROGESS OF THE WORK IN WISCONSIN.

SPARTA, Wis., June 17, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The Lord has been giving wonderful blessing in Gospel work. I was at Juda, Wisconsin, about a week. We saw forty-two come out for Christ. Every opportunity I get I drive at secrecy, and the Lord blesses the testimony, and the devil howls. Some thirty souls ame out while I was in Plainview, Neb., and seventeen at Browntown, Wisconsin—all since the first of May. I am to assist Mr. Willan, evangelist, in tent-meetings here (Sparta). Pray for us. J. E. WOLFE.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The eternal Word.—vs. 1-4. These first four verses are a kind of preface or prologue to John's Gospel. For simplicity and profundity they stand without a rival. We may take the most ponderous works of human philosophy, and find that they contain infinitly less than John, inspired by the Holy Spirit, crowded into this brief space. "In the beginning was the Word." This is an indefinite term which takes us back, like the first verse of Genesis, into the dim ages of a past so remote that the mind cannot grasp it. It was said of our Lord that "he spake with authority," and this is one of our chief reasons for believing that the Bible is given by inspiration. No human philosopher would have been content to let this statement stand in all its naked grandeur without attempting a word of comment or explanation. John simply gives the sublime fact.

But "Logos" bore a well-known meaning. It had been used by Plato, and, imported from the schools of Alexandria, it had become naturalized among the Jews. "Without him was not anything made that was made." One of John's objects in writing this Gospel was to refute the heresies of his day, one of which was that matter was eternal and uncreated. "The Word was God." It expressed himself. He does not, like man, say or think one thing and then do another. So when John affirmed the identity of the Word with Jesus Christ, or, as Pentecost puts it, "Jesus was the eternal thought of God, not otherwise than one with God, and yet when uttered, another than God," we understand our Saviour as speaking a literal and most blessed truth when he said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Alvord says, "He is the Word as he is the Life and Light, because the Word, i. e., this eternal thought of the Father, dwells in him and speaks from him. This spiritual light is continually shining on the world's darkness, but the darkness of man (man in his unregenerate state) understandeth it not. Hate cannot comprehend love. The Christ-life is unintelligible to a soul that has not begun to live it."

2. The true Light.—vs. 6-14. We are here introduced to John, who was sent from God to be the first in the great army of witnesses for Christ. Are we enrolled in that noble company? The following verses may be considered as so many reasons why all should haste to do so. There have been many false lights. Christ is the only true light. There have been many religious teachers, but Christ alone has given the world a system of belief which fits all conditions and classes, rich and poor, learned and unlearned, lisping childhood and tottering age. Other lights can only shine locally, as do candles; but Christ, like the sun, is the Light of the world. When all around us souls are stumbling and falling for lack of this light, what guilt do we not incur if we hide what we have received under a bushel? But we must not expect that our testimony will always be accepted. The sphere of the merely temporal and human cannot comprehend the spiritual. Even his own received him not; not only his chosen people, but those at the present day whom we might reasonably expect would receive him because they have had the advantage of pious ancestry or of high moral culture. As in the old days, we often see publicans and harlots pressing into the kingdom before such. But to all that do receive him he gives the right of becoming sons of God. Think of such wonderful rank and dignity placed within the reach of all! and if through indolence, or fear, or simple neglect, we never tell them anything about the glorious inheritance they can have for the claiming, what excuse can we offer? The next verse contains an important thought. No one is born to this dignity like the sons of earthly kings, but through the will of God. Kings by birth are often unfit to rule, but when God is making kings unto himself he knows who to choose. And yet this doctrine of electing grace bars no one out. It rather makes salvation certain for whosoever will. It provides that there shall be nothing haphazard or arbitrary about it, but that we shall lay our will alongside of God's, and make his choice our own;—that we shall elect to be his children as he elects to be our Father. This is the new birth, the spiritual creation after his own image.

3. John's witness.—vs. 15-18. Christ's witnesses must be "clothed with humility." He who points men to Jesus must not stand in the way himself. We cannot have too much knowledge or culture unless we allow it to obscure the one we preach. Many ministers fail to do any good work because they preach themselves. "And of his fullness have all we received." Every desire is met in Christ. We may ask of him what we will, for knowledge, for love, for appreciation;—or for money, when it is to supply our own legitimate wants or the needs of others. He who made the world controls its gold and silver. "And grace for grace." The grace we had yesterday does not vanish with the new supply we have to-day, but is added to it. This makes the growing Christian. It is the new life which has has in it no seed of death or decay.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The State University of Michigan numbers over 2,000 students. It seems to enjoy in a good degree the confidence of the Christian denominations, although most of the principal ones have colleges of their own. Thus, though the Presbyterians have been constrained within a very short time to establish a college, yet it is said five hundred students of Presbyterian antecedents are attendant at Ann Arbor. To provide for these, as well as to do their part in maintaining a decidedly Christian atmosphere, a lady lately gave a site and home, and a prominent senator has arranged to erect a building for a lecture-room, library, and gymnasium, on this site. —San Francisco Pacific.

—The Woman's Board of Missions of the Methodist church South, is to have a Bible and training school for missionary workers at Kansas City.

—The Brethren at Brooklyn, Iowa, have purchased the Baptist church at that place. It will be repaired in a short time, and then will be rededicated in due form.

—The Rev. C. DeWitt Bridgman, who lately resigned the pastorate of the Madison Avenue Baptist church of New York, on account of the disapproval by some members of the church of his theological views, has been confirmed by Bishop Potter as a communicant of the Episcopal church.

—The Lutheran Reformation hymn, "A Mighty Fortress is Our God," has been condemned as "revolutionary" by the Russian government and its singing in the churches of the Baltic Provinces forbidden.

—It is now definitely and reliably announced that Chicago (Baptist) University will open for the instruction of students Oct. 1, 1892. The purchase of the site has been effected, and the erection of what might be called the fundamental buildings has been authorized. The grounds, now fully secured, consist of three blocks and the money for the fourth block so nearly raised as to be an assured fact. The latest contribution to the fund was $25,000 from Martin A. Ryerson. Mr. Rockefeller has contributed to the endowment fund $1,600,000, but none of that money can be used for the purchase of site or erection of buildings. It is an endowment fund strictly.

—The Synod of the Reformed (German) church in the United States and that of the Reformed (Dutch) church in America agreed, at their meetings this year, upon a plan of federal Union. Each body retains its organic existence, but the general mission and other work of the churches will be under the management of a Board or Commission chosen by the two Synods. Most of the advantages to be gained by union will thus be secured, whilst each church will retain its creed and manage its own special affairs.

—The world's student conference, which Mr. Moody assembles at Northfield, Mass., from June 27 to July 8, promises to be more largely attended than ever. The European universities will send fifteen delegates, one from Glasgow being the son of Dr. Paton, the famous New Hebrides missionary. From seventy-five to one hundred men are expected from Virginia: last year there were forty. Yale will send forty, and Princeton, Harvard, Cornell, and other colleges will each have a large representation.

—The preachers to Harvard University who retire from service next year are the Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks, and the Rev. Dr. William Lawrence. Their places will be filled by the Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks, of Boston, and the Rev. Dr. Charles C. Everitt, of Cambridge. Professor Francis G. Peabody will be absent on his vacation next year, and Professor Lyon will take his place in the general charge of the chapel services.

—Previous to 1853 it was a capital offense for a Christian to set foot in Japan. Now there are 30,000 professing Christians, and 17,000 children in Bible-schools. Of the members elect of the new parliament one in twenty-eight is a member of a Christian church, while the proportion of Japanese Christians to the entire population is as one to one thousand two hundred.

—The women of the Baptist churches in this country have contributed for foreign missions during the past year the sum of $102,629.02.

—At the eighty-ninth annual session of the General Association of the Congregational churches of Massachusetts, held in Marlboro, the chief topics discussed were: "Religious Needs of Country and City;" "How to Reach the Men;" "Small Churches;" "Promoting Spiritual Power Among the Pastors;" "The Future of New England."

—The New York and Philadelphia Synod of the Reformed Episcopal church has now twenty-four parishes, which are located in Massachusetts, New York. New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Delaware, four congregations having been admitted during the past year.

Farm for Sale.

The National Christian Association owns a quarter section of land in Morris county, Kansas, four and one-half miles west of Council Grove, the county seat, a village of 2,300 inhabitants, with water-works, electric lights, and street-car line.

The nearest railroad station is only three miles away. There is a school house within half a mile. There is not over ten acres of this 160 that cannot be plowed. From five to ten acres are too stony for cultivation.

Some forty acres have been plowed and cultivated for several years, but not during the past two or three years. There are some 40 peach trees with a good show of fruit at the present time. Some of the apple trees have fruit upon them; there are in all about 25 apple trees. A few shade trees are about the shanty, which, however, is only a piece of a shanty, though residents in that vicinity claim that $50 would put it into condition for tenancy. A well some 25 feet deep has water in it during a portion of the year. Quite a quantity of stones have been gathered together near the house.

Any one going there in July next could put in winter wheat, which ought to yield 20 bushels per acre, if the season should be favorable. A good quantity of upland hay could be gathered, and some fruit.

The Association does not wish to hold land for speculative purposes, as that would be foreign to the object of its organization. The money is needed to carry on this great reform, and hence those having money to invest can benefit themselves and aid the Association by purchasing the above described quarter section.

There will be four insertions of this notice, with the amounts any are willing to pay for it. Eight hundred dollars has already been offered for it. Please send your offers at once.

The Board of Directors have appraised the place at $1,500.

Peter L. Osborn, Council Grove, Kan., will answer correspondence, and show parties the place.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

A couple of Polanders named John Losinski and Frank Lenkulski were arrested on suspicion of being concerned in several incendiary fires which have occurred in South Chicago during the past two months.

Announcement is made that contracts for the concentrating plant at Hill City, S. D., of the Harney Peak Consolidated Tin Company was let at Chicago on the 22d of June. The daily output is expected to reach 2,500 pounds.

The new Kenwood Observatory, upon the grounds of W. E. Hale, at Forty-sixth street and Drexel boulevard, was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies in the presence of a distinguished company.

Sixteen hundred architectural iron workers, platers, molders, and pattern workers went on a strike. This may delay the finishing work on all the new big buildings in the city. The men demand 30 cents per hour and eight hours to the day.

Dr. Ludwig Hektoen, of Rush Medical College, Chicago, has received the appointment of dean of the medical school of Iowa University.

The Chicago Wire Goods Company confessed judgment Wednesday for $25,000 in favor of Louis Wahl.

Fifty pupils were graduated from the Chicago Manual Training School.

The government inspection of meats began on Monday.

WORLD'S FAIR.

Ex-Governor Forsyth, of California, has been chosen chief of the Horticultural Department of the World's Fair.

The board of control of the World's Fair commission approved the plans for the art building in Jackson Park and ordered all art objects exhibited there.

At the meeting of the World's Fair directors a petition was presented asking that the art building be built on the Lake Front.

Colonel John Lee, a member of the Indiana World's Fair Commission, died Thursday at his home in Crawfordsville.

The Commission's board of control rejected General Chipman as a World's Fair chief, and put off the proposed European tour till fall. A joint meeting of the two conference boards arranged for monthly conferences hereafter. Chiefs Halsey and Skiff were confirmed.

The World's Fair Commissioners of Wisconsin have elected the following officers: President, Ledyard Smith, of Appleton; Vice President. H. H. Price, Black River Falls; Secretary, C. W. Graves, Viroqua; Treasurer, John H. Savage, Schullsburg.

COUNTRY.

Among bills signed by Governor Fifer on Thursday were the World's Fair bill, the reformatory bill, the bill placing stock-yards under control of the Railway and Warehouse Commission, and the bill reducing the rate of interest.

The President has denied the application for a pardon in the case of Edward Belden, convicted in Kansas of murder, and he will be hanged June 26.

William McKinley, Jr., was nominated for Governor by the Republicans of Ohio. Andrew L. Harris was named for Lieutenant Governor, and E. W. Poe for Auditor.

The June report of the Iowa Weather and Crop Service shows crops of all kinds to be much above the average.

Louisiana is endeavoring to obtain possession of an estate valued at $700,000, alleging that the persons into whose hands the property has fallen are not the legal heirs.

Rev. Isaac S. Nicholson, of Philadelphia, a high churchman, was elected Bishop of Milwaukee by the Episcopal Diocesan Convention.

The jury in the test suit of Meyer & Dickinson, of Philadelphia, against the Government, to cover excess of duties levied on materials used as hat trimmings, Friday returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs. This verdict involves about $30,000,000. The case will be appealed to the Supreme Court.

Ex-Governor Harrison Ludington, of Wisconsin, died at Milwaukee. He was 80 years of age.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from June 15 to June 20, inclusive:

Rev Geo Baker, Mrs R Miner, H Woolf, J P Phelps, R W Wass, L Woodruff, B M Smith, F A Armstrong, E J Chalfant, J Martin, J Hogue, J Morrison, W. E Powers, Rev T Hartley.

N. Benbow sends for 12 copies of the St. Louis Sermon. May his bow be strengthened by prayer as he sends forth these mighty arrows of truth.

All profits on the sales of books swell the Cynosure receipts, and reduce the deficiency in the cost of publishing the paper. Hence the Association is aided in a financial way by every one who keeps a few of the N. C. A. books on hand to sell as occasion occurs. The net profits, last year, on sale of books, was $615.38.

But, as with the Cynosure, so with books; they are God's agencies for giving light to those who sit in darkness. There are many, like Mr. W. W. Payne, of the Indian Territory, who keeps a few books on hand, and has the satisfaction of having saved a number from joining the lodges. He says: "I can't make a business of selling them, but can sell a few."

How many will invest $5 in a stock of N. C. A. books, and supply the demand of their neighborhood? A discount of 25 per cent from retail prices is given to such agents.

Christian Boys and Girls may begin missionary life in their own neighborhoods, during vacation, as tract distributors.

Send 25 cents for a sample package of N. C. A. tracts. Did you read, in the last Cynosure, what some of these little leaflets did for Mr. Geo. E. Bear?

Why did the Kansas Sheriff exclaim: "I would not like to have my wife get hold of that?" (Rev. Dr. Carradine's Sermon.) If you read it you will understand. Price, 5 cents per copy. Supply the wives of your neighborhood; 25 copies, postpaid, for $1.

Mr. Edison believes that food makes a determining difference in the quality of mental action, and influences the mind as powerfully as it affects the body. He has studied the question, it is said, in the light of both science and experimental detail, and has chosen a diet of fruit and grains, especially those ripening in the sunshine. He finds no room for self-denial in this regimen, as it is the food he enjoys most, and that which enables him to produce his best work.

TIGHT SHOES.

Medical testimony is not wanting to the great hurtfulness of tight shoes, as well as to any other unnatural compression of the system. One physician, after describing the difficulty of finding any woman who would acknowledge that her shoes were too tight, as she would rather assert that they were much too large, and hurt by their looseness, describes the perfect foot for a man as follows: "It should have great breadth and fullness of instep, a well-marked great toe, a long second toe, and a small little toe." Many modern invalids owe their condition to false notions and practices regarding the feet and shoes, and might find themselves quite well or very much improved if this single habit were corrected. This is especially true of women, since men, as a rule, follow more sensible rules regarding the selection of footwear. If the goods are not custom made, an effort is made to at least fit the shoe to the foot, instead of fitting the foot to the shoe, while high heels, forcing the wearer to toddle around upon the balls of the feet, are unknown among business-men. —Good Housekeeping.

REMOVING A CINDER FROM THE EYE.

The proper way to get a cinder out of the eye is to draw the upper lid down over the lower, utilizing the lashes of the lower as a broom, that it may sweep the surface of the former, and thus get rid of the intruder; or, gently drawing the lid away from the globe, pass a soft camel's-hair brush, or fold of a soft, silk handkerchief, two or three times between them. This procedure will, in nearly all cases, suffice. When it does not, the services of a physician are necessary. It is a remarkable fact that a very minute body will give rise to intense pain; and even after it has been extracted, the sensation remains for an hour or more. After the intruder is out, gently bathe the lids every fifteen minutes in iced water till the feeling subsides.—Ladies' Home Journal

By All Odds

The most generally useful medicine is Ayer's Pills. As a remedy for the various diseases of the stomach, liver, and bowels, these Pills have no equal. Their sugar-coating causes them not only to be easy and pleasant to take, but preserves their medicinal integrity in all climates and for any reasonable length of time. The best family medicine, Ayer's Pills are, also, unsurpassed for the use of travelers, soldiers, sailors, campers, and pioneers. In some of the most critical cases, when all other remedies have failed, prove effective.

"In the summer of 1864 I was sent to the Annapolis hospital, suffering with chronic diarrhea. While there, I became so reduced in strength that I could not speak and was compelled to write everything I wanted to say. I was then having some 25 or 30 stools per day. The doctors ordered a medicine that I was satisfied would be of no benefit to me. I did not take it, but persuaded my nurse to get me some of Dr. Ayer's Pills. About two o'clock in the afternoon I took six of these pills, and by midnight began to feel better. In the morning the doctors came again, and after deciding that my symptoms were more favorable, gave me a different medicine, which I did not use, but took four more of the pills instead. The next day the doctors came to see me, and thought I was doing nicely, (and so did I). I then took one pill a day for a week. At the end of that time, I considered myself cured and that Ayer's Pills had saved my life. I was then weak, but had no return of the disease, and gained in strength as fast as could be expected."—F. C. Luce, Late Lieut. 56th Regt. Mass. Vol. Infantry.

"Ayer's Pills are

I have ever used for headaches, and they act like a charm in relieving any disagreeable sensation in the stomach after eating."—Mrs. M. J. Ferguson, Pullens, Va.

"I was a sufferer for years from dyspepsia and liver troubles, and found no permanent relief until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. They have effected a complete cure."—George W. Mooney, Walla Walla, W. T.

IN BRIEF.

There are now nine hundred and forty-two submarine cables in operation, exclusive of the seven Atlantic cables, with an aggregate of 112,740 nautical miles.

The late George Peabody's gift of $2,500,000 to provide dwellings and lodging-houses for the poor of London, has now grown, by the addition of rents and interest, to a total of $5,117,230, while the land and buildings under the care of the trust are valued at $6,169,225 more. Up to the end of last year there had been 5,071 dwellings furnished to the artisan and laboring poor of London.

A decided sensation has been caused in Jerusalem by the introduction of electric light into a new and flourishing flour mill lately started there. The building in which the light has been introduced is near to the supposed site of Calvary and close to the Damascus Gate. It need hardly be said that the Arabs and Jews are much puzzled to account for a light in a lamp in which there is no oil.

After a long delay, much of which was unnecessary, orders have at last been issued restricting to about seven thousand the number of seals to be killed in Behring Sea this year. Even this is done only because of the supposed necessity for providing the natives with food, the commercial value or desirability of the skins of the seal not entering seriously into the calculations of the authorities of the United States and Great Britain who have reached this basis of agreement.

There are in the United States somewhat more than 1,700 railway corporations, operating 156,400 miles of road and furnishing employment to about 700,000 persons. According to Commissioner Carroll D. Wright, of the entire number of corporations about six hundred of them practically control the freight and passenger trade of the country. Of these, nearly four hundred, and these the most influential of the corporations, prohibit the use of intoxicating liquors on the part of their employes.

A German statistician says that there are 3,995 paper mills in the world, and that of the 1,964,000,000 pounds of paper turned out annually half is used for printing, 600,000,000 pounds being required for newspapers alone, the consumption of which has risen by 200,000,000 pounds in the last decade. He alleges that on an average an Englishman uses annually 11½ pounds of paper, an American 10¼, a German 8, a Frenchman 7½, an Italian or an Austrian 3½ a Spaniard 1½, a Russian 1⅛ and a Mexican 2.

The bugbear of polygamy is now dead and beyond resurrection. Young Utah is in line with the keenest progress of the country, and the Territory when studied and understood is, despite all of its drawbacks of the past, a glory and an honor to our whole country. In this free land and enlightened century ignorance and superstition cannot long find any corner in which to hide from the electric influence of the age; and Utah is fast forging ahead, to place herself abreast with the most enlightened portion of the country. The advancing tide of progress is sweeping over her, and to feel its influence one needs but to spend a few months in Salt Lake City.—Deseret Weekly.

How well we remember grandmother's attic, so fragrant with medicinal roots and herbs! Poor old soul, how precious they seemed to her! And yet, one bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla would do more good than her whole collection of "yarbs."

For restoring the color, thickening the growth, and beautifying the hair, and for preventing baldness, Hall's Hair Renewer is unsurpassed.

BUSINESS.

NEW PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

THE BEST OFFER YET MADE.

During June and July we offer to each NEW subscriber for the Christian Cynosure the following liberal premiums:

One copy of Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary, neatly printed and bound in half-seal covers, and one copy of "The Life and Words of Christ," by Cunningham Geikie, D. D., a larger volume, equally well printed and similarly bound.

Smith's Dictionary has long been a standard publication for Bible students, and is especially rich in trustworthy biography and geography, indicating a vast amount of study and research. It contains 468 pages of closely printed, double column pages, and, with its thousand references, will be found a useful help in studying the Scriptures.

Geikie's Life of Christ is also very rich in Biblical information, combining the history of our Lord and his disciples with reliable descriptions of the manners and customs of the times in which they lived, the worship of the Israelites, and other matters of interest for careful students. Its reputation as a literary work is excellent. It contains 826 pages.

For persons who have never taken our paper and desire to subscribe for one year, we consider this the most generous offer that has ever been made by this office. On receipt of two dollars, both books will be forwarded, with the paper, to the address of any actually new subscriber. For three dollars and the names of two new subscribers, the books will be sent free, during June and July.

We offer as a PREMIUM for subscribers to the Christian Cynosure the choice of nearly

from the Lowest to the Highest grades.

These carriages are manufactured by L. G. Spencer, who has carried on this business for years in the "Carpenter Building," where the Cynosure is published.

PASTOR KOENIG'S TRADE MARK NERVE TONIC

Would rather be without bread

BISHOP'S RESIDENCE, Marquettte, Mich., Nov. 7, 1889.

The Rev. J. Kossbiel of above place writes: I have suffered a great deal, and whenever I feel now a nervous attack coming I take a dose of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic and feel relieved. I think a great deal of it and would rather be without bread than without the Tonic.

CURED AFTER THIRTY-TWO YEARS.

MILWAUKEE, May 25, 1887.

REV. KOENIG:—I am personally acquainted with a man who (in the year 1878, then forty-four years of age) commenced to take your medicine for epilepsy, which he had had for thirty-two years. The attacks which he had formerly every four weeks diminished as soon as he took your medicine and disappeared entirely since August, 1880. The man is so healthy now that he can attend to his business without fear. By this wonderful cure a large family has been made happy, and of this he is convinced and gladly testifies.

REV. PATER AEGIDIUS.

Our Pamphlet for sufferers of nervous diseases will be sent free to any address, and poor patients can also obtain this medicine free of charge from us.

This remedy has been prepared by the Reverend Pastor Kœnig, of Fort Wayne, Ind., for the past ten years, and is now prepared under his direction by the

A report of the Commencement exercises at Wheaton College, last week, will appear in our next issue.

The Boston papers of last week contained an advertisement that a member of the Masonic fraternity, at the Baptist Ministers' meeting on Monday of this week, would reply to Rev. J. P. Stoddard's antagonistic review of that order at the previous meeting. "The war is on," but we have no fears for the result.

The inconsistence of those who oppose the reading of the English Bible in the public schools, and then declares these schools godless, is denounced by Dr. Sturtevant, of Galesburg, Ill., as "a piece of Jesuitism." The phrase expresses the origin of the opposition and its meaning. The citizens of Galesburg have petitioned the Board of Education to compel Bible reading in the local schools.

The victory won by Rev. J. P. Stoddard in his lecture before the Baptist Ministers' meeting at Boston, last week—details of which appear in another column,—not only shows the healthy progress of public and religious sentiment against lodge influence in the metropolis of New England, but reflects great credit upon the N. C. A. and the cause in which it is engaged, its Eastern agent and the fifty Baptist ministers who supported him in the subsequent controversy with the advocate of Masonry. It was a grand triumph for Christ and his church.

The case of "Master Workman" Hughes of Chicago, on trial at Rochester, N. Y., for alleged extortion, and also indicted for "conspiracy," resulted in his conviction on the first charge, the longest period of imprisonment for which in that State is five years. Hughes was Master Workman of Trades Assembly, No. 231, United Clothing Cutters, Trimmers and Tailors of North America, Knights of Labor, and his misdemeanor arose from the opportunities afforded by his official position. The jury were out twenty-two hours before a verdict was reached. Several other prominent members of the above order were also indicted for conspiracy. It is by these exposures that the "nobility" of the lodge is made best known to the general public.

While the church of Rome and the heretics of the orthodox Protestant churches of this country are unitedly raising their voices against the authorized version of our Bible as an errant and uninspired book, the American Bible Society, with similar societies here and elsewhere, sustained by the prayers and supported by the money of millions of Christians, is continually engaged in distributing copies of it, in all languages, throughout the world; and the best of it is, that wherever it is carried and read, not only the religious and moral character of the people is improved, but it becomes also an important factor in the physical and industrial progress of those nations where it is most kindly received and its teachings most deeply revered.

Russia is about competing on an immense scale, and presenting some superior advantages, with the United States in supplying England and Scotland with pork and bacon. Immense Russian slaughter-houses belonging to Russia have been transferred to a British commercial company, having a capital stock of $1,750,000. A quick train is to deliver hog products from them to Liban, the shipping port on the Baltic, within four and one-half days. The usual time has been thirteen days. From Chicago to England a shipment of pork cannot be made in less than from twenty to twenty-three days, and the difference in the cost of transportation is very great. The agricultural department at Washington realizes the gravity of the situation which confronts the bacon exporters of the United States, and is preparing to apprise dealers of the extent of the competition which they will be compelled to encounter.

The lodge is still arraying itself against the interests of the Gospel. "Many church members, who are also members of secret societies," says one newspaper, "do not fail to give the preference to their lodge duties." "The Vermont Congregationalists," says the Congregationalist, "had a lively discussion of the matter, and not a man who spoke failed to admit that Christian concerns in his community were suffering on account of them. Several who live in towns of only a few thousand inhabitants reported from twenty to forty thriving orders"—presumably in each town. A Mennonite brother, in a recent copy of the Canadian Gospel Banner, wrote that his church opposed secrecy, and in response another writer asked, "Does that mean we oppose it, and at the same time tolerate it in the church?" For the Mennonites we are glad to be able to say that the lodge system is neither tolerated nor allowed in the church. It is a pity that we cannot say the same of other and larger Christian societies.

Next week we intend to print an article, "Lodges vs. The Church," by Rev. C. H. Fields, of Petersburg, Ind., which should be an eye-opener to those who see "no harm" in secret societies. On this subject he writes: "I attended a funeral recently, that is to say, I stood out on the pavement near the residence and watched the different orders in charge. Well, what did I see? The order which seemed to be 'Right,' 'Worthy,' 'Grand,' 'Worshipful' 'Master' of ceremonies was made up, as best I could see, of the following characters: Professional drunken gamblers, about four; nominal Christians, perhaps, two or three; the others, infidels, skeptics and nondescripts." In a private note, he adds: "At the funeral referred to, two men were really drunk at the time, and one came near falling into the open grave." These "civic," or "society," funerals are usually devoid of the elements of truly Christian interments. Here in Chicago, men in carriages following a corpse to the grave have been seen playing cards and smoking cigars, and a beer-drinking bout, after a funeral, is not uncommon.

It is high honor before God, and in the sight of those who believe in Christian purity, to whatever visible church denomination they may belong, that the 500 preachers in the Free Methodist Conference are "free from habits of snuff-dipping, tobacco using and membership in secret orders." The influence which such a body of men can carry into the churches placed in their charge must be grandly strong for personal purity among their members. It was a wise provision which that church placed in its Discipline that "any society requiring an oath [or an] affirmation, or promise of secrecy....is held to be a secret society; and any member joining or continuing in such, violates his covenant obligation, and shall in due form be excluded from the church." And it was also wise to require each member to promise that he or she will abstain from all connection with secret societies. Hence the church is free from the sin of lodgery.

A LETTER FROM INDIA.

BY C. B. WARD.

It is not very long since, by the kindness of the Cynosure, we received $9 from some of its grateful readers. We are very thankful for the little moneyed tokens we get ever and again. It has often been a task, in the last five years, to take time from many cares and write a Cynosure letter. But each time we have, as we now remember, as if to encourage as well as reward us, a few dollars have come after each letter. We have had the same experience with regard to the London Christian and the Vanguard. Anyway, I feel a debt of love to all the Cynosure family and once more give some news of India.

When last I wrote wife and I were alone as workers in our mission in the Nizam's Dominions. But God, after many days, has sent most needed help and helpers.

You noticed in the Cynosure a long time ago a note of mine from other papers, in which I made mention of our success, at last, in getting a village for our mission and colony, here in the Dominions of the Nizam of Hyderabad, after ten years' effort. Well, next came the long-promised funds for the upset of the village for the purposes of a Christian colony from a Christian man in New York City. Further much-needed financial help for our home, our work, and the necessary cost of moving from Secunderabad, 150 miles, to Yallandu, our present home and headquarters. It came from a brother in Southern California.

Miss H. M. Bell, who came formerly from Chicago, and whose parents live there now, after some three years in the Hyderabad Medical College, returned to us in the latter part of '90; and early in March Rev. M. F. Smootz, who first came out in '85 and returned on furlough in '88, arrived in Bombay accompanied by his wife; also Rev. R. H. Madden, wife and little son, of New York City—all for our work in Yallandu.

We are all as busy as we can be, getting through with the village reconstruction and the building of a mission house suitable for the headquarters of what we hope may become the headquarters of a great mission work among the Hindoos and aborigines of these parts. Bros. Smootz and Madden are both good carpenters, and their tools are busy on the floor, window-sash and doors of our future home, while all the new hands are working industriously at the study of Telugu daily.

Our native church is getting some little strength, numbering towards sixty members and probationers. Our financial plan is "the tithe for God." Our native Christians' tithes amount, with ours, to about 60 rupees ($19.25) per month. We employ two native preachers, who are all the time out in the villages and meet with great encouragement. They have preached repeatedly in perhaps about forty different villages this year. Sundays we manage our home Sunday-schools and English service, and go, in a goodly company, to the bazar here, where from fifty to 200 may any time be found to preach to in two minutes if you have a banjo, cornet, violin or drum. "God is with us." This blessed thought that so cheered the departing hour of the great and good John Wesley cheers our life.

God saw fit to try our faith and keep us in school for twelve years in charge of the Telugu mission, migrating from one part of the country to another with our Christians and our plans. We do the more bless God that after so many years we have been counted worthy to be the Lord's steward for still greater things among these dear people.

The part of the country we are now in was once a very wealthy Telugu kingdom, whose greatest glory must have been seen in the last days of the great Hindu kings, somewhere between 1,000 A. D. and 1,100. The coming of the Moslem, in the twelfth century, began the reign of terror, war, devastation, destruction and death that at last left this country, commonly spoken of under the name of Telingana, a great waste, though well watered and possessed of a rich, productive soil, capable of supporting millions, but peopled by but a few hundred thousands. For some years the government has been making some effort to resurrect Telingana. A railroad has been thrown across it, and in its very midst has been opened the Hyderabad Deccan Co. Ld. coal mines at our headquarters, Yallandu.

Yallandu was a village of not more than six huts in '85. It is now a sprightly mining town of about 6,000 people, and promises much development as the coal mining proceeds.

God has raised up friends of our work in unforeseen directions and numbers who urge us to lay good foundations and push on. We expect, therefore, ere many days, to take a trip to the state of the Rajah of Bustar, a native state lying directly east of us, less than one hundred miles.

God has raised us up to help ourselves, make Christians and teach them to help themselves, without missionary society salary twelve years. God has taken care of us, helped us to do much for our own support, and the support of a large body of orphans. Matt. 10: 10 has been a divine assessment of our needs that has been blessedly good for us.

The result we so far see is a little body of native Christians, more self-reliant, enterprising and generous than any other like number we know in India. Not one of our Christians uses tobacco or liquor; not one woman wears jewelry or otherwise apes the heathen.

We are sometimes called self-support missionaries. We work as does Bishop Wm. Taylor in Africa, without salaries ourselves or for our workers. We tap and develop the resources of the country in honest labor and teach our Christians to do the same.

But our friends can help us build chapels, schools, and open new fields in any item of which may be called capital expenditures. We need a little hospital and dispensary. We need $150 worth of Telugu type for our little printing press.

But we need most of all the unceasing prayers of all God's people that we may have first an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on our mission band; second, on our little Christian church; third, on the people about us, bringing them under deep conviction for sin, and by his providence prepare this people's hearts for the word our preachers bring.

We are glad to say we are all free workers for Christ, unallied with any societies of darkness. One of our force was once a Mason but demitted.

The only item of reform news I can give to-day is, that a dear friend who in '87 joined the Masons, thinking them a good people, and often after argued with us that there was nothing in Masonry inimical to Christianity, has, within a year past, left them in disgust, and now says, most emphatically, a Christian has no business in a Masonic lodge.

God bless you all in the war in the United States.

Yallandu, Nizam's Dominions.

THE DUTY OF SPECIAL ORGANIZED WORK AGAINST THE LODGE.

BY CYRUS SMITH.

Churches have much work to do, and cannot make a specialty of fighting any one sin. The energy of a church to be directed on one line continually would ruin it. But to ignore a fundamental reform like that represented by the Christian Cynosure would, in time, ruin any organization as a church of Christ. It looks clear that the N. C. A. is a great necessity, because it is doing the work that would ruin the churches to try to accomplish, each working single-handed, and thereby neglecting other duties.

"The enemy has come in like a flood;" consequently it takes a long "special" struggle which the churches are unable to make. But they can show their colors, their faith, their love. They can uphold the hands of those who make a specialty of the work in an organization for that purpose.

The different orders outnumber the churches; each lodge being a place of worship, having altars and prayers as truly as the churches, but totally Satanic. There can be no exception to the rule, even if all the good men in the world had been deceived by them. They are not of God's planting, and just as sure as God is true they "shall be rooted up." The work must be accomplished. God is true. Our duty is plain. A special organization for a special work is the National Christian Association, in which Christians of every denomination harmonize. What Christian will oppose it, walking in the light?

We should all pull together. Each one may learn his duty and do it. Had the United Brethren leaders pulled with the N. C. A., our denominational lines would have been strengthened and the division prevented. Will Radicals now repeat the same folly? I would not find fault with Radicals or other Christians anywhere, but I would respectfully urge them to duty. The Radical United Brethren should take half as many copies of the Cynosure as are now published of that paper. It will not make you dyspeptic, my brethren; only get grace to enable you to digest the strong meat of the Gospel against the lodge.

What is true of us is true of other denominations also. "He giveth more grace," thank God, and we need much of it to do our duty if we would see the Bride of Christ divorced from the lodge. We need our hearts so full of the love of God that we will rejoice in all his works, ways and the prosperity of his people everywhere. We need "the whole armor of God," as "we wrestle not against flesh and blood." We should be thankful that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God." May we make sure of this benefit.

THE FIVE CITIES.

BY B. EISENTRAUT.

We read in Isaiah 19: 18, the following prophetic message to-wit: "In that day shall five cities in the land of Egypt speak the language of Canaan and swear to the Lord of hosts; one shall be called, The City of Destruction."

Over eight years ago the whole Protestant family of the Christian faith joined hands in commemorating the birthday of Martin Luther, November 10, 1883, an event which had taken place 400 years before. All considered the labors of Luther, Melancthon, Zwingle and others, as being of vital importance to the Protestants on the globe.

Isaiah the prophet, was dictated to record the great crisis of agitation and controversy near two thousand two hundred years before these faithful servants battled for the Christian faith, showing that five cities speaking the one language of faith would become the centers of attraction, of which the one was doomed for destruction.

The land of Egypt is here given as a representative power of darkness, pointing figuratively to the papal power and the Roman empire.

Wittemberg, the home of Martin Luther, became the cradle of the Reformation in arousing Christendom from its slumber, in the posting of ninety-five theses against the sale of indulgences, October 31, 1517.

The city of Worms became the next scene of astonishment to the world, in 1521, when Luther stood there alone as a brave soldier of the Cross, in the presence of the Emperor of Germany, the kings and princes and the ecclesiastical power.

The city of Spires was twice chosen for a general Diet, in 1526 and 1529, wherein the Reformers were requested to cease their preaching of heresy. They were there called Protestants.

The most important session of the ecclesiastical and temporal power transpired in the city of Augsburg, A. D., 1530, wherein the Protestants were compelled to define their differences of faith and doctrine in writing—called the Augsburg Confession.

The city which opposed these movements, from beginning to end, was Rome itself, which St. John named Babylon, locating the seat of the Roman Catholic church to the seven-hill-city, as we find in Rev. 17: 9, saying: "And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth. She shall be utterly burned with fire."—Rev. 18: 8. The prophet Isaiah does not say in plain words that this should be the period of a Reformation, but describes it in equivalent language in the two verses following—verses 19 and 20: "In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord. And it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the Lord of hosts in the land of Egypt: for they shall cry unto the Lord because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a saviour, and a great one, and he shall deliver them."

A true altar of faith was again erected in Luther's time, not in Rome itself, but in the border thereof, in the circulation of the pillar of truth—the Bible itself.

CHANGE OF VENUE.

A little street boy, who had been arrested on some charge, answered, when his case was called in court, "Change of venue." This would legally transfer him to the jurisdiction of another court. For a minute the little fellow's plea took everybody's breath away; but finally some one suggested asking him what was meant by "change of venue." He promptly answered, "Want to be tried by a better judge."

One often wishes he could enter the same plea in places outside the court-room. In the tumult of popular accusation, when every upstart and prejudiced caviler assumes the judicial ermine, like the ass in the lion's skin, one often wishes he could transfer his cause to the jurisdiction of some better judge. What an alibi was to Sam Weller's father, that, to the victim of amateur judgment, is such a change of venue.

But unqualified judges are not so bad as disqualified ones. Blank ignorance may give place to knowledge, but stubborn prejudice will not let truth in. False religion, for example, is a sterner enemy to Christianity than mere irreligion, and distorted ethics, pre-empting the territory, are the worst obstacle to genuine morals. Ignorance and vice can be overcome and humbled by truth and moral instruction; but error, organized, robed and enthroned, will not come down. Not the scribes and Pharisees, but publicans and sinners, go first into the kingdom of heaven.

No disqualifying school is more effective than the hoodwinked lodge. False from turret to foundation stone, it seems to twist the moral fiber of the victims in its dungeons. Deceiving and being deceived, the devotees of this superstition present a spectacle half-ludicrous, half-pitiful and disgusting. "A pagan suckled in a creed outworn," a blind dupe led by blind leaders, the true Freemason believes more that is false and less that is true than any ordinary man. His judgment of men seems of little consequence, so long as his judgment of principles is so unenlightened or warped that he mistakes the miserable, pitiful and vicious twaddle of Freemasonry for a complete system of morals. Those who judge so poorly of principles seem hardly competent to judge men. Until the nonsense and wickedness that characterize this religion of fools are eliminated, one need trouble himself little about Masonic judgment, so far as it dabbles in moral or religious questions. It is a contemptibly poor judge, and, so long as there are better ones, we can plead change of venue.

As to judgment in another world, that will be according to truth. There are gods many and lords many here, but only one God there. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

A wicked Masonic oath must be in his sight an offence abhorred. Who believes he will reward a man for keeping it? How can he fail to punish wickedness perpetrated under the pretext of observing it? Can a righteous God punish any man for repenting of a wicked oath and bringing forth fruits meet for repentance?

So, if, when I land on another shore, I find myself at first in some dim Osirian hall, where the empty judgments of the earthly lodge find hollow echoes in "the lodge below," and where a grim accuser arraigns me at "low twelve" for telling truth in the world from which I have come, I shall know that I have not yet arrived at any true white throne. As a subject of Christ's kingdom I shall enter there the street boy's plea and claim change of venue. CRUCIFER.

BE YE ALSO READY.

Ready when the dawning
Comes creeping cold and gray,
And we waken up from slumber
To greet another day.

Ready when the noontide
Is quickening with heat,
And there stealeth o'er the spirit
A languor, dreamy, sweet.

Ready at midnight hour
A vigil still to keep;
The heart awake, though weary eyes
Have closed themselves in sleep.

Blessed the servant found,
What time the Lord returns,
Who ready in his hand doth hold
A lamp that brightly burns.

WORK OF THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

During its seventy-five years of existence this society has received for its missionary and benevolent work $9,936,340.88, besides remittances for books and income from other sources amounting to $10,928,621.27, making a grand total of $20,804,926.15. The sources from which the benevolent income of the society has been derived are as follows: From churches, $735,649.70; from individuals, life memberships, etc., $1,682,225.82; gifts from auxiliary societies, $3,055,824.56; from legacies, $4,462,640.77.

The following table shows the receipts from these resources for each quarter of a century:

	Church Collec's.	Individual Gifts.
First 25 years	$ 28,938 04	$432,006 79
Second 25 years	353,404 37	655,643 87
Third 25 years	353,307 29	594,575 19
	$735,649 70	$1,682,225 85
	Legacies.	Aux. Donations.
First 25 years	$ 109,504 57	$ 91,055 09
Second 25 years	1,148,673 52	1,386,238 89
Third 25 years	3,204,462 68	1,578,530 58
	$4,462,640 77	$3,055,824 56

That the work of the society has in some measure kept pace with the increase of territory and population is apparent from a comparison of its issues in the three periods of twenty-five years each:

In the 1st period of 25 years the issues were....2,798,366
In the 2d period of 25 years.....18,987,210
In the 3d period of 25 years.....32,448,136

And that these copies of Scriptures reach the homes of the people even in the most distant parts of the country is evident from the fact that during the ten years in which the third general re-supply was in progress, 5,454,788 families were visited, and 376,257 which had no Bible in their homes were supplied; while during the eight years of the fourth general re-supply 6,300,628 families were visited and 473,804 homes which had no Bible were supplied. During these eight years eight million, one hundred and forty-six thousand, eight hundred and eight copies of the Scriptures, in twenty-seven different languages, were distributed in this country.—Review read at the May, 1891, anniversary of the society.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES DENOUNCED.

[From the Report of J. T. McFarland, D.D., President of the Iowa Wesleyan University, at its thirty-sixth Commencement, to the Trustees and Visitors of the Institution, June, 1891.]

The subject of college secret societies was called to your attention last year by the students, and the matter will be still more urgently presented this year. You will remember that I indicated last year that I was making an investigation of the experience of the colleges of the country with the fraternities. . . . . I received answers in all from about 150 colleges, representing all kinds and grades of institutions. The testimony which they render is overwhelmingly against the secret societies. This testimony comes from every part of the country, from the large as well as the small institutions, from State as well as denominational schools. In this State it is worthy of note, that but four colleges permit secret societies to exist—the State University, the Agricultural College, Simpson College and this institution. There are thus, you will see, but two church schools in Iowa that have or permit these societies, and these are both Methodist institutions. The Congregationalists exclude them from Iowa College, the Presbyterians from Coe College and Parsons College, the United Brethren from Western College, the Baptists from Des Moines College, and the Christian church from Drake University. The Methodist church stands alone among the Christian schools of the State in entertaining these societies.

As to the practicability of successfully abolishing these societies where they have once become established, I refer you to the testimony of the colleges where it has been done, as reported in the replies to my circular letter. In every case reported where their abolition was attempted, the abolition has been made effective; and no school from which they have been excluded or abolished testifies to any serious difficulty in keeping them out or expresses any regret that they are not permitted. But one president of a school where they do not exist expresses a desire for their organization; and with the strict understanding that I will not divulge the name of the institution or the man, I will say that president has since been dismissed for incompetency!

Expressing my own convictions, which I suppose have been well understood since I have been connected with this institution, I would say that I consider these secret societies to be detrimental to a school, chiefly for the following reasons:—

1. They create unnatural divisions among students, and give rise to much strife and unfriendliness.

2. They operate as a serious discouragement to many students in their social relations, on account of the practical social ostracism which is practiced toward those who are not invited into the membership of those societies, or who refuse to join them, or for conscience' sake oppose them.

3. They invariably seriously reduce the efficiency of the work of the regular literary societies, often entirely destroying that work; and that without doing any equivalent literary work in the fraternities.

4. They operate as serious obstacles to religious work in the school, through the divisions to which they give rise, and the bad feelings which they engender, as well as the social dissipation of which they are the occasion.

5. They are unfavorable in their influence on the scholarship of a school through their tendency to make social rather than scholastic standing of first importance.

6. They are a burdensome expense to very many of their members, tending to extravagant social habits.

7. They are the occasion of the loss of many students, and thus a heavy financial burden to the school in which they exist. No one in selecting a school to which to go will choose a school because of the existence of fraternities in it, while not a few will refuse to go to a school in which secret societies are permitted; and many leave schools where such societies are because of the disadvantages to which they are subjected on their account. To my personal knowledge, during one year that I have been here, this school lost in tuition in this way as much as $500.

I submit these considerations to you inasmuch as you will be called upon to pass upon this important matter; and I can furnish more detailed facts, both of my own experience and that of other college presidents, if you care to enter upon the investigation of the subject.—Mt. Pleasant (Iowa) Journal, June 18.

ATTACKS ON IOWA'S PROHIBITION SYSTEM.

Opponents of prohibition are not over-scrupulous in their attacks upon the system in Iowa, and are working against it with an energy worthy of a better cause, and a species of warfare that is more likely to result in injury to their own character for veracity and good judgment than to prohibition. One of the latest of these opponents is a Mr. Faulkes, whom a correspondent of the Inter-Ocean thus refutes:

"When Mr. Faulkes comes to the question of crime and prohibition, and tries to belittle Gov. Larrabee's report on the diminution of crime under prohibition, he is equally misleading in his figures and conclusions.

"Taking his own figures, we find the years he presents in his table of penitentiary convicts includes one year under the old law. This year shows the increase of convicts to be nearly 50 per cent greater than the greatest increase under prohibition, and 300 per cent greater than the average yearly increase under our prohibition law. We herewith present a table taken from his own figures to show how

PROHIBITION AFFECTED OUR PENITENTIARIES.

Convicts in Iowa Penitentiary:

1881—463, saloon laws.
1882—540, increase, 77 per cent; saloon laws.
1883—597, increase, 57 per cent; saloon laws.
1884—616, increase, 19 per cent; prohibition law.
1885—657, increase, 41 per cent; prohibition law.
1886—695, increase, 38 per cent; prohibition law.
1887—664, decrease, 31 per cent; prohibition law.
1888—593, decrease, 51 per cent; prohibition law.
1889—606, increase, 13 per cent; prohibition law.
1890—615, increase, 9 per cent; prohibition law.

"The first and part of the second year of this table was under our saloon laws, and for any one to claim that crime increased at a greater rate under prohibition than under the saloon influence, and present this table to prove it, misrepresents his own figures. Had the increase of the first year continued through the ten years, we would have 1,300 convicts in our penitentiaries instead of 615. This would have placed Iowa nearly up to Indiana, a license State, which, with 280,000 more people, maintains 1,416 convicts, or over two to one.

"Had the per cent of increase during this saloon period kept up through all these ten years, we would have 1,900 convicts, which would bring us almost up to Illinois in criminal population."

THE GRASP OF ROME ON THE PUBLIC FUNDS.

The amount of public money paid to Roman Catholic institutions in New York City alone is thus commented upon by the Christian Inquirer:

"Here is the round sum of $1,037,186.07 paid out of the public treasury to one denomination for its various charities. Do other denominations fare as well? The figures show that all the other denominations, Jew and Christian, with all the unsectarian charities, got only $964,649.67. This is a ghastly showing when we consider that a large part of the city taxes are paid by Protestants. When we look at the government of this great metropolis we are almost tempted to believe that the corporation of New York is run to support Roman Catholic office holders and endow Roman Catholic schools and asylums."

If the oath be not regarded as sacred, then there is no sanction that will bind a man to faithfulness as a witness or as an officer. The multiplying of oaths and the profane way in which they are administered, and the ease with which they are violated, has well nigh destroyed all confidence in them as a safeguard. The witness swears to tell the whole truth, and then keeps back as much of it as does not suit himself; the officer swears to fulfill his office, and straightway tries how not to do it; the minister or elder swears to maintain the truth of his profession and goes immediately to fighting it. What can degrade the oath quicker than such examples?—Christian Instructor.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Boston and Chicago compared—Practical Christianity—A lodge burlesque—The Baccalaureate sermons—A suggestion for Woman Suffragists—Sunday base-ball legalized in Rhode Island.

"In Boston we find one type of religious thought and consequent ideal of Christian work; in Chicago another," said Rev. R. G. Harbutt at the Sixty-fifth Congregational General Conference, held recently at Waterville, Me. "In the one city," he went on to say, "it is the result largely of Unitarianism, æstheticism, and a self-indulgent culture, the outcome of two centuries of slow development in one of the oldest cities of the continent; while in the other it takes a more aggressive type, the result of being obliged to make a prompt and practical effort to meet the rapidly growing dangers of a new city under less conservative and fixed conditions." Yet it should not be forgotten that Boston has led the van of all missionary and philanthropic progress, ever since this nineteenth century, now in its last decade of life, stood in its young, fiery, untried strength, all unconscious of the tears to be shed, the heights to be climbed, the heroic deeds to be done before it could wear the wreath of victory. And a glorious crown it is, even though dashed with blood-drops, and bedewed with the sweat of conflict.

Speaking of practical Christianity leads one naturally to think of its numerous counterfeits. A recent issue of a lodge paper tells how good, pious Aunt Jane is very hopefully impressed for her nephew Henry, and thinks he must be "getting religious," as she hears him when he supposes himself to be alone, talking about Friendship, Love and Truth, "like a minister at a Conference meeting." Poor, simple Aunt Jane is soon taken aback, however, by being informed that she is quite astray in her surmises, Henry having just been appointed to a position on the degree team of an Odd-fellow's lodge, and he was only rehearsing his part of the work. This is a specimen of the subtle manner in which the lodge will try to put Christianity in a burlesque light and show itself the best of the two, by always giving her the clown's part to play. During eight years, as a "round the world missionary" for the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt has found open hands, hearts and homes. She has been supported, and her expenses, as she journeyed from place to place, not by voluntary offerings; nor has she been suffered to want any good thing, though her sex has debarred her from wearing either a Masonic pin, or the three links of F., L. & T. Nor can it be said that the white ribbon, even, has been the "open sesame" which has bowed all hearts to hear her message, for it was the object of her mission to go to localities where it had never been heard of; but it was the simple trust of apostolic times that could go forth, making no provision for future wants, and yet lacking nothing. Faith in God always presupposes a faith in humanity, and therefore it can get along very satisfactorily without lodge grips.

Should all our college graduates appropriate as their own the golden nuggets of truth which are laid at their feet with every commencement, a new era would dawn for America. It is noticeable that the Baccalaureate sermons delivered to our New England colleges this year, and representing, as they do, the thought of the highest Christian culture in the land in reference to education, should make practical Christianity so largely their leading idea, and the mere intellectual life a subordinate thing. I doubt if the same could have been said of the Baccalaureate sermons of fifty years ago. "There is always room at the top for every man's best," says President Bartlett, of Dartmouth College, thus putting in a new and much more encouraging light the old aphorism with which we are all familiar. Bishop F. D. Huntingdon, of Amherst College, inquires of the graduates, "What are you going to do about civil service reform, labor abuses, the tenement-house curse, and the loose laws touching drunkenness, licentious literature and scandalous divorce?" Says President Buckingham, of the University of Vermont: "The peril of the times is from demagogueism; the great opportunity of the times is in profound Christian statesmanship." But it is enough to neutralize every such noble and true word when the college authorities, as at Harvard, pay no attention to the most flagrant violations of law on the part of the students. Public opinion can but draw its own conclusions when the late drunken riot of students at Parker's, and the spectacle of nearly fifty at the bar of the police court for keeping liquor in their club rooms, is passed over in silence;—which is that their rich and aristocratic connections are allowed to shield them from the disgrace of discipline and expulsion. The Traveller calls attention to this remarkable state of affairs, in an editorial, in which it says: "Some of those who paid the fines were among the most prominent of the entertainers on class day, and their recent appearance in the police court when they pleaded guilty of the offence named did not seem to detract in the least from their social prestige and standing." Even Harvard College cannot afford to put a premium on vice in this way. Certainly women are proving their right to "the higher education," by using better the opportunities given them than the average male. And they have proved their right to the ballot in the same way wherever permitted to exercise it. Lucy Stone, in one of her pointed articles, calls attention to the fact that the full right of suffrage can be bought in Massachusetts by any man of foreign birth for $2.50—since the poll tax was abolished for no other end, it would appear, than to oblige the Democratic party by giving them more votes,—while on the other hand cultured, native-born women, who can lecture, write books, edit papers and fill professorships, are forbidden even the poor right of municipal suffrage. Let me remark, by the way, that I wish some of our woman suffragists would make a move to restore to all women of mature years, married or unmarried, their right, of which modern custom has deprived them, to the old English prefix of Mrs.—Mistress, in the unabbreviated form of Shakespeare's time—and thus deliver us forever not only from the absurdity but the frequent embarrassment which attends the use of the two separate titles, Miss and Mrs. It is never considered necessary in the case of a man that his social status should thus be designated; and I never could see why it is needful in the case of a woman. This was at least the belief of Harriet Martineau, who was certainly sensible and level-headed beyond the average of her sex, and who, to the day of her death, always had her papers and letters directed to Mrs. Martineau. One of the grandest things at Wellesley College—or at least it has always so impressed the writer—is her statue; white, calm, colossal, in a sitting attitude, no classic fripperies about it, but strong and womanly in every detail, from her plain dress and simple cap, to her hands—those "powerful, feminine, maternal hands," which George Eliot gives to Dorothea in "Middlemarch."

It has been decided by the Rhode Island authorities that the Sunday base ball games at Rocky Point are to be allowed to continue, and for a very interesting reason. They say that if steamboats are permitted to run, band concerts to play, and other things of a like nature allowed, they see no reason why the laws of the State should stop at base ball. And why, in all fairness, should they? If they begin with the first letter of the alphabet, so to speak, there is no earthly reason why they should not go on to x, y and z, and have the regular Paris Sunday. And why may not Sunday newspapers be included as first and foremost in the long list of things which, in strict logical order and sequence, ought to make base ball a legalized institution?

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, June, 1891.

The management of the Glen Echo Chautauqua, by doing a very wise and good thing in ordering that the gates of the grounds be not opened, except in extraordinary cases, on the Sabbath day, has endeared itself to the Christian people of Washington, and it will find it profitable, too, for many Christians will become regular visitors to the grounds on week days who would not have gone if the grounds were opened on Sundays to the Sabbath desecrators who would have gone there, not to attend the services, but on a picnic frolic. This rule compelled all those who wished to attend the Sunday services at Glen Echo, which were about what they are in the average churches, to be on the grounds Saturday night. There are about 400 people living in tents on the grounds, and notwithstanding the bad weather—rain nearly every day and night,—they appear to be enjoying themselves. The transient attendance during the first week was greatly restricted on account of an accident in the power house of the new electric railway and the bad weather; but now that the railway is in running order and the weather promises to be better, a large increase is expected in the daily attendance.

A very popular feature of the Chautauqua course are the Bible studies, which are arranged in a manner that is new and specially attractive to most people, and an effort is being made to organize special classes in all the churches here, in addition to the class which meets at Glen Echo, and from present indications the effort will be successful in a number of the churches. Nine members of the Chautauqua course, seven ladies and two gentlemen, have received their diplomas.

The Father Matthew Society is making preparations to entertain the delegates to the twenty-first annual convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America, which will meet in Washington, August 5. This convention will represent about 1,000 societies, having a total membership in the neighborhood of 70,000.

Good examples are always to be commended, because of their far-reaching influence. This is true in everything, but particularly so in temperance. And a strikingly good example was the rule adopted by the New Jersey State Editorial Association, which passed through here this week on a special train bound for White Sulphur Springs, Luray Cave, and other interesting points in Virginia, prohibiting the use of intoxicating liquor on their train. This rule, which was unanimously adopted by the association, says that no liquor shall be brought upon the train, nor shall any be placed upon the tables at any hotel in the presence of the ladies by any member of the party, and provides that its violation shall be followed by a forfeiture of the ticket of the violator at the point in the route where it may occur. There were 175 in the party, and that their adoption of this rule will be productive of good, not only in their own State but everywhere it is heard of, cannot for a moment be doubted; it will be talked about, written about, and commented upon by the members of the party and their friends, and the same rule will be adopted by other parties, large and small.

When intoxicating liquors shall be banished from all excursion parties, public and private, a great reform will have been accomplished, much misery avoided, and many crimes prevented. Many a young man, and truth compels me to say many a young girl, too, began his or her deviation from the narrow path of honor and rectitude with a glass of wine or other intoxicant taken at the solicitation of friends in a jolly excursion party. All honor to the New Jersey editors for the stand they have taken, and may they carry the same good idea into the columns of their papers.

The Young Men's Christian Association, composed entirely of colored men, is, I am informed by one of its members, making great progress and promises, if the recent rates of increase in membership be kept up, to soon outmember the white association, which has, through its most prominent and influential members, done much towards encouraging the new association. *

WHY MASONS FOLLOW THE ANCIENT MYSTERIES.

We believe it is Edmund Ronayne who says that the great mass of Freemasons know but little of the inner mysteries of the lodge, from whence they are derived, and especially of what they mean. Possibly the following clipping, by an anonymous writer, will explain the position of these lodge-men under this criticism: "In Colo, the mountainous interior of Viti Levu, the largest island of the Fiji group, the natives have a very curious method of greeting the new moon. On seeing the thin crescent rising above the hills they salute it with a prolonged 'Ah!' at the same time quickly rapping on their open mouths with their left hands, thus producing a rapid vibratory sound. An old chief, when asked regarding the meaning and origin of this curious custom, said: 'We always look and hunt for the moon in the sky, and when it comes we do as you see to show our pleasure at finding it again. We don't know the meaning of what we do; our fathers always did so.'"

REFORM NEWS.

LETTER FROM OUR NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

BOSTON, June 24, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I seldom notice anonymous communications, but one just received is so thoroughly Masonic in spirit that a few extracts may be tolerated. The archer opens fire on this wise: "I am greatly pleased to note the fact that there is one staunch Christian man and citizen who is not afraid to express with disgust his opinion of the scathing remarks you made in Chapel Hall, Tremont Temple, to-day. Long live the Rev. Mr. Cleveland, of Melrose. Give us more such Christian men, and this world will be a great deal better; and when the call is made to rally round the battle-flag, there will be fewer cowards than there was in this hall listening to your harangue." Will the reverend gentleman named and eulogized be proud to receive and reciprocate enconiums from a mystic brother, who is himself too cowardly to give his name? Possibly—I will not venture an opinion.

Again: "Let us know what you have done, and not tell us what others have done." Well, one thing which seems to interest you is, that by request I read a paper at the Baptist Ministers' meeting which gave umbrage to your brother and touched a tender chord in your sympathetic bosom.

"Where would your churches be without the support of members of these secret societies? Let them withdraw from the church, and you will find many empty treasuries." Is money-getting your higher conception of church work? It would seem so from your remarks.

"These very same secret societies are doing more to-day for the elevation of mankind than all the churches in Christendom." How does that strike you, brethren in the ministry? Is it a just imputation, or a slander upon the Bride of Christ?

"Now, to be sure, there are black sheep in every flock, but there is double the crime committed to-day under the guise of religion than from all other sources. . . . . You cannot win souls to Christ on the line you take, no more than can some ministers score people into heaven. I have had a taste of the church and the lodge, but give me the lodge every time. . . . . But you will say, on your side, Christians don't do anything wrong. Oh! no; this is true; but I would like to see one of your Christians. . . . . You are only a representative of a few who drive good citizens from the doors of your churches, and advertise your business to the great benefit of the lodge; and to-day, while one true Christian soldier left you in disgust, three-fold will rally round the banner of the lodge. READER."

QUERIES.

Is a Christian where he belongs when brothers who extol the lodge above the church eulogize him as a model saint?

Does Masonry, like politics, sometimes "make strange bed-fellows?"

Why, if discussion adds "three-fold" to the lodge support, do those already in become so restive and spicy when this recruiting service is going on? Why not fall in and help the work along?

"Reader" requests notice of his communication in the Cynosure, and as his letter has in it some evidence of culture, if he will add sufficient manly courage to write or appear in person under his own name, I shall be glad to confer with him; otherwise he had better save his postage for his lodge contributions. J. P. STODDARD

FROM OUR WASHINGTON AGENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25, 189..

DEAR CYNOSURE:—When the farmer is too busy to attend lectures, and the professional man is seeking a retreat from the blazing sun, the reform agent must be very enthusiastic to enthuse those whom he may reach. My work, for some days, has been largely local.

I have attended our New Glen Echo Chautauqua, with profit to myself and, I trust, our cause. A magnificent place! To be appreciated, it must be seen. An expenditure of $250,000 to aid nature's contribution to its beauty makes it an inviting retreat to the weary and those thirsting for knowledge. One thousand dollars per day, it is said, is the expense of providing the good things with which the people are instructed and entertained. I speak of it as our Chautauqua, as it proposes to run on the Reform line. Near a city filled with people anxious to desecrate the Sabbath by church picnics, excursions, camp-meetings, etc., run by professed Christians on the Sabbath for pleasure and gain, inviting and telling the people it is right to break God's law and seeking pleasure on his holy day, it means no little sacrifice to close the gates against the pleasure-seeking crowd. Yet no one is to be admitted to these grounds on the Sabbath. The W. C. T. U. have their department, and the temperance question is to be given due consideration.

The manager, Dr. Gillett, does not belong to any secret society. He was once an Odd-fellow, but is not now. The secretary, when asked if I might distribute anti-secrecy literature on the grounds, replied cordially, "Distribute all you wish." I trust the deep spiritual tone with which this assemblage has opened may continue, that in the coming years it may bless the thousands who will drink from its fountains of knowledge.

On Sabbath last I attended and addressed a Covenant meeting. On Monday I was granted a hearing at a ministerial meeting of the colored Baptist pastors of the District. The thirty-five churches of that denomination in the district were well represented. A discussion followed a statement of my work and reasons for the same, which I saw was likely to infringe on the business of this body, if not checked, so I gave the brethren some of our tracts with a request that they make good use of them, and suggested that a thorough discussion of the subject would be agreeable to me at an opportune time.

On Tuesday evening I filled an appointment made for me by Rev. Mr. Thomas, pastor of Enon Baptist church. Four of those present subscribed for the Cynosure.

May the Lord richly bless and prosper the Cynosure under its new management, and that they may stand firmly with those who have so long and effectively stood at the helm is my prayer.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE WORK IN NEW ENGLAND.

BOSTON, Mass.

It seems fairly probable that whoever cares to know the truth concerning the secret orders will have a fair chance to learn it in the midst of the open discussion, now going on all around us. We shall be glad to welcome Christians from the West to our annual convention on Mt. Washington, next month. W. F. D.

REFORM WORK IN THE SOUTH.

NEW ORLEANS, La., June 19, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Thanks be to a kind heavenly Father that we are still spared to cry aloud. On last Friday morning, between three and four o'clock, we were roused from our nightly rest by a loud knocking and the intelligence that our church was burning—St. Matthew's Baptist church, of which I am the pastor. As I stood looking at the church, my eyes full of tears,—the building for which both myself and congregation had labored so hard—many of my poor church sisters were on the ground, crying and sobbing, and my heart could but sympathize with them and plead with our heavenly Father in their behalf. The church has been an object of persecution and slander ever since my pastorate began, but in the midst of all, our heavenly Father has blessed and prospered us.

The burning of our church will give us much of a set-back, but, God be praised! we hope to revive again. We had $650 insurance on the building and furniture, but that will not replace everything. It would require at least $1,000 to rebuild and restore everything in the church as it was before it burned. We cannot expect more, however, for Satan will do all in his power to obliterate everything that contends for God, Christ and right.

You can see and understand the prejudice against me from the following letter to myself, a few weeks ago, from a prominent secretist:

"DEAR SIR:—Yours in behalf of the combination of churches is received and carefully considered. In answer, sir, I cannot allow my name to be used on your program, to speak on the 'Topic —Colored Soldier,' for the following reasons, viz.: (1) You and your church are opposed to secret societies. (2) I am a member of two prominent secret orders, viz.: Freemasons and Odd-fellows. (3) To accept a place on your program would be humiliating, and doing injustice to myself and fraternities."

From this you can see that the old secret lodge serpent has lost none of his poison.

It may be that some one who has some of the Lord's money to spare will read this and remember that "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." (Rev.) FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

A good brother in the country writes: "Most people seem to think that secretism is wrong, but they do not seem to have the faith in God that they should have on that subject." If they had, and properly exercised it, the lodges would be depleted, and the churches filled with those who denounce secrecy in all its forms.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FEMALE MASONS—"SISTERS OF THE EASTERN STAR."

71 SOUTH ROBERT STREET,
ST. PAUL, Minn., June 23, 1891.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Yesterday, through the Augustana Synod, your humble correspondent had an opportunity to pay his respects to the lodge Jezebels—the daughters of her who made the prophet Elijah run away, by giving an analysis of the five-pointed star which these "Sisters" are so fond of exhibiting in our churches for the admiration of that portion of the fair sex whom that Mystagogue of Satan, Weishaupt, knew so well how to manage in the service of the devil to plunge the nations into anarchy and ruin, and that "without initiating them into any of the secrets." See the Abbe Barruel's History of Jacobinism.

Perhaps all of your readers are not familiar with the meaning of the five-pointed star in Masonry, whereby the Masons tickle the vanity of the women by calling the points the "five jewels of the Orient." Jewels, they say, to "shine in all who love virtue (?)" the "Sisters of the Eastern Star," while they scandalize Bible characters and besmurch the Bible with Masonic lying and spiritual impurity.

Primarily, in Masonry, the five points refer to the five points of fellowship symbolized in the resurrection of the stinking dead body of the Masonic Messiah, "Osiris," (the sun-god of Egypt,) alias Hiram, the builder of King Solomon's temple. No man can be a Mason without personating, in his own body and soul, this putrid dead body of the Masonic Messiah, and being raised and brought to life by the Worshipful Master of the lodge, personating King Solomon, on "the five points of fellowship," "foot to foot," "knee to knee," "breast to breast," "hand to back," and "mouth to ear." And the third landmark of Masonry informs us that without this slanderous lie, libeling the character of King Solomon, and the fair character of Hiram, Freemasonry would cease to exist. See "Text-book of Masonic Jurisprudence," p. 19. This wicked lie is absorbed into the soul of the Mason, spiritualized, and made to teach the "new birth," "sanctification," "resurrection" and "salvation," in the Mason's "Grand Lodge above," where all liars go. Jesus Christ said to the Jews: "If ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins." But the Jews in the Masonic lodge can say, Masonically and truly, upon Masonic principles, "We do not want your Christ." Every Mason must of necessity, in his heart, no matter what his lips may utter, say: "Crucify Christ," and rather "release Barrabas," the robber. If truth be an admirable characteristic of womanhood, then the Masons degrade woman and rob her of her womanhood by calling her "Sister of the Eastern Star."

The Augustana Synod of the Swedish Lutheran church is now in session at Chisago Lakes, about 40 miles from St. Paul, on the St. Paul and Duluth railroad. It has been in session for about two weeks, and thousands of people have been in attendance. This religious denomination stands firm in its attitude against the lodge abomination. Its lost star—the Litchfield church—has put away the lodge abomination by excommunicating its members belonging to Baal, and is now received back again to the bosom of the denomination. Praise the Lord! As Jesus said concerning Judas Iscariot: "I kept them in thy name; those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the Scripture might be fulfilled."—John 17: 12.

One pastor of an English Lutheran church which has never, as yet, been received by the Synod, rather gives himself away by saying that he thinks there is already so much indifference manifested towards the church, that they cannot afford to shut out members of secret lodges. But he needs to be reminded that it is written: "Woe to them that go down to Egypt for help," Isaiah 31: 1. The churches that accept the faith of the secret lodge Baal worshipers do thereby expose themselves to the contempt of honest men, and the wrath of the Almighty. See Deuteronomy 27: 15. W. FENTON.

WORK AMONG THE MORMONS.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, June, 1891.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been here, among the Mormons, nearly seven years, endeavoring to lead them out of their terrible delusion, by preaching to them plain Bible truth. But they are a very hard class to reach, on account of their terrible secret, oath-bound creed, which is quite similar to the Masonic obligations, yet, if possible, more terrifying. And the penalty has been more rigidly carried out among the Mormons than among the Masons. The outside world has no idea of the extent of iniquity and evil that has been practiced by the Mormons, and kept covered up under secrecy. I am, after years of close investigation of Mormonism, constrained to say that "the half has not been told," nor will it be made known until the judgment. Such awful crimes could be kept secret only by a secret, oath-bound society, which was instituted by the devil himself. "By their fruits ye shall know them." DR. J. W. BURROUGHS.

LODGERY AND PERSECUTIONS.

FORT SMITH, Ark., June, 1891.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Having taken a clear view of the life and character of Christ and the Apostles, and their relation to the scribes and Pharisees, I was convinced of the fact that the severest trials and the vilest persecutions come from midnight secret meetings. [This is exemplified in the case of Judas Iscariot and the chief priests on the night when Jesus was betrayed, and in the lodge of forty Jews who swore not to eat or sleep until they had killed Paul.—ED.]

REV. J. A. HARRIS.

PITH AND POINT.

ENCOURAGEMENT FROM THE SOUTH.

"Let me assure you that I greatly admire the Cynosure, and am in hearty sympathy with its purpose and with the work in which you are engaged. I do not belong to any secret order, and by the grace of God I will try and battle for the Master and the right; and I sincerely believe that a true minister cannot do otherwise than array himself against all secret societies of every name and kind."—(Rev.) N. KINGSBURY, Athens, Tenn.

FOUR CHRISTIAN DUTIES.

There are four things which I believe every Christian must do: (1.) Stand by "the faith once delivered to the saints;" (2.) Oppose secret societies; (3.) Fight the saloon; (4.) Live above the world, and walk with God.—IBID.

AMEN!

"I think your paper is doing a great deal of good in the midst of our people. May God bless your work."——(Rev.) J. H. FLEMINGS, Algiers, La.

THE MISSION OF OUR PAPER.

"I have read the Christian Cynosure for seven years. It has been the means of plucking me from the clutches of secret organizations. God grant that the Cynosure may live long, spread far and wide, and point many ministers and teachers to the true meaning of God's Word, and through them may the cross-bearer be brought out of darkness into light."—(Rev.) J. A. HARRIS, Fort Smith, Ark.

IT GIVES HIM PLEASURE.

"I have just received a sample copy of your paper, and am highly pleased with the truths it contains. My sincere desire is that God will bless you in the great work in which you are engaged."—DR. J. W. BURROUGHS, Salt Lake City, Utah.

SHEDDING LIGHT IN ARKANSAS.

"I take your paper, and cannot do without it. That paper and the Bible are my first reading in the morning. I read your paper to my church and Sunday-school, sometimes; so you may know how much I think of its value to us as a people. I have 75 members in my church, and not one belongs to any secret society. We think the church of God is enough for us as Christians, and we are hopeful of helping sinners by our work."—(Rev.) C. H. CAREY, (col'd,) Prescott, Ark.

POINTED ARROWS.

"The Cynosure is getting better every year. It would be out of the question to run our house without it. It is a quiver full of pointed arrows every week—a great and indispensible help in all our moral and religious work. We use the Cynosure without stint, among friends and foes, to resist wrong and build up right. May the Lord bless you largely."—J. F. HANSON, Mt. Vernon, S. Dakota.

ALL BAD ENOUGH.

"Some secret societies are worse than others—viz., Masons; but all are harmful in proportion as they are secret and foster class egotism vs. humanity and Christianity."—(Rev.) M. K. PASCO, Bellevue, Ohio.

HIGH TIME FOR A CLEAN SWEEP.

"If only one-half of what is publicly said of them—particularly of the Freemasons—is true, it is high time that a clean sweep be made of the lot."—(Rev.) SAM'L W. JOHNSON, Richmond, Nebraska.

LODGERY THE ENEMY OF THE CHURCH.

"They all profess to have some good benevolent object in view, but they are expensive and their meetings so frequent, they have withdrawn multitudes from the sanctury; their association, or club, becomes all the church they care to support."—(Rev.) DANIEL WIGHT, Natick, Mass.

MISNOMERS IN THE LODGE.

"A Baptist brother who had renounced Freemasonry, about the time of the Morgan murder, in a lecture, said that the Masonic ladder had three rounds, which were called Faith, Hope and Charity. For these he claimed there should be the substitution of Infidelity, Profanity and Barbarism. All candid hearers, I am sure, were satisfied with the proof."—(Rev.) W. H. BEAMAN, Amherst, Mass.

THE CHURCHES STRANGLED.

"Secret societies are strangling some of our churches in this State."—(Rev.) J. E. STORM, Clarks, Neb.

ALL OF THEM HARMFUL.

"I am opposed to all the family of secrecy, from Masonry all the way down to the Good Templars. I have found all of them harmful to the church, students and home."—(Rev.) JULIUS MARKS, Kellogg, Iowa.

THE CYNOSURE AS A MISSIONARY.

I shall be glad to have the paper (Cynosure) spread through the State, as the secret orders have caused some of our pastors and members to leave Christ's work to attend to the work of hell. I have a young man in my church who had joined a secret society. I gave him the paper to read, which caused him to come out of it."—(Rev.) MCM. WILLIAMS, Alexandria, La.

OBITUARY.

JOSEPH FRAZIER.

Died, at his home, near Dresden, Kan., May 23, 1891, from the effects of la grippe, Joseph Frazier, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. He had ever been a friend and patron of the Cynosure, it having been a regular visitor at his home from its earliest publication; and what a great source of comfort it was to him, especially during the last few years of his life! How eagerly his trembling hands would open its pages! He was a fearless, and consequently outspoken opponent of all secret, oath-bound societies—ever ready, with voice and money, to disseminate the truth in regard to this great evil, as also its twin sister-evil, intemperance.

The colored people found in him a warm friend. He was a conductor on the "underground railroad" in southeastern Iowa, then his home, risking life and property for them in their time of greatest need.

He and his faithful wife, who now survives him, worked shoulder to shoulder, in their quiet but effective way, in all the great reforms of our day; during the days of slavery refusing to use, often at great inconvenience, any article of food or clothing produced by slave labor.

He was a member of the Friends' church, and died, as he had lived, trusting in Jesus. T.

LITERATURE.

ALDEN'S CYCLOPEDIA OF UNIVERSAL LITERATURE; presenting Biographical and Critical Notices, and Specimens from the Writings of Eminent Authors of All Ages and All Nations. Vol. XVII. New York: John B. Alden, Publisher; Chicago: 242 Wabash avenue.

Beginning with Racine, the famous French dramatist, from whose plays liberal extracts are given, to Caroline Maria Sedgwick, for whose works and memory New England people of the old stock have great veneration, this Cyclopedia presents brief biographies of 105 noted home and foreign persons of high literary reputation. Hardly a writer of celebrity, whose name is familiar to the general public, seems to have been omitted from this collection. The biographical sketches, as well as the excerpts from their various pens, are each brief, but convey sufficient information relating to all to interest even the most casual of readers, and to aid the students of books and men in forming proper estimates of modern and ancient literature. Its satisfactory make-up and low price, besides its contents, sufficiently commend it to public favor.

CHICAGO'S DARK PLACES: Investigations by a Corps of Specially Appointed Commissioners; Edited and Arranged by the Chief Commissioner. Chicago: The Craig Press, 77, 79 Jackson street.

Whether this book originated in an adaptation of Booth's "Darkest England," or not, matters little. Its contents reveal a mass of sin and corruption common to all great cities, the social and criminal plague-spots that contaminate Chicago as well as London, and call for active and energetic work to redeem their victims from their wickedness and danger. It is not a book for the young and innocent to peruse, but the philanthropists and the law-makers will find in it food for thought and an opportunity to exercise their functions with energy and authority. It deals with poverty and the poor; saloons and their habitues; theaters, concert halls and museums; immoral dives; obscene pictures, books and advertisements; the social evil; massage parlors; procuresses, abductors, etc.; the making of criminals; the agencies of reform; and appeals to professing Christians to assist in staying this flood of evil, while it offers suggestive remedies to cure the plague-spots which it has so deftly uncovered. The book is said to have been "issued at the request of many Christian meu and women," with the purpose "to awaken and enlighten all the people of Chicago," especially those who have not yet fully realized the social evils that exist all around them. The publishers established the investigation of which this volume relates the terrible results, and are entitled to commendation for their part in calling the subject to public attention for the purpose of aiding in this much-needed reformation. Every reformer must feel the force of the object-lessons thus brought before him.

MANY VOICES; or, Carmina Sanctorum, Evangelistic Edi tion, with Tunes. Prepared by T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co.

This new musical compilation, edited by New York's most industrious and popular clergyman, has been issued to meet the demand of many churches for words and music of a character suitable alike for evening services and for social and evangelistic meetings. Among the one hundred hymns selected by Dr. Talmage, the Christian singer will discover numerous prime favorites whose melodies are never forgotten, and whose sentiments have for many years been instrumental in gathering the careless and indifferent to hear the words of life in the Gospel. Besides these 100, about 450 hymns and tunes from the Carmina Sanctorum have been incorporated in this handsome volume, so that the whole collection will very acceptably serve for congregations that want but one hymn book for their regular Lord's day services and their minor religious meetings. The entire work, words and music, in quarto form, and neatly bound in cloth, is sold for $1; words only, for 50 cents.

"Left with a Trust" is a story of domestic life of much interest—the struggles of a family to help "mother" and each other during the father's absence, and pleasantly reveals the brighter side of youth where there is a worthy purpose and a will to be kind and affectionate—"working by love," as the apostle denominates it. The influence of the story upon a family of growing boys and girls cannot be otherwise than salutary. The second part, the "Cousins," is a story for boys and girls, also, and teaches, in an interesting manner, the benefits of right living and right doing, with the rewards that must surely follow goodness and truth. To the home or the Sabbath-school library it should be a welcome addition. Its price is 60 cents.

Our Day for June presents a tempting list of contents: Joseph Cook writes of "Fruitful Faith, as Held by our Lord and Saviour;" President Calvin E. Amaron, President of the French Protestant College, at Springfield, Mass., of "Anti-American Canadian Catholic Conventions;" President Chas. C. Bonney (Chicago) of the International Law and Order League, of "American Municipal Reform;" Senator Fassett, of "Unmixed Self-Rule for Cities;" "Are Americans Becoming Ambitious?" from the London Spectator; with opinions by President Harrison on Reciprocity of Trade with South America, Commercial Prospects of the Pacific Coast, and the Results of Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation. The book reviews embrace Wright's Life of Chas. G. Finney and Zabriskie's Life of Greeley. The "Questions for Specialists" gives President Magoun's Views of Professor Harper's Plan for the New Chicago University, and the general editorial notes cover a variety of current topics of social and religious importance. Published at 28 Beacon street, Boston.

The Pulpit for June contains sermons on "The Virgin Mary," by Rev. J. E. Lanceley; "The True Mission of the Church," by Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr.; "The Trial of Fire," by Rev. J. T. Murray, D. D.; "Systematic Beneficence," by Chas. S. Robinson, D. D.; "Hindrances Removed," by Rev. Joseph Parker, D. D.; "The Mysteries of the Kingdom," by Rev. Canon Duckworth; "Kindness to the Poor," by the late Rev. Wm. Morley Punshon; "The Lamb Slain," by Rev. D. John Hall; "Dispensation of the Spirit," by Rev. A. P. Farringdon; "Salvation by Faith Alone," by Rev. Archibald G. Brown. Two dollars a year; 20 cents a copy. Edwin Rose, Publisher, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Arena for July gives room to the following gladiators and free lances: Geo. Stewart, D. C. L., LL. D., contributes a sketch of Oliver Wendell Holmes, a fine portrait of whom forms the frontispiece; Edgar Fawcett, "Plutocracy and Snobbery in New York;" C. Wood Davis, "Should the Government Control the Railways?" Camille Flammarion, No. 2 of the "Unknown;" W. D. McCracken "The Swiss and American Constitutions;" Rev. Francis Bellamy, "The Tyranny of all the People;" Prof. Jos. R. Buchanan, No. 2 of "Revolutionary Measures and Neglected Crimes;" Rev. W. E. Manley, D.D., "Æonian Punishment;" Prof. W. S. Scarborough, "The Negro Question," and Hamlin Garland, "A Prairie Heroine; "with editorials on "The Present Revolution in Theological Thought," and "The Conflict between Ancient and Modern Thought in the Presbyter an Church." Published at Boston.

Scribner's Magazine for July has for its frontispiece a full-page illustration of Horace's 18th ode—"To Faunus," translated by Henry Herbert. A. E. Seaton's fourth illustrated paper on Ocean Steamships relates to the speed of modern vessels. Other illustrated articles are: "Starting a Parliament in Japan," by Jno H. Wigmore; "Izard Hunting in the Pyrenees," by Paul Van Dyke; "An Old Danish Town," by Jacob A. Riis; "The Haunts of the Black Sea Bass," by Chas. F. Holder. Geo. A. Hibbard contributes "A Matter of Fact;" Geo. L. Catlin, "The Chimes of Walletikor," a Swiss story; James E. Pilcher, "Outlawry on the Mexican Border;" Jno. Elliott Curran, "My Uncle Dick;" Foster Crowell, "Training a Tropic Torrent in Hayti;" Edith Wharton, "Mrs. Manstey's View," and W. B. S. Clymer, "Landor Once More." Poems are also printed, by John Hay, and Mrs. Jas. T. Fields; and three editorials on current topics, with the foregoing papers, make up quite an attractive number of this excellent magazine. New York: Chas. Scribner's Sons.

"Excuse me, George, but when I saw you a year ago, your face was covered with pimples; it seems to be all right now." "Yes, sir; that's because I stuck to Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the greatest blood medicine in the world. I was never so well in my life as I am now."

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

Pastor Fisch, of Paris, 1873:—The church in America must stand as one man against Masonry or be destroyed.

Rev. Jcel Swartz, D. D, a renouncing Mason:—Its (Freemasonry's) religion is anti-Christian ... Its prayers are blasphemous. ... Its use of the Bible is sacrilegious. ... The whole is a compound of Judaism and paganism.

Moses Stuart, Professor in Andover Theological Seminary, Mass, 1834:—For a long time I neither knew nor cared about the subject; but recent attention to it has filled me with astonishment; and as to somethings contained in it, with horror. The trifling with oaths and with the awful name of the ever blessed God, is a feature which I cannot contemplate but with the deepest distress.

John Wesley, June, 1773:—I went to Ballymena and read a strange tract that professes to discover "the inmost recesses of Freemasonry," said to be "translated from the French original lately published at Berlin." I incline to think it is a genuine account. Only if it be, I wonder the author is suffered to live. If it be, what an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry.—N. Y. Christian Advocate, February, 1884.

Alexander Campbell:—I know no Temperance, Odd-fellow or Freemason fraternity that does not recognize a brotherhood with the world. "They are of the world, they speak of the world and the world heareth them." Christians, though in the world, are not of it. Any union, then, for moral purposes with the world that brings us to commune religiously with it, by the laws and usages of the institution itself, is opposed to the law and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

Charles G. Finney.—God demands and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and shoud take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion.

Nathaniel Colver, former pastor Tremont Temple, Boston:—I am free to say that it is my deliberate opinion that the vicious character of Masonry and its guilt-concealing and barbarous oaths are such, as not only to release all from their bonds, but also to lay upon them the solemn obligation to tear off its covering and expose its enormity. I regard it as Satan's masterpiece, a terrible snare to men. It sits at this moment as a nightmare on all the moral energies of our government, and utterly paralyzes the arm of justice.

Dwight L. Moody:—Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up.

Henry Tatem, an eminent Baptist pastor, Providence, R. I., 1832:—It was about fourteen years ago that I was first initiated into the lodge. Within a few months after, I advanced to the Royal Arch degree, and sometime after I took the degrees of Knighthood, as they are called. I well remember the horror of my feelings when the bandage was taken from my eyes and I found myself partly naked, with men standing around me pointing at me the implements of death, and a human skull was handed me to drink from, and I was required to repeat words, awful in themselves, and which I cannot distinctly recollect, but which I believe to have been the same I find given in the explanation of that ceremony in Bernard's Light on Masonry. From that time I absented myself from the lodge and chapter. My mind was afterwards led by degrees to an examination into Masonry, which I am now satisfied is repugnant to the spirit of the religion of Christ.

"OUTLAWRY ON AMERICAN SOIL."

There is no longer any doubt that the Italian murder society, the Mafia, exists on American soil in a modified form. The trial now in progress at New Orleans, where a band of Italians are charged with killing the chief of police, is expected to reveal something of the inner workings of an un-American and uncivilized band of outlaws.

Hideous as is the nature of this organized murder society, which is transplanted from the scum of Italian cities, it differs in degree only from other secret, self-constituted tribunals of alleged justice which have sprung up in different American States under a variety of names. The old "vigilance committee of the West" has been superseded in turn by the Klu-Klux, the Molly Maguires and latterly by the White-Caps. If these so called "regulators" have stopped short of murder in many of their outrages it is because there has still been a remnant of fear of the law of the land. The outrages upon person and property which such outlaws have perpetrated during the last quarter of a century form one of the greatest blots upon American civilization.

There is no room upon American soil for any other form of "regulators" than the tribunals of justice sanctioned by the law. All other societies, "committees," etc., are un-American and should be stamped out without mercy. The state or municipality that allows such organizations of outlawry to flourish, does not truly represent American institutions and should mend its ways without delay.

This article we clip from the editorial columns of one of our Chicago papers—we believe, the Daily News. It is a fair specimen of a large number of articles in the secular and religious press on one class of secret societies. The occasion of these articles was the murder of Dr. Cronin by the Clan-na-Gael, and the assassination of Chief Hennessey by the Mafia of New Orleans. There is no objection to what is said, but such writing does not reach the real heart of the case. Murder societies are dangerous, because they are secret, and secret societies are liable at any time to become murder societies.

Honest citizens, in a time of peace, and in a free country, have no need of secret combinations. No sane man expects war to be waged without a secret service. Crime is not hunted down without some concealments. Every lover of liberty must sympathize with those patriots who have taken property, reputation and life in hand in conspiracies for the overthrow of despotisms. But in years like these, when every praiseworthy deed is applauded, the very fact that men band themselves together by secret oaths is reason to suppose that their real purposes are not laudable.

Brotherly kindness, care for the widow and orphan, the virtues of temperance and patriotism, these and their kindred do not require secret halls, passwords, grips, signs and tokens in order to their production or maintenance. They result from honest industry, the prevalence of the Christian faith and a normal development of society. In 1861, when war-drums were rolling through all our cities and towns, no secret lodges existed to teach young men patriotism, yet by hundreds of thousands they sprang to arms and on hundreds of hard-fought fields they poured out the last full measure of devotion to fatherland. Lodges may teach wire-pulling, but they cannot teach benevolence in this or any other line.

How then shall we rid ourselves of secret murder societies? Simply by ridding ourselves of secret societies. All meetings of citizens should be open to the inspection of the authorities, and, at the call of any honest citizen, should be inspected. The convent of the buried alive is now not tolerated even in Naples; yet every secret order may become such a charnel-house whenever the persons who conduct it so desire. Honest, open, fair dealing is required in order to the peace and well-being of society. Secret orders are inconsistent with these primal requisites of civilized society. So long as they are permitted some of them will be murder societies; all of them may be.

THE SABBATH REST—AN APPEAL.

It is true that "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath;" but it is equally true that the Lord of the Sabbath, who gave utterance to this sentence, also said: "Remember the Sabbath" (or one day in seven) "to keep it holy." There is no clashing of the two expressions. The law setting apart one day in seven for rest has never been repealed; neither has the law to keep it holy. Rest and worship are thus enjoined with equal force; and to those whose hearts are right with God, worship is indeed rest. There is no authority for giving up the rest and worship day to "chambering and wantonness," or "rioting and drunkenness" (Romans 13: 13), or to physical or secular mental labor.

While we are upon this subject, we would state that the American Sabbath Union, organized in 1888, is rapidly extending its auxiliary organizations into every State and Territory. In many of the States the work of forming County Societies and Municipal Leagues is going rapidly forward.

We are in receipt of pamphlets sent us by District Secretary James P. Mills, of this Sabbath Union, giving a brief account of its rise, and especially setting forth the progress of the work under his supervision, first in Ohio, where he was the State secretary, afterwards in the sixth district, to which he was appointed, and calling attention to the enlargement of his field to embrace eighteen of the States located in the Mississippi valley. He desires to secure active men as field secretaries in his territory, to act as agitators, solicitors and organizers in Arkansas, Dakota (North and South), Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, Tennessee, Texas and Wisconsin. Persons desirous of engaging or able to recommend a suitable person to act as one, should address the secretary at 185 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Every Christian, every professing Christian, every church-member, and every pew-holder in every church in the United States, is, in the light of the Gospel, and in the cause of humanity, under obligation to demand that the Columbian Fair of 1892–'93 shall be closed on every Sunday during its continuance. The honor of God, the honor of the orthodox churches, and the honor of the United States as a Christian nation, is involved in this question. Not only is this demand in accordance with the will and law of God, but in harmony with the necessity of nature, that a physical and mental rest of one day in seven shall be established. Every churchman and every good citizen ought to speak out candidly and fearlessly upon this subject. There should be no temporizing or truckling with the world, the flesh or the devil. There should be but one opinion about it in churches of all denominations, and that opinion should be strong enough to crush out every institution, organization or individual that opposes it. God, the Bible and thousands of hard-working men and women demand a hearing on this question, even if the days of physical labor have to be reduced to five a week during the continuance of the Fair. Then one day can be given to the Fair, and the other to the Lord of the Sabbath. There should be no other compromise. The issue is too momentous.

THE KNIGHTS OF RECIPROCITY.

This new secret organization had its origin in the desire of the Republican politicians to check the inroads made in their party by the Farmers' Alliance, although it is stated that its founder had commenced work upon its principles long before. The membership has been rapidly increasing in Kansas and other States, until now there are seven Grand Lodges. In Kansas there are sixty lodges, with a membership of about 10,000. Missouri has thirty lodges, and Nebraska, where the Alliance is strong, has nearly forty lodges.

The Knights of Reciprocity form a secret political organization opposed to a third party of any kind. It is Republican throughout, and, while not pretending to direct the party at present, it expects soon to have strength enough to control it, as the party workers are rapidly entering it.

The Grand Lodge of the new order met at Topeka, Kansas, about two weeks ago. The Grand Judge, in his annual address, declared that the objects of the order were to bring about changes in the administration of the Government through the Republican party. He declared that reciprocity was not free trade, and warned the order against all class legislation such as declared for by the Alliance.

If the defence and perpetuation of the Republican party is desired, why should it stoop to the secret folly and trickery of a rival to secure success? It has a glorious record in the past as the agent of Providence in the abolition of slavery. Now, instead of aping its opponents, let it exhibit a like and worthy energy in driving out the saloon and the secret conclaves that threaten destruction to our republican freedom of thought and progress. Then will gather about its standard a host of true reformers—men and women who only need such encouragement to overcome these social evils as they overcame Negro slavery; and the party will then really, and not till then, stand forth as the "grand old party" which it now claims to be. Surely the party can be no greater than President Grant, whom it honored so highly and so long, and who in his latest hours said with characteristic manliness: "All secret, oath-bound political parties are dangerous to any nation, no matter how pure or how patriotic the motives and principles which first bring them together." "Forget it not!—forget it not!"

ANCIENT ORDER OF UNITED WORKMEN.

In reply to inquiries as to this order, its objects and plans for work, we have gathered the following essential facts from authoritative sources:

The A. O. U. W. claims to be "the oldest, strongest and best fraternal beneficiary association in America." In 1890 it had an alleged membership of over 245,000 in the United States and Canada, and of 21,000 in the State of Illinois.

The mission and purposes (as made public) of the order are thus stated:

It is a fraternal, benevolent society, whose mission is to relieve the suffering, administer to the sick, bury the dead, and to care for the widows and orphans of its members.

"The order was organized at Meadville, Pa., on the 27th day of October, 1868, and at the present time is distributing over four million dollars per annum to the widows and orphans of its deceased members, in addition to large amounts expended for other benevolent purposes.

"The objects and aims of the order may be briefly stated as follows:

"1. To unite white male persons over twenty-one and under fifty years of age, regardless of nationality, political preferences, denominational distinctions, into a fraternal brotherhood, the members of which recognize and believe in the existence of a Supreme Being, the Creator and Preserver of the universe.

"2. The adoption of such secret work and means of recognitions as will enable the members to make themselves known to each other wherever the order may exist.

"3. To embrace and give equal consideration to all classes and kinds of labor, mental and physical; to endeavor to improve the moral, intellectual and social condition of its members, and by wholesome precepts and fraternal admonitions to inspire a due appreciation of the realities and responsibilities of life.

"4. To hold lectures, read essays, discuss new inventions and improvements, encourage research in art, science and literature, and, when practicable, to establish and maintain libraries for the improvement of the members.

"5. To create funds in aid of the members during sickness or other disability, and generally to care for the living and bury the dead.

"6. To pledge the members to the payment of a stipulated sum to such beneficiary as a deceased member may have designated while living, under such restrictions and upon such conditions as the laws of the order may prescribe.

"The Subordinate Lodge is composed of the members of the order, is the sole channel of admission, and is the medium through which the various funds are collected and disbursed, and the detail work of the order performed.

"The Grand Lodge is composed of representatives from the Subordinate Lodges, meets annually, and is the legislative body for the territory over which its jurisdiction extends.

"The Supreme Lodge is composed of representatives from the Grand Lodges, has legislative jurisdiction over the entire order, and is the court of last resort in the order."

Separate jurisdictions usually comprise one State where the lodge has 3,000 members, who are only responsible for the death losses occurring within its limits. Each jurisdiction is given a maximum assessment rate, and in case of any excessive mortality within it, where this maximum assessment does not meet the losses, a pro rata assessment is made on the entire membership of the order to pay the deficit.

Respecting the fraternal relationship, "the highest aim of human society must ever be the attainment of peace, harmony and good will between man and man. The order realizes that the basis of all fraternal fellowship must be the law of Love. 'Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do you even so to them.' With the Golden Rule as the basis of all its law, it teaches the divine doctrine of the brotherhood of man. It realizes that strength, solidity and success can only be the result of united brotherhood. To this factor it looks for success in the future as in the past."

"The amount paid to the beneficiaries at the death of a member is in each case $2,000. The assessments are uniform in amount, being $1.00 each. Assessments are levied on the 1st day of the month, when necessary, and must be paid on or before the 28th day of the month." In addition, there are lodge dues, usually amounting, per head, to $3 or $4 per annum.

From members ranging in age from 36 to 50 years, assessments are required of from $3.50 to $41; under 36 years, not less than $3.00. These amounts includes every item of expense for the year.

Like every other secret order, it bows to the lodge system. What its extrajudicial obligations require from its member, is not made public; but the hand of Masonry and Odd-fellowship is probably to be found doing the "fine work" in the cloisters of the order.

—A note from ex-President John G. Fee, at Berea College in Kentucky, on the 25th of June, says: "A great day yesterday, here—Commencement. Not less than 3,000 people present. Very orderly; not a drunken man seen by me, at least, nor an oath heard." It must have seemed like an advance "slice of the millennium."

—We are in receipt of an appeal for funds from "The Working Woman's Home Association," now at 21 South Peoria street, in this city. The association is engaged in a worthy charity, the relief of the girls employed in stores, offices and factories on slender wages and deprived of the comforts of home. For these it is proposed to erect a suitable building as soon as $30,000 has been subscribed for this purpose. We have many men of wealth to whom it should be a pleasure to assist in this useful work and to bestow upon it a liberal and perpetual endowment. It pains us, however, to see that the association has designated a Sunday newspaper as its organ for reporting names and contributions received. Somehow it does not strike us as a good beginning, to encourage the circulation of a Sabbath-breaking sheet.

—The noon prayer-meeting recently established in the office of the Christian Cynosure should not be forgotten by the friends of the Reform cause and the paper. Steps are being taken to place it upon a firm basis and secure its continuance daily. Quite recently it received new vigor from the attendance of Rev. J. W. Kilbourn, of Ohio, now attending Moody's Bible Institute in this city, and Mr. P. M. German, also of the Institute, who have taken an interest in the welfare of the meeting, and will devote themselves to the work of enlarging its sphere of usefulness. By this means it is proposed to not only make it a work of grace for all the attaches of the paper, but to extend its benefits to residents and sojourners in the vicinity of the office of the N. C. A. It is probable that under these auspices additional Gospel meetings will be held in the same place at other appropriate times. Due notices will appear in these columns relating to these meetings.

—Some one has sent us the printed program of a "memorial service" held by Eastern Star Lodge, No. 143, I. O. O. F., in the Saratoga Street M. E. church, East Boston, Sunday, June 14, 1891, in memory of two dead P. Gs. and ten other deceased members. There were quartette singing, reading of the Grand Sire's Proclamation, a solo, a prayer, responsive readings of heterogeneous selections of Scripture from both the Old and New Testaments, and an address by Rev. J. W. Hamilton, D.D., who took for his text James 2: 14–18. This was an open meeting, and possibly as satisfactory to the lodge as it could be made. But that all these beautiful things should be said and sung and applied to a dozen men who had paid their moneys into the lodge for lodge purposes, under a lodge obligation to pay up or get out, rather perverts the Christian idea of Gospel benevolence—give, not expecting to receive again. Every religious demonstration of a secret order seems to be a wretched imitation of true worship, when taken in connection with its lodge performances and the motley characters of which it is composed.

—The fact that the last Congress appropriated a large sum of money for the pursuit of experiments in producing artificial rain, and that a professor of æronautic science is engaged, in the State of New York, in making these experiments, has given an impetus to the progress of invention in this direction that is likely soon to develop into eminent success, or to prove the inefficiency of man to control the elements. As stated last week, an Australian claims to have made a machine that will cause rain to fall within an area of 250 miles. It sounds like an exaggeration. But now comes Dr. Dyrenforth, a gentleman formerly well-known in Chicago, who claims that by the explosion of a combination of oxygen and hydrogen in the upper atmosphere, he can also produce fertilizing showers at will. At the government station Professor Myer is working on a similar idea. Noise seems to be a necessary concomitant in producing the desired rainfall. The public interest in the result of this investigation is naturally excited.

A REFORM VICTORY IN BOSTON.

The Boston papers, and the agents of the press in Chicago and elsewhere, have given various accounts of the signal victory over Masonic arrogance achieved by Rev. J. P. Stoddard at the Baptist Ministers' meeting at Boston, on Monday of last week. That it was a victory, and a great one, all must agree. We avail ourselves of the Inter-Ocean's special telegram on the subject, from Boston, June 22:

The meeting of the Baptist ministers this morning was presided over by the Rev. Phillip S. Moxon, and was addressed by the Rev. J. P. Stoddard, on "The Influences of Secret Societies on Churches, as Derived from the Landmarks of Masonry."

Mr. Stoddard charged that allegiance to Masonry and to God are incompatible, because the Masonic ritual leaves out the name of Christ, and because members are obliged to admit only belief in the existence of God and not in God himself. He commented adversely upon ministers who join secret societies, and was suddenly interrupted by the Rev. Mr. Cleaveland, of Melrose, who announced that he rose to a point of order. He stated that he was a Mason, and could not listen to what he characterized as uncalled-for abuse. Mr. Moxon put the motion on sustaining the point of order to the meeting, and it had only a few votes in its favor.

Upon demand of Mr. Cleaveland a rising vote was taken, which was against him 7 to 50. Mr. Cleaveland thereupon requested that his name be dropped from the roll of membership, and left the meeting. Mr. Stoddard began to apologize, but was interrupted with cries that no apology was needed. He then finished his address in the line in which he had begun it, closing with an explanation of the ritual of the thirty-third degree.

The Rev. Mr. Cleaveland's protest on making his point of order was as follows:

"I am a Mason, and have listened to this scathing stigmatism of the order in patience, but I cannot listen to this unjust and uncalled-for abuse."

Upon the defeat of Mr. Cleaveland, 50 to 7, he instantly rose, and addressing the Secretary, said: "I request that you drop my name from the roll of membership of this conference. I do not care to be a member of any body that refuses to sustain any decent point of order." Then taking his hat he left the hall.

The Boston Traveller's report of Mr. Stoddard's lecture on this occasion is as follows:

The address of the morning was given by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, on "The Influence of Secret Societies on our Churches." He gave a brief outline of the history of Freemasonry, claiming the establishment of this organization in London to be dated the 17th of June, 1717.

Three operative lodges met at Apple Tree Tavern and organized the first grand lodge, of which Anthony Thayer was elected the first grand master.

The first lodge in America was the St. John Lodge of Boston, which was organized in 1733.

The great danger of Freemasonry was said to lie in its religious aspects and character, and in view to a consideration of these points, the "Landmarks of Masonry" was the especial theme discussed.

The word "landmarks" was said to be not a purely Masonic term, but when used by Masonic authors, has special reference to the fundamental tenets of the order.

The landmarks are to Freemasonry what the Ten Commandments were to the Jewish system—an epitome of doctrine of faith and works. They constitute a standard by which to try all mooted questions in legislation, administration and religion.

In every controversy an appeal to the landmarks is final, and when they speak strife among the mystic brethren must cease.

Practically they are the Bible of the craft, giving oracular utterance of the Masonic god.

When a question arises among Christians, an appeal is taken from church creeds and courts to the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, because this is the Christian Bible. Under similar circumstances the Mohammedan has recourse to the Koran, because his Bible, but the Mason appeals to neither the Christian nor the Mohammedan standard, but to his own Bible, the "Landmarks" of his order.

In consequence of the supremacy of this code the result to individuals was said to be a practical rejection of all others.

Although Masonry exacts a belief from its followers in God, it is only in a god. Whatever a man may believe he must profess a belief in God as the Grand Architect of the Universe. He is not invested with a single immortal attribute, but is simply a mechanical being. In perfect accord with this sentiment, Masonry mutilates the Scriptures used at its initiatory ceremonies by omitting Christ's name. Everything must be eliminated that is not in accord with Masonry.

Romanism claims no more for its papacy than Masonry does for its land marks.

In short, Freemasonry was said to be practically atheism, as it denies Christ and is a Satanic device to propagate evil.

"It is in this atheistic creed, and all that surrounds it," said the speaker, "that lies the danger. It is this power that robs the prayer-meeting of young men. They say Masons pray; so did Dives, but did not avail; the prayer from which the name of Christ is excluded cannot be acceptable unto God."

In conclusion, Mr. Stoddard said that, if he had said anything that offended any brother, he had done so from a Christian duty.

An exposition from a chart illustrated the degrees of Masonry from the first step onward to the highest. The meeting closed with prayer from Rev. Dr. Johnson.

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard had an appointment to preach last Sunday in the Berkeley street (Boston) headquarters of the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union; on the Fourth, on Boston Common, he is to speak on Temperance, by invitation of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. He is, also, to deliver an address on secret societies at the Annual Christian Conference, on the top of Mt. Washington, which will begin July 7, and another, on the day set apart for the same subject, at the Camp Convention of the Christian Workers at Camp Hebron, Hebronville, Mass. The convention will open August 22d and continue for ten days. Efficient preachers from all parts of New England will be present, and will have a fine opportunity for hearing the truth about the lodges.

—Rev. W. F. Crafts reports having delivered seventy-one addresses for the Sunday Union in the first sixty days of his tenth Sabbath-reform tour, and in the first part of July is to deliver addresses at Winnipeg and Fargo, and the week following in southern Illinois; at the two Chautauquas at Lakeside, Ohio, and Clarion, Penn., the first week in August; at Mansfield, Ohio, August 9; Kansas City, Mo., September 13–16; Oberlin, Ohio, October 16; Canajoharie, N. Y., October 20.

—Rev. A. F. Dempsey, pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist church at Westville, Mich., was in the city on Thursday last, on his way to Kansas to attend to some private business affairs, and favored us with a pleasant call.

THE HOME.

THE SOWING TIME.

"The Field is the World."
"Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters."

I seek not the harvest here,
For the seeds of truth I sow;
I willingly wait to bind the sheaves
In the world to which I go.

Too busy I am in the field
To track them as they fly;
But I know there's a germ of life in each,
And they cannot, cannot die.

The breath of the Lord will waft
Each one wherever he will;
And there it will spring and bear its fruit,
His purpose to fulfill.

'Tis a joy to bear the seed,
To go with the store of grain,
To scatter it here and scatter it there,
And sow and sow again.

In the morning's dewy hour,
'Mid noontide's sultry heat,
At evening when the shadows fall,
To drop the Gospel wheat.

I know not which shall thrive,
But the promise of God I take;
His eyes shall follow the smallest grain
I sow for his dear sake.

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

III.

During the next two weeks neither Grace nor I saw anything of the Clarkes. Grace was too ill to leave the house for nearly a week, and just at that time, when I most wanted to be with her, I was laid up with a cold and fever myself. I recovered before she did, and my first walk was to her home. I found her looking very thin, but almost as cheerful as usual. She said she would be back at school in a few days, and asked me when I had been to the Clarkes'.

"Not since our last unhappy visit there together," I told her. She made me promise to go again soon, not waiting for her; so I went the next afternoon. I found everything much as it had always been, the children nearly pulling me to pieces in their delight at seeing me.

"Where have you kept yourself all this time?" asked Mrs. Clarke, "neither you nor Grace has been here for ever so long."

I did not remind her that had she acted naturally and without restraint, she would probably have taken pains to find out from mother why I had not been there. Sophia made answer for me.

"They did tum once, mamma, a long time ado, but you was 'sleep in the titchen, and they went away again."

My confusion at this remark quickly turned to indignation as the mother answered, blandly, "Were you in that day? I was so tired and felt so sick, that when I sat down on the floor to play with the children I fell asleep for a few minutes. Why didn't you waken me?"

"But you didn't play wif us, mamma," said the bright-eyed child, seriously. "You never played all day; you hit me and you sleeped a long, long time. S'fia dot hungry."

How I wished I was well out of it! But Mrs. Clarke seemed equal to the emergency.

"How the child talks! Get your new dollie, dear, and show it to Miss Fanny. It is one papa brought her the other day."

I was glad to rush into extravagant praise of the new doll; then I had a romp with Delia, and went away with a feeling of relief.

I tried to draw mother out about the change that had come over our neighbors, but, as before, she was very reticent. As for what Grace and I had seen that afternoon, she said it might be that the woman was feeling ill, as she had said,—people often did fall into long, heavy sleeps when the days were warm. But though we wished we might, neither Grace nor I could change our opinion on the subject, and Mrs. Clarke's manner, together with Sophia's artless words, confirmed our views.

All this time, work at school was growing more exciting and absorbing. Grace was in her usual place, but her white face frightened me. She seemed lamer than usual, too, but that might have been fancy. I was glad the examinations would soon be over and vacation at hand, that she might take the much-needed rest. But about three weeks before tests began, an announcement was made by the Board of Education that set all the ambitious ones in a flutter. Every summer there were examinations held at the University, which hitherto had been open only to those intending to become University students. But this year, all those completing the work of the higher classes in the public schools might take the examinations. Those attaining a certain standard would be awarded a bronze medal. It was simply an honorary affair, but our teachers were anxious to have a good many of us try. Of course they would like to have it seen that the pupils of the common schools could compete favorably with others who were supposed to have superior tuition. The afternoon the announcement was made, we of the "upper ten" held a grand rally in the play-room, to find out who would and who would not try.

"Grace Darling, you'll try!" two or three cried in chorus, as she joined us.

"Maybe. Will you?" addressing Gussie Mills, whom we called "Our Lady Crazy Pate," on account of her wild spirits and the scrapes into which they were forever plunging her.

"Yes, of course! It will be such fun to get inside those grim halls of science. Won't we make the corridors ring, though? They won't know themselves. Oh, yes! I'll go, but I resign all my chances to you beforehand, Grace."

"You'd better," chimed in another voice; "it's a most graceful way of acknowledging a necessity. The whole thing is a ridiculous form, anyhow, and the surest way to get through is to study up the three easiest points that you can find on each subject, and the three toughest. They limit themselves to five questions per topic, so you've one to spare. My brother has been through the mill, and he knows."

After a good deal more of merry talk, a hopeless mixture of sense and nonsense, we found we should have seven representatives at the University, Grace and I being among the number.

As we walked home that night, her arm leaning heavily on mine, her steps slower than usual, I wished to myself she had not made up her mind to do the extra work. Noticing a sad, preoccupied look on her face, I said, "What is it, darling Grace?"

"I was thinking."

"That was very evident. May I share your thoughts?"

"You may think them silly."

"Please give me a chance to pass judgment on them." I spoke lightly, but I knew she said that only to gain time or to put me off, and I felt sure that she was only waiting to tell me what was on her mind, till it could come naturally.

"I was wishing, Fanny,—wondering if there wasn't something I could do better than just study."

Her answer completely surprised and puzzled me.

"How better?"

"Something that would do more good."

"To other people, you mean?"

"Yes. It seems as if I had spent so many, many years having a good time and going to school."

Her voice was grave, even to sadness, her face held an expression entirely new to me, but I made answer as lightly as I could.

"You haven't lived so many, many years, after all, Gay, and I supposed we were getting ready now for the ones that are coming. That's what they always preach at school."

There was a long silence, the new expression on her face, the strange light in her eyes, deepening and intensifying. Hardly knowing why I did so, I took in mine the thin hand resting on my arm. She gave me a loving little squeeze, saying, "But, Fanny,———" I could not help her on, and I waited. Another pause, and she began again:

"You are getting ready for the other years." What a strange emphasis on the personal pronoun, and how the quiet little sentence turned me cold and weak.

"You are, too, Gracie."

I said it with a lump in my throat, feeling that I had hurried on the words she was trying all this time to say to me. And they came, falling as calmly and sweetly from her lips as the twitter from the birds fluttering about us.

"They will not come to me, Fanny. Don't you see how weak I am getting?"

We spoke no more until we reached my home.

"Come home with me," she said, tenderly, as if she would comfort me. "I want to talk."

I left my books in the house and went on.

My friend had a room of her own that I called her "white nest," for everything about it, save the wood of the bedstead and chairs, and the golden-colored matting that covered the floor, was pure white. We went up to it now. Grace lay down on the bed, while I curled up beside her, sitting so I could look down into the dear face that in one short hour looked new to me, so full was it of a thought that had never crossed my mind before.

"As I was saying," she went on quietly, as if our conversation was quite of the ordinary, "I want to do something for somebody else, while I have time, and I want you to help me."

Then the reality of it all struck home. I had been dazed before. Crying out passionately against the truth that faced me, I buried my face on the pillow beside her and we cried together. For her sake I dried my tears as soon as I could, and tried to listen quietly to what she had to say.

"Ever since we knew about poor Mrs. Clarke, I've wondered if we couldn't help in some way. It's not only she, either. There are so many people all wrong, and in all my life, Fanny, I've never done a thing for any one. Don't you think it's time to begin?"

I could not speak, so I nodded, and she, knowing my mood so well, was satisfied, and continued:

"You know I joined the church two years ago. I've been regularly to prayer-meeting and Sunday-school. I've tried to be good," (and she had been good, God bless her!) "but now it all does not seem to amount to anything. Will you help me, Fanny?"

"What are you going to do?"

I had heard the girls at school speak about some Gospel meetings they had been attending, and in some confused way thought she was talking in the same connection.

"I don't know, yet. Whatever I can. How does Mrs. Clarke get along now? I haven't been able to do more than school for some time."

"I don't really know, Grace. Mother does not care to have me go there often, and you know I've been busy with my lessons."

"Suppose we don't stay away any more. It can't do us any harm to go. I guess your mother will let you."

"But what good will it do?"

"I can't tell. But I was thinking if we stay away because she doesn't act just right, we can not help, and if we keep friendly with her we may be able to. You'll help me?"

How fond she was of that word "help." I took the small, thin face between my hands:

"Grace, I will do anything you say, and all I can." Then we kissed each other, and I had a curious sensation as of being in church, taking part in some solemn ceremony.

"What makes you think you will not get well?"

I had caught some of her sweet bravery and asked the question quietly enough.

"I know it. I made papa tell me what the doctor said."

"Oh, Gay, how could you bear it?"

"I couldn't, at first. You know that week I was out of school? It was then I knew first, and I did not want to see any of the girls. Don't tell them, Fanny; but you may tell your mother;—she is so good to me. I am glad now that my mother is dead. Won't she be happy to know I'm coming?"

"Do you know how long—?" I could not finish the question.

"Perhaps a year. Maybe not so long."

How long a year had always seemed to me before, when I had looked forward to some pleasure at the end of it. But now, when the end was to be death, oh, how short it seemed!

"I don't see why they told you!" I burst out, indignantly.

"Papa couldn't help it. I made him. You'll have to get gray and wear specs without me, Fan-fan."

"Oh, don't, Grace, don't!" It was as if she had laid rude hands on an open wound. I could not bear it.

"Poor Fan-fan! It's too bad to have told you."

She put her little hands in mine, while her great eyes, flooded with tears, smiled at me, for she neither shrank from nor dreaded what was coming to her, and all her sorrow was for those who loved her.

A POOR RULE.

Said Mary to Johnny, "O dear!
This place is too poky and slow;
There's only one bubble-pipe here;
O Johnny, please, I want to blow!"
"No, I'll blow them for you," said he,
"Just watch and you'll see every one;
That leaves all the labor to me,
While you will have only the fun."

Said Johnny to Mary, "O my!
That apple, so big and so bright,
You can't eat it all if you try;
O Mary, please, I want a bite!"
"No; I'll eat it for you," said she,
"And show you just how it is done;
I'll take all the labor, you see,
And you will have only the fun!"

MOTHER NOT TO BLAME.

Tom had been an idle, careless, mischievous boy in school. He did not mean to be a bad boy, but he wanted to do about as he liked, without seeming to care how much he troubled others by it. He had a seat-mate who was quite unlike him, in that he was careful to try to please his teachers.

One day Tom heard the teachers talking about some of their pupils; he heard his own name mentioned, and then that of his seat-mate.

"Jamie must have a very lovely mother, I think," said one; "for he is always so polite and agreeable, and tries so very hard to please all who are around him."

"I have heard that Tom Dunn's mother is a good woman," said another, "but I don't see how it is that she has such an unpleasant boy. I think he has a generous nature, and when he likes can show fine manners. It is my opinion that his mother tries to teach him just what is right, but he will not listen to her teaching. You know there is many a boy that will go on to destruction in spite of his mother."

Tom had heard enough to make him a miserable boy for the rest of the day; and he had not put conscience away so far but that he could hear a whisper: "You've been a mean boy, and they've laid it all to your mother."

Now, he did really love his mother, and could not bear the thought that he had brought discredit upon her. After school that night he lingered until the others had passed out, and, going up to his teacher, he said slowly, and as if he hardly knew how to say it: "I want to tell you —that—that mother isn't a bit to blame. Don't lay it to my mother—all my bad ways, I mean."

I don't think Tom thought at all what a brave thing he was doing; he did not think of anything but the wish to defend his mother; but when the teacher took his hand and said, "Your mother must be a brave lady, Tom, for her boy has shown himself brave to-night, and I shall expect good things from him in the future," he thought, "I wonder if the other boys know that, good or bad, all they do is laid to their mothers."—Sel.

WHAT AILED THE BELL.

It was the first school after a vacation. The children were playing in the yards. The teachers sat at their desks waiting for the bell to strike to call the children to their different rooms. The hands of the different clocks pointed to a quarter before nine.

The bell was a sort of gong, fastened to the outside of the building, and the master of the school could ring it by touching a knob in the wall near his desk. It was now time to call the children into school. The master pulled the bell and waited. Still the merry shouts could be heard in the school yards. Very strange! The children were so engaged in play that they could not hear the bell, he thought. Then he pulled it more vigorously. Still the shouts and laughter continued.

The master raised his window, clapped his hands and pointed to the bell. The children rushed into line like little soldiers, and waited for the second signal. The teacher pulled and pulled, but there was no sound; then he sent a boy to tell each line to file in, and he sent another boy for a carpenter to find out if the bell cord was broken.

What do you think the carpenter found? A little sparrow had built its nest inside the bell and prevented the hammer striking against the bell. The teacher told the children what the trouble was, and asked if the nest should be taken out. There was a loud chorus of "No, sir."

Every day the four hundred children would gather in the yard and look up at the nest. When the little birds were able to fly to the trees in the yard; and no longer needed a nest, one of the boys climbed on a ladder and cleared away the straw and hay, so that the sound of the bell might call the children from play.—Our Young People.

"LICENSE LAWS": THEIR DESIGN AND PERVERSION.

At a Pastors' Conference of New York ministers, about 150 in number, and many laymen, present, after an able address just before the intended vote on the Prohibition Amendment, by Rev. Mr. Pogson, the question was asked: "What is the object of license laws? Is it revenue?" The reply was made by one versed in ancient and modern codes: "License is a modern provision, and in codes of northern Europe. Only prohibition is found in the most ancient as well as modern codes of Asia; as the Indian Vedic statutes embodied in the Institutes of Menu, and the more modern precepts of Confucius and of Buddh, which date back to the age of Daniel, about B. C. 600. The same is true of ancient Grecian and Roman Republican laws, all of which were prohibitory of the use and sale of intoxicating liquors. The allusion of Cicero, the last defender of the Roman Republic, in his voluminous writings on the 'Republic' and its 'Laws,' in his 'Moral Duties,' and his 'Orations,' to 'port' or 'gate-charge on wines,' is to that still paid at the entrance into Italian cities for fresh products of every kind brought from the country for sale. 'License laws,' originating in modern European legislation, had as their aim the prevention of the sale of intoxicants, scarcely known in Southern Europe, to excepted classes as miners, women, and men prone to intoxication. The perversion of 'license' law, for 'revenue,' so shocking now to Buddhists of India and Confucians of China, so inconsistent with Mohammed's prohibitory commands in the Koran, is awakening all true patriots and philanthropists of England to the dishonor brought on their country while they allow a few mercenary men to prey on the people of their own and foreign lands."—Historic Truth.

PROHIBITION A SUCCESS IN IOWA.

The number of convicts in the penitentiaries of Iowa has decreased ten per cent relatively with the general growth of population during the past ten years. This is the strong and unimpeachable evidence that the new national census gives as to the good results of prohibition in Iowa. In the same proportion there is ten per cent less drunkards, ten per cent less crime, ten per cent less court costs, and ten per cent increase in happy homes. All this ten per cent gain in every good direction has been made against the constant efforts of the saloon and all its helpers to weaken and debauch manhood in every possible respect. The brewers and distillers have poured millions of dollars into the State to bribe witnesses, jurors, and courts, subsidize newspapers, employ speakers, and pay expenses of the campaigns against prohibition, and yet the grand State of Iowa has made a ten per cent gain in all good respects under prohibition during the last census period, and prohibition has only been the law of the State about two-thirds of the ten years. The census statistics plainly demonstrate that if prohibition were thoroughly enforced all over the State, one of the penitentiaries could be closed up and the other greatly ensmalled.—Des Moines Register.

ASPECTS OF THE LIQUOR QUESTION.

Prof. Francis G. Peabody, of Harvard, in a lecture on the temperance question before the Lowell Institute of Boston the other day, said in substance: There are two aspects of the liquor question, the economic and the moral. There are at present in the liquor traffic throughout the country some 200,000 persons—163,000 in the retail, and the rest in the wholesale. The figures represent only the dealers. The number of persons employed is upward of one million. The worst of these horrible figures is that they mean the withdrawal of just so many persons from right kind of employment. In their present occupation they contribute little or nothing to the wealth of the country.

As to the amount of liquor consumed in 1886, $337,000,000 was spent for spirits, $304,000,000 for beer, $16,000,000 for imported wines and $34,000,000 for domestic wines—a frightful total of about $700,000,000. Only about one-twelfth of this amount is spent for food, clothing and necessaries of life. In the same year there was received as wages $947,000,000, and the liquor bill consumed two-thirds of it. Again, it costs $350,000,000 a year for churches, and the drink bill would buy all the churches in six months.

A LITTLE INQUIRY.

The National Temperance Society has requested the State Department to gather information concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic in the various countries of the world. The State Department has agreed to undertake the task. The report will be made for the World's Temperance Congress that will be held at Chicago in 1893, during the World's Fair.

The society suggests to the State Department that information be secured on the following points:

Statistics as to the quantities and kinds of intoxicating liquors produced.

As to governmental methods of dealing with the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

As to intemperance as related to poverty, immorality and crime.

As to what efforts are being made to discourage the use, manufacture and sale of intoxicants.

SUCCESS OF NON-ALCOHOLIC TREATMENT.

The eighteenth annual report of the London Temperance Hospital, just issued, shows that 753 patients were treated during the year 1890, of whom 390 were cured, 258 relieved, 60 were unrelieved, and 45, or not quite 6 per cent (5.93), died. From the opening of the hospital to the end of December 6,896 in-patients have been treated, of whom 3,591 were cured and 428 died, a mortality of 6.2 per cent. Patients are treated in this hospital without the ordinary administration of alcohol.

The highest court of Maryland decides that the liquor law of the State applies to the dispensation of drinks in a social club as fully as in a saloon, and consequently that clubs must obey the law or suffer its penalties. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has held that the law does not apply to clubs unless they are mere tippling establishments run under the name of a club for the purpose of evading the statute.

The thirty-first annual convention of the United States Brewers' Association was called to order in Germania Hall, Cleveland, Ohio, May 20. There were about two hundred delegates present. President Leffens said: "Legislation, as a whole, has been favorable to us, while the recent elections have been victories for the cause represented by us. I would advise the continuance of our present policy in dealing with the prohibition question. This includes the sustaining of an educational bureau." Regarding the action taken by last year's convention at Washington, looking to a brewers' exhibit at the World's Fair, he said it was proposed to erect a building at a cost of $163,000. The report of the trustees reviewed the legislation affecting the brewers and rejoiced at the defeat of the bill to create a government commission on the alcoholic liquor traffic.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The testimony of John.—vs. 29–34. When Jesus was persecuted for healing on the Sabbath, among other witnesses to his divinity he cited John, as unanswerable, considered in the light of the fact that all men—even the chief priests and Pharisees—esteemed the latter as a prophet. "Ye sent unto John, and he bare witness to the truth," (ch. 5:33.) So great was the popular interest in John's preaching, and so strong the impression in many quarters that he was the Messiah, that an official deputation was sent from the Sanhedrim, to personally interview him and learn the truth. It is implied (v. 28) that this was done when he was surrounded by throngs waiting to be baptized. The Pharisees were evidently content with John's express denial that he was the Christ, and let the matter drop. They do not seem to have been any more anxious for his coming, than many members of Christian churches are now for his second appearing. But we may well imagine that among the multitude who heard John's answer to the deputation must have been some whose hearts within them burned with indescribable emotions, at the announcement that the promised One was even then among them, unknown and unrecognized. We can imagine them as crowding around the Baptist with eager inquiries, to be answered the next day when John saw Jesus coming unto him, and said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." So there are always in the crowds at revival meetings two classes,—one earnestly desirous to have Jesus pointed out to them, the others merely curious, or feeling only a surface emotion. "I knew him not." John was once as blind as others, and needed that some one should point him to Jesus. But in his case it was done by no human instrument, but through the agency of the Divine Spirit alone. Therefore he could speak with full assurance. He who would teach others must be himself taught of God. It is not enough to have a theological training, or have a natural gift of eloquence. This may make a popular preacher but not one who will convert men. "And I saw and bare record." We can testify to what we have seen. Then how important it is in a world of perishing sinners that we see Jesus for ourselves, so that we can point him out to others!

2. Jesus' first disciples.—vs. 35–40. John did not despise a small audience. He could draw thousands to hear him, and yet he was willing to preach to one or two. Nor did he think that because he preached on the same text yesterday, he could not use it to-day;—that he must change the subject of his discourse or give it a more sensational turn, as do many celebrated preachers at the present time. How much hinged on John's preaching to these two! Here they were, all ready to follow Jesus;—like many others to-day, only needing a word to set them in his footprints. One, we have reason to think, was the beloved John, whose writings will be dear to the heart of the church to the end of time. The other was Andrew, who, though himself one of the most obscure of the disciples, was the one to gain the first convert, and that one Simon Peter, through whose sermon on the day of Pentecost, three thousand souls were brought to Christ. As with Paul, who would know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified, so with John the Baptist; the Lamb of God was his one central idea. The self-abnegating spirit of their Master was not more noteworthy than the docile readiness with which they left one they so well loved and revered to become the disciples of another whom they only knew through his word. It shows that he had taught them to make truth and not himself the first object of their affections. Too many theological schools make it their chief aim to preserve a creed intact, or to jealously guard the honor of some famous name. But these disciples, in following Jesus so promptly, in reality paid John the grandest possible tribute that could be given to him as a religious teacher.

3. A brother converted.—vs. 38–41. "Then Jesus turned and saw them following." His eyes discern the first timid motion of the soul towards him, and his heart goes out to meet it. "What seek ye?" He knew, but would draw them out, just as he may often withhold some gift that we may plead with him for it, and thus open the door for closer personal communion. Do we want to know where the Lord abides? "Come and see," is his gracious invitation. The only way to know the riches of his salvation is to taste it for ourselves. Listening to a description of a banquet will not relieve hunger. Andrew did the work which laid nearest to him. He first found his own brother, Simon. Everyone can be an evangelist, for there is no one without some unconverted friend or neighbor they can bring to Christ. Jesus recognized under all the rash impulsiveness of Peter, those qualities which were to make him the Rock apostle. Every one who comes to Jesus will be appreciated at his real value, and not according to the world's valuation, which is so often based on a mistaken estimate.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The printing press which Voltaire set up in Fernay to demolish Christianity is now used to print Bibles in Geneva.

—During the past year the women of the Baptist churches of this country have contributed $102,629.02 for foreign missions.

—It is said the Quakers have 350 women preachers in this country, the Universalists 35, the Unitarians 16, the Congregationalists 6.

—There are now 955 distinctively religious newspapers and periodicals published in the United States. This is a little more than five per cent of the total number published. It is estimated that the aggregate circulation of each issue is 3,973,650.

—The "Brethren," as they wish to be known, represent a movement which began in 1830, in Plymouth, England. They are usually known as "Plymouth Brethren." They have no ordained or paid ministers, and own no houses of worship; and it is not strange, therefore, that they number only 2,279 members in the United States, as per the 1890 census.

—At the late Lutheran General Synod, held at Lebanon, Ohio, the Church Extension Board made a cheering report, showing no deficiency in the treasury, a considerable debt wiped out, and the receipts for the year amounting to $79,855.18. The permanent fund for loans to new churches is $201,119.66. Hon. Frank Howbut of Colorado Springs, Colorado, sent a communication to the Synod, donating ten acres of land in the "Garden of the Gods" for the purpose of establishing a "National Lutheran Home for the Aged."

—The Russian government church has convened a meeting of orthodox missionaries to discuss the means of resisting the spread of peasant heresy. It appears that there are 15,000,000 rural dissenters who, while outwardly belonging to the government church, bribe the police into permitting them to hold heterodox services with locked doors. Fresh conversions among the orthodox peasantry have been alarmingly frequent of late.—Boston Journal.

—The Rev. Abbe Baillarge, of Joliette, has just collected statistics showing the Roman Catholic strength in Canada to be as follows; One cardinal, 5 arch bishops, 22 bishops, 2,352 priests; 43 male religious orders with 250 members, and 66 female orders with a membership of 964; 1,914 churches and chapels, and 317 missions; 17 seminaries, 3 universities, 53 colleges, 333 convents, 166 academies, and 3,203 schools; 69 hospitals, and 48 asylums. These represent a Roman Catholic population of 2,048,000 in 1,157 parishes. In Newfoundland the abbe states that there are two bishops, 58 priests, 77 nuns, 137 churches and chapels, 7 seminaries, 1 university, 15 convents, and 130 schools, with 79,000 Roman Catholics in 41 parishes.—London Times.

—The membership of the M. E. church is 2,283,967. Their contributions for missions, home and foreign, averaged fifty cents per member. The membership in foreign mission fields is a little less than 75,000, including probationers. The necessary force in foreign lands consists of 626 missionaries and assistants, 417 native ordained preachers, 661 unordained native preachers, 72 teachers, 1,237 native teachers, 1,237 local preachers, helpers and other workers. They reported 11,189 conversions during the year. They sustain eighteen theological schools, forty-five high schools, and 1,027 day schools. In all these schools the pupils aggregate 33,844. The value of churches, chapels, parsonages, orphanages, schools, hospitals, is estimated at nearly $3,000,000. These missions collected for missions and benevolence, $24,610; for self-support, $126,131; for building and repairing, $53,540, and for all other local purposes, $100,668, a total of $304,949, or an average of $4 per member.—The Missionary Intelligencer.

—Prof. W. W. Moore, who occupies the chair of Hebrew and Old Testament Interpretation at Union Theological Seminary, Hampden Sidney, Virginia, is to lecture during the month of August at the Bible Institute in Chicago, which is a part of the Chicago Evangelization Society organized by Mr. Moody. Prof. Moore is well known in the South as a man of eminent scholarship. At the Northfield conference his addresses were exceedingly impressive, and students in attendance at Chicago may expect thorough and stimulating intruction. They will also have opportunities for aggressive Christian work in various forms, the society having three Gospel tents in operation in different portions of the city, and a barge on the Lake Front, where services are held nightly and students of the Institute are present to follow up the speaker's words with personal appeals. Several missions are also connected with the work. An invitation is extended to all interested in Bible study and Christian work to attend the Institute for such a period as they find convenient, and avail themselves of its instruction in the Word of God, music and training in aggressive Christian work. The Institute is open during the entire year, and students may enter any time. Four dollars per week will cover all necessary expenses in the men's department, and in the ladies' department the cost of board is $3.50 per week. No charge is made for tuition. Any who desire to attend should write at once to Supt. R. A. Torrey, 80 W. Pearson St., or Mrs. S. B. Capron, of the ladies' department, 232 La Salle Ave., Chicago.

—Augustus Kountze, the millionaire banker of New York, Omaha and Denver, recently made to the Lutheran Synod an offer of $100,000 worth of real estate and $50,000 in cash on condition that $150,000 more be raised to establish a Lutheran theological seminary in Omaha. He offered, also, to pay half of the expense of raising the necessary amount. The offer has been accepted.

—Not long since a wealthy capitalist of Omaha made a gift of a site worth $20,000 for a Presbyterian theological seminary in that city. The gift was accepted and arrangements were made by that church to establish a school of the prophets.

—The board of directors of Union Theological Seminary decided to adhere to their action in transferring Prof. Briggs to the chair of Biblical Theology. Their course is based upon the technical ground that the installation of Prof. Briggs was not an election, but a transfer, and that this is a matter that does not come within the control of the General Assembly.

—According to Dr. W. H. Roberts, American statistical secretary of the Presbyterian Alliance, the Presbyterian and Reformed denominations throughout the world have 20,265,500 adherents.

—The contract has been let for the new building of the First Congregational church, Salt Lake City, Utah, and the foundations are being laid. During the erection the church will worship in Hammond Hall.

Farm for Sale.

The National Christian Association owns a quarter section of land in Morris county, Kansas, four and one-half miles west of Council Grove, the county seat, a village of 2,300 inhabitants, with water-works, electric lights, and street-car line.

The nearest railroad station is only three miles away. There is a school house within half a mile. There is not over ten acres of this 160 that cannot be plowed. From five to ten acres are too stony for cultivation.

Some forty acres have been plowed and cultivated for several years, but not during the past two or three years. There are some 40 peach trees with a good show of fruit at the present time. Some of the apple trees have fruit upon them; there are in all about 25 apple trees. A few shade trees are about the shanty, which, however, is only a piece of a shanty, though residents in that vicinity claim that $50 would put it into condition for tenancy. A well some 25 feet deep has water in it during a portion of the year. Quite a quantity of stones have been gathered together near the house.

Any one going there in July next could put in winter wheat, which ought to yield 20 bushels per acre, if the season should be favorable. A good quantity of upland hay could be gathered, and some fruit.

The Association does not wish to hold land for speculative purposes, as that would be foreign to the object of its organization. The money is needed to carry on this great reform, and hence those having money to invest can benefit themselves and aid the Association by purchasing the above described quarter section.

There will be four insertions of this notice, with the amounts any are willing to pay for it. Eight hundred dollars has already been offered for it. Please send your offers at once.

The Board of Directors have appraised the place at $1,500.

Peter L. Osborn, Council Grove, Kan., will answer correspondence, and show parties the place.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from June 22 to June 27, inclusive:

Dr J N Norris, G Berry, H Frost, W T Peters, B Smith, Mrs M B Park, J C Heywood, Mrs R A Clark, J Pickaart, I H Jones, J Dilley, W Knight, C A Webb, D Ault, Rev A F Dempesy, V Peterson, E Brace, W Brisco, J Bradford, Mrs H Loker, S F Fisher.

If we knew that the mother, who had been our one great blessing in life, was in want, we would sacrifice our comfort to minister to her necessities.

The Cynosure is a mother to us all, and at present is in need of several hundred dollars that she has sent in papers printed full of good things, but for which she has received no return.

Will not each one look at the little yellow date-slip on your paper, and if it tells you that you are one of that number, we know that you will at once send something, if you cannot send much, to help present necessities.

The Cynosure can not well be afforded for less than $1.50 per year; indeed, it cost last year over $1,000 more than was received for it from all sources! Changes have been made which will reduce the deficit this year very materially, provided that every one does all that he can for the Cynosure. Pay renewals as promptly as possible, and watch our premium offers, which will help you obtain new subscribers.

We have received, during the past week, from those in the South that are now reading the paper, several hundred names and postoffice addresses of Southern ministers, to whom the Cynosure should be sent. Can you not aid by donating to the Southern Ministers' Fund? A letter received last week from one of this class, says that "after twelve years of experience in the Masonic lodge, he has been brought to see that he must come out from among the wicked."

"The truth shall make you free." We need money. Can you not send some now?

One secret society secret is out, by the action of a member who has himself been enlightened by our tracts. He says that the distribution of N. C. A. literature aroused the fraternity to such an extent that the question was brought up in the lodge as to what should be done about the anti-secrecy papers and tracts that had been distributed in their town.

Teach your children how to distribute tracts from house to house. Furnish them with a pound or two of N. C. A. tracts, and build over against your own house correct views on this question. The summer vacation is a good time for the children to do missionary work.

HOME AND HEALTH.

COMMON AILMENTS—HOME TREATMENT.

If troubled with headache, try the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and back of the neck.

Asthma may be greatly relieved by soaking blotting or tissue paper in strong salt peter water; dry it, then burn it at night in the sleeping-room.

The following is a splendid liniment for chilblains; One ounce of camphor gum, four fluid ounces of olive oil. Dissolve together by a gentle heat, and apply to the afflicted parts.

For a cut, take powdered resin, pound it very fine, and spread or sift it over the cut, wrap a piece of soft linen around it, and wet in cold water quite often. This will prevent inflammation and soreness.

If a poison has been accidentally swallowed, instantly drink a pint of warm water in which has been stirred a teaspoonful of salt and one or two of mustard. A half glass of sweet oil will render many poisons harmless.

There are many simple and effective disinfectants, among which are: Coffee pounded and burned on an iron plate, sugar burned on hot coals, vinegar boiled with myrrh and sprinkled on the floor and furniture of a sick room.

For severe hermorrhage from the nose, try holding the arms of the patient up over the head five minutes at a time. A small piece of ice wrapped in muslin and laid directly over the top of the nose will usually give relief.

A very good shampoo is made of salts of tartar, white castile soap, bay rum, and luke warm water. The salts will remove the dandruff, the soap will soften and clean the hair thoroughly, while the bay rum will prevent taking cold.

A simple remedy for neuralgia is to apply grated horse-radish to the temple when the face or head is affected, or to the wrist when the pain is in the arm or shoulder. Prepare the horse-radish in the same manner as for table use.

For soft corns, dip a piece of linen cloth in turpentine and wrap it around the toe on which the corn is situated, every night and morning. It will prove an immediate relief to the pain or soreness, and the corn will disappear after a few days.

When you feel the pricking pain on the eyelid that announces the coming of a sty, use as an application very strong black tea, or simply the tea leaves, moistened with a little water, put in a small bag of muslin and laid over the eyelid. Moisten again as it dries. This, if used before the sty gets well under way, will generally drive it away.—Good Housekeeping.

APPLES VS. PILLS.

Who is there among us that would not prefer the eating of an apple to the taking of a pill? Yet the nauseating drugs are daily being swallowed, and the rosy-cheeked "remedies," so grateful and palatable, allowed to go into unwholesome pastry crusts that only further earthly ills. Few scem to know the real worth of an uncooked apple—or a roasted one, either, for the matter of that. Why, they're a medicine delicious to the taste, and, even though pretty dear at this particular season of this particular year, much cheaper than drugs. We may safely put a quarter's worth of apples against a quarter's worth of drugs and expect more good and much more lasting results from the fruit. The one great trouble arising from any unnatural purgatives is the reaction so sure to follow, while the doses provided by nature herself work for the permanent good of humankind.—Vanguard.

CULTIVATING WATER LILIES.

We have several times suggested that those who are fond of the most beautiful water lily, or pond lily (Nymphæa odorata) as "who is not"—can cultivate it with very little trouble. Those who have hesitated to make the attempt will be encouraged by the following account of its successful treatment by Miss Ruckman, of St. Joseph county, Ind. Miss Ruckman writes: "We have a half hogshead in our yard, which is sunk even with the ground. In the bottom is some of the soil taken from the bottom of a little lake where the water lilies grow. We put in several roots of the lily, filled the barrel with water, and then awaited results. The next July we noticed seven small bulbs on the surface of the water; by the 1st of August the surface of the tub was a mass of beauty, the large white lilies being an attraction for the passers-by that could not be resisted. This was three years ago; each year there have been more flowers than in the previous summer. In the fall we throw a little manure into the tank, place some boards over the top, and with this little bit of trouble increase the beauty of our experiment, which has been a success".—Agriculturist.

Some fancy the charms of the lily-white maid,
Of etherial form and languishing eye,
Who faints in the sunshine and droops in the shade,
And is always "just ready to die."

But give me the girl of the sunshiny face,
The blood in whose veins courses healthy and free,
With the vigor of youth in her movement of grace,
Oh that is the maiden for me!

She is the girl to "tie to" for life. The sickly, complaining woman may be an object of love and pity, but she ceases to be a "thing of beauty" worn down by female weaknesses and disorders, subject to hysteria and a martyr to bearing-down pains. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a sure cure for these distressing complaints, and will transform the feeble, drooping sufferer into a healthy, happy, blooming woman. Guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it refunded.

Permanent Results,

And not a mere temporary exhilaration, are produced by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine, being an alterative, and working constitutionally, through the blood, its effects may not be immediately apparent in all cases, but the gain in health and strength, through its persistent use, is real and lasting. It reaches every drop of blood in the body.

"I have none but good words to speak regarding Ayer's Sarsaparilla. All during the winter I was languid, tired, and without any appetite, until I commenced the use of this remedy. I took three bottles. Its effects have been revivifying, and I feel as if I had entered a new life. I did not think it was in the power of medicine to produce such a wonderful change, as has Ayer's Sarsaparilla in my case."—Mrs. C. Johnson, 310 Hicks st., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and also other preparations of a like nature, for the purposes of a blood-purifier, and, while receiving no good, but often positive harm, from others, I have always derived benefit from Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and have no hesitation in recommending it to any one in want of a reliable blood-purifier."—Mrs. M. C. Hopkinson, 110 Merrimack Corporation, Lowell, Mass.

☞ The safest and most reliable tonic, alterative, and diuretic is Ayer's Sarsaparilla —FOR— Debility.

"I was a great sufferer from a low condition of the blood and general debility, becoming, finally, so reduced that I was unfit for work. Nothing that I did for the complaint helped me so much as Ayer's Sarsaparilla, a few bottles of which restored me to health and strength. I take every opportunity to recommend this medicine in similar cases."—C. Evick, 14 E. Main st., Chillicothe, Ohio.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is one of the very few proprietary medicines that I can honestly recommend. I have seen it used in this place, in a number of cases, with very satisfactory results, and I have used it in my own family, for salt-rheum, with abundant success. I consider it to be the leading blood-purifier of the day."—Charles C. Davis, Nashua, N. H.

"I suffered from general debility for fifteen years. A few bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla completely cured me, and I now enjoy good health."—Mrs. J. F. McElhinney, Truro, N. S.

THE COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA

What Is It? It is a Library of Universal Knowledge and an Unabridged Dictionary of Language in one work, in one alphabetical arrangement. This novel combination is an infinitely convenient one, which, together with its unique and handy form, leads one to consult it ten times where he will once refer to any other cyclopedia or dictionary by the side of it.

"In convenience of form and freshness of information, it stands pre-eminent. The combination of cyclopedia and dictionary in the same work is a most valuable feature. I expect to get more real service from it than from anything else in my library."—F. S. FITCH, State Supt. of Public Instruction, Lansing, Mich.

The Basis of the Cyclopedia proper is the last complete edition of Chambers's Cyclopedia, which is so thoroughly revised, brought down to date, and Americanized, that it would be unfair to the original to say it is "reprinted"—it is virtually a new work, the Chambers being used simply as good material to work with; many thousands of new (especially American) topics have been added. The pronunciation of all titles is an altogether unique feature that gives universal satisfaction.

"I find it exceedingly useful for handy reference. The pronunciation I regard as a valuable feature. The members of my family use this ten times where they once use the Britannica, Appleton's, or Chambers's—all of which they have access to."—CHAS. H. COREY, D.D., Pres. of Richmond Institute, Richmond, Va.

"I like the Columbian the better the more I examine it. I have written to * * * my warm commendation of it."—PROF. JAMES STRONG, S.T.D., Editor McClintock & Strong's Cyclopedia of Biblical and Theological Literature.

The Dictionary feature is based on the great Dictionary of Stormonth, which is universally recognized among scholars as the peer of Webster, Worcester, the Century, and others, as an authority; it, also, is thoroughly revised, Americanized, and greatly enlarged; every word having recognized place in the living or classic literature of the English language is included, thus entitling it to be called an "unabridged" dictionary.

"After a careful examination, I can cheerfully recommend it to every educator."—W. E. ROBINSON, Supt. of Schools, Detroit, Mich.

"I feel free to pronounce the Columbian Cyclopedia the teacher's vade-mecum. Teachers will not often be obliged to go beyond its pages for help."—GEO. J. LUCKEY, Supt. of Schools, Pittsburgh, Pa.

"I have Appleton's, Chambers's, and The People's cyclopedias in my library, but use the handy COLUMBIAN nearly altogether when the information sought comes within the volumes now complete. The great amount of new matter added to the standard text of all cyclopedias, and the neat style of typography and binding, make the work the most useful and every way desirable reference work for a reasonable amount of money that I have yet examined."—WM. H. ALEXANDER, Surveyor of Customs, Omaha, Neb.

Who Edits It? Its Editor-in-Chief, RICHARD GLEASON GREENE, formerly editor-in-chief of "The Library of Universal Knowledge," also of "The International Cyclopedia," has probably had more experience in the direct line of his work than any other living American; he is assisted by an able corps of trained writers in the various departments of learning.

"It meets more fully my ideal of what a work of this kind should be than any other I know."—J. F. CROOKER, Supt. of Education, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I have several Cyclopedias, among them the Columbian; this I much prefer for every-day reference."—WM. H. TAYLOR, State Assayer and Chemist, Richmond, Va.

"We did not think—to be frank—when we began to examine the Cyclopedia, that it promised to deserve very strong commendation. But the more we studied its characteristic features, the more highly we learned to regard it, and we now feel justified in commending it as a very comprehensive, well-arranged, and useful work. By the great body of intelligent men and women who do desire a cyclopedia which is reasonably comprehensive, accurate, intelligible, orderly in plan, and low in price, this will be found abundantly worth attention."—The Congregationalist, Boston.

How Large Is It? In 32 volumes of over 800 pages each, it will contain about 26,000 pages and about 7,000 illustrations. "The feature that strikes me most favorably is the new departure in respect to size. Each volume is 8 inches long, 5½ wide, and 1⅓ thick, and answers the practical definition of the word 'handy' better than any other book of reference that I have ever come across. Standing within hand-reach, and easily handled, one is apt to refer to it ten times hand-running when he would once to a big, bulky, and burly volume not so close to him (or, better, her), and heavier to hold."—FRANCES E. WILLARD.

"The size of the volumes is just right for convenient handling. The type is good, the illustrations abundant, the arrangement of matter is such that all topics are easily found. It is difficult to imagine any improvement in these respects."—J. B. MOFFAT, President Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pa.

What Is the Price? That is the most remarkable feature about it. Though approximately the same size as Appleton's Cyclopedia, which is published at $80.00, and about 50 per cent. larger than Johnson's, which sells at $48.00, and comparing favorably with them in every important respect, the retail price for the set of 32 volumes, in extra cloth binding, is only $25.00; half-Morocco binding, $32.00; by express; postage, 16 cents a volume, if by mail. Vol. 25 ready July 15, others at intervals of about a month.

$5.00 cash will secure immediately, by express, volumes 1 to 16. in cloth binding, the remaining volumes being delivered as installments of $1.25 for each are paid; 25 cents a volume extra for half-Morocco.

$21.35 be accepted in full payment for received before Aug. 1, 1891, will be the complete set, in extra cloth binding; for half-Morocco binding send $6.00 additional. These special reduced prices will be slightly advanced Aug. 1*st.* Sample volume, 60 cents (postage, 16 cents), returnable and money refunded; specimen pages free.

A College Education is a good thing for young man or young woman—what a pity that it is clear out of reach of fully 95 per cent. of the brainiest, bravest, worthiest of the young folks of the country! But do you realize that 7 cents a day for one year, the fair equivalent of a For $25, or college education is within the reach of any go-ahead boy or girl? It may seem incredible, but it is true! If one had only his choice of the two, what he could learn at college, or what he could learn from the Best Cyclopedia published, thousands of wise people would choose the Cyclopedia—it covers the entire circle of human knowledge—it is a teacher who never grows weary of being questioned—is always at hand, your lifetime through, and not for a few months only.

The Columbian REVOLVING BOOK-CASE, of which a picture is here given, is made to hold a full set of the Cyclopedia. Size of the case 14 inches square by 18 inches high; price $2.50 (and cheap at that) when sold separately, but with the Cyclopedia it is furnished for only $2.00.

The Book-Case is furnished either in oak, antique finish, or in hard maple, cherry finish, as you prefer. It is knock-down as well as revolving, held together by four rods and four screws; may be taken to pieces in five minutes, and put together in 10 minutes. It is a beautiful piece of furniture, though so fabulously cheap—delights everybody.

It is made to stand on a desk or table, and is so excellently adapted to its use that it may fairly be compared to adding a handle to a good knife-blade—you could use the blade by tying it to a stick, and you could use the Cyclopedia without the Revolving Case, but you would very unwillingly do without either after having tried them. We have, also, larger Revolving Book-Cases, to stand on the floor, 4 shelves high (adjustable shelves), giving a total of 136 inches of shelf room, holding 100 to 150 volumes; price-list on request.

Which Cyclopedia? GOOD LUCK for those who wish to buy, there are several good cyclopedias in the market. Each cannot, of course, be better than any other, but each is undoubtedly better than it would be but for the competition of its rivals; each has some special merit.

Appleton's is the pioneer of (living) American cyclopedias, and has great merit—but pioneers will grow old, and most people want a new cyclopedia when they buy; then, it costs a good deal of money: $80.00 in cheapest style, besides many annuals which are necessary to its completeness.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA is the newest in the field, covers virtually all the ground covered by Appleton's, and a great deal besides; is about the same size in amount of matter, and costs less than one-third as much money.

Johnson's is later than Appleton's, and by many good judges has been considered the "best" for popular use; like all cyclopedias not published very recently, it needs bringing down to date. Some object, too, to the heavy, clumsy form of volume. It costs $48.00 in cheapest style.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA is about 50 per cent. larger than Johnson's (in amount of matter), and costs about half the money—it covers practically all the ground covered by Johnson's, and besides includes an unabridged dictionary of language.

The International CYCLOPEDIA is esteemed by many better for general use than either Appleton or Johnson. The publisher and editor-in-chief of the Columbian Cyclopedia naturally think well of the International, as it was formerly edited and published by them.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA covers about the same ground as the International, rejecting, however, a vast amount of Scotch, English, and other obsolete matter, and adding a very great amount of valuable original matter, particularly upon American topics, and also an unabridged dictionary of the English language.

The Britannica is the "old giant" among cyclopedias. The publisher of the COLUMBIAN recommends every one to buy it—who can afford two cyclopedias—if you can't afford two, it will not serve you; it is a vast library of valuable knowledge, very useful to men of profound learning and unlimited leisure, but for popular use, for convenient, quick consultation, on live topics, it is about as well adapted as a broad-axe would be to sharpen a lead-pencil—you want something handier. The "old giant," we said—consult the topic "Africa," for instance, and you find in a sort of "P.S." that "Livingstone is dead!" Look for "General Grant," and he not only "isn't dead," but "isn't born yet," so far as the cyclopedia is concerned! These are characteristic facts.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA treats every important topic found in the Britannica, and many thousands of others besides; with the two cyclopedias side by side, you will refer to the COLUMBIAN in nearly every case, and find all you want.

"The days of big, cumbersome, expensive cyclopedias are past, and we congratulate the reading public that they are able to get such an excellent work as this at such a low price."—JAMES ALLISON, Editor of the Presbyterian Banner, Pittsburgh.

BUSINESS.

NEW PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

THE BEST OFFER YET MADE.

During June and July we offer to each NEW subscriber for the Christian Cynosure the following liberal premiums:

One copy of Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary, neatly printed and bound in half-seal covers, and one copy of "The Life and Words of Christ," by Cunningham Geikie, D. D., a larger volume, equally well printed and similarly bound.

Smith's Dictionary has long been a standard publication for Bible students, and is especially rich in trustworthy biography and geography, indicating a vast amount of study and research. It contains 468 pages of closely printed, double-column pages, and, with its thousand references, will be found a useful help in studying the Scriptures.

Geikie's Life of Christ is also very rich in Biblical information, combining the history of our Lord and his disciples with reliable descriptions of the manners and customs of the times in which they lived, the worship of the Israelites, and other matters of interest for careful students. Its reputation as a literary work is excellent. It contains 826 pages.

For persons who have never taken our paper and desire to subscribe for one year, we consider this the most generous offer that has ever been made by this office. On receipt of two dollars, both books will be forwarded, with the paper, to the address of any actually new subscriber. For three dollars and the names of two new subscribers, the books will be sent free, during June and July.

We offer as a PREMIUM for subscribers to the Christian Cynosure the choice of nearly

100 BABY CARRIAGES,

from the Lowest to the Highest grades.

These carriages are manufactured by L. G. Spencer, who has carried on this business for years in the "Carpenter Building," where the Cynosure is published.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

A freight train plunged into a swollen creek where a bridge had been washed away by heavy rains near York, Neb. The engineer and head brakeman were killed and the fireman was mortally hurt.

Discovery has been made that thousands of feet of pine have been cut on the public lands of Wisconsin. Prominent lumber companies are said to be involved, and suits for damages of criminal prosecutions are threatened.

Bishop Howell R. Pricc, of Nazareth Methodist Episcopal church, at Camden, N. J., has died.

Fire in the Border City mills at Fall River, Mass., did about $100,000 damage. The loss is covered by insurance.

Section 28 of the ballot reform bill passed by the late General Assembly of Illinois, which was accidentally omitted by the engrossing clerk, was inserted in the bill by the presiding officers of both houses, and the bill was signed by the Governor.

At Jefferson, Texas, fire destroyed a business block, causing a loss of $75,000, on which there is $35,000 insurance.

In Nebraska the entire State was flooded, and railroad traffic was suspended. Crops were badly damaged. Omaha suffered severely.

A cyclone at Natalia, Pa., Thursday, destroyed a coal breaker about 300 feet long and 165 feet high, killing eight mechanics and laborers.

Sunday fires:—A creamery-package factory at Portland, Ind.; loss, $10,000; insured. A furniture factory at Rockford, Ill.; loss $60,000; partly insured. A rolling mill at Wilmington, Del.; losses, $500,000; partly insured. Street railway stable, etc., at Newburyport; loss $75,000. A coffee mill at Baltimore; losses from $100,000 to $110,000.

Irwin Fowler, of Viola, Richland county, Wis., has confessed that he had a hand in the murder of old Reuben Drake, his wife and two grandchildren in May, 1888, for which Andrew Grandstaff was lynched three days afteward. It is reported that Fowler implicates Jeff Bowker and Frank and Elijah Carey, who were under suspicion at the time of the murder. Great excitement exists in the vicinity where the diabolical crime was committed, and in consequence of Fowler's confession further violence may be attempted.

Disastrous storms of wind and rain did immense damage in northwestern Iowa. By three successive cloud-bursts, or waterspouts, with the terrible accompaniments of hail, thunder and lightning and a fearful windstorm, one of the fairest agricultural regions in the world was in a few hours reduced to a scene of ruin and dismay. A block of counties, measuring two from east to west and five from north to south, and lying along the Nebraska line, was the dread battlefield of the elements. Within this immense region small rivers became in an instant resistless torrents a mile wide. Iron truss bridges, 300 feet long, were washed away like cardboard, and railroad iron was twisted like straws. Numerous thriving villages were submerged and washed away, hundreds of farmhouses and barns floated away on the flood, crops were destroyed, cattle were drowned, and, in many cases—though in how many can not yet be learned—human beings perished. The storm rendered between 300 and 400 families homeless in and about Cherokee. The Illinois Central lost 12,777 feet of road bed and 985 feet of piling. Moville, Iowa, situated eighteen miles east of Sioux City, was entirely obliterated by the floods following Tuesday's storm. Huron, S. D., and Kildonan, Manitoba, were visited by wind and hail storms Tuesday morning. Much damage resulted.

"The Committee of One Hundred," the stalwart picket guard of social and religious reforms in Boston, now controls the Daily Traveller in that city, and manfully fights the battles of truth against sectarian schools, the liquor traffic and immorality in general.

The noon prayer-meeting at the office of this paper, 221 West Madison street, continues daily during the week, except Sundays. As it seems to be the only one maintained in the West Division, which comprises more than half the city, it is hoped and expected that orthodox clergymen and laymen will take sufficient interest in its perpetuation to encourage the attendance of both saved and unsaved persons. The services are brief and evangelical in character, and are held from 12:30 until 1 o'clock, for the accommodation of working men and women who can devote but a few minutes to a season of prayer. We wish to see the hall filled daily.

A secular paper of last Saturday notes a peculiar effect of the cigar-makers' strike in this city, which seems to indicate that manufacturers are becoming very tired of the exactions of the labor lodges. One firm, it is stated, which employed 150 workmen before the strike began, has permanently closed its factory in this city and recommenced business in Detroit, Mich., where wages rule much lower than they did here before the strike was ordered. It is added that other manufacturers propose to move their factories away also, simply keeping offices in Chicago, from which to supply their customers. This result promises but little encouragement to other discontented workmen, or to the power of the lodge to control the business interests of the public.

The Free Methodist advises preachers not to "try to show that secret societies are worse than they really are, or your audiences will go away feeling that the orders are better than they really are." The advice is good; but any preacher who has been a third-degree Mason, and then been converted, would have to talk a long time about the order before he would pass the bounds of truth, if he confined himself to the evils of lodge secrecy. Those who would undertake to oppose these evils without a personal experience in the lodge, can be fully equipped with the requisite facts and figures on the subject at this office. They are the very best kind of lime-lights to search out the dark places in the lodges, and exaggeration is entirely unnecessary. By the way, we haven't heard that any of our Free Methodist brethren are preaching on this subject nowadays.

The Louisiana State Lottery dies hard, and is still making a vigorous struggle for existence. On its part it has a combined money interest, or franchise, valued at $20,000,000 a year, and the financial and immoral support of a host of inconsiderate and unprincipled victims to its rapacity in all parts of the Union and elsewhere. On the other hand, it is opposed by the postal authorities of the nation, by the reputable citizens of Louisiana, and by the sentiments of Christians everywhere. A great mass meeting was recently held in New Orleans to antagonize its grasping propensities and ruinous operations. The principles and interests at stake in this fight are so great that the result will be momentous when the battle is finished. Among the strongest warriors arrayed against this evil has been Rev. B. Carradine, D.D., of St. Louis, Mo., whose arguments were memorable, exhaustive and incontrovertible. But as a moneyed corporation the lottery is well-nigh invulnerable, and the contest will, we fear, be long and hardly fought.

Among the new laws which went into effect on the first of July were the following: The International Copyright law, designed to secure greater benefits to American authors; and while its tendency may be to increase the price of good books in this country, it will also discourage the pirating of foreign works of doubtful value by unscrupulous American publishers. In this State the new method of conducting general elections by the people, known as the Australian system, is now in force. If properly conducted, it will promote more honesty in electing suitable candidates, and restrain the wicked designs of professional politicians. The new tariff on tin-plates, which increases the duty on this article from one to two and one-fifth cents per pound, is likewise now in force. The importers have, however, been very busy and a good large stock of foreign manufacture has been stored in this country to meet the demand while American tin-plate factories are being brought into active operation. The present prices of tinware are likely to be reduced in the early future, if native tin can be secured in the anticipated large quantities necessary to make the manufacture of tin-plate generally successful. We note all these as measures of general interest; and as such their success or failure will have an important effect upon the progress of this nation.

Jay Cam Fremont, under the auspices of the California Colored Colonization Co., has issued a call for a meeting of leading and representative colored men from all parts of the United States, Liberia, Africa, Congo Free States, Orange Free States, Cape Colony, Madagascar, Hayti, Belgium, Hawaiian Isles, Brazil, Mexico and Canada. The time and place designated are August 13, 14, 15, at Red Oak, Iowa. From the United States 953 representatives have been invited to attend. The object is to discuss and obtain a correct knowledge of the educational, moral and financial condition of the whole colored race, and demand its just recognition equally before the law; to suppress personal, sectional and national prejudices, all hurtful rivalry and selfish ambition; to urge the doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to none; to educate, to assist the weak with the strength of the strong, and encourage honest, intelligent and industrious men, women and children to cope successfully with all other classes. With these objects in view, every friend of humanity will wish the convention success.

All the teachings of the New Testament, the words and works of our Saviour, the sermons of Peter, and the Epistles of Paul, indicate that the Christian religion is practical as well as spiritual; that the spirit of this religion ought to be manifest in everything human, irrespective of color, race or previous condition; that whatever does not honor God the Father or his Anointed ought not to enter into it, lest it be defiled. Of such is lodgery, profanity, intemperance, falsification, sorcery, or any other sin. And as the churches are supposed to possess a large portion of the sanctity pertaining to the religion of Christ, it certainly is a sin for them to encourage those things that defile the sanctuary by dishonoring the Head of the church. If Cæsar's wife had to be above suspicion, how much more incumbent is it upon the Bride of Christ (the church) to keep her garments unspotted from the world and the sins that so easily beset her members?

MORAL COMPROMISE A BLUNDER.

BY A. S. M'CONNELL.

"Moral compromise is always a blunder."

"Half-right and half-wrong is all wrong."

Like Jeroboam, 1 Kings, 41: 38. He tried to help on God's providences by the crooked devices of a merely human policy. Thus it is to-day in many places, where people are plotting and planning some human invention to do God's work; when the truth is, there is no other way than that which is given us by his inspired Word.

There are a good many persons who have a way of their own. A good many are banded together in various societies; and what wretched institutions they are, when examined by the light of God's Word! They are always blunders, when they try to compromise and exhibit something parallel to God's Word—something as good as his way. All these have truly blundered when they think to substitute anything for his revelation by inspiration.

Romanism gives more honor to a crucifix, more reverence to the image of the Virgin Mary, more time to beads, than to God's inspired Word. Masonry makes use of the Bible as a symbol, and it is of no more importance (to them) than many other symbols. Indeed, Masonry is a religion that has symbols for its foundation; morality without a Christ, without a Saviour—can that be the handmaid of religion? It is a blunder.

The most that Masonry has said for the Bible is this: "The Bible is dedicated to God, because it is the inestimable gift to man." [The Craftsman, by Cornelius Moore, page 31.] Yet the institution, first and last, has more to do with things that are no part of the Bible, but border upon heathenism. It seeks to compromise with the Bible, and to build a glorious moral edifice without a Saviour; it attempts to build a temple with perfect ashlars, fashioned by the hands of the craft; a Jew, a Mahommedan, an Egyptian, a Hindoo, a Mexican, or a South American, according to the working of the institution of Masonry, can build a moral edifice, with tools and implements, and misapply the Word, using it under a bushel, when doing Masonic work; for the lodge-room is the place of secrecy, and a place where some professed Christians seek to hide themselves from the church, with oaths and death penalties, the bands of secretism.

Thanks be to God, we have a printing press that is felt wherever a true Christian is struggling against the dominion of secretism, and that each day and year more and more are the numbers of those who come out from the lodges, throwing off the yoke of slavery that threatens to bind souls and bodies in perpetual bondage.

Moral compromise is always a blunder.

The church has some professors who uphold the manufacture of intoxicating beverages, by producing the materials used in the manufacture of them. This is a blunder; and if I am not mistaken it is a serious one—one that is a damage to both soul and body. What shall we do? Are these the darnel among the wheat? The darnel may look beautiful when in bloom, yet it is darnel; and this is what we should do: Obey the Word of God, and let them grow together until the harvest, and then the angels will gather them, by the command of God. Would that every man, woman and child could see this as the result of the cause, and be so thoroughly converted to God that they would work for the extinguishing of the lights that allure our youth to the temptation of strong drink—to the ale-house, the dens of infamy and woe, and to eternal condemnation.

The man who professes to be converted and holds up the brimming cup of intoxication to his fellow-men, appears very much as though he did not want them converted. What a shame, to propagate such an error and a delusion, when people are hungering for the pure Word of God!

God is able to make all things abound unto his glory. Pharaoh was one instance upon the sacred page. He did precisely as he pleased, and gratified himself; yet God's glory was manifested in Egypt, and will be in the church, in defiance of every wrong.

PROVIDENCE AND THE UNITED STATES.

BY. REV. J. M. FOSTER.

In his last speech, at a banquet in New York, in honor of Henry M. Stanley, General Sherman said: "In 1803 Mr. Jefferson bought of Napoleon, for fifteen millions of dollars, the Upper and Lower Provinces of Louisiana, as little known then as are Unyro and Urganda to-day. You, young men of the press, think you are smart and original, but if you will search the journals of that period you will find that for personal abuse and wit your predecessors were your equals if not your superiors. They poured on President Jefferson their choicest vocabulary, and said that he had bought 'the great American Desert, fit only for Indians, buffalos and rattlesnakes.' It is true these did abound, but behold the result! The territory then acquired by purchase now comprises twelve States of our Union, with unlimited minerals, pastoral and agricultural resources; in fact, is one of the great granaries of the world." "It was not until 1842 that Captain Fremont, of the Topographical Engineers, began his systematic exploration of the transcontinental routes, with adequate means and proper equipment, and since that day the government has caused every nook and crevice of that vast region, nearly a thousand miles north and south, and two thousand east and west, to be explored. Four great railways have been built, with numerous branches, so that you can buy a ticket here in New York which will carry you to Puget Sound, San Francisco, or Los Angeles, in one week—a trip which took us a whole year in 1846."

This is a land of Providence; we have a territory equal to all Europe, not including Alaska, capable of sustaining and enriching one thousand millions of people. This country was settled by Christian men with Christian ends in view. God sends here people from every nation and language on the earth, that they may find Christ and be moulded by our Christian institutions. The eyes of all nations are turned toward us for a model of a free government. Providence designed to have her a Christian nation, with a distinctively Christian government, recognizing God as the source of all authority, Christ as its ruler, and the Bible as the fountain of its laws—a government that emancipates the Sabbath toiler, guards the home against Mormonism, free love and speedy and easy divorce, drives out the saloon, the brewery and the distillery, strikes down the Goliath of secretism, and allows none to occupy positions of honor and trust who do not fear God, love truth and hate bribes. Let our nation swear allegiance to the King of kings, and honor him in her civil and political life, and all nations will bow to his scepter. The angel will proclaim in the heavens, "The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever."

THE STORY OF EVANGELINE.

BY MISS MARY FERRIS.

Grand Pre, an Acadian village, was situated in a quiet, pleasant valley on the shores of the Basin of Minas. On the east were meadows and pastures, and on the plain, south and west, were fields of flax, orchards and corn-fields. On the north were mountains and forests.

The houses were strongly built, with the doorways shaded by projecting gables. The matrons and maidens sat in the doorways, in the summer evenings, spinning flax.

Benedict Bellefontaine, one of the wealthy farmers, lived in the outskirts of the village. His daughter, Evangeline, a beautiful maiden, lived with him. All the young men in the village were in love with her, but her favorite was Gabriel Lajeunesse, the blacksmith's son.

It was in autumn, when the fires burned bright in the fireplaces, and all sounds were subdued. The sun shone through a golden mist, and each tree was clothed in russet, yellow and red.

By the fireplace, with her father, sat Evangeline, spinning flax. While sitting there the door opened and Basil, the blacksmith, and his son Gabriel, entered. Basil and Benedict sat smoking by the fire, talking of the English ships that were anchored in their harbor, wondering whether their visit was a friendly one or not, and also planning for the happiness of their children.

Evangeline stood by the window, with her hand in her lover's, listening to the talk of the old men. Suddenly the notary-public entered—an old stoop-shouldered man—and drew up the papers of their betrothal, received his fee, and, after blessing them, departed.

At nine o'clock Basil and Gabriel took their leave and the house was soon quiet.

The sun shone brightly the next morning and the merry young people gathered at Benedict's to celebrate the betrothal of Gabriel and Evangeline. With dancing and feasting they passed the morning. Soon the people were summoned to the church by the great bell, to hear the message from the English king delivered by the commander of the ships. When the crowd became silent the messenger arose and said that it was the order of the king, that all their lands and cattle were to be given up, and that they themselves were to be transported to another province. He then declared them prisoners. They were silent a moment in wonder; then all tried to escape, but in vain. The men were kept prisoners in the church for five days. On the fifth day, all day long, the women were bringing their goods in great wagons to the seashore. At sunset the doors were opened and the farmers came out, singing as they went down to the ships. Evangeline met them, and comforting Gabriel and her father, moved with the sad procession to the shore.

Soon part of the people were carried to the ships. Basil and Gabriel were taken, but Evangeline waited on shore with her father. While waiting they saw a fire in the South, and as the flames crept nearer, burning their houses, Evangeline turned to speak to her father, but saw him lying on the ground, lifeless. She lost all consciousness for a time, and when she opened her eyes, friends were gathered around her.

They buried her father on the seashore, and at daylight they left for their unknown home. The Acadians were taken to different places and many families were separated.

Evangeline wandered from one place to another, seeking in vain some trace of Gabriel. Friends at one place told her that he and his father had gone to the prairies. They tried to dissuade her from looking and waiting for him longer. They recalled to her mind other young men who had long loved her, but she always told them that she must go where her heart had gone.

In the month of May a little band of Acadian exiles, among whom was Evangeline, sailed down the Ohio river into the Mississippi, seeking their friends.

One night while all were sleeping, a boat, rowed by hunters and trappers, sped by them, but the willows prevented the rowers from seeing the boat that was moored near by. Gabriel, grown restless and tired of waiting, was at the helm of the boat making his way to the Western frontiers. In the morning the Acadians again moved on their journey southward, little thinking that Gabriel had passed so near them. At sunset they saw the smoke from a house not far away, and heard the lowing of cattle. As they came in sight of the house they saw the herdsman seated on his horse. The priest and maiden advanced to meet him and soon recognized in him their old friend, Basil the blacksmith.

Upon going into the house they expressed some wonder at not seeing Gabriel, and Basil asked if they had not met him. Evangeline, when she learned that he had gone, wept, and all hope left her, but Basil comforted her, saying that they would start early the next morning and would soon overtake him.

The next morning Basil and Evangeline left, with the boatman, for the Western country. At one town they heard that he had left the day before for the prairies. They kept on day after day, thinking that soon they would find him. They heard at one place that to the northwest of them, on the other side of the mountains, was a Jesuit mission. Thither they journeyed, thinking that some trace of him might be found there. They told their story, and the priest said that not six suns had risen and set since Gabriel told the same sad tale and then went on his journey. He had gone far to the north, but would return that way in the fall. Evangeline decided to remain there, and Basil returned to his home.

The autumn, winter and spring passed, and no news came from Gabriel; but in the summer they heard it rumored that he had a lodge in the Michigan forests. Evangeline left the Mission and went to the forests, only to find the hunter's lodge deserted.

Years passed on; sometimes she was in the Moravian missions, sometimes in the camps and on the battle-fields. She was young and fair when she commenced the search, but she had grown old and faded.

In Philadelphia Evangeline finally made her home. There she lived as a Sister of Mercy. The search was abandoned, but Gabriel was never forgotten—his image was always in her mind.

A pestilence came on in the city, and the poor who had no friends were cared for in the almshouse. Here Evangeline came and soothed and comforted the sick and dying. One Sabbath morning, as she was performing her customary duties, many turned to look at her with thankful hearts, for she seemed to bring light and peace with her as she came in.

Suddenly she turned pale and shuddered. The flowers dropped from her hands, and a cry of such terrible anguish burst from her lips, that the dying started up from their pillows.

An old man, with thin, gray hair, lay on the pallet before her. His life was almost gone, but that cry seemed to arouse him, and a whisper, "Gabriel, my beloved," recalled his scattered senses and he opened his eyes and saw Evangeline kneeling by his bedside. He tried to speak her name, but the words died on his lips.

She kissed the pale, cold lips, and he, leaning his head on her shoulder, died. Her waiting was ended, and as she clasped the lifeless form she said, "Father, I thank Thee."

In the center of the city the two lie side by side in the Catholic burial ground.

The Acadians, who wandered back to their old homes on the Atlantic shore, still tell the story of Evangeline to their children

Wheaton College, June, 1891.

It is about time for the Knights of Labor to disband. They started out with a great flourish of trumpets. They were to take the place of all trades unions, and with a mighty effort they were to solve off-hand every question that concerned the toiler and the capitalist. Their history has been a record of pride, pretense, bluster, failure and decay. They may have won a small strike or two, but they have failed ignominiously in all their extensive enterprises. For a year or more their numbers increased amazingly. Now they are diminishing with equal rapidity. They do not command the respect of labor, nor are they feared by capital. To all appearances nothing is left of the Knights of Labor save Terence V. Powderly, his big salary and his typewriter. He will not resign. He will have to be bounced. —Chicago Herald.

GIVE A KIND WORD WHEN YOU CAN.

Do you know a heart that hungers
For a word of love and cheer?
There are many such about us;
It may be that one is near.
Look around you. If you find it
Speak the word that's needed so,
And your own heart may be strengthened
By the help that you bestow.

It may be that some one falters
On the brink of sin and wrong,
And a word from you might save him—
Help to make the tempted strong.
Look about you, O my brother;
What a sin is yours and mine
If we see that help is needed
And we give no friendly sign.

Never think kind words are wasted,
Bread on waters cast are they,
And it may be we shall find them
Coming back to us some day—
Coming back when sorely needed,
In a time of sharp distress,
So, my friend, let's give them freely;
Gift and giver God will bless.

LODGES VS. THE CHURCH.

BY REV. C. H. FIELDS.

This is certainly the age of lodges, and from some recent experiences and observations, I have been asking myself the question, "How long can the church hold out against these hindrances?" I say hindrances, for such they certainly are getting to be, whatever may be said of them in the past.

One of the great problems before the church to-day is the reaching of the young men and bringing them into the church. One of the known quantities in this problem and upon which the result largely depends, is the lodge question.

In our town there is but one evening in the week that the church need think of announcing any kind of service—that is Wednesday—and no doubt that would have been taken had it not been pre-empted by long usage. I should not be surprised to have our right to even that one disputed ere long.

Indeed, it is hardly safe now to arrange for Communion Service on the Sabbath, lest a brother in the lodge should die perhaps on Wednesday or Thursday, and in order to give the fraternity a chance to turn out, he must be held till Sabbath; and then, as the first obligation of elders is not the church—even if the communion has been arranged for—but the lodge—away go the elders and leave the poor pastor to do what he thinks best.

What secret orders have we? Well, there are the Odd-fellows, the Masons, the Knights of Pythias, the G. A. R. and the Sons of Veterans and Ancient Order of Red Men, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and ad infinitum for the men and boys.

Then for the women and girls come the Eastern Star, the Rebeccas, the Women's Relief Corps, and the latest I have heard of—Pocahontas—this last to match the Order of Red Men. Where are the young men? Certainly not in the churches. In our church here, we have one lone young man, and the other churches are not far ahead of us.

But where are the young men? Well, most all who are old enough are in some of these lodges or waiting anxiously for time to die—and many are "killing" it as best they can—so they can be admitted. Preachers seem likely to be dispensed with in the matter of funerals. What need of preachers when there are four or five lodges to have a hand in the obsequies!

I attended a funeral recently, that is to say, I stood out on the pavement near the residence and watched the different orders in charge. Well, what did I see? The order which seemed to be "Right," "Worthy," "Grand," "Worshipful" "Master" of ceremonies was made up as best I could see of the following characters: Professional drunken gamblers, about four; nominal Christians, perhaps two or three; the others, infidels, skeptics and nondescripts.

This is the order to which nearly all of our young preachers belong. The lodge here gave a public ball last winter which was advertised during our protracted meeting, and several who were concerned about their souls' salvation, "could not decide till after the ball," and that decided it.

Let us see, what is it Paul says about "separation?" Wonder if he would be beheaded in this age for saying: "Come out from among them; be ye separate and touch not the unclean thing?"

If men wanted to be religious, they would not have time—nay, verily; for those who belong to the church do not have time to attend, for they will "have to pay a fine if they fail in their duties to their lodge." Wonder how the "fining" system would work in the churches! How so many of our ministers can give so much time and money to such institutions, which to my mind are great hindrances to the church, I cannot understand. Oh! yes, I have it now; they have joined the enemy to convert it. Some people want to purify the stage by attending all the theaters, which course, Mr. Spurgeon says, is like pouring rose water in the great sewer to purify it.

But now I am too fast again. I remember to have heard of a man—there's always one—who actually traced his conversion to the impressions made upon him while being initiated into the Odd-fellows or Masonic lodge. Why, certainly, whisky has saved a life now and then—so they say—therefore we would better all go into the business—it is so humanitarian. I should be glad to hear from some of the brethren on this subject. It is certainly a grave question, wherever I have taken observations.—St. Louis Observer.

A LUTHERAN VIEW—WHY LODGE MEMBERS SHOULD NOT BE ADMITTED TO THE COMMUNION.

We know the Sacrament has a two-fold effect, hence he who administers the Lord's Supper to one of a different faith certainly is held responsible. The Scriptures distinctly say, that ministers are "stewards of the mysteries of God."

As stewards they are to be faithful, and dare not administer the Lord's Supper to those who are not one with us in confession. If a member of the lodge will have nothing to do with the way of salvation that is taught by his lodge and that is contrary to the faith of the church, but confesses that he holds our doctrine as true, nevertheless the Lord's Supper is not to be administered to him until he gives evidence that he is honest in his profession, and severs his connection with the lodge; the same is required of him as of a Methodist or Reformed who, believing our doctrine and desiring to commune with us, must be denied the Holy Supper until he severs his connection with the erroneous church. If members of secret societies do not understand this, we should know that the ministers are called to instruct and warn respecting false doctrine, not according to the will of the people but according to the Word of God, to which alone they are bound. God says distinctly that we cannot have a two-fold confession. Whoever in his heart truly believes our confession and is a Lutheran Christian will confess with us, though he does not yet fully understand every point in the false system of faith which he formerly confessed. Then only is he honest. Even a member of the lodge, who knows nothing of the erroneous teachings of his lodge and of which he cannot at once be convinced, must not be admitted to communion, though at the same time we must admit that he is a Christian; for members of secret societies that confess a false religion and members of erring church communions belong to one and the same class. There are at times lodge members who are Christians, honest people who are in earnest. Such people, however, we also find in erring church organizations. In the Romish church, for example, there are people who do not know all the erroneous doctrines of that church. It is ignorance that holds them there. Such must be instructed before they are admitted to the Lord's Supper, and they must be required to abandon their errors. Just so we must proceed with members of the lodge. Not even for a season should they be admitted to the Sacrament of the Altar. We do not administer it to our children until they have been instructed; why should we proceed differently with strangers?

It is claimed that secret societies are not religious bodies. It is a fact that in our day the world inverts the order of God. The sects think that confessions are of no weight; inquiry should be made only as to the disposition of the heart; according to that we must judge, though no one can see into the heart; no inquiry is made as to confession. As long as a man confesses himself to the deism of the lodge he cannot be honest in his intentions. One of the chief difficulties in leading people to a knowledge of the erroneous teachings of the lodge lies in this, that in many local lodges the religious service is omitted. Only in certain degrees is prayer prescribed. Many lodgemen, therefore, have never heard a prayer in their meetings. The lodge is specifically severed from church organizations; it is no church, but organized heathenism. While the church presents her confessions in theses and anti-theses, the confession of the lodge consists principally in negations. The lodge is a union of people of all churches, including Jews and heathen, and possesses a universal confession which all can accept. It is therefore not an easy task to prove that the lodge has a specific confession. True, it has a positive doctrine: for instance, "the doctrine of a Higher Being."

In the Masonic ritual we find church forms. From the 30th degree it is required that members of the Masonic lodge believe in Christ, etc. Yet, lodges are indifferent with reference to the church; they regard all religions as indifferent matters and foolishness; their religion of reason and nature however they deem the best. If a Christian, therefore, is thus minded, he is to be instructed. In regard to this a general rule can be laid down. This is indeed the point of controversy between us and the General Council, whose rule: "Lutheran altars for Lutheran communicants only," is overthrown when she allows exceptions and leaves it with the individual case with the conscience of the individual pastor. When the Word of God declares anything, there are no exceptions. With reference to secretists, on the other hand, we must be careful not to say or declare too much; especially must we be on our guard in making citations from their writings, inasmuch as these are often verbally changed, and we then only show our ignorance.

Three points are sufficient to convince all who desire to be convinced respecting the evil of the lodge, namely: 1. The false god which the lodge acknowledges; 2. The false oath they require; 3. The false way to salvation they teach.

Lodgeism is just as evil, yea, more so than sectarianism. As ministers we should say: This is our position, and do you not wish to accept it, then remain away from the Lord's table. Lodges are religious societies. The Odd-fellows require their members to believe in God; they indeed confess a Christ, but not the Christ of the Scriptures, which is God's only Son, the Redeemer and Saviour of the world; their Christ is a great master and teacher, a son of God only in the sense in which all persons are children of God.

A synod has done her duty only when she distinctly and positively declares her position with respect to lodges which have religious tendencies. This has already been done by this district Synod at her annual meeting held at New Washington, Ohio.

Nevertheless, if ministers, year after year, administer the Lord's Supper to members of the lodge, it is the duty of a synod to call them to an account. Inasmuch as those lodges, having religious ceremonies and tendencies, are religious bodies, whose religion, being erroneous and of the natural man, stands in opposition to and is a denial of the true, revealed Christian religion, we hold that members of the church belonging to lodges shall not be admitted to the Lord's Supper, until they renounce the false religion of their respective fraternities and withdraw from the lodge.—W. A. Bowman, in the Lutheran Standard, June 20.

"See the capitalists riding along in their fine carriages!" yelled a socialist speaker at a meeting in a Chicago suburb the other evening. "Where, I ask you, are our horses and carriages?" "S'loon-keeper's drivin' mine 'round," responded a maudlin and red-nosed reformer of society, with dejection, and the orator changed the subject.—Ram's Horn.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Franklin Park and the labor meeting.—A Congregational church report.—Anti-secrecy scores another victory in Boston.—A pleasant occasion.

The labor associations propose to hold their meeting at Franklin Park on the Fourth, in spite of the refusal of the Park Commissioners to allow it, as this will give them what they desire—a test case to bring before the courts. I am rather inclined to think that good, old, democratic Ben Franklin, who gave the grounds to Boston, if he could come back to earth to decide this question, would do so in the interests of the fullest liberty consistent with peace and order. It is rather remarkable that in this Puritan city the public grounds are not as free for public purposes as in the king-ruled and priest-ruled cities of the old world. The argument that if once allowed for general meetings there would be nothing to prevent the gathering of anarchist assemblies is no argument at all, for there are laws made and provided for dealing with treasonable or blasphemous utterances that are ample to meet the exigencies of any case which might arise. Far better to run an improbable risk and thus avoid a real danger, and there always is real danger in suppressing free speech. They are the words spoken in secret places that are full of peril and menace,—not those uttered boldly under the broad, open heavens. It will be interesting to watch the outcome of this struggle.

A report of the work of the churches belonging to the Middlesex South Conference for the last year, which now lies before me, has some points of more than local interest. For instance, of the twenty churches of that conference, three were organized in the seventeenth century, and five in the eighteenth. The one of which the writer is a member, though not among the very oldest, started into life just as the sun of the latter century was rising. I suppose the young people of that day looked back to the landing of the Pilgrims as across an interminable distance, while Thanksgiving and fast days had grown to be institutions already hoary with antiquity. But the last hundred years may well be reckoned as equal to two or three of the one preceding, if we take into account all the varied interests which make life now so much more full and busy, as well as richer and better worth the living. To look back on the tremendous strides made in science and every department of human industry since those early churches were founded, is enough to make the brain whirl; and one is almost inclined to think with pity of the fathers who fell asleep a century ago under their mossy headstones, and never saw this wonderful day. Only it is just possible that if they, with prescient vision, could see the time of trouble before us which Lieutenant Tottem seems to apprehend so clearly in that wonderful series of articles which he is writing for Leslie's, the tables would be turned, and they would be the ones to pity their unfortunate descendants. But the points which most seriously impress me in reading this report are, first: That these churches have expended for various charities, not counting the money raised for their own support or the help of their own poor, over $25,000. And when we recollect that every cent of this has gone for benevolent purposes, and to help in many cases those of another race, color and religion, the most superficial mind can see that it is somewhat different from lodge "benevolence." The other point is that in fifteen out of these twenty churches, the additions by profession have only exceeded the deaths by one. But in the days of our fathers they did something more than to simply hold their own. And what seems stranger still, it is these very Congregational churches which caress and pet the lodge vampire that is feeding on their life-blood.

I see that Rev. J. F. Lovering has accepted a unanimous call to the Broadway Congregational church in Somerville. It is to be hoped that he will feel the changed atmosphere—for that it has changed in relation to the anti-secrecy question, no unprejudiced mind can doubt—so perceptibly that he will repent of his false worships, and no longer lend his name and influence to build up a system which contradicts and opposes the Christianity he is set to preach.

Nothing has happened so opportunely to give our cause in New England public ventilation, as the report through the associated press in all the Boston papers, as well as in many others throughout the country, of Rev. J. P. Stoddard's speech at the Baptist Ministers' meeting. His able reply in the Journal to Rev. Geo. H. Cleveland of Melrose, was another victory scored, for the Journal is one of our oldest and most conservative papers, and largely taken by the class of citizens most important to reach. Masons, when defending their beloved institution, seem especially inclined to forget the adage that haste to put on a coat implies that it fits the wearer, or Mr. Cleveland would not have resented Bro. Stoddard's general arraignment of Masonry, as "an insinuation against his character and that of every other Mason present." And now Rev. S. L. Holman, a member of Tremont Temple church, comes up to its defence in a most remarkable answer to Mr. Stoddard at the last Baptist Ministers' meeting. If the Traveller reports him correctly, he denied that Masonic ceremonies are absurd, or indecent, or ridiculous; and said that he had never witnessed any ceremony that he would not have permitted in his own parlor in presence of his wife and daughter! By what mental reservation Mr. Holman succeeded in quieting his conscience while making such a marvelous statement, it would puzzle a Jesuit to tell. But when we think of the spell of silence that has been on the secular press of New England till now, we may well thank God that it is broken at last, and that the truth is preached whether men will hear or whether they will forbear.

A company of friends of the cause, including among them Bro. and Sister Stoddard, Bro. Hoyt, and the venerable Milton Ford of Washington, with his wife, visited the writer last Thursday, and picnicked on her shady lawn, kindly providing all creature comforts and leaving behind them substantial tokens of the same. At the close Rev A. A. Hoyt took the floor (if that expression is allowable of an out-doors speaker) and made some remarks on the subject of God's Word as the true source of all wisdom and happiness for nations or individuals, and the only weapon with which to meet evil. It was not, however, until he neared the end of his discourse that I thought his remarks were beginning to have a personal bearing; and when he on behalf of the friends presented me with a beautiful, interleaved Oxford Bible, I was not only surprised but overwhelmed, especially as it was followed by a gift from the ladies' presented in a few fitting words by Mrs. Stoddard, of an elegant table-cloth and napkins. It is not always easy to express one's thanks when the heart is fullest, and as some contributed to the gift who were not able to enjoy the occasion with us, let me take the opportunity here to speak my gratitude to each and all of them for their kindly remembrance. Dear friends, as I daily handle this precious volume, so much more beautiful and convenient than I ever dreamed of possessing, it is with the prayer, God bless you all, and grant that I though a weak woman may learn to so wield this wonderful sword of the Spirit, as to pierce the refuge of lies, and help many a captive soul to escape therefrom. Thus shall we be co-workers together with Him, and receive (not the weakest or the humblest forgot or overlooked) a glorious reward at last.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, July 1, 1891.

Yesterday the attendance at the Glen Echo Chautauqua was larger by many hundreds than it has yet been on a single day, and everybody who visited the grounds appeared to greatly enjoy the excellent and varied program, which included lectures by the following well-known gentlemen: Dr. T. F. Wright, on "Palestine as it Was;" Prof. H. A. Denman, on "Semi-tropical Fruits;" Ex-Senator J. J. Ingalls, of Kansas, on "Problems of our Second Century;" Constantine Sternberg, on "Richard Wagner," and Dr. Lysander Dickerman, on "The Hebrews in Egypt."

The greater portion of the crowd was attracted by the announcement of ex-Senator Ingalls' lecture, there being much curiosity among those who had so often heard him make bitter partisan political speeches in the Senate Chamber, to hear what he had to say and how he would say it on a subject so different from those he had previously handled. His lecture was a revelation to those who had before only considered him as a politician, as it proved him to be in addition to an accomplished and artistic word-builder, a deep student of history and social economy. As an orator, Mr. Ingalls has few superiors, but of course this has been well-known in Washington for many years, and those familiar with his personal habits, when a member of the Senate, have also long known that he was one of the best-read men, on general subjects, in America. When living here he devoted very little time to the social life of the capital, preferring to use his spare time in studying and reading, and, owing to the thorough manner in which he masters every subject he takes up, he is a most delightful conversationalist when he chooses to be.

Among the twenty-eight new members received at the summer Communion of the N. Y. Avenue Presbyterian church, on Sunday, were two daughters of Senator Gorman and one of Justice Harlan.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor have worked up a great interest in the National Convention to be held at Minneapolis July 9–12, and besides the special train which will carry the delegates and their friends over one route, another route is advertising roundtrip-tickets, good on any train, for one fare.

To-day the weather bureau was formally transferred from the War to the Agricultural Department, and at the request of Secretary Rusk, of the latter department, President Harrison has assigned the following officers who have been connected with the bureau to continued duty therewith until further notice: Maj. H. H. C. Dunwoody, Lt. W. A. Glassford, Lt. J. E. Maxfield, and Lt. J. P. Finley. Prof. M. W. Harrington, of the University of Michigan, has been appointed director of the bureau.

Assistant Attorney General Shields delivered the regular weekly address to the Young Men's Christian Association Sunday afternoon, and very appropriately he chose for his subject "True Courage." After showing his hearers how much greater moral courage is than physical, or as some people call it, mere brute courage, which does not fear physical pain, the speaker took the life of Joshua as an illustration of what true courage is, holding that no courage could exceed that displayed by Joshua when he pleaded with his brethren to have an unfaltering trust in God, though they had been in bondage for four hundred years, and he strongly impressed upon his hearers that the key-note of Joshua's life and character is contained in his own utterance: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." The concluding words of Mr. Shields' are worthy of being memorized by every young man living: "But above all, be systematic in your cause and be a man of prayer. Do not neglect the little things, which go to make up a harmonious whole, and you will have the character of a true man, respected and honored by all who know you."

The outdoor temperance work is being vigorously pushed by a noble band of men and women who are not afraid of a little perspiration spoiling their complexion or making their faces look shiny. Instead of running away to the mountains or seashore as soon as the sun gets too warm for comfort, these good people put up a tent with open sides, well provided with comfortable chairs and palm-leaf fans, and proceed to preach the cold-water Gospel to those who cannot get away from the city, and with the aid of music, vocal and instrumental, strive to make the temperance tent more attractive than the corner-saloon; and I know of a number of wives and mothers who always include, on account of benefits received, in their daily prayers a "God bless the good men and women who work in the temperance tent."

REFORM NEWS.

FROM OUR WESTERN AGENT.

WHEATON, Ill.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—While in Michigan I preached and lectured at the Brighton and Pleasant Valley churches, of which Rev. H. A. Day, the Secretary of the Michigan Christian Association, is pastor. He spent one year in the anti-secret society lecture work, as agent of the Michigan Christian Association.

While working in Michigan the matter of holding a meeting of the Michigan Christian Association at Lowell was discussed, and at one time we had nearly decided to do so; but it was finally determined to hold a business meeting in connection with a ministerial association, to be held near Allegan, on the 3rd of June, and to invite President C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton, Ill., to give an address on secret societies, on the evening of that day, in the city of Allegan. Having been called, unexpectedly, to return to Illinois to prepare for the Chicago Conference of May 14th, I could not give the personal attention to the Michigan meeting that I had intended; but being assured by Rev. Mr. Badder, who resides near Allegan, and is pastor of several country churches, that he would publish an appointment for President Blanchard to lecture on the "Relation of the Secret Orders to the Christian Religion," in Music Hall, I felt justificd in carrying out the plan, being confident that Rev. Bro. Badder would faithfully advertise the meeting, and that President Blanchard would more than meet the expectation of his audience.

A rain set in, the night that Pres. Blanchard spoke in Allegan, which, while it was not severe enough to hinder the holding of a meeting, prevented many, doubtless, from attending, especially those residing in the country.

Since the Conference in Chicago I have been laboring in Illinois. I visited Aurora, Princeton and Wyanette, and spoke at two country churches where Rev. Wm. Pinkney is pastor. I called upon several of the friends, who gave, or promised to give, substantial aid. Rev. Mr. Pinkney manifested a lively interest in having his young people instructed in the evils of secret societies.

From Wyanette I went to Hopewell and Bethel churches. Owing to a heavy rainfall, I spoke but once, but made some calls, distributing literature and encouraging the friends to active cooperation with the N. C. A. in carrying forward this department of the Lord's work.

From here I went to Gerlaw, Little York and Monmouth. Rev. Mr. Morrow, pastor of the U. P. church, of Gerlaw, wished me to address his people; but as they were about to hold a sacramental service, it was deferred until I should come that way again.

At Little York, a number subscribed for the Cynosure; among them, the young pastor of the U. P. church.

There are those at Little York who appreciate the work of the N. C. A., and are willing helpers.

From there I went to Monmouth, and spent a little time at this seat of learning. It was Commencement week, and I had the pleasure of listening to the interesting and able essays and orations of the graduating class. Here, also, I found warm sympathizers with the anti-secret society work and willing helpers.

From Monmouth I went to Galesburg and made some calls. Here I found earnest reformers, who are determined that the work shall not fail for want of needed support.

Leaving Galesburg, I came to Eden, and Hanna City, and Smithville, and was greatly encouraged by the generous sympathy manifested by the friends at each of these places. New subscribers were secured for the Cynosure, and help was generously donated to carry on the work of the N. C. A.

I spent the Sabbath with Rev. J. Harper, and preached for him, at Smithville, in the morning, and in the afternoon at the U. P. church, near Hanna City.

I left these kind friends, feeling grateful to God and to them for the warm sympathy and generous aid they bestowed upon me and upon the cause I represent.

I should never be tempted to despond, as Elijah did when contending against the Baal-worship of his day, if all who are opposed to the Christless worships of the lodge would manifest the warm sympathy and cheerful readiness to help in this department of the Lord's work that was so generously bestowed by this noble-hearted people.

From Hanna City I went to Wenona, and was again cheered by the liberality and zeal manifested by the friends there. I called upon the pastor of the Presbyterian church, who was present when I discussed the relation of the secret lodge system to the Christian religion, on a former visit to Wenona. The lodge men of Wenona were troubled when this faithful servant of Christ testified from his pulpit that the god of the lodge is not the God of the Bible that Christians worship. Some of the lodge brethren went to one of the elders of the church, who is a Royal Arch Mason, and complained of the utterances of the pastor. It happened that this elder was not present when the pastor reproved the fraternity brethren for worshiping strange gods. So after listening to the complaints of his lodge brothers, he waited on the pastor, that he might learn from his lips, or from his manuscript, the precise nature of the offence charged. The pastor not only gave his elder a correct version of his pulpit utterances, but so ably demonstrated the truth of what he had said that the elder returned to his lodge brethren and reported that what the pastor had said was the truth.

I am heartily glad that this elder is beginning to see that the god worshiped in the lodge is not the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and that the Christless lodge-worship is, therefore, a false worship, and that those who worship in the lodge (like the idolaters in the days of Moses and David and Paul) worship devils.

When I remember how zealously this same elder defended Masonry a year or two ago, I am led to exclaim, "Surely the church, as well as the world, moves." I am the more impressed with this fact when I call to mind the case of a pastor of another denomination who, a year or two ago, spoke from his pulpit in favor of the lodge, and when I came into that community, opposed my having his church to lecture in. I conversed with him, and gave him literature, and lectured in his neighborhood in another house. Now he has renounced Masonry and has become an active Anti-mason. I received the assurance from his own lips, that he was now a fellow-worker in the good cause.

From Wenona I went to Streator.

I was caught in a rainstorm while going on foot from Streator to Smithdale to call on Bro. Jacob Phillips. I reached his house wet and muddy, and spent the night with him, and went away strengthened by his sympathy and the practical interest he takes in exalting Christ and pulling down the strongholds of Satan—the secret lodges.

Leaving Streator, I called at Ottawa and made the acquaintance of a Swede who is a member of the Baptist church. He hospitably entertained me for the night, and invited me to call whenever I came that way.

From Ottawa I returned home, and have been spending a week with my family. I worked four weeks in Illinois, and sent in sixty-two new names to the Cynosure list of subscribers. I make a point to put the Cynosure and other literature into the hands of as many ministers as possible.

Satan has organized a vast conspiracy to infidelize and heathenize the church of the living God through the agency of the secret lodge system. To a very large extent he has already pre-empted our young men and is keeping them from the church. Is it not time to awake and by united prayer and effort seek to arouse the churches and unite them in the defense of our holy Christianity against the pagan-infidel philosophy of the lodge?

Yours for Christ and his Gospel,

C. F. HAWLEY.

A SABBATH IN BIRMINGHAM, (ALA.)

BRIERFIELD, Ala., June, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On the 13th of June I made a trip to Birmingham, the magic city of the South. Though I have oftentimes passed through the city, yet it was my first formal visit to the place. It is well called the "Magic City." It has sprung up within a few years as by magic. When I first came South, seventeen years ago, it was an insignificant railway station; now it has 64,000 inhabitants. It is the Pittsburgh of the South. Iron and coal abound. All kinds of manufacturing establishments are here. There are furnaces and rolling mills, a tack factory, a glass factory, and various other industries, that make a continual hum. Thousands of people flock here to make money. An immense business in all lines is carried on. Buildings are constantly going up. There are some magnificent edifices here. The streets are broad and straight. The public schools are under the best system of any in the South. In the white schools there are 2,900 children. In the colored there are 2,300. There are about 48 teachers employed in the latter schools.

I may say that Birmingham is a great city; great in its manufactories; great in its commercial business; great, very great, in its wickedness. Like Paul in Athens, my soul was stirred when I saw the city wholly given to ungodliness. Everybody is after the "mighty dollar," and the majority are perfectly unscrupulous as to how they get it. The population is largely made up of those who went there solely to make money. This thought at once gives us a clue to its character. Satan's two strongest agencies have their fortress here. The saloon and the lodge are a power almost irresistible. The saloon is carrying on its deadly work at all hours of the day, a large part of the night, and, slyly, on the Lord's day. I may simply say that the city is infested with them. Because of this, crimes of every degree of aggravation constantly prevail. It takes all that an efficient municipal regulation can do, with a most vigilant police force, to keep things under; and then they do not altogether succeed. The lodge power, among both colored and white, is strong. Among the colored there are Freemasons, Odd-fellows, Immaculates, Knights of Pythias, and various minor orders. The spirituality of the churchs, because of these, is greatly dwarfed. The pastor of the First Colored Baptist Church, Rev. W. R. Pettiford, has made a manly fight against them. In it he has stood almost entirely alone. He has had support from the pastor of the Congregational church, but as far as we have been able to learn, the ministers of the other churches are in league with the lodge, preach "big" anniversary sermons for them, and throw all their influence in their favor. Bro. Pettiford has almost suffered persecution because of his unflinching position. He has been most uncompromising in his attitude toward them. He has been the means of setting many a-thinking on the subject, and we trust great good will result from his persevering efforts. He has preached against the lodge, and refused to read any notice

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PRESENTATION—A JOYFUL OCCASION.

BOSTON, June 26, 1891.

It is a great pleasure to chronicle the happy event of a Bible presentation to Miss E. E. Flagg, your gifted New England correspondent, by a few of her many friends. A company of thirteen, from Boston, enjoyed a picnic under the sheltering shade in Bro. Flagg's nicely shaven grounds, where they were joined by the Congregational pastor and his wife, the president and members of the W. C. T. U., and other citizens of Wellesley, in a feast for the body, mind and soul. After supper a hymn was sung, when Bro. A. A. Hoyt, with appropriate remarks, and in behalf of the friends, presented to our surprised hostess the most complete Oxford Teacher's Bible, with helps, that could be purchased in this market; to which a few useful articles were added. Miss Flagg responded in her own sincere and happy way of thanksgiving. Her pastor spoke briefly, in sympathy with the occasion, and after prayer another hymn closed the services of the afternoon. Sociability was next in order, in which all participated with a hearty good will, until the evening hour of prayer, which was spent in reading the Scriptures, prayer and testimonies, interspersed with songs of Zion. At 9 o'clock the happy company dispersed, bearing many pleasant memories from a Christian gathering, and a home where the newly-trimmed lamp and light of God's Word remained as a token of esteem, and, as we humbly trust, to gladden the hearts of our brother and sister, and to strengthen and cheer them on to new and yet greater victories for Christ and his kingdom. J. P. STODDARD.

THE PERILOUS TIMES IN THE LAST DAYS.

EAST NORTHFIELD, Mass., June 22, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your tracts and papers reached me in due time, and, God being my helper, I will try and distribute them in a way that will do the most good, to give light to my fellowmen, on the great evil of secret societies.

I praise God that so many Christian workers are receiving light on this sin that has led numbers of young men down to ruin; and my earnest prayer is that God may hasten the day when the evangelical churches will take their stand for the truth as it is in Jesus Christ, our only Saviour from these traps that the devil has set so extensively throughout this Republic and other nations.

I want to thank God for the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, for when we have him, we have everything that is good, and so we have no need of the lodge and the things that are of the world. We read in John 11:15: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." So we are taught in God's Word that men who love the world love not God, and that is this true we can see all around us.

The great masses of the people, to-day, are not being taught the truth as it is written in God's Word, and consequently are living in error. Let us then take God at his word and teach men that Jesus Christ is the only way whereby we can be saved.

Mr. Moody preached to us at Northfield, June 7, from 2 Tim. 3:1–5.: "This know, that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy," etc. He thought we are living in our last days, that the perilous times have come, and that young men would find it no easy matter to work for Christ at all times, for they will often be obliged to walk without other company if they walk with God; and I wish to say, right here, that is true to-day; if a man is true to God, he is unpopular and alone, most of the time, in this great work—at least when the Lord is using him; but I wish to say, with Daniel, it is better to be in the den of lions with God, than out of it without him. Mr. Moody repeated the words of the text above quoted many times:—"Men shall be lovers of their own selves"—and it is true with men of to-day, I am sorry to say, for selfishness is not of God, and is the root of all sin. May God help us to know that true love which comes from Jesus Christ; then we will help those around us to see the way to eternal life, and show by our lives that we have been born again—that we are not of this world, but in it to do good. We must live in the world, but not let the world live in us; if we do, we shall sink as easily as a boat filled with water. It is well to have the boat in the water, but dangerous to let the water come into it.

In closing, I wish to bear my testimony to being counted with the few who take the Bible way to heaven, and help roll on the old chariot-wheels and hasten the day of Christ's coming, when he shall take his children home. F. W. WEED.

PITH AND POINT.

OUR GREAT WORK.

"You are engaged in a good work; a reformation of this kind is greatly needed in the South, and any work I can do in the interest of humanity will be at your service."—JOS. H. MILLER, Marietta, Ga.

THE CHURCHES SNUBBED.

"The Christian Cynosure expresses my sentiments exactly in its opposition to all kinds of secret organization. I think the sooner these eating cancers in the church and society are discontinued the better will it be for the stability of our country and the moral, religious and intellectual development of the people. Because of these secret organizations the church for which Christ died is being snubbed and derided on every hand; but, thank heaven, our God is a man of war and the Lord is his name. While the morning still seems darkened we will yet have a bright noon. We may not live to see it in our day, but it will nevertheless come; so let us battle for the right and God will reward us."—REV. P. A. JONES, (col'd) Smoke Bend, La.

THE GREATEST SIN OF THE LODGES.

"I do not profess to be well informed in regard to secret lodges; but I do know that their influence is destructive to the interests of the Christian church. . . . I never knew a very active member of the lodge to be very spiritually-minded, or a very active member of the church. Admitting that such orders were nearly all founded for a good moral purpose—the best that can be claimed for them—and that they serve some moral ends, and charitable purposes, they all the more certainly, therefore, inculcate in fine young men the spirit of self-righteousness, and the sufficiency of good works; a snare and delusion which divert them from the Gospel of Christ and lead them to belittle his salvation. To my mind, this is the greatest sin for which the lodges have to account—one that lies by their every door, and one that I have found few members of secret orders prepared to deny."—REV. WM. L. PEARSON, Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

CHRISTIANS CANNOT FELLOWSHIP WITH LODGERY.

"When a secret society has assumed a character harmful to church, state and home, it should be opposed—such as the Jesuits, the Mormons, the Druids, Freemasons and Odd-fellows. I think if God Almighty, in his wisdom and foreknowledge, had seen that secret societies would be a blessing to the world in general, he would have instituted them as well as his blessed church, which carries on her banners the motto—'What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops.' (Matt. 10:27.) Not too well can the church of Christ heed the admonishing words of Paul to the church of Ephesus, 'And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them; for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret.' (Eph. 5:11,12.)"—REV. HENRY HETZLER, Eureka, S. D.

SECRECY IMPLIES SELFISHNESS.

"I am opposed to any society being secret, and to many secret societies. Those which I know to be harmful are Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship. I cannot bear incorporated or combined selfishness, nor secrecy."—REV. STANLEY B. BEARD, Bowling Green, Ohio.

A TIMELY SUGGESTION.

"To my mind the church should make more of the fraternal element, and should be much more liberal with its time and money in relieving the sick, suffering and poor. The stinginess and negligence of Christ's church is the greatest source of strength to the fraternal orders."—REV. S. J. BEACH, Cedar Falls, Iowa.

[The brother's opinion of Christian benevolence is hardly correct; but even the absence of it in the churches would be no excuse for an oath-bound secret order to perpetuate a system of religion in opposition to Christ and his church, and one, also, that exacts money from its members before it will relieve their necessities. We can show Christian churches in Chicago who exceed an equal number of lodges in the extent and good quality of their benevolence.—ED.]

HAS NO USE FOR THEM.

"I am opposed to all secret societies; cannot name any that I do not believe harmful; have not found one that I could conscientiously unite with."—REV. T. M. ASHLEY, Golden, Colo.

A STRONG FOE TO CHRISTIANITY.

"During my ministry . . . I have increasingly come to the conviction, from my actual observation, that all kinds of secret-death-penalty, oath-bound allegiance to lodges is one of the strongest foes to reform, good morals, and the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. I have seen the lodge preferred to temperance, good morals in the community, and to the religion of Christ, by members of the church and so-called Christian men in the community. 'No man can serve two masters.'"—REV. E. B. CLEMMER, Leona, Kan.

THE CYNOSURE'S INFLUENCE.

"I presume the Cynosure, its tracts and those lecturers who handle the subject (anti-secrecy) with clearness and candor, have a wider influence than is imagined. May the good work go on."—REV. EDWIN MARTIN, Crested Butte, Colo.

THE PRINCIPLE IS WRONG.

"While not objecting strenuously to those societies whose professed aim is mere insurance, whose secrets amount to nothing but the private transaction of business, or to secret temperance organizations, whose sole aim is good [all of which objects do not require any secrecy.—ED.], I believe that the principle is wrong, that all the good done can be done better without, and that the secrecy is a frequent source of injustice and of peril to the good of the community and the church. Therefore, while recognizing a decided difference in societies, I am opposed to all secret societies."—REV. W. E. BARTON, Ballington, Ohio.

LITERATURE.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA of Knowledge and Language. With illustrations. Vol. XXIX. Perseverance—Pluperfect. New York: John B. Alden, Publisher; Chicago: 242 Wabash Avenue. Half-seal covers.

This convenient reference book continues to commend itself with each new issue, and in all its value is ably maintained. Its completeness is due to thorough research on the part of its editors, whose facilities for securing correct information seem almost limitless, and whose labors result in giving to the world, in a compact form, the latest intelligence concerning the important topics included under each letter of the alphabet. This feature, added to the variety of subjects treated, and the concise and agreeable manner in which each is presented, is one of the strongest commendations of the entire work. The needs of modern students in nearly every branch of literature, science, art, and biography, are evidently considered and met in its careful expositions.

LUX MUNDI (The Light of the World), and Other Tracts for the Times on Swedenborg and Modern Thought. Chicago: Western New-Church Union, 17 East Van Buren Street.

The author of this little volume, the Rev. L. P. Mercer, pastor of the principal Swedenborgian (or New-Church) congregation in Chicago, is understood to be one of the ablest exponents of the New Jerusalem faith (founded by Swedenborg) in this country. He is certainly a logical defender of its doctrines, and a fluent writer and preacher. But these doctrines have so much of mysticism, not to say infatuation, about them as to impress the reader and hearer as if they were, like poetry, to be considered mere flights of fancy, lacking the practical element of Christianity to make them effective in convincing men of individual sins, or of converting them from the error of their ways. In other words, this system of religion seems more appropriate for a church of angels than of men and women struggling for salvation under the curse of Adam. Mr. Mercer certainly has exalted ideas of goodness and purity, with which he would inspire others, while the doctrine of the atonement, as understood by the orthodox churches, seems to have a secondary value in his mind. The reader of these eight tracts, however, may obtain the New-Church views of the Swedenborgian beliefs from their perusal.

MIRIAM HETH: A Tale of the Times of the Christ. By Rev. A. J. Holt, D.D. (Written in Jerusalem.) One volume. Published by John B. Alden, New York, and 242 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The interest that gathers about the New Testament, the life and times of Christ, and the story of Mary Magdalene, will inspire the reader of this poem. It introduces Miriam, the Jewish maiden, in the flush of youth and beauty, the child of a reputable father, deprived of a mother's love by death, and exposed to the temptations of the social life which prevailed at Jerusalem in the days of our Lord. Later:

> "The damsel was betrothed," they said,
> "By Heth, her father, lately dead,
> Good faith, to Simon Necho, he
> A merchant and a Pharisee.
> And yet the girl was not a maid,
> But false to Simon she had played;"

And so, according to the Jewish law, she was sentenced to be stoned to death. By flight she escaped this fate, and after sundry adventures she is brought to hear the preaching of our Lord, converted, and afterwards is represented as living as Mary Magdalene lived, a devoted, loving follower of Jesus, who is said to have changed her name from Miriam Heth to the one by which she is now best known. One could wish that the metre of the verse were less Hudibrastic, but the simplicity and nobility of the poem are well maintained.

The frontispiece of the Cosmopolitan for July is a full-page view of "A Hawking Party." Elizabeth Bisland writes about the "London Charities," with several views of characters in that metropolis. Miss Frances E. Willard's portrait, and a view of the new W. C. T. U. Temple in this city, lead off in "A Modern Crusade," by Chas. C. Waddle—a history of the most modern temperance movement. The other portraits in the article are those of Mary Clement Leavitt, Mother Thompson, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Margaret B. Lucas, Pundita Ramabai, Mary A. Livermore, Hannah W. Smith, and members of the W. C. T. U. of Tokio, Japan. There are also illustrated papers on "Trout-fishing in the Laurentides;" on "The Diamond Fields of South Africa," by E. J. Lawler; on Cushing and Curts' "Two Modern Knights Errant," by Gen. James Grant Wilson; on "Submarine Boats for Coast Defence," by Lieut. W. S. Hughes, U. S. N.; a story, "At the Dam of San Marko" (illustrated), by Alva M. Kerr; other articles on "The Art of Embroidery," by A. G. Radcliffe; "Ostrich Farming in California," by Emma G. Paul; "Country Life in Honduras," by Gertrude G. De Aguirre; "The Elixir of Pain," continued, by Boyesen; "Falcons and Falconry;" and the usual monthly departments, make up a very readable midsummer number of this attractive magazine. Published in New York. Price 25 cents.

St. Nicholas for July is brilliant with pictures, verse and story. Among the prominent attractions are "Rescued by the Enemy," by Sabria Avery; "Storm-bound Above the Clouds," by Frederick Funston; continuations of "The Fortunes of Toby Trafford," by J. T. Trowbridge, "The Swimming-Hole Stories," by Walter S. Bigelow, and "Through the Back Ages," by Teresa C. Crofton; "Douglas Jerrold (with portrait), by Walter Jerrold; "The Home of the Empress Josephine," by Mary S. Roberts, with a variety of lighter articles for young and old, at home or on an "outing." Published by the Century Co., New York.

The July number of the Ladies' Home Journal contains two symposiums—one, "The Woman in the City," by six contributors; another, "The Mother in the Country," by six contributors also. "The Wife of 'Uncle Remus'" furnishes an illustrated sketch of Mrs. Joel Chandler Harris; Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney's story of "A Golden Gossip," and Jessie O'Donnell's "A Soul from Pudge's Corners," are continued, and the domestic and social departments are well filled and of household interest. Sold at news depots; price 10 cents.

OBITUARY.

REV. JEFFERSON R. JOHNSON

was born in Butler county, Ohio, Dec. 29, 1808, and was joined in matrimony with Miss Elizabeth B. Allhands, April 28, 1829. In September of the same year he was converted, through the influence of his wife, and joined the M. E. church, and remained in the fellowship of that church, an active and influential member, while life lasted. He emigrated to Logansport, Indiana, the fall of 1836, and, eight miles north of that place, helped to build up the church. In the autumn of 1859, he removed to Fort Wayne, Ind., where God wonderfully blessed him and his labors in his cause.

In the summer of 1860, he moved to Iowa, and was licensed to preach, Jan. 28, 1865, at Burlington, Iowa, under the pastorate of L. B. Dennis. In the fall of 1879 he left Morning Sun, Iowa, and returned to Peru, Ind., where his wife died, Feb. 1, 1880. About two years afterward, in April, he removed from Peru to Washington Territory, landing at La Conner, Skagit county; and on the 5th of May, 1882, he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah L. Wallace, at Whatcom, W. T., with whom he lived most happily until death.

In the following September, after his union with Miss Wallace, he was sent, as a supply, to Dungeness circuit, Clallam county, W. T., where his ministration was received with great acceptability. He was a burning and a shining light; filled with Christian zeal, and every-day piety; enjoying the fellowship of the Holy Spirit, and the love of God. He was strongly opposed to all secret societies, believing them to be contrary to the Word of God, and utterly opposed to the church of Jesus Christ, and inconsistent with Christian living, and our Republican government.

His death occurred at Morning Sun, Iowa, May 15, 1891, aged 82 years, 4 months and 16 days. He has left an affectionate wife, who deeply feels his loss; and six children, the off-spring of the first marriage.

"Gone to the grave is our loved one,
Gone to the silent tomb;
Now when we meet,
This one we greet"
"Never again in our" home.
He has "gone down the valley—"
"The dark, death valley;"
"We'll see" his "face nevermore"
"Till we pass down the valley,
The dark, death valley,
And meet" him "on the other shore."

ON ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies) degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by ex-President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; paper cover, 50cts.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and other secret societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms, and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers, is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10cts each.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

General A. W. Riley:—I hold that the difference between the Christian and a heathen religion is, that one has morality and the other has not. And when our churches refuse to speak of such subjects as slavery, liquor-selling and secret societies, they are becoming heathen religions; that is, religions without morals.

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistical to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield; In conducting the governments of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

General J. W. Phelps:—All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions.

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1891.

A VERY BAD FASHION.

Like numerous other adages of the past, which partake largely of ancient wisdom, "Speak no evil of the dead" has been gradually perverted from its original meaning—to manifest charity for the frailties of our departed friends, and to let the pall of oblivion cover their faults as the clods of the valley do their physical remains. But the fashion of the present age is not only to hide their iniquities, but to bestow upon the departed undue commendation, and invest their acts and characters with a lustre that while they lived was never visible to their friends and neighbors, or to the world at large.

We refer not now to hero-worship, an idolatry that too greatly abounds, and which surrounds its human idols with virtues that never existed in their sublunary careers, and lauds their deeds of valor or statesmanship with a fulsomeness that often wearies and disgusts the patient listener.

But we do complain that, both in the church and out of it, it is customary for pastors at funerals to speak too highly of the dead—to refer to them as good men and women; and thus, while veiling their real reputations, to bestow upon them such characteristics as they never exhibited and never claimed to possess.

This evil is especially prominent in the obsequies of members of secret societies, both great and small, and the burial ceremonies over the body of a "great, grand and worshipful" officer of a Masonic or Odd-fellows' lodge, are uniformly open to this charge. So universal has this custom become among the fraternal orders, that it is not strange to hear some say that "none but good Masons ever die;" at least, no one who attends a lodge funeral would have reason to believe otherwise, unless he knew the lamented one in his lifetime.

The church and the lodge, on such occasions, as they do too often in the lodge-room, have fallen into a similar fashion; and it is not unusual, where the obsequies of a "brother" are performed in an orthodox church, to hear the lodge ritual rehearsed jointly by the great mogul of the secret society and the pastor, in perfect harmony.

This course has rightly led to some just animadversion on the part of true Christians, who see in such performances the church polluted by ceremonies that not a little resemble those of the ancient heathens, and which they cannot reconcile with the teachings of the Christian religion. Their objections to this desecration do not savor of uncharitableness towards the dead; they arise only from a belief that the departed "brother" was not the kind of man that the pastor says he was, and is not worthy of the honorable place assigned to him by the lodge ritual.

On this subject "Bro." Joseph Robbins, of Illinois, a Mason, says: "We fail to see how Masonry is outraged by burying a brother whose life has not been right any more than the church is compromised by doing the same thing. Some branches of the church, at least, say their unvarying ritual alike over saint and sinner and with no suspicion on the part of the world that in so doing they apologize for, commend, or uphold anything in his life that was not right." This is the very point. It has become a fashion in both the church and lodge—a misleading, bad fashion, that deservedly brings obloquy upon both. Further on he says: "Masonry buries him not because he has been bad, but because he was a brother Mason."

This is all wrong. Most persons do not belong to either the church or the lodge, and both institutions subject themselves to the wonderment and ridicule of the uninitiated and the unsaved. The latter, especially, are sharp critics, and when a man has led a bad life, his connection with the lodge or the church does not protect him from a just estimate of his virtues and vices, however the funeral ceremonies appear to shield his character and invest him with unreal worth and reputation. If he has ever cheated the poor, or been notorious for other evil practices, all the rituals in the world won't stop the mouths of his fellowmen.

There is another view of this question, which, whether the practices of the church or the lodge arise simply from a bad fashion, or from a more reprehensible cause, places them in a still more serious light. Two eminent Masons, both occupying high social positions in a Southern State, recently died and went to their "grand lodges above." These men were so far from being Christians that their vices were publicly known and of a kind that would have involved them in serious legal complications had they not been lodgemen, and, as such, lodge licensed to do as they pleased. Well, sometime after their burial by the Masonic fraternity—but we will let our correspondent tell the story:

"Last Sabbath, the pastor of the First Baptist church gave notice to his congregation that the prayer-meeting of the coming Wednesday night would commence half an hour earlier than usual, so as to close at 8:30, in order to give an opportunity to all who might wish (as well as himself) to attend the Masonic Lodge of Sorrow, to be held at the Capital Theatre; and thus a prayer-meeting was dismissed to attend a mock service of religion." The occasion of this sorrowful service was a public memorial of the virtues of the two eminent craftsmen above referred to; and our correspondent pointedly asks: "If that was not a sin against the Holy Ghost, what is it?"

Such instances put the churches on trial; and if judgment begins at the house of God, where shall the church and the lodge find a competent advocate to clear them at the bar of God for their partnership in sin?

Every "orthodox church" is supposed to be a Christian church; but no Christian church will ever unite with a sinful society in shielding or eulogizing notorious sinners as good men, whatever their fraternal relations may be. If a church is sodden with lodgery to that extent, it has no right to call itself a Christian organization, for the line that should separate one from the other has been obliterated, and as no man can serve two masters, the church's choice must lie between Christ and the lodge. "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." (Matt. 12: 30.)

Finally, if the foregoing Masonic expression is true, a gambler or saloon-keeper, if a Mason, is (Masonically) as good as a law-abiding, pious church member—a position that no sophism can maintain outside of a lodge room.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE WORLD'S FAIR.

In pursuance of a notice, printed in the Cynosure of June 25, relative to a proposed important religious exhibit at the Columbian Exposition of 1892–3, representatives of a dozen missionary and benevolent societies met at the Bible House in New York City and discussed the proposition, together with another that a suitable building for such an exhibit shall be erected on the Fair grounds. Letters were read expressing sympathy with the enterprise from a number of societies which were unable to send representatives to the Conference. A succinct account of the proceedings of the Conference appeared in our "Occasional" letter from New York in the last issue of the Cynosure. The following five gentlemen, representing as many denominations, were appointed a committee to gain further information, and to call another conference at a later date: Rev. Josiah Strong, D.D., General Secretary Evangelical Alliance; Rev. Joshua Kimber, D.D., Secretary of the Protestant Episcopal Missionary Society; Rev. Adna R. Leonard, D.D., Secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society; Rev. H. L. Morehouse, D.D., Secretary of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, and Rev. Alex. McLean, D.D., Secretary of the American Bible Society. The measure is meeting with an encouraging degree of favor that promises its success. It is at present strongly advocated by the Evangelical Alliance for the United States in New York City, and should meet with a general indorsement throughout the Union.

THE GRAND ORIENTS—THE GRAND EASTS.

A correspondent at Pasadena, Cal., asks for some definite information concerning the Grand Orient. On this subject, Dr. Mackey's Cyclopedia of Masonry says: "Most of the grand lodges established by the Latin races, such as those of France, Spain, Italy, and the South American States, are called Grand Orients. The word is thus, in one sense, synonymous with grand lodge; but these grand orients have often a more extensive obedience than grand lodges, frequently exercising jurisdiction over the highest degrees, from which English and American grand lodges refrain. Thus the Grand Orient of France exercises jurisdiction not only over the seven degrees of its own rite, but also over the thirty-three of the Ancient and Accepted, and over all the other rites which are practiced in France. Grand Orient is also used in English, and especially in American, Masonry to indicate the seat of the Grand Lodge of highest Masonic power, and is thus equivalent to Grand East. The Grand East is the city in which the Grand Lodge, or other governing Masonic body, is situated, and whence its official documents emanate. Thus, a document issued by the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts would be dated from the 'Grand East of Boston,' or if from the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, it would be the 'Grand East of New Orleans.' The place where a grand lodge meets is therefore called a Grand East. The word is in constant use on the continent of Europe and America, but seldom employed in England, Scotland or Ireland." The term is therefore a merely technical one, with no other Masonic signification than that above described.

COMMENCEMENT AT WHEATON COLLEGE.

The fine summer weather and the interest attaching to the College Commencement, attracted quite a number of visitors to Wheaton to attend the exercises, which, for the thirty-first time, marked the annual closing of the spring term of study.

Ex-President J. Blanchard, now past his eightieth year, but still strong in his faculties and zealous in every good cause, preached the Baccalaureate sermon on Sunday forenoon, June 21, taking logical grounds against the present interest manifested in the return of the Jews to Palestine as an earnest of the early literal return of Christ to personally reign over his chosen people, as claimed by the Adventists. All such doctrines, by whomsoever advocated, he deemed a hindrance to the coming of Christ's kingdom as taught by the Scriptures, rather than designed to promote his second advent. The people of Israel had been driven from Palestine and scattered among all nations for their abominable Baal-worship and consequent treason to the divine government; and he called attention to the energy and rapidity which which this same Baal-worship, in the lodges, and in other ways, is undermining the religion of Jesus Christ. As for the Adventists, he remembered that during the great Millerite excitement (1842–'43) there was also a strong anti-slavery feeling manifested throughout the North, and three meetings of Abolitionists were assaulted and broken up by mobs composed of the enemies of the Christian religion. On the other hand, comparatively few of the Millerite gatherings was disturbed. The inference drawn was that the Abolitionists were engaged in the work of the Lord, and consequently inimical to the interests of Satan, while the Adventists were engaged in hindering the coming of Christ's kingdom by their mistaken zeal, and Satan had no quarrel with them on that account. Ex-President Blanchard also severely commented on "the higher criticism" of Dr. Briggs and Dr. Harper, as diverting the church from works that are profitable.

The address before the missionary societies was given by the Rev. George H. Smith of St. Charles, on Sunday evening.

Monday and Tuesday were devoted to the final examination, and on Tuesday evening was celebrated the aniversary of the art school and conservatory of music. The graduates in art were Wilhelmine Jacobs, Nellie Gates, Luella Moore, Florence Edwards, Nellie Lyman, Mattie King and Mrs. Ida Wagner. These exercises were largely attended.

On Wednesday occurred the meeting of the Board of Trustees. John Christie was re-elected as member of the Board, Messrs. Case, of Chicago, Rogers, of Peoria, and Dale, of Wilmette, to fill vacancies. Measures were discussed for carrying on still further the additions and improvements already under way. The alumni association heard a report by President C. A. Blanchard on the observatory fund instituted last year by the society. A motion was also passed intended to enlist the co-operation of former undergraduate students.

Thursday forenoon was given to the usual graduation exercises, addresses by graduates, and the distribution of diplomas by President Charles A. Blanchard. As compared with the commencement of last year, the number of diplomas granted was quite small. Mr. Thos. B. Bryan effectively addressed the graduates.

The exercises of the occasion were closed with the annual concert on Thursday evening.

REFORM VICTORY IN BOSTON.

The address of Rev. J. P. Stoddard, the efficient agent for New England of the N. C. A., at the Baptist Ministers' meeting in Boston, June 22, reported in this paper last week, is destined to bear good fruit for the cause of the Association. That he received the support of fifty ministers present on that occasion indicates the influence of the reform work in New England, and that the hand of the Lord is in that work will not be doubted by the readers of the Cynosure when they see the strongholds of secretism weakened and its advocates so signally routed by the simple truth.

At the meeting of the Baptist ministers, a week later, Chapel Hall of Tremont Temple was entirely filled by those who had been present at the controversy of the previous Monday morning, and others who anticipated a spirited occasion following an address to be made by Rev. Sullivan L. Holman of the Tremont Temple society, and who was to stand in the advocacy of Freemasonry as an adjunct of the Christian church, and as refuting the attacks made upon it by Rev. J. P. Stoddard at the last meeting.

Dr. Philip S. Moxom occupied the chair and exhibited an unusual ability as a parliamentarian in the control of an excited audience.

We copy the Boston Journal's report of the proceedings:

Rev. Mr. Holman (not now a preacher, but engaged in secular business) said that he was not there to advocate or champion Masonry, but he had been for twenty years chaplain of a lodge, and while it was not, in his opinion, the province of any minister to champion any organization except the church of God, he felt it his duty, in the interests of justice and fairness, to state the facts in regard to the organization to which he belonged. As to Mr. Stoddard's statement that the ceremonies of Masonry are absurd, ridiculous and indecent, a description of any rite, however solemn, may be caricatured. "Never in my life," said Mr. Holman, "did I realize the fact of death and eternity so vividly as when I took the final degree making me a Master Mason. And in Masonry I never witnessed any ceremony which I would not be willing to hold in my own parlor before my family. That 'throat-cutting' oath; who takes it and executes it? Your ministers and leading men in the churches. Do you believe that they are cutthroats?" Mr. Holman read the five points of Masonry from the "Masonic Monitor," and added that he would sooner take the consequences of the oath than betray the confidence of a fellow Mason, given in a moment of distress. There are no secrets which, if proclaimed from the pulpit, would bring a blush to the cheek of the purest maiden. The order has had on its rolls many distinguished names, and it threatens no danger to the social and political life of the nation. It does not degrade the Bible. It has no creed, but it has a constitution. A Mason cannot be a deist. He must believe in the Bible as a divine revelation of God, and in prayer. Mr. Holman denied Mr. Stoddard's assertion as to the omission from the Masonic rituals of all reference to Christ.

On motion of the Rev. Roland Grant and after brief discussion, the time for debate was extended twenty minutes.

The Rev. S. F. Frost of Ashland said that he had been chaplain in a Masonic lodge, and that he never read a prayer from a ritual; he always prayed as he would in his own church. He asserted that Mr. Stoddard was mistaken when he said that the name of Christ was carefully excluded from all proceedings in the lodges. He criticised those who, while professing strong belief in the Anti-masonic movement, will allow Masons in their pulpits and will fraternize with them on public platforms. But he added that, if he were to live his life over, he would let everything else alone and devote his whole time to the church.

Mr. Stoddard said that it is true that the name of Christ is used in the encampments, but that as to the first three degrees his statement was absolutely correct.

The Rev. Roland Grant held up a book whose title he read to Mr. Holman and asked if that were recognized as a Masonic authority, and being answered in the affirmative, quoted from it to show that in all passages taken from the New Testament in which Christ occurs the name is cut out. He also read parts of it to show that the throat-cutting oath spoken of is a fact, and prove that Masonry is claimed to be a religious organization, while its teachings are directly against religion, temperance and morality.

A motion being made to still further extend the time, the moderator said that he hoped there would be no further discussion, since it was a great question, and an additional ten minutes would not suffice to settle it. There were some present who ought to be heard by the conference on other subjects. The motion was opposed by others, and almost unanimously rejected.

President Rev. Dr. G. W. Northrup, of the Theological Seminary in Chicago, was introduced, and said he had always been prejudiced against Masons since the celebrated Morgan murder, alleged to have been done by their influence.

The Conference adjourned till Sept. 21.

On Monday, June 29, at the regular meeting of the Baptist ministers—one week after Bro. Stoddard's address before that body on the Influences of Masonry—an ex-preacher, a Master Mason, and formerly chaplain of various lodges, addressed the assemblage in defense of the order. Among other things, he said: "The brightest names in the lists of judges and the entire legal profession are the names of Masons." That may be so. We have known of a dignified Supreme Court judge in a Western State being "roped in" and hilariously initiated into the burlesque order of the "1001," but it was no credit to him or the wags who took him in. And the obligations of that order were not so very much worse than those of the first three degrees in Masonry.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—John E. Lovejoy, brother of Elijah and Owen Lovejoy, died at Center Junction, Iowa. He learned the printer's trade in the office of his brother Elijah at Alton, and was employed there when the latter was killed by a mob of slavery supporters in 1837. He was born at Albion, Me., in 1817.

—A note from Birmingham, Iowa, June 24, announces the sickness of Dr. J. N. Norris, assistant editor of the Free Press in that city. The doctor, who is one of the most earnest advocates of Christian, social and political reform in the Northwest, was confined to his bed. All friends of the cause will pray for his early recovery.

—This office was favored, last week, with a visit from Mr. Ira D. Shaw, of South Northfield, Vt., a theological student at Oberlin College, where he is preparing himself for a spirited contest with the cohorts of the lodge and other evils. Many other efficient young men might find this a fruitful field for the exercise of their talents and energy.

—On the 22d of June, at the Swedish Lutheran Synod, Rev. Wm. Fenton spoke both morning and afternoon in the parsonage grove, near Center City, Minn., against secret societies, and particularly Freemasonry. An audience of several thousand persons was present. The convention was in itself a very important one. Over 400 delegates from various congregations were in attendance, besides thousands of visitors.

—Susi, the black servant of Dr. Livingstone, the explorer, recently died in Zanzibar. He and another servant carried Dr. Livingstone's dead body 1,500 miles through hostile country and restored it to his friends in England, where the body lies in Westminster Abbey to-day. Susi was thanked by vote of Parliament, and received a handsome and substantial recognition from the Queen and British Government for his faithfulness and devotion to Livingstone.

—Among visitors welcomed at this office since our last issue, was Rev. Chas. E. Hulbert, pastor of Unity Church of Our Lord Jesus Christ (evangelical, undenominational), of Detroit, Mich., on his way to the Commencement of Wheaton College. Mr. Hulbert is an earnest advocate of church unity on an independent basis, and is receiving a very satisfactory support in the cause which he has espoused. His faith, and that of his church, is thus stated: "We therefore declare our faith in the present spiritual unity and future visible oneness of the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ, which has been redeemed by his blood, and gathered by his Spirit, of which he is the supreme and living Head, every regenerated person a member, every truly evangelical church an integrant part of the whole Body, and the Christians of a locality, the Church of that locality."

—Rev. Alex. Thomson, one of the Board of Directors of the N. C. A., and recently pastor of the Bartlett (Ill.) Congregational church, is about removing to Washburn, Wis., to take pastoral charge of the largest church in that city. On Sunday evening, June 28, he preached his farewell discourse to a crowded house from Isaiah 28: 15–18, his subject being an effective rebuke of the liquor traffic. During his four years' pastorate at Bartlett, and his previous seven years' employment as principal of the public schools at that place, his work of reform has been thorough and earnest. Not only has he labored so faithfully that every male member of his church became a prohibitionist, but his work outside of the church, in the same direction, has been quite successful. The same commendation applies equally well to his labors in the cause of anti-secretism, and the lodge system has received many hard blows from his stalwart efforts in opposing it. He leaves his recent field and will enter upon his new one with a most satisfactory record.

What Birmingham needs is stern reformers. The seating capacity of all the churches, white and colored, combined, is only 11,000, while the population of the city is 64,000. It is thereby seen that if each church could be filled every Sabbath, three times with three entirely different audiences, only a little over half of the poplation would get to hear the Gospel. This is a lamentable state of things. But while the churches are so few and far between, the adversary of souls has his church—a saloon—on almost every corner. There his followers lavish their money without stint to carry on his work and to build more saloons, while it is hard work for the professed followers of the Lord Jesus to get money to put up a very ordinary house of worship once in a great while. Oh, if the workers for Christ were only as energetic and progressive as the followers of Satan are, what wonders might be accomplished for the Redeemer's kingdom!

During this Sabbath I spent in the city I spoke three times. In the morning I preached for Bro. Snell, at the Congregational church. The audience was small. The mission churches in the South do not carry the multitude, because the line on which their members are required to walk is too straight. In the afternoon I spoke in Bro. Pettiford's church. This is the largest and finest colored church in the city. The membership is 6,000. At night I was with Bro. Snell again.

I learned from the brethren that it is difficult to get the children into the Sabbath-school. Bro. Pettiford informs me that while his membership is 600, the attendance at the Sabbath-school is only 150; though he said some went to other Baptist churches in the city. There is a good deal of formality among some of the professing Christians, and parents do not see to it that their children attend Sabbath-school. Sabbath desecration abounds to such an extent that many are drawn away to secular amusements. The minds of the majority are not on religious things. We conclude by saying that the sound, solid Gospel of Christ is the great need of Birmingham.

G. M. ELLIOTT.

"I would do almost anything in my power to help on the work of rescuing all Christian men from the 'grip' of Masonry and all other secret and un-Christian societies. I believe that Masonry is an incalculable evil and essentially anti-Christ in its principles and influence."—From Dr. George F. Pentecost's Letter to Conference of Christians on Secret Societies, Chicago, 1887.

THE HOME.

FARMER MORRISON'S WIFE.

Down at the farmhouse below the hill,
The blinds were closed, and the wheel was still.

The swirl of the stream and the blue-fly's drone
Troubled the preacher's voice alone,

Where, by the open door he stood,
And talked to the gathered neighborhood

Of Earth and Heaven, and the grave between,
The visible world and the world unseen;

Glancing aside, with solemn air,
To the dead who lay in her coffin there.

Every breath of the soft May breeze
Shook the blossoming lilac trees,

And sent a quiver of light and bloom
Into the hushed and darkened room.

It touched with a gleam the shadowed wall,
It flickered over the funeral pall,

And circled about the tremulous head
Of the nearest mourner beside the dead:

Farmer Morrison, old and gray,
Bent and helpless for many a day.

Up and down, with a dull surprise,
Restlessly wandered his sunken eyes,

Seeking, it seemed, in that crowded place,
The one familiar, missing face,

The face that, stony and set, lay hid
Just out of sight 'neath the coffin-lid.

Never a day, till the day she died,
Had the wife been gone from her husband's side:

Thus were the twain asunder reft,
The helpful taken, the helpless left.

And the preacher spoke to the people there
Of the Will divine, in his simple prayer:

The Lord, who giveth and taketh away—
Praised be the name of the Lord for aye!

Now, when the last amen was said,
And the mourners rose to follow the dead,

Farmer Morrison, gaunt and tall,
Stood up straight in the sight of all.

Suddenly steady of eye and limb,
While the people gazed aghast at him,

He laid his hand on the coffin-lid,
He stooped to kiss the face it hid,

Then, spent with that one strong, sudden breath,
Life's latest flicker went out in death.

Thus were the twain again made one;
Trial over and trouble done.

And the preacher said, in his solemn speech:
"The way of the Lord man may not reach.

Lo! He hath given and taken again!
Praised be the name of the Lord! Amen."

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE

[Copyrighted by "The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association," 161 LaSalle St., Chicago. Printed by permission.]

IV.

From that time we never let more than a week elapse between our visits to the Clarkes', and we were distressed to notice a growing change in the home. The children looked untidy, the house was not well kept, Mrs. Clarke was becoming sullen and uncommunicative, very unlike her former self. We rarely saw her husband, as he was at his work when we called. Sometimes Grace took them flowers from her garden, and once, when her selection had been a bunch of pansies, Mrs. Clarke's eyes filled with tears at sight of them. After that, Grace saved all her pansies for that cracked white vase in the little parlor. One day she asked me if it wouldn't be a good plan to get Sophia into Sunday-school. She was now nearly six years old, and a very bright child for her age.

"Who knows what good it might do? Ask Mrs. Clarke about it, Fanny, the next time you go there alone."

"I'd rather you would."

"Why?"

I could hardly say why. I felt sure, however, that if she should put the request it would be granted; besides, I wanted her to have the fruit of her own loving thought for others. Thus I threw the work on her shoulders. Fortune favored us the next Saturday. Mrs. Clarke, who was an artist with her needle, had been making a new dress for Sophia out of an old one mother had given them, and it was finished that afternoon. Grace was examining the little garment, and with a side glance at me of half mischief, half seriousness, she said, "Try it on her, Mrs. Clarke, I want to see how she looks."

The pretty little garment, a dark brown, with trimmings of bright Scotch plaid, and a few knots of red ribbon, was put upon the delighted child, who, with her dark curls and laughing eyes, made as pretty a picture as one could wish to see.

"Oh, you darling!" exclaimed Grace, rapturously. "Mrs. Clarke, do let us take her to Sunday-school to-morrow! That dress is too pretty to stay at home."

Mrs. Clarke was proud of her children, and the invitation given in such a way gained a ready assent. The next day we called for Sophia and took her with us. She was full of life and mischief, brimming over with questions about everything that was said and done, but so intelligent and so good-humored, that everybody loved her. She went home delighted with her visit, and from that time she went with us every Sunday.

While these things had been going on, the examinations had drawn very near. Grace was looking better than usual, and I tried to believe the doctor was mistaken, that she would yet live among us many years. We were both gratified to notice an improvement at the Clarke's. The mother acted more like herself, and the house and children were kept neat and clean.

"We can't tell what little word Sophia may have carried home from Sunday-school," said Grace to me. "Oh, I am so glad we thought of it!" She said "we," but the thought was all her own.

It was the day of the first written examination. I had risen very early that morning to go over for the hundredth time the pages of my French grammar that I felt weakest upon, and was seated in the dining-room repeating the conjugations over to myself in a sing-song tone, when out on the quiet morning air rang two words, uttered in a shriek of rage and pain,

"You brute!"

After a minute's silence, came, "Get out of this house, or I'll kill you." It was Mrs. Clarke's voice. My thoughts flew quickly to that little one who so wanted to "help somebody." What could her frail hands do against such sinfulness as this? And oh, what a gulf between her white soul and these.

"I'll go quick enough," came the answer from Mr. Clarke. "You have brought me to it. You deceived me. You have only yourself to blame."

"I deceived you! And what did you do? Do you think I'd have married a man who was going to be a drunkard, if I'd known?"

"Nor I a woman. I thought you were good and strong, and would help me, but you've only dragged me down and now I'll go down." He went out, not banging the door as he had the other time, but quietly, and I saw him turn when half way down the yard to throw a kiss to two little wondering faces that peered at him over the window-sill. I felt it was a long good-by; and it seemed as if this were the very saddest, most terrible occurrence of which I should ever know.

I did not tell mother about it at once, for I could not bring myself to repeat that dreadful dialogue. We had a specially nice breakfast that morning—we always had when mother thought I was going to have a long, hard day—and she asked me to carry some in to the Clarkes. Trying to appear natural and unconcerned, I went into their kitchen.

"Mother sent you this, Mrs. Clarke. It tasted so good she thought ———"

I raised my eyes as I set the dish down, and on doing so, uttered an involuntary cry of dismay. The woman's face was bruised, cut, and swollen, so disfigured that I should have failed to recognize her elsewhere. I understood, then, the full meaning of that cry, "You brute!"

To my further surprise and confusion, she burst into tears and sobs. I knew not what to do or say. Here was no trouble for which to call in outside help. It needed shielding from the world. I timidly put out my hand and smoothed back her hair, as mother smoothed mine when I was in trouble. I felt years older as I stood there. The door opened and some one came in. It was Grace. She had called for me, and being told where I was, had followed me. She stood just inside the door, with sorrow-stricken, questioning eyes. Mrs. Clarke, hearing the door open, looked up.

"Oh, girls! This is no place for you. Go away, both of you."

Grace came into the room, putting gentle arms about little Delia, who was crying forlornly in her high chair. "What is the matter, Mrs. Clarke?" she asked in a quiet voice.

"Matter enough. Jim came home drunk last night, and this morning he knocked me down and kicked me. He is gone off now, and I have hardly a cent of money."

"I think he will come back," said Grace, still in low, soothing tones. "Does your face hurt badly?"

"Yes, oh, yes."

"Let me bathe it before we go. I used to bathe papa's once, when he got hurt by a horse."

In a few minutes more she was sweetly caring for the bruised cheek and temple, a hot flush mantling her own face the while. It seemed a comfort to the poor woman to have some one with her, so we promised to come again after school. Then we left her, and for the first time in our lives went to an examination with heads and hearts full of other thoughts than the work of the day. We sat side by side in school, and I was worried all day by the troubled expression on my friend's face, and indications that she was suffering more than usual. The questions we had to answer were many and difficult, and I saw that patient little hand move across the paper slower and slower as the hours went on. When it was over, I said to her, "You must go right to bed, Gracie, the minute you get home."

"We are going into Mrs. Clarke's first; we promised."

"You shall do no such thing, you are not fit; and, besides, I don't ever want to set foot in her house again."

I met such a reproachful look from those big brown eyes that I was thoroughly ashamed.

"Well," I said, trying to patch matters up a little, "people ought to have more sense than to make themselves wretched, and their children, too."

"It is too bad," she answered, with a sigh. "But if they do, all that's left is for us to help them out of it."

"But we can't help, Grace! What can you and I do for a woman that drinks? We can't stop her."

"No, perhaps not. We can be kind to her, though. She hasn't many friends here—none, I guess, except your mother and us, and if we are distant with her, it may make her all the worse. Do you see?"

"Yes, I see. But you haven't strength for everything. This morning tired you all out before school commenced. Don't take up the University work, Gay."

"Why not? It won't hurt me. It will only last a week, and it comes right after school closes. Then I'll have a long rest. I won't be able to work after the holidays, perhaps."

I hastily changed the subject. I loved her so dearly, and I could not get used to the thought of losing her. I tried to forget it, but each succeeding day brought it back with keener pain because of the shortening time.

We walked on to Mrs. Clarke's, for I knew better than to oppose my friend in her convictions of duty.

We found the house untidy and cheerless, the children dirty and unhappy. Their mother was sitting dejectedly by the window, rocking back and forth. I felt silent and awkward, wishing myself away. But my companion began at once with sweet simplicity, right with the trouble.

"Is your face better, Mrs. Clarke? Did the cold water help it this morning?"

"Yes, ever so much."

"Let me bathe it again before I go home. Fanny, you get some real cold water, won't you?"

I patiently obeyed, though indignation and anxiety overcame me, as I watched my dear friend, tired and ill as she was, patiently caring for a wound that need not have been, chatting all the while easily and pleasantly about our school work, or speaking brightly to the children, who were glad to have some one notice them.

Absorbed in my thoughts, I did not quite hear how the conversation turned, but at any rate, Mrs. Clarke was telling us the cause of all the sad change in that bright home life.

"It is all my own fault," she said, not speaking excitedly, but in a dull, indifferent way. "When I was a girl, on the farm at home, we always used to have cider and home-brewed beer, and I was very fond of it. When Jim came to see me I found he was a very strict temperance man, and rather than anger him, I made father and mother keep the drinks well out of sight, and I drank none myself when he was with us. Soon after we were married he told me he had once been a hard drinker, but had given up his old ways. He was sure I would help him; he said sometimes it was hard to go without drink. I have never touched a drop of anything from that time, for his sake, until the other day. I don't know what came over me. I was hot and tired, and I sent Sophia out to get me some beer. Jim must have smelled it on my breath when he came home, for after a while he rushed out, and when he came back he was drunk. We had our first quarrel the next morning. Then I didn't care, and got drunk too. But we made up after a while, and I thought it would never happen again. But Jim can't let it alone now. He was drunk last night and at it again this morning. He knocked me down and kicked me. He's gone away; I have hardly any money. I don't believe he'll come back."

She told the whole story in a low monotone, while Grace ministered to her aching head and face, her dark eyes swimming in tears.

"You're good girls to come to me now," went on the unhappy woman. "I think if it hadn't been for your visit this morning, I should have got whiskey and drunk until I could forget. But your sweet face," looking at Grace, "made me think of mother; her eyes are like yours."

How those eyes lit up at the words! It was the shining of a holy joy.

We left with promises to be in again the next day, trying to comfort her with hopes that surely her husband would return that evening, and that on the morrow she would have good news to tell us.

THE SKEPTIC AND THE ITALIAN GIRL.

She sat behind her neatly-arranged fruit stand—a girl of fourteen—absorbed in reading her Bible. She did not hear the footsteps of a gentleman who was passing by; and was startled by his question: "What are you reading that interests you so much?" She timidly replied: "The Word of God, sir."

"Who told you that the Bible was the Word of God?" he inquired. "God told me himself," she replied with child-like innocence.

"God told you! Impossible! How did he tell you? You have never seen him, nor talked with him. How then could he tell you that the Bible is his Word?"

For a few seconds the girl seemed confused and was silent. The man, who was a skeptic, and took delight in undermining the faith of people in the Scriptures, felt confident that he had confounded the simple-hearted girl. She soon recovered herself, and her ready wit came to her aid. There was a flash in her dark eyes as she asked: "Sir, who told you there is a sun yonder in the blue sky above us?"

"Who told me?" said the man, smiling somewhat contemptuously, for he fancied that the girl was trying to hide her ignorance under an irrelevant question—"Who told me? Nobody; I don't need to be told. The sun tells this about itself. It warms me, and I love its light; that is telling enough."

"Sir," cried the girl with intense earnestness, as she stood before him with clasped hands, "you have put it right for both Bible and sun. That is the way God tells me this is his Book. I read it and it warms my heart and gives me light. I love its light, and no one but God can give such light and warmth through the pages of a book It must be his. I don't want more telling; that's telling enough, sir. As sure as the sun is in heaven, so sure is God shining through this Book."

The skeptic was abashed. The earnest faith of the young fruit-seller amazed him. He could adroitly insinuate doubts into the minds of those who have only given an intellectual assent to the truth that the Bible is God's book, but the girl's heart experience of the power of God's Word was an evidence he could not shake.—Selected.

TEMPERANCE.

THE NEW LAW OF CALIFORNIA.

Every person who sells or gives, or causes to be delivered, to any minor child, male or female, under the age of eighteen years, any intoxicating drink, in any quantity whatsoever, or who, as proprietor or manager of any saloon or public house where intoxicating liquors are sold, permits any such minor child under the age of eighteen years to visit said saloon or public-house where intoxicating liquors are sold, for the purpose of gambling, playing cards, billiards, pool or any game of chance, shall be guilty of misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $300, and in default of payment of said fine shall be imprisoned in the county jail for a period of not less than 100 days.

A TEMPERANCE CONGRESS AT THE COLUMBIAN FAIR.

It is obvious that the very numerous Congresses that are proposed cannot be held at once, for the simple reason that Chicago could not accommodate one-fourth of the persons who will desire to assist at them. A provisional program has, therefore, been got out, by which each month is devoted to one or more subjects.

The attention accorded to temperance, religion, charity, and missions is characteristic of a nation in which earnest views of life prevail among all classes. The Congresses will furnish matters of interest to thousands who cannot lay claim to any literary or scientific ability, and who are unable to appreciate the higher developments of philosophy. But in matters dealing with the direct amelioration of the condition of those whom vice and poverty have rendered wretched, the intellect is a less potent factor than the heart. If every American who is trying to aid in the spread of virtue and happiness, and in diminishing vice, were to attend, the entire undertaking would be ruined by its own success. The city of Chicago could not contain a tithe of the visitors. To take only one class of those who think to make it difficult for their neighbors to go wrong—the Prohibitionists—imagination cannot picture what would be the result of their combined enthusiasm if they were all gathered into one place. The heavens would be rent, and possibly a good many things of earth besides.—London (England) Engineering.

TEMPERANCE MISSIONARIES ASSAULTED.

A letter from Kane, Pa., June 20, announces a brutal assault upon temperance advocates at that place. The local Prohibition committee recently arranged with L. G. Jordan (colored) of Texas, to hold thirty meetings in that county. While he was holding a street meeting at Kane on the 16th a shower of rotten eggs fell into the crowd. They were evidently aimed at the speaker and the ladies. One lady's dress was badly spattered, and others were fouled. Afterward Welkers (hotel-keeper) attacked the Presbyterian minister. Mr. Jordan continued his speech, and the next day he spoke again. [Mr. Jordan was formerly an agent of the N. C. A. in the South, and we are pleased to learn that he held the fort under this shameful attack.—ED. CYNOSURE.]

NOTES OF THE TEMPERANCE CONFLICT.

The Advance, of Chicago, says: "Liquor dealers and anti-prohibitionists who are constantly harping on the blighting effects of prohibition upon the prosperity of a city will not be able to draw much comfort from the experience of Des Moines, Iowa. Des Moines is a city of sixty thousand people and has not an open saloon within its limits nor within the country in which it is situated, and yet it is just now enjoying an era of the most remarkable prosperity. Such a thing as a house or store room to rent can scarcely be found at any price, while more than a thousand new residences and more than a million dollars, worth of new business blocks, some of them the finest in the West, are in process of erection. Bank clearances run from twenty-five to fifty per cent higher than a year ago; its manufactured products for 1890 exceeded those of 1889 by more than $5,000,000. Every kind of business is extremely prosperous, and the actual statistics of the Transfer companies show that the population is increasing, by new arrivals alone, at the rate of a thousand per month. A good many other cities would like to be killed in the same way that prohibition has killed Des Moines."

BY DRINKING YOU ENDANGER YOUR PROGENY.

The natural law commonly expressed by the phrase the "survival of the fittest," has a necessary corollary—the extinction of the unfit. The declaration of science is no less emphatic than the declaration of Holy Writ, that the iniquities of the fathers are visited upon the children. The drink iniquity is no exception. Dr. L. D. Mason, the noted specialist in the treatment of inebriety, says that the family of a drunkard seldom runs to the third generation unless new and sober blood is infused into it; and that the children of moderate drinkers are almost certain to inherit a tendency to inebriety, insanity, imbecility or some other form of nervous degeneration as fatal to the propagation of a healthy progeny. Science seems to place a very literal interpretation upon the words, "unto the third and fourth generation."—Voice.

YOU CAN DO A LITTLE.

Every one can do something in the grand work of destroying the liquor traffic. Be it ever so little, contribute your mite of effort, and God will see to it that it bears fruit. It is not the great strokes of great men that will rid the land of the blight of rum—these are necessarily comparatively infrequent and widely separated—but it is the long continued assault upon every part of the enemy's line by the rank and file of the prohibition host that will compel him to surrender.

Prof. Osler writes to the New York Medical Journal, that in all the large hospitals in Germany, cases of diseases of the heart, coming directly from the excessive use of beer, are common.

A clergyman in Bath, Me., was urging the prosecution of a notorious saloon. He applied to an attorney, who said to him, "Are you not a Mason?" The minister replied that he was. "Well," answered the attorney, "that saloon-keeper is a Mason and you had better let him alone." The case was dropped. The clergyman was too good a lodgeman to violate his "obligation."—Exchange.

The whiskey business cannot be carried on without boys and girls to fill up the ranks. The old drunkards drop off, 60,000 annually in this country alone. The moderate drinker takes the drunkard's place, and the boys and girls must take the moderate drinker's place. The only question is, whose? Your sons and daughters, or mine? Ours or our neighbor's? If they are your neighbor's, then you say license and protect the rum shops and get revenue, so as to save the taxes. But when they are yours, then what?—The (Lancaster, Pa.,) Home.

Lately a suspicion arose in Rome that the many barrels sent day by day into the city from a certain wine manufactory near the city contained something stronger than the juice of the grape, but when tested by the Dazia officials at the Maggiore gate for the purposes of taxation, nothing else could be found. At last one barrel was minutely examined, and the mystery was solved. Down its center ran a narrow receptacle, which was filled with wine; but the main space around this held spirits. The barrels of this description were seized. A raid was then made upon the wine manufactory, which resulted in the discovery of many more such ingeniously constructed smuggling casks, with complete distillation plant in operation. An attempt was made to resist the authorities by a display of revolvers, and to deceive them by flooding the premises and running off the spirit; but all was of no avail. The town tax on wine entering Rome is about 5s. a barrel, whilst that on spirits is over 8s.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Divine Guest.—vs. 1–5. We owe to John two beautiful pictures of Jesus as a guest in the home:—one at the outset of his ministry, the other at its close, when the shadows of Calvary began to fall dark across his pathway. Cana and Bethany show that every domestic relation needs the presence of Jesus to bring out its full value and beauty. That is no true marriage of heart and soul where Jesus is not one of the wedding guests, for it lacks the real basis of spiritual union. We notice (1) He came to this marriage feast because he was invited. The humblest home may have his presence on the simple condition of sincerely inviting him. (2) If he becomes a guest, by his wonderful transmuting power, all the drudgery of daily life will become a blessedness and a joy, as the common water was turned at Cana into precious wine. (3) The wine gave out, that he might "manifest forth his glory." So when our earthly blessings take their departure,—youth, health, fortune, friends—it is that he may give us the new wine of his spiritual kingdom, that is better than the old. (4) "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." Christ's salvation is free to all; but having accepted it, none are free to spurn any part of his service. The "whatsoever" and the "whosoever" must go together.

2. The water turned to wine.—vs. 6–8. Among other blessed and helpful lessons that we can draw from this miracle may be noted (1) These water-pots of stone were set there for a very common purpose—to hold water for washing the hands of the guests, in compliance with their ceremonial law. So Christ takes us when we are in our natural state, only fit for common earthly uses, and fills us with the wine of a new spiritual life. (2) When he commands us to do anything, there must be no half-way obedience, or else we shall get only half a blessing. The water-pots must be filled to the brim. (3) When we have received of this new wine, the word is always, "Draw out now." It is a necessity of genuine spiritual life to be continually giving itself forth to others; not always in the same form, but always in some form.

3. The best wine kept till the last.—vs. 9, 10. This is God's way of doing, but the devil's way is exactly the opposite. He puts before the young, as they stand on the threshold of life, the present delights of sin, and leaves the bitter dregs until the end. How different with the Christian! Thorny and rough his path may be, and full of crosses; yet "afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness." Even in the natural world, God sets forth the best last. By processes so slow that we can have scarcely a conception of the ages taken to complete them, he has brought the earth from formless chaos to its present condition. So Judaism has been succeeded by Christianity, the law by the Gospel, the old covenant of works by the new covenant of grace. We find the same principle carried out in the spiritual realm. However we may advance in holiness, there are always greater heights to be attained beyond. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." So God means that old age shall be the happiest part of our earthly existence; cheerful, serene, heavenly,—the best wine kept till the last.

4. Christ's glory manifested.—vs. 11. This miracle, wrought to supply a mere bodily need, may seem at first sight to be below the others in dignity and importance, and yet John tells us that through it Christ manifested forth his glory, and his disciples believed on him. It is a fact that he often "manifests his glory" in a more palpable way when he supplies the temporal than the spiritual needs of his people. The former are "clearly visible." The latter belong to the things "which eye hath not seen nor ear heard." The disciples were at this time on the natural plane. They believed in a temporal Messiah, and this miracle was entirely on a line with their general views and expectations regarding him. Standing as it does on the threshold of John's Gospel, which, more than any of the others, shows us Jesus as equal with the Father, there is a beautiful significance in this first recorded miracle. How it should encourage us to come to him "in full assurance of faith" with our every need, knowing that to him nothing is trifling which concerns our happiness, though we may be the weakest and most obscure of all his flock. The question so often asked, "Was the wine our Saviour made intoxicating?" should be briefly noticed ere we close this lesson. We have plenty of evidence that the wines then in use were not like ours, but harmless beverages; but they who have felt Jesus as a divine Saviour, saving from all sin to the uttermost, need no proof on this point. As the universal gift of water came pure and health-giving from his hand at first, so must the wine at Cana have been as free from every element of harm as "the fruit of the vine" which will be poured by the celestial Bridegroom at his Marriage Supper above.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Young Men's Christian Associations own buildings and other real estate to the value of over $12,250,000; the total indebtedness is less than $2,500,000; 1,083 persons are engaged as general secretaries and other officers; 779 reading rooms and 649 libraries, containing almost 500,000 books, are reported; the total membership is 225,500.

—When the majority of the immigrants came from Great Britain, Norway, Sweden and Germany, the greater number were adherents of the Protestant faith; but now the immigration that is flooding the land from Italy, Poland, Hungary, Bohemia and South Germany, is entirely, so far as it is anything, Roman Catholic. There is a strong probability of a relation of cause and effect in the fact that this Roman Catholic portion is also the most degraded and undesirable portion of our immigrant population; but whether this is so or not, it is a matter of concern to Protestants at least that it is this Roman Catholic element that is increasing most rapidly.

—Porter Memorial church, Chicago, a branch of Union Park Congregational church, are about building a church on Paulina street. Five thousand has already been raised for this purpose. Rev. Mr. Smith is pastor and is doing excellent work.

—At Dayton, Ohio, May 21, a large assembly of Christian women voted to protest with heart and voice and pen against open Sabbath gates at the Columbian Exposition, to be held in Chicago in 1893, as a disgrace to the nation and a sin against God.

—Two-thirds of the church members in this country are women; 43,000 of the 45,000 convicts in the State prisons of the United States are men.

—A Baptist national organization for the young people was formed in Chicago on July 7 and 8. The organization will adopt measures for the extension and development of State and local societies, with a view to the education of the young people in denominational principles and work.

—Ex-President J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, read a paper of more than passing interest at the Chicago Ministers' meeting, Monday week, on "Baptism." The paper was read at the last meeting of the Elgin Association, and has attracted much attention. The ministers present followed the argument with the keenest interest and relish, and the paper made a decidedly favorable impression.—Congregational News, Chicago.

—The grand total of regular Baptists in the United States is 1,383 associations, 22,703 ministers, 34,780 churches, and 3,164,277 members. The grand total of regular Baptists on the globe is 40,631 churches, 27,161 ministers, and 3,793,078 members. Irregular Baptists in the United States, 2,560 churches, 2,339 ministers, and 147,559 members.

—The religious statistics of Vienna have recently been collected. That metropolis reports 1,195,107 Roman Catholic, 41,943 Protestants (Lutherans and Reformed), 118,495 Jews, 8,943 adherents of other confessions and non-religious.

—The Brooklyn Sunday-school Union Association reports 296 schools, 10,750 officers and teachers, 89,125 scholars under 21 years of age, and 10,176 adults; total, 109,949.

—Just now the two branches of the United Brethren church are interested in some important trials. Points of law as to the ownership of property are being discussed. Also the question as to the revision of confession came up. One of the Conservatives in this discussion made inquiry as to whether our Heidelberg Catechism had ever been revised or changed, and when he was assured it remained unaltered he took new courage. It is true that our confession remains unchanged, and has been in force three hundred and twenty-eight years. The conservatives claim that it is unwise to change our standards, and hence claim to be the rightful owners of all property. It must be remembered, however, that the changes they made affect the discipline more than the confession of faith, and therein lies the mischief, and from this arises the trouble.—The Christian World.

—The Triennial Conference of the Young Men's Christian Association of all the countries of the world is to be held in Amsterdam, Holland, from August 12 to August 16. The arrangements for the conference have been completed by the Central International Committee, located at Geneva, Switzerland, of which body the American members are James Stokes and Richard C. Morse, of New York City. For the first time India will be represented at the conference, delegates from that country having been elected during the past year. The New York State Secretary, Rev. George A. Hall, of 40 East Twenty-third street, New York, is making transportation arrangements for those who desire to sail with the excursion on July 22, to whom all correspondence may be addressed.

—The American Congregational Union reports receipts for the past year of $155,530, of which $76,300 came from individuals and churches. This has been the most successful year in the history of the organization.

—According to the Living Church Almanac for 1891, the Protestant Episcopal church has 4,163 clergy, 299 candidates for orders, 2,330 parishes and missions, and 508,292 communicants. The number of baptisms last year was 61,665, of which nearly 47,000 were infants. The contributions for the year are $12,754,767.

—The American Board has work on all thirteen of the Gilbert Islands, which contain a population of some twenty-five thousand, three-fourths of whom are said to be very eager to hear the Gospel.

—By the last census of Ireland it is shown that the Roman Catholics number 3,549,745—a decrease of 411,146 during the last ten years. The Protestant Episcopalians number 600,830, a decrease of 38,744. The Presbyterians number 446,687, a decrease of 24,047. The Methodists number 56,235, an increase of 6,396. It thus appears that all of these denominations are losing except the Methodists. The loss is no doubt owing to emigration to this and other countries.

—According to the latest and most reliable statistics, there are about two hundred million Mohammedans in the world. Of these, there are about 6,000,000 in Europe, chiefly in Turkey and Russia. Of the 60,000,000 in Africa, about one-third are in Egypt and along the Mediterranean, while the bulk of the remainder are in the desert countries and the equatorial regions. Of the 135,000,000 in Asia, India has 50,000,000, China 30,000,000, Turkey upwards of 20,000,000, and the rest are scattered far and wide. It is instructive to note that the list from which these figures are taken shows that the Islam numbers are largest in those countries which are the most stagnant and degraded.

Farm for Sale.

The National Christian Association owns a quarter section of land in Morris county, Kansas, four and one-half miles west of Council Grove, the county seat, a village of 2,300 inhabitants, with water-works, electric lights, and street-car line.

The nearest railroad station is only three miles away. There is a school house within half a mile. There is not over ten acres of this 160 that cannot be plowed. From five to ten acres are too stony for cultivation.

Some forty acres have been plowed and cultivated for several years, but not during the past two or three years. There are some 40 peach trees with a good show of fruit at the present time. Some of the apple trees have fruit upon them; there are in all about 25 apple trees. A few shade trees are about the shanty, which, however, is only a piece of a shanty, though residents in that vicinity claim that $50 would put it into condition for tenancy. A well some 25 feet deep has water in it during a portion of the year. Quite a quantity of stones have been gathered together near the house.

Any one going there in July next could put in winter wheat, which ought to yield 20 bushels per acre, if the season should be favorable. A good quantity of upland hay could be gathered, and some fruit.

The Association does not wish to hold land for speculative purposes, as that would be foreign to the object of its organization. The money is needed to carry on this great reform, and hence those having money to invest can benefit themselves and aid the Association by purchasing the above described quarter section.

There will be four insertions of this notice, with the amounts any are willing to pay for it. Eight hundred dollars has already been offered for it. Please send your offers at once.

The Board of Directors have appraised the place at $1,500.

Peter L. Osborn, Council Grove, Kan., will answer correspondence, and show parties the place.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from June 29 to July 3, inclusive:

J H Stutzman, Fred Brouse, T K Bufkin, J C Ougheltree, J Rasor, L G Pearson, L Skinner, S Ensley, J McCall, I B Benedict, D Hyde, C T Denman, Mrs M Neubauer, A Krafft, Miss J M Park, Mrs C W Crabtree, J Milne.

If we knew that the mother, who had been our one great blessing in life, was in want, we would sacrifice our comfort to minister to her necessities.

The Cynosure is a mother to us all, and at present is in need of several hundred dollars that she has sent in papers printed full of good things, but for which she has received no return.

Will not each one look at the little yellow date-slip on your paper, and if it tells you that you are one of that number, we know that you will at once send something, if you cannot send much, to help present necessities.

The Cynosure can not well be afforded for less than $1.50 per year; indeed, it cost last year over $1,000 more than was received for it from all sources! Changes have been made which will reduce the deficit this year very materially, provided that every one does all that he can for the Cynosure. Pay renewals as promptly as possible, and watch our premium offers, which will help you obtain new subscribers.

We have received, during the past week, from those in the South that are now reading the paper, several hundred names and postoffice addresses of Southern ministers, to whom the Cynosure should be sent. Can you not aid by donating to the Southern Ministers' Fund? A letter received last week from one of this class, says that "after twelve years of experience in the Masonic lodge, he has been brought to see that he must come out from among the wicked."

"The truth shall make you free." We need money. Can you not send some now?

One secret society secret is out, by the action of a member who has himself been enlightened by our tracts. He says that the distribution of N. C. A. literature aroused the fraternity to such an extent that the question was brought up in the lodge as to what should be done about the anti-secrecy papers and tracts that had been distributed in their town.

Teach your children how to distribute tracts from house to house. Furnish them with a pound or two of N. C. A. tracts, and build over against your own house correct views on this question. The summer vacation is a good time for the children to do missionary work.

FARM NOTES.

TREATMENT OF LAWNS.

The Country Gentleman says: "A mistake is often made by setting the lawn-mower to cut too short; and there is not enough of leaf growth left to give strength to the roots of the grass. A more natural condition is given by cutting a little higher, and the lawn is made more like velvet; and there would be less danger of the earth below being dried or burnt by exposure to the sun. Owners and gardeners are sometimes puzzled to know what to do under the shade of trees, where grass will not grow freely. The best remedy is a free seeding with Kentucky blue grass, which will endure shade better than most other lawn grasses. Another mode of treatment is to cover the ground around the trees and beneath their shade with some hardy evergreen running plant, as the periwinkle or ivy; or it is well to keep the lawn and shade trees in separate allotments."

A GOOD INVESTMENT FOR CAPITAL.

The benefit obtained from a thorough drainage of land is of great importance to a farmer and beneficial to his farm crops, and is still more necessary for the garden. An instance occurred when a portion of a farm had been underdrained, which rendered the soil fit for the early sowing of a crop of oats. Before the other part was quite dry enough, long rains set in, and put off the sowing of this part three weeks later. The early-sown oats gave a fine, heavy crop; the other, on account of the late sowing, gave a meager product—but little more than one-half the other. Drainage on all soils needing it virtually lengthens the season several weeks, and often in vegetable gardens makes the difference between success and failure—between rich, delicate growth and hard, dry, small garden vegetables.—Albany Cultivator.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Give the hogs a chance to get at rock salt. Put it in the pasture. They like it.

Horses ought not to be allowed to eat too much hay. It is too bulky. Many a horse is injured by eating too much hay.

Keep the barnyard cleaned up. A nail in a horse's hoof may cause you more trouble than it would to keep the yard clean for a life-time.

If we would resist the temptation of over-stocking when the prices for this or that class of animals is high, what a great blessing it would be to all of us.

The way for a farmer to determine his profit or loss is the way every other competent business man keeps books. It is to balance aggregate receipts against aggregate expenses.

Burn nothing that can be rotted by plowing it down or burying it in the manure pile. One exception to this—weeds that have seeds mature enough to grow. Burn them root and branch.

Better farming is to be secured by more intelligent effort on the part of the individual. Better laws can be had only through the organized efforts of the producers at the caucuses, conventions and polls.

Keep a cheerful spirit, stop all wastes, study the possibilities of your family and the demand of your market, and take courage, for we must make the best of the times that are here if we are to succeed.

The ambition needed among farmers is not to be lawyers, doctors, nor politicians, but to be better farmers. When this ambition is general, agriculture will look up and taxation be more evenly distributed.

Teach the boy to do his farm work so that it will be admired, and you give him something to think about that adds zest to his work. Teach him to be as neat and tasteful in his work as in dress, and you develop valuable qualities, such as may hold him to the farm.

There is money in kindness to cows, and the wonder is that so few recognize the fact. If the man who is cross with his cows could only see the little globules of butter fat leaving the milk or refusing to go into it when he is abusing them, then his conscience that he carried in his pocketbook would be aroused, and for the sake of the filthy lucre he would do what he ought to have done for the sake of humanity. The Jersey cow is peculiarly sensitive to ill-treatment, more so than a cow of any other breed.—Chicago Christian Worker.

A good, well-kept, tasteful farm, with good buildings, handsome animals, and fine crops, advertises its owner's qualities, and you conclude at once that he isn't badly depressed nor hankering to go West. The East is a pretty good place, if one only thinks so.

To keep the barn and stable doors open has troubled many men. The time spent by the world in hunting up sticks to prop doors back would make many years. Yet a simple hook on the barn and staple on door—costing scarcely anything—would do the business.

"Peter Piper Picked a Peck of Pickled Peppers," was a line of alliterative nonsense, that the children used to say. Nowadays they can practice on the Perfect, Painless, Powerful Properties of Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. It will impress a fact which will be useful to know. These Pellets cure sick headache, bilious attacks, indigestion, constipation and all stomach, liver and bowel troubles. They are tiny, sugar-coated pills, easy to take, and, as a laxative, one is sufficient for a dose. No more groans and gripes from the old drastic remedies! Pierce's Purgative Pellets are as painless as they are perfect in their effects.

Wonders

Are wrought by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor in restoring gray hair to its original color, promoting a new growth, preventing the hair from falling, keeping it soft, silky, and abundant, and the scalp cool, healthy, and free from dandruff or humors. The universal testimony is that this preparation has no equal as a dressing, and is, therefore, indispensable to every well-furnished toilet.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair to use Ayer's Hair Vigor as a dressing."—Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, East Pittston, Me.

"Some time ago my wife's hair began to come out quite freely.

not only prevented my wife from becoming bald, but it also caused an entirely new growth of hair. I am ready to certify to this statement before a justice of the peace."—H. Hulsebus, Lewisburgh, Iowa.

"Some years ago, after a severe attack of brain fever, my hair all came out. I used such preparations for restoring it as my physicians ordered, but failed to produce a growth of hair. I then tried, successively, several articles recommended by druggists, and all alike fell short of accomplishing the desired result. The last remedy I applied was Ayer's Hair Vigor, which brought a growth of hair in a few weeks. I think I used eight bottles in two years; more than was necessary as a restorative, but I liked it as a dressing, and have continued to use it for that purpose. I believe Ayer's Hair Vigor possesses virtues far above those of any similar preparation now on the market."—Vincent Jones, Richmond, Ind.

THE COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA

What Is It? It is a Library of Universal Knowledge and an Unabridged Dictionary of Language in one work, in one alphabetical arrangement. This novel combination is an infinitely convenient one, which, together with its unique and handy form, leads one to consult it ten times where he will once refer to any other cyclopedia or dictionary by the side of it.

"In convenience of form and freshness of information, it stands pre-eminent. The combination of cyclopedia and dictionary in the same work is a most valuable feature. I expect to get more real service from it than from anything else in my library."—F. S. Fitch, State Supt. of Public Instruction, Lansing, Mich.

The Basis of the Cyclopedia proper is the last complete edition of Chambers's Cyclopedia, which is so thoroughly revised, brought down to date, and Americanized, that it would be unfair to the original to say it is "reprinted"—it is virtually a new work, the Chambers being used simply as good material to work with; many thousands of new (especially American) topics have been added. The pronunciation of all titles is an altogether unique feature that gives universal satisfaction.

"I find it exceedingly useful for handy reference. The pronunciation I regard as a valuable feature. The members of my family use this ten times where they once use the Britannica, Appleton's, or Chambers's—all of which they have access to."—Chas. H. Corey, D.D., Pres. of Richmond Institute, Richmond, Va.

"I like the Columbian the better the more I examine it. I have written to * * * my warm commendation of it."—Prof. James Strong, S.T.D., Editor McClintock & Strong's Cyclopedia of Biblical and Theological Literature.

The Dictionary feature is based on the great Dictionary of Stormonth, which is universally recognized among scholars as the peer of Webster, Worcester, the Century, and others, as an authority; it, also, is thoroughly revised, Americanized, and greatly enlarged; every word having recognized place in the living or classic literature of the English language is included, thus entitling it to be called an "unabridged" dictionary.

"After a careful examination, I can cheerfully recommend it to every educator."—W. E. Robinson, Supt. of Schools, Detroit, Mich.

"I feel free to pronounce the Columbian Cyclopedia the teacher's vade-mecum. Teachers will not often be obliged to go beyond its pages for help."—Geo. J. Luckey, Supt. of Schools, Pittsburgh, Pa.

"I have Appleton's, Chambers's, and The People's cyclopedias in my library, but use the handy Columbian nearly altogether when the information sought comes within the volumes now complete. The great amount of new matter added to the standard text of all cyclopedias, and the neat style of typography and binding, make the work the most useful and every way desirable reference work for a reasonable amount of money that I have yet examined."—Wm. H. Alexander, Surveyor of Customs, Omaha, Neb.

Who Edits It? Its Editor-in-Chief, Richard Gleason Greene, formerly editor-in-chief of "The Library of Universal Knowledge," also of "The International Cyclopedia," has probably had more experience in the direct line of his work than any other living American; he is assisted by an able corps of trained writers in the various departments of learning.

"It meets more fully my ideal of what a work of this kind should be than any other I know."—J. F. Crooker, Supt. of Education, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I have several Cyclopedias, among them the Columbian; this I much prefer for every-day reference."—Wm. H. Taylor, State Assayer and Chemist, Richmond, Va.

"We did not think—to be frank—when we began to examine the Cyclopedia, that it promised to deserve very strong commendation. But the more we studied its characteristic features, the more highly we learned to regard it, and we now feel justified in commending it as a very comprehensive, well-arranged, and useful work. By the great body of intelligent men and women who do desire a cyclopedia which is reasonably comprehensive, accurate, intelligible, orderly in plan, and low in price, this will be found abundantly worth attention."—The Congregationalist, Boston.

How Large Is It? In 32 volumes of over 800 pages each, it will contain about 26,000 pages and about 7,000 illustrations. "The feature that strikes me most favorably is the new departure in respect to size. Each volume is 8 inches long, 5½ wide, and 1⅓ thick, and answers the practical definition of the word 'handy' better than any other book of reference that I have ever come across. Standing within hand-reach, and easily handled, one is apt to refer to it ten times hand-running when he would once to a big, bulky, and burly volume not so close to him (or, better, her), and heavier to hold."—Frances E. Willard.

"The size of the volumes is just right for convenient handling. The type is good, the illustrations abundant, the arrangement of matter is such that all topics are easily found. It is difficult to imagine any improvement in these respects."—J. B. Moffat, President Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pa.

What Is the Price? That is the most remarkable feature about it. Though approximately the same size as Appleton's Cyclopedia, which is published at $80.00, and about 50 per cent. larger than Johnson's, which sells at $48.00, and comparing favorably with them in every important respect, the retail price for the set of 32 volumes, in extra cloth binding, is only $25.00; half-Morocco binding, $32.00; by express; postage, 16 cents a volume, if by mail. Vol. 25 ready July 15, others at intervals of about a month.

$5.00 cash will secure immediately, by express, volumes 1 to 16, in cloth binding, the remaining volumes being delivered as installments of $1.25 for each are paid; 25 cents a volume extra for half-Morocco. $21.35 received before Aug. 1, 1891, will be accepted in full payment for the complete set, in extra cloth binding; for half-Morocco binding send $6.00 additional. These special reduced prices will be slightly advanced Aug. 1st. Sample volume, 60 cents (postage 16 cents), returnable and money refunded; specimen pages free.

A College Education is a good thing for young man or young woman—what a pity that it is clear out of reach of fully 95 per cent. of the brainiest, bravest, worthiest of the young folks of the country! But do you realize that For $25, or 7 cents a day for one year, the fair equivalent of a college education is within the reach of any go-ahead boy or girl? It may seem incredible, but it is true! If one had only his choice of the two, what he could learn at college, or what he could learn from the Best Cyclopedia published, thousands of wise people would choose the Cyclopedia—it covers the entire circle of human knowledge—it is a teacher who never grows weary of being questioned—is always at hand, your lifetime through, and not for a few months only.

The Columbian REVOLVING BOOK-CASE, of which a picture is here given, is made to hold a full set of the Cyclopedia. Size of the case 14 inches square by 18 inches high; price $2.50 (and cheap at that) when sold separately, but with the Cyclopedia it is furnished for only $2.00.

The Book-Case is furnished either in oak, antique finish, or in hard maple, cherry finish, as you prefer. It is knock-down as well as revolving, held together by four rods and four screws; may be taken to pieces in five minutes, and put together in 10 minutes. It is a beautiful piece of furniture, though so fabulously cheap—delights everybody.

It is made to stand on a desk or table, and is so excellently adapted to its use that it may fairly be compared to adding a handle to a good knife-blade—you could use the blade by tying it to a stick, and you could use the Cyclopedia without the Revolving Case, but you would very unwillingly do without either after having tried them. We have, also, larger Revolving Book-Cases, to stand on the floor, 4 shelves high (adjustable shelves), giving a total of 136 inches of shelf room, holding 100 to 150 volumes; price-list on request.

Which Cyclopedia? GOOD LUCK for those who wish to buy, there are several good cyclopedias in the market. Each cannot, of course, be better than any other, but each is undoubtedly better than it would be but for the competition of its rivals; each has some special merit.

Appleton's is the pioneer of (living) American cyclopedias, and has great merit—but pioneers will grow old, and most people want a new cyclopedia when they buy; then, it costs a good deal of money: $80.00 in cheapest style, besides many annuals which are necessary to its completeness.

The Columbian Cyclopedia is the newest in the field, covers virtually all the ground covered by Appleton's, and a great deal besides; is about the same size in amount of matter, and costs less than one-third as much money.

Johnson's is later than Appleton's, and by many good judges has been considered the "best" for popular use; like all cyclopedias not published very recently, it needs bringing down to date. Some object, too, to the heavy, clumsy form of volume. It costs $48.00 in cheapest style.

The Columbian Cyclopedia is about 50 per cent. larger than Johnson's (in amount of matter), and costs about half the money—it covers practically all the ground covered by Johnson's, and besides includes an unabridged dictionary of language.

The International CYCLOPEDIA is esteemed by many better for general use than either Appleton or Johnson. The publisher and editor-in-chief of the Columbian Cyclopedia naturally think well of the International, as it was formerly edited and published by them.

The Columbian Cyclopedia covers about the same ground as the International, rejecting, however, a vast amount of Scotch, English, and other obsolete matter, and adding a very great amount of valuable original matter, particularly upon American topics, and also an unabridged dictionary of the English language.

The Britannica is the "old giant" among cyclopedias. The publisher of the Columbian recommends every one to buy it—who can afford two cyclopedias—if you can't afford two, it will not serve you; it is a vast library of valuable knowledge, very useful to men of profound learning and unlimited leisure, but for popular use, for convenient, quick consultation, on live topics, it is about as well adapted as a broad-axe would be to sharpen a lead-pencil—you want something handier. The "old giant," we said—consult the topic "Africa," for instance, and you find in a sort of "P.S." that "Livingstone is dead!" Look for "General Grant," and he not only "isn't dead," but "isn't born yet," so far as the cyclopedia is concerned! These are characteristic facts.

The Columbian Cyclopedia treats every important topic found in the Britannica, and many thousands of others besides; with the two cyclopedias side by side, you will refer to the Columbian in nearly every case, and find all you want.

"The days of big, cumbersome, expensive cyclopedias are past, and we congratulate the reading public that they are able to get such an excellent work as this at such a low price."—James Allison, Editor of the Presbyterian Banner, Pittsburgh.

NEW PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

THE BEST OFFER YET MADE.

During June and July we offer to each NEW subscriber for the Christian Cynosure the following liberal premiums:

One copy of Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary, neatly printed and bound in half-seal covers, and one copy of "The Life and Words of Christ," by Cunningham Geikie, D. D., a larger volume, equally well printed and similarly bound.

Smith's Dictionary has long been a standard publication for Bible students, and is especially rich in trustworthy biography and geography, indicating a vast amount of study and research. It contains 468 pages of closely printed, double column pages, and, with its thousand references, will be found a useful help in studying the Scriptures.

Geikie's Life of Christ is also very rich in Biblical information, combining the history of our Lord and his disciples with reliable descriptions of the manners and customs of the times in which they lived, the worship of the Israelites, and other matters of interest for careful students. Its reputation as a literary work is excellent. It contains 826 pages.

For persons who have never taken our paper and desire to subscribe for one year, we consider this the most generous offer that has ever been made by this office. On receipt of two dollars, both books will be forwarded, with the paper, to the address of any actually new subscriber. For three dollars and the names of two new subscribers, the books will be sent free, during June and July.

We offer as a PREMIUM for subscribers to the Christian Cynosure the choice of nearly FOREIGN.

The "Peter's Pence" are a failure in Rome, and are much below the average in the Italian provinces.

The harvest in Russia is said to be the worst on record, and famine is the result, with many deaths from hunger reported. Payment of taxes is enforced, however, those failing to pay being severely flogged.

Prince George, of Greece, spent several hours in the city on his way East across the continent.

The Italian Province of Verona was visited with a series of severe earthquake shocks, which greatly alarmed the people, but no one was injured.

Delegates from the tin-plate district of Wales are coming to the United States to inquire as to the prospects of profitable employment. The London Times says that nothing save the lack of skilled labor prevents the successful manufacture of tin-plate in America.

The Royal Geographical Society of London agreed in January, 1891, that the world's population was 1,487,600,000. This indicates that there are thirty-one persons to the square mile upon the earth's surface. The actual average, however, must be much greater than that, since there are so many miles of the earth's surface uninhabitable. During the decade between 1880 and 1890 the world's population increased 8 per cent.

The Independent for July 9 contains an exhaustive report of the festivities, speeches and all, of a grand celebration of the Fourth at "Roseland," under the auspices of Mr. Henry C. Bowen. Nearly a thousand gentlemen and ladies attended a reception at Mr. Bowen's Roseland cottage, and among those who participated in the exercises of the occasion were Senator Hawley, of Connecticut; General Howard, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island; Hon. Wm. McKinley, Jr., Congressman Russell of Connecticut, and Murat Halstead. Letters of regret were also read from John Wanamaker, Dwight L. Moody, Rev. John C. Hall, and others. "America" was sung, and Maurice Thompson read a poem—"The American Boy." On the whole it was a brilliant gathering of patriotic Americans, and a very enjoyable re-union.

The difficulties under which some of the Southern missionaries labor are very graphically described in a recent letter from a colored minister. Some friend had sent him a copy of the Cynosure, and it saved him from the lodge, or, as he calls it, "the devil's trap," and he gives the paper due credit for his escape. Further, he says, he gets young men to read it before they join the Masons or Odd-fellows, if they come to him for advice. A few weeks ago he went a distance from home to teach school, getting there on Monday night. On the previous (Sunday) evening a band of "Regulators" had whipped three men until they were unable to arise from the ground. Our friend was to have superintended the construction of a school-house and church for his people, but discretion impelled him to leave the place, in fear of similar persecution, on very short notice. The field was ripe for the harvest, many children there growing up in darkness, but he did not deem it prudent to incur unnecessary danger. It appears that one of the three men who were whipped signed a bond for the other two, and received the worst whipping of all for so doing. These are the people in the South for whose interests the Cynosure and the N. C. A. are laboring. They need help, and so do those who desire to aid them in their afflictions. Who will furnish the means?

The ignorance of some lodge leaders is only equalled by their devotion to lodge secrets, to which they attach an importance by no means commensurate with their foolish and wicked character. A minister recently preached, in a Southern city, to Knights of Pythias who were about going to New York City to represent the Southern colored people in some convocation. During his discourse he took occasion to denounce those who speak against Freemasons, Knights and Oddfellows as "grander rascals" than they, because, as he intimated, no man would divulge family secrets. Having made this point, he came down from his pulpit and marched at the head of a procession of those whom he had recently implied were "rascals," leaving the "grander rascals" to go about their business as they pleased. In this case the minister, as usual, failed to mark the distinction between lodge secrecy and family privacy, and between which there is a very wide difference.

The effort to class the Sabbath with other holidays as of human origin is a heresy too important to be passed by in silence. To impugn the Divine establishment of this day is to break down the barriers which separate the secular from the religious part of the world, and to cast a doubt upon the truthfulness of the Bible that amounts to infidelity. If we believe that God created the world, we have learned only the first letter of the spiritual alphabet. If we believe that the world was created in six days, and that each of those days had an evening and a morning, showing that they were of the Jewish order of six-working-days-in-a-week, we have only given credence to the Bible history (and we have no other) of the creation. Believing thus, we are prepared to acknowledge, also, that when "the perfect world by Adam trod" was completed, God (as the same history relates) set apart the next, or seventh day, for the rest of his creatures, and for their worship and glorification of himself as the Creator and benefactor, from whom they derive not only life, but every other good and perfect gift. There is no undue credulity necessary for the acceptation of these beliefs; for to those who have made the universe a study, the creation of this earth, as related in the Bible, is but a child's play when measured by the latest revelations of the telescope—works of creation so numerous, so expanded, so grand, so beautiful, that all our sublunary affairs, and even our orb itself, become comparatively insignificant; and no individual of ordinary intelligence has any longer a right to doubt that the power of God has been, by him, reduced to our feeble comprehension, rather than that our finite minds can grasp any just conception of the infinite even in his visible demonstrations; how then shall we compass the depths of his Divine mind and his will towards us? It should be enough for us to know that Moses was inspired by the Almighty, and his truthfulness indorsed by the Lord Jesus Christ. Who would ask for better evidence, and, if so, when can it be obtained? Therefore, if God, by Moses, ordered the Sabbath to be regularly observed as a day of rest and worship, who shall say that it is merely of human origin and no better than any other secular holiday?

The Christian Sabbath, otherwise known as Sunday, the first day of the week, is justly held sacred as a day of quiet rest and devotion. It is filled with hallowed associations, dating from the early morning resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ from the dead, which event alone stamped it as a Christian memorial day, to be celebrated until He whose right it is to reign shall come in the glory of his power to assume the government of his glorious kingdom. Then there were the appearances of the Lord to Mary Magdalene and Peter on that day, which added to it more honor, a symbol of the manner in which for nearly two thousand years he has manifested himself to his beloved disciples many times upon that day. Then on that day was the sacred walk to Emmaus with the two disciples, the sermon which he preached to them on the way, and the prayer-meeting of the disciples in the upper room at Jerusalem that evening, when the Saviour came into their midst and comforted them by his presence. What Sabbath ever had a more gracious sealing and recognition from the Lord? And why should it not be blessed and sanctified to every Christian heart, as it was to the disciples while they lived on earth? Paul kept it holy; John, the beloved disciple, was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, when he had that wonderful view of our Saviour and his kingdom recorded in the Apocalypse. On the first day of the week Paul preached to the disciples in Jerusalem; (Acts 20:7), and to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 16:2) he gave instructions to gather up the offerings for the church on the first day of the week. Sinai and the Sabbath of law and anger had given way to the milder Sabbath of grace and peace. Surely there is sufficient warrant for the substitution; now let it be duly honored in our hearts and lives.

THE PRESENT ASPECT OF THE OPIUM WARFARE.

"Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory."

There is a bright outlook on this burning question. Many among the ministers of the United Kingdom and Ireland have spoken out. These include clergymen, and even bishops, as well as other dignitaries of the Established Church. One of these latter stated from his pulpit in a Norwich church: "Our statesmen have been, and are, more heathenish than the heathen, and as guilty as the deepest criminal." In addition to ministers from the pulpit who have condemned the opium trade, the English press has been active in denouncing the traffic. Close upon a hundred newspapers have taken up this cause for justice and righteousness among the people of India. Notable papers, such as the Daily News (London), the London Echo, the Leeds Mercury, the Western Mining News, Western Daily Chronicle, among lots of other respectable home journals, have done the cause much service by their advocacy.

Neither has the Indian press been behind in striking death-blows to what may now be called an expiring traffic. In some instances the vernacular press has with great ability persistently advocated a cessation of Britain's crime against India. One paper, the Kathieuar Times, has issued a series of able articles, dealing with the monstrosity of the evil in all its phases. Not only have the Bombay papers, in many cases, written usefully on the subject, but also some of those in Madras, Allahabad, Lahore, and Calcutta—great centres which represent India from each side of the compass. A recent number of the Anti-opium News, a bi-weekly London paper, furnishes the names of close upon 2,000 petitions, presented from certain parts of England on a single day. These are all true signs of what can be taken as the voice of the people on this matter. Nor have those who mostly suffer by the evils complained of been backward. From India petitions have been adopted by the Poona Missionary Conference, the Baptist Pastors' Conference, and by the People's Association at Godavery. One great petition has been presented from this country with 4,000 signatures in twenty languages, besides the unanimous vote of the recent important meeting in Bombay presided over by the Bishop on the same night as the home debate. Further results are expected from the next annual meeting of the Anti-opium Society which will be held in Exeter Hall on Thursday, May 28. Sir Joseph Pease will preside on that occasion, when Canon Wilberforce, and the Rev. Mr. Yen, a Chinese clergyman of the American Episcopal church, are also expected to plead this great cause. Let us pray much for God's Holy Spirit to be fully realized at the coming meeting, and remember more things are wrought of prayer than this world dreams of. Let us "pray without ceasing" for India's great need at this special crisis in her history, and God, who is true to his promise, will not fail to hear and answer us. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do."

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

Bombay, India.

THE BOSTON BAPTIST MASONIC CHAMPION.

The Baptist ministers of Boston have claims on Rev. S. L. Holman that outrank the claim of Masonry. He is a member of a Boston Baptist church, and even of the very church in which the ministers' meeting which he addressed is held. He is an ordained minister, and a member of the conference. The fraternity of Baptist ministers has strong claims on him and has a right to insist on their recognition. If either of us does anything contrary to correct practice or sound doctrine, he puts a burden on his brethren that he has no right to impose.

I did not hear Mr. Holman's defence of Masonry, and am willing to make a reasonable discount on the newspaper report. But I am not unfamiliar with news writing, and think I can form a fair estimate of some points in his address.

I object, as a Baptist minister, to his allusion to the Masonic trinity. Does he remember the day when we sat together in his study in a Baptist church of which he was pastor in Worcester, Massachusetts, and he spoke to me about Liddon's Bampton Lectures on the Divinity of our Lord? I think that I purchased the copy that has now been in my library many years, in consequence of that conversation.

Yet here comes a newspaper report for me to read—yes, and for Masons to read—ungodly and skeptical Masons as well as the rest,—in which this brother of mine, in the same ministry and in the same pulpits, too, pleads for Masonry as teaching trinitarian doctrine. I have right to protest, and most emphatically and seriously I do.

He thought he owed something to the lodge; he does owe something to his own denomination. We have worked together in a pastoral recognition; suppose it had been the not wholly dissimilar service of ordination? In that case, there would have been an examination of the candidate by a council.

Suppose that the candidate, on reaching, in his statement of doctrine, that relating to the Trinity, had given all, to the last letter and line, that is ever given in the Masonic lodge? Would Bro. Holman or I have been guilty of voting for his ordination?

Or, again, suppose a Baptist minister to be arraigned before a council on a charge of heresy? If he avowed a conception of the doctrine of the Trinity equivalent to what he says is taught by the lodge, would he hesitate to vote for his deposition from the Baptist ministry?

As to his statement that he never saw anything in the lodge that he would not have in his own parlor in the presence of his wife and daughters, it may be answered, tastes differ. I suppose there must have been a few, even of Masonic ministers, present at that meeting, who would hesitate to have a candidate for the third degree enter their parlors and stand in the presence of their families, at the stage of proceedings where the initiate is received on the points of "a sharp instrument" by the senior deacon.

It may interest Bro. Holman, and some other Baptists, to know that a Masonic Methodist pastor said to me, on reading his foolish statement, "I wouldn't want my children to see it, young as they are." Some men's wives and daughters would leave the parlor pretty suddenly; and if his family know what happens inside lodges, and what was really contained in his allusion to them, I am afraid they have already made it rather warm for him

One of the claims that we ministers have on him, is for sincerity. He has no right to put us in peril of addressing audiences made suspicious and taught to discount our utterances. When he cries, "Who takes this oath, who executes this penalty?" and answers, "Ministers and leading members of our churches," he tries to create the impression that there is no such thing. That is flagrant insincerity. That is trickery.

In the very same speech, naming an alternative, he exclaimed, "I would rather take the consequences of the oath." By the "consequences," he meant the death penalty. Now there are many ungodly Masons whom we ministers wish to see become Christians. But if he talks that way before them, what can we do to save their souls? What can he himself have the face to do? Not one of us, who have been Masons, can be deceived by this subterfuge, for we know the facts, and we know what he knows. But if I were a skeptic, as a large proportion of Masons are, his preaching, after such words, would pass by me "as the idle wind."

There is no penalty; yet rather than do a certain thing he would suffer "the consequences of the oath." Now what can we preach to skeptic Freemasons who have heard from one of our own class this precious piece of self-contradiction and insincerity?

As a Baptist minister, I again protest with no very patient emphasis of tone. This is a case where I have a claim. I sharply arraign this recreant lodge champion, every one of whose skeptical readers fully understands him.

When a Baptist minister tries to defend Masonry as trinitarian in doctrine, decorous in ceremony, so that it is fit for a gentleman's parlor and the presence of ladies; and when he attempts to whitewash its blood stains by means of such questions, the hollowness of which all Masons perfectly know, it is high time to remind him that, whatever claim he thinks his lodge "brethren" have on him, there be divers other "brethren," in and outside of the Boston Baptist Ministers' Conference, who are disposed to insist on a weighty claim of their own.

CRUCIFER.

MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE.

BY MARY BELLE BLANCHARD.

This college was founded in the year of our Lord 1800; founded by praying men who had a desire to uplift and purify the young men of their time. Let us now (after ninety-one years of existence) look upon the closing exercises of the college which has sent out so many to labor in the vineyard of the Lord.

On Tuesday morning the reunion of the Alumni, at the college building; after this, in the First Congregational church, where the Alumni, with a few friends, had come to listen to the orator and poet of the day, the former being Mr. Ellis ('68), a lawyer of New York, who gave the finest essay of the whole exercises. "Christian Colleges" was in reality his subject, though not the exact wording of it. The poet ('82) gave good rhyme, but (though seated in next the front seat) I could not understand a word that was said; so am unable to judge.

After this, the dinner at the Addison House for old friends and the Alumni. This dinner, for some reason, either the great hunger of the partakers, or dry after-speeches, or for some other cause, still held the people at the table till after the town clock struck four.

In the evening the contest for the Parker and Merrill prizes began, in the First Congregational church. These prizes are only competed for by freshmen and sophomores. The Parker contestants were four in number, and the prizes $30 and $15. For the Merrill prizes eight contested, the prizes being $30, $25, $20 and $15. The young men all did well, and earned their laurels. The prizes are given in scholarships, not cash.

On Wednesday morning, after a meeting at the college, the Commencement exercises began. The meeting opened with prayer by the President, followed with music by the orchestra. The seniors all showed that study had been placed on their productions, the young ladies quite equaling their class-mates. After the awarding of the diplomas by a heavy drinker, the gathering separated—the gentlemen to the corporation dinner at the Addison House.

In the evening were the President's levee and Commencement concert, both at the same hour—the first at the President's home—the other at the First Congregational church. The singer of the evening was Miss Mary Howe, of Brattleboro, Vt. Miss Howe has a fine voice, and has the reputation of singing the highest note in the world; her voice showed culture, and her songs taste. Miss Pray, of Boston, as celloist, gave very fine selections, and played with great skill. The orchestra gave good but rather long selections.

Then came the ball, the climax of these Commencement exercises, where the young go to ruin health and happiness in the late hours, by modes of dancing which should make any one blush who thinks of it in the light of day; where, if men dressed as women, we should have to swell the number of consumptive graves filled; where womanly modesty is lost; where the clergy of our land, represented by the few, disgrace that noble and holy calling, which should uplift and strengthen the weaker, and not aid in casting down; and many more sins of like nature.

This is the closing of one year in this old college, founded by men who had the interests of coming generations in their keeping and tried to fulfill their duty; now sending out young men to fill the world with tobacco smoke until if something stronger don't catch them it will prove only the mercy of God and not their own merit.

"See to it that ye fall not out by the way." Pray for this institution, friends, that another year may find it one step up instead of two down, for the path down is much easier than up; yet if we once begin the right way it grows easier by God's help, and "without him we can do nothing."

Chester, Vt., July 4, 1891.

AFTER THE BATTLE—THE LODGE.

BY W. O. TOBEY.

When we fought the Prohibition battle, two years ago, and won so grand a victory in South Dakota, the Good Templars made very little show. But since the day was gained a tide of Templarism has swept over the State (and North Dakota as well), and in every possible village a lodge has been organized. The effect is becoming painfully evident—a lull in temperance activity, while the rum-element is "getting in its work," everywhere. The lodges meet and go through their performances, like a door on its hinges, but open and public work seems to be laid aside.

I recently gave a public and pointed reminder of the necessity of instant and active work in this community, that we may carry out the law as we did in several cases, since prohibition was enacted; but the subject was treated by once-active temperance people as of no interest to them. No response was made to my challenge—only some reflections that "temperance people had better work together." I stated that I knew only one way to work for temperance, that is openly, so that all may come together. But I saw that I was beating cold iron.

The Methodist pastor, who gave up a night in the midst of a revival meeting to accommodate the lodge organizer, that he might make his ten-dollar fee for the job, has met the reward of his mistaken zeal by being jostled out of the lodge within less than five months. Better that he had gone on about the Lord's work, when there was good interest in his meeting, but lost, from that very night of turning aside.

What will be the outcome of our prohibition work, since the lodge wave has swept over the State, I do not know. I notice that Rev. Wm. Fielder, President of the State Enforcement League, urges, in the papers, that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union keep to its work in every town, and that local enforcement leagues see to their business of keeping the law in force. But he seems not to urge the Good Templars to do anything, or even to recognize them. In a recent address here he showed the same indifference toward them. This is significant.

The secret Farmers' Alliance movement, from which great things were expected by many temperance people of the State, has failed to add any strength to our cause against the saloon; and the Republican party, which took a sound position for prohibition, has been weakened by desertions, and left largely in the hands of its rum element; while the Independent movement has given us no compensation, but only a Demopendent party with Democratic leanings toward the saloon.

Flandreau, S. Dak.

THE UPWARD LOOK.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

'Tis now
That earth's dark mountains, mantled with a shadow
That stretches far along the sunny plain,
That streams no longer dance along the meadow
Where flowers glow bright beneath the latter rain;
But then—

We know that He has promised to be faithful;
That when the storms shall rage, and thunders roar,
That, far above the tempest, wild and wrathful,
His voice says "Peace!" beyond the farther shore:
So then—

Though dark may be the night that gathers round us,
E'en like the babes within that silent wood,
Watched by the birds while sleeping, so they found us,
His shining angels, messengers of God.
So then—

Not here do we, through sin and strife, look forward,
For still we know, though dark the way may be,
There is a path which leadeth ever starward
Where we shall rest beside the jasper sea—
Oh, then!

Steamburgh, N. Y.

A MIGHTY APPEAL.

The following extracts from Dr. Strong's remarkable book, entitled "Our Country," furnish abundant food for serious thought:

"The area of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, is larger than that of China and Japan, Sweden and Norway, Belgium, Holland, Portugal, and Greece, European Turkey, Palestine, Switzerland, and Denmark, Great Britain, Germany, and Austria, France, Spain, and Italy, combined, with enough left over in Washington Territory for all New England."

"The agricultural resources of the United States alone, when fully developed, are capable of feeding ten hundred million people."

"With more than twice the room and resources of the East, the West will have probably twice the population and wealth of the East."

"Commonwealths, like men, have their childhood, which is their formative period."

IMMIGRATION.

"Of every ten of our population to-day (1880), three are foreigners or the children of foreigners."

"Europe could send us an unceasing stream of 2,000,000 emigrants a year for a century, and yet steadily increase her own population."

ROMANISM.

"Rome, with characteristic foresight, is concentrating her strength in the western territories."

"In these six territories the Roman Catholic population is eighteen times as large as the membership of all evangelical churches combined."

"The man is to-day living who will see the majority of the people of the American continent Roman Catholic."—Boston Pilot.

"This utterance is quite worthless as a prophecy, but valuable as a confession."

INTEMPERANCE.

"The annual liquor bill of the United States is $900,000,000."

"The liquor lobby at Albany, New York, at the session of 1878–79, admitted that they had expended about $100,000 to influence legislation."

"The relative power of the saloon is two and a half times greater in the for West than in the East."

SOCIALISM.

"Socialism attempts to solve the problem of suffering without eliminating the factor of sin."

"There are probably 100,000 men in the United States to-day whose animosity against all existing social institutions is hardly less than boundless."—Rev. Julius H. Seelye, D.D., LL. D.

MORMONISM.

"Polygamy might be utterly destroyed without weakening Mormonism."

France and Great Britain combined contain 325,000 square miles. "The Mormons hold 350,000 square miles of good agricultural land west of the Mississippi."

WEALTH.

"It is difficult to realize that the youngest of the nations is the richest, and that the riches of all nations has, as yet, only begun to develop its resources."

"They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition."—1. Tim. 6: 9.

CITIES.

"Nearly one-fourth of our entire population live in cities of over 8,000 inhabitants."

"The city has become a serious menace to our civilization. It has a peculiar attraction for the immigrant. Romanism finds its chief strength in the city. Socialism not only centers in the city, but is almost confined to it."

CONCLUSION.

"The city, wealth, socialism, intemperance, Mormonism, Romanism, and immigration are all increasing more rapidly than the population."

"No sober-minded man can look fairly at the facts, and doubt that together these perils constitute an array which seriously threatens our free institutions, especially in view of the fact that their strength is concentrated in the West, where our defense is weakest."

In Michigan alone there are at least 225 neighborhoods, of from 100 to 500 people each, entirely destitute of religious services by any denomination; in Nebraska 50; in South Dakota 100. These are but samples.

"America Christianized means the world Christianized."—Prof. Hoppin, Yale College.

For the sake of children, home, institutions, native land, the world—for the sake of Christ—let every Christian lend a helping hand now.

FATAL TESTIMONIES AGAINST THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

Charge first: It is deistical in its constitution.

Charge second: It is a rank secret society, bound never to reveal even to your bosom companion, unless a member.

Charge third: It is in for whisky against prohibition. Here in Kansas they elected a rank Resubmissionist as State Attorney, against a good Prohibitionist, and voted down prohibition in their convention met to organize a third, or people's party. There are a few of them in Kansas that are prohibition; but only a few compared to the rank and file of the party.

Charge fourth: It is intolerant of anybody who is opposed or not in sympathy with them. They have withheld support from preachers, and stayed away from church, and some of them have left church, or withdrawn and done what they could to break down churches in Kansas.

Charge fifth: It is very bitter and abusive in language, and lies on all who oppose its dark works.

Charge sixth: It is demoralizing. Men and women, married and single, meet inside closed doors, and stay till late in the night, when decent people should be at home and at rest. Besides the language used while inside is often not decent.

Charge seventh: It is selfish in the extreme, breaking down everything not favorable to its interests only, without considering others' rights and interests.

Charge eighth: It is made up of the worst elements in America—the lowest. Of course there are some good men, but very few compared to the bad ones, and hence the bad rules.

Charge ninth. It is compromising with the world, the flesh and the devil for spoil and office, with no regard for honor or good character. The writer knows of more than a few here in Kansas that are not fit for society; very immoral. There are some few decent men, but they are few.

Charge tenth: It is in spirit and practice opposed to piety and the claims of Christianity and the church of Christ.

Charge eleventh: It has hurt a good many men religiously, and draws away from prayer and the duties of God's house, and stirs up strife among neighbors.

Charge twelfth: It is full of the devil and evil spirits. No Christian man can stay in it if he goes in, without getting out or becoming a devil too. Some have left in good time to save their soul; some more stayed and have lost all.

Charge thirteen: It is on the broad road to rule or ruin, and in the end will plunge into hell, and all who do not speedily get out will share its end.

A question: How can a Wesleyan Methodist either join or vote for such a party? We might just as well belong as vote for it. Some of our brethren voted for it last fall. Be true to your church, and all your best interests, and trust in God for better times, and meddle not with those who are given to change. Pray for good rains and good seasons, and let the devil's people and party alone.

I am well posted here in Kansas as respect to the workings of the Farmers' Alliance, and what is written is true as far as I am acquainted. It sadly hindered work this as well as last year. Very little good was done, and much expense by it. Let us pray much, and ask God to put in confusion and disaster among the ungodly party, and everything opposed to a pure Gospel and its blessings.—W. Hackett, in the Wesleyan Methodist.

A FEEBLE PLEA.

A brother in Our Hope makes a plea for Odd-fellowship on the ground of help in sickness. Some people only think of Odd-fellowship as a kind of health insurance society—a benevolent institution. One might as well call a bank a benevolent institution. Let one make weekly or monthly deposits in any sound banking institution, and that institution will respond to his check when he is sick or well. When an Odd-fellow gets eight or ten dollars a week when sick, it is only his own money he is receiving. What thanks to the lodge for that. Besides, if a Christian man uses his money for God, and trusts in God to take care of him instead of going down to Egypt for help, he will be spared many an accident and many a sickness, which, without God's special care, he might suffer from.

Israel, when whole-hearted for God, were a blessed, happy and thrifty people. When they yoked up with idolaters they suffered. So will we in our spiritual life if in no otherwise.

There are anti-Christian principles involved in becoming an Odd-fellow and in remaining one after becoming one. When one enters the lodge to be initiated he is blindfolded and loaded with chains, and in submitting to these things he confesses that he comes to them in the darkness of nature and in the bondage of sin. These things are so explained to him. How can a man whom Christ has brought from darkness into his marvelous light, and cleansed from sin and delivered from its chains, go before a set of unconverted men, perhaps infidels, and confess himself in darkness and bondage still, without denying his Lord—denying what Christ has done for him? What is a man there for? He is told that it is to learn friendship, love and truth. Think of a man whose heart has been filled with the love of God shed abroad by the Holy Ghost, a love transcending all earthly loves, going among ungodly men to learn friendship, love and truth! Can he do so without confessing that Christ is a failure as a Teacher of love and truth?

Shall we, will we thus deny our Lord? No, never! Let every Christian man refuse the blindfold and refuse the chains, declaring, Men, I come not in darkness nor in bondage; Christ is my light and he has set me free. I need no lodge work. Christ, whose name you carefully ignore in your ritual and in your prayers, has put a love for man and God in my heart beyond the power of your lodge to inculcate. I cannot deny my Lord for your benefit; farewell.

Observation for years shows that those who come out for Christ's sake rejoice in liberty and grow in grace, while those who stay in have but a stinted Christian life, if any at all. With the perils of the last days upon us, enter not into temptation. Brethren, when sinners entice thee, consent thou not. Be not deceived. Let Christ be all in all to you.—Messiah's Advocate, Santa Clara, Cal.

In the depth of the sea the water is still; the heaviest grief is borne in silence; the deepest love flows through the eye and touch; the most impressive preacher at the funeral is the silent one whose lips are cold.

LODGE CHARITY.

[Rev. G. M. Schmucker in the Lutheran Standard.]

The much boasting of the lodge men over their so-called charity becomes disgusting. The lodge people up here boast that their charity far exceeds the charity of the church. It is said that a certain Presbyterian divine, not far from here, in one of his "eloquent" sermons in defense of lodgery, made the assertion that the church was deficient in the great work of charity, and that we stood in need of the lodge to fill out that in which the church is deficient. Now I have a few words to say about this "charity." In the first place I have one objection to this assertion. If these people mean to say that they give away more money than the church does for charitable purposes, they are mistaken. These "wise" people either knowingly lie or they are very ignorant. By comparing the statistics of the contributions of the two, they will find that the church contributes three times as much as the lodge.

This falsehood, further, slanders Christ. These people thereby say that the lodge is better than the church. They say that the teachings of the lodge are better calculated to inspire a man with a spirit of charity than are the teachings of the Word of God. They claim that lodge religion can give them more love than Christ's religion. In a word, they claim that they are better without Christ than with him. Now it is a well-known fact that most of these lodge members also claim to be members of the church. Ordinarily they want to be great lights in the church. Some of them are ministers of the Gospel. If they were the earnest Christians that they pretend to be, the church should be dearer to them than anything else. Does this show that the church is so dear to them? If I love my church I will exalt and not slander it, by telling falsehoods about it.

The great trouble is that the lodge sounds a trumpet whenever she pays out a little money, whilst the church does her alms not letting the left hand know what the right hand doeth. The church has established missions, and sacrificed life, and given money, and offered her labors and her prayers for the great cause of the Lord. She has built colleges and orphanages all over the world. She has raised up the fallen and the weak. All of her grand works of charity have been done without making any great noise. But let the lodge do a little "charity" and they will cackle over it worse than a hen will cackle over a little egg. A few months ago the Freemasons concluded to build an asylum for the aged in Ohio. The papers have been blowing ever since about this "magnanimous enterprise." The church has established dozens of charitable asylums and colleges in this State without making half the noise these Freemasons have made.

Let us suppose that the lodge does contribute more than the church. As I have already said, it it is a well known fact that the majority of lodge members are also members of the church. Why is it that they give more money in the lodge than they do in the church? The contributions of the church at large are regulated by the individual contributions of its members. It is to a great extent the fault of these lodge church members that the church's contributions are so small. If they would contribute to the church instead of giving their money to the lodge, this humiliation would not be brought upon the church. The lodge robs Christ's church of the honor that rightfully belongs to her. We have an American-Mechanico Lutheran up here whose heart almost breaks when we ask him to contribute fifty cents a year to the Lord's treasury; but the same man annually walks up to the Mechanic Lottery-box and drops in his six dollars with as much dignity as ever graced the President of the United States. Just such men have the impudence to say that the lodge give more than the church. Not long since I was in conversation with a lodge Lutheran who also made this same claim. He pointed me to an instance where a certain man stood in need of help. He said the congregation raised five dollars for the man whilst the lodge raised twenty-five for the same man. When I inquired how much he contributed in each the the church and the lodge, I found that he had dropped a penny in the hat for the church collection, whilst he had given two dollars in the lodge contribution. Now it just seems that these lodge members just do this for the purpose of slandering the church. They rob the church and then boastingly say to Christ: "I have more love in our lodge than you can give me in your church; I do not see that I have much use for your church."

There is no charity whatever in the lodge. Now this is a broad assertion, but it is true. Charity is love. Alms must be induced by love. This love must be based on Christ's love for us. "If God so loved us we ought also to love one another." 1 John 4: 11. This love is only bestowed on those who by faith stand in Christ's church. When a man gives alms he does it in connection with Christ's church, because it is Christ's love that constrains him to give them. Such charity only does Christ commend. If I, in true Christian love, clothe and feed my brother, Christ regards my charity as bestowed upon him. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matt. 25: 40. To such alone will he address the blessed words: "Inherit the kingdom prepared for you." Matt. 25: 34. The lodge man slaps Christ in the face every time he exercises his lodge "charity," for he does not exercise it in Christ's name. Will these people have the cheek to come before Christ on the judgment day and argue that they have done these things to him? or will they have a judgment in which Christ shall not be interested? Since they are doing everything else separate and apart from Christ and his church, perhaps they expect to fight their way into heaven on some other line.

All this so-called charity is nothing but selfishness. This is another broad assertion, but it is none the less true. The man that pays his money in the lodge expects to get it back with interest. Why does this man so grudgingly give his fifty cents to the church, and so freely give his six dollars to the lodge? The answer is plain. In the case of the church this man's faulty faith does not see where he will receive any returns for his fifty cents, whilst in the case of the lodge his flesh imagines that he will get his money with interest.

"Ah," they say, "do not you invest your money in the bank expecting interest?" Certainly I do, but when I go to the bank to invest my money I do not sound a trumpet and say, "Look at my works of charity; I give more than the church gives." If I look down street, I see three or four signs which read: "Insurance office." According to the lodge man's definition of charity the time will surely come when these signs shall read: "Charity office." When these insurance men pay policies they will cry out: "Look at our charity. We pay out more money than the church does." Once upon a time a certain man was boasting to me how well he was doing by his aged father. He said: "My father stays with me, and I give him a good bed to sleep in and he eats at the table with me and my family. He has nothing to do but to drive the cows to pasture, and watch the sheep out of the corn, and between times grub in the new ground." I asked him if his father left him anything. "Oh, yes," said he, "he left me a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of land, but it didn't have any buildings on it." If a man gives me five dollars it is easy for me to give him two dollars in "charity," and keep three dollars for my trouble. True charity, as found in the church, does not inquire whether a man has been a paying member of the church. Lodge "charity" must be certain that the man was a member of the lodge and that he had promptly paid his dues.

Lodge men boast that they always receive more than they give. There is only one thing wrong about this statement, and that is: it is false. Dr. Carradine, M. E. pastor of St. Louis, Mo., in his famous anti-secret society sermon, says: "From the statistics of 1883 I get this: a fraternity of 550,000 members in it received $5,000,000.00. Two millions of that were given to the poor and sick, and it took over 3,000,000 to meet their regular expenses, so that it cost that fraternity $3.00 to give away $2.00." Now, if the church should show up such statistics, the lodge would "smile out loud." Statistics show us that about 60 per cent of the members of the lodge receive nothing whatever from it, while the remaining 40 per cent receive an average of two-fifths of what they invest.

NOTE.

The charity of the most charitable lodge, the Independent Order of Odd-fellows, can be seen from the following: "An applicant for membership must . . . . be free from all infirmity or disease." Art. II, Sec. 1. Constitution of Subordinate Lodges for the State of Ohio. Again: "A member who shall become in arrears shall thereby forfeit all right to and stand suspended from all benefits, of whatsoever kind, during the continuance of any sickness that may intervene while in arrears." Art. IX, Sec. 1.

The pamphlet from which these quotations are made bears the seal of lodge No. 483.

—Brother Rev. Wallace J. Gladwin, at Bombay, India, whose article on the opium trade is printed in another column of this paper, writes as follows: "I desire to pray that the N. C. A. work may be deeply rooted and grounded on Christ. No 'reform' can succeed that is not wholly in the hands of the 'Reformer,' Jesus.' Of a colporteur employed in distributing "reform" literature, he says: "A third, just employed, was badly beaten this week by some brutish Mohammedans. He is praising the Lord in his sufferings. How can we induce God's young people to go into his great world-harvest fields? Surely, his strong commands and sweet promises ought to be enough. I am writing my experience of secrecy, and may send it to you soon."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Fourth.—The new law for drunkards in Massachusetts.—A lodge apologist in the "Transcript."—A remarkable case in a Brookline church.

A nation's birthday should be as much an occasion for solemn thoughtfulness as the birthday of an individual, but how little of this spirit enters into the usual celebrations of the Fourth. There may not, perhaps, be as much of the spread-eagle style of oratory as formerly; still there is plenty of room for improvement. We can celebrate the day in a much wiser fashion than we do. We can teach our children and young people to keep it in a nobler and better way than by its complete abandonment to the goddess of noise and misrule; and I am also sure that when we have really learned how to keep the Fourth, in the spirit as well as in the letter, it will not be by allowing the licensed saloon to steal away from so many of its citizens their manhood, and degrade them, not to, but far below, the level of brutes. The number of intoxicated men to be seen in Boston on our last Fourth was a disgrace to the city. While all places of legitimate business were shut up in deference to the patriotic spirit of the day, by the rumseller, with whom all times and seasons are alike, it seemed to be regarded only as a chance for making money out of the vices and weaknesses of his fellow creatures. Let the anniversary of our country's independence be too sacred a day to be profaned by unworthy or degraded by childish ways of celebrating it, but let it be kept with something of the dignity and soberness that becomes a great nation.

The new law in Massachusetts relating to drunkenness allows no habitual drunkard to be let off with a fine, but imprisonment for a longer or shorter time must be substituted in each case. On his statement, substantiated by good evidence, that he has not been arrested for this offence twice in the previous twelve months, he may be released. The law, like most others dealing with this subject, has its defective points. It is a victory both for the cause of public morals and equal rights, that the rich man and the tramp, if they choose to get drunk, must stand on a level before the law. It will also prevent many a poor woman from giving up the hard earnings which are needed to support herself and family to pay the fine of some drunken wretch, whose only return, as soon as he is released, will be to beat and abuse her. Whether justice will always be done under the new law, or how often men will make false statements and thus escape the punishment they deserve, is another thing. And so it goes. We license a certain number of men to manufacture all the drunkards they can, and then keep our legislators racking their brains to decide what to do with them after they are made.

I see that somebody has been stirred up by Bro. Stoddard's late victory to write to the Boston Transcript about the "fuss," as he terms it, which the Baptist ministers have recently been making on the subject of secret societies. It is something that the lodge has thus been driven to the defensive and obliged to give reasons for its existence; for so ridiculous and untenable are the grounds upon which it stands, that when it does so the effect is nearly as good as an anti-secret lecture. He declares that secret societies are more Christian than the churches, for they do the Christian work that the churches neglect, by caring for the poor, the stranger, the prisoner, the fatherless and the widow. I have not yet heard of any Prisoners' Aid or Foreign Emigrant Society among the Masons, the I. O. O. F. or any other organization, but the lodge must, of course, be allowed to have its pet argument, and work it for all it is worth. I have often wondered what apologists for the institution would do without it. How serenely and imperturbably it dodges up, though you think you have demolished it fifty times over, buried it under columns of statistics, hurled at its head all the figures in the day-books of our missionary and benevolent societies! This wearisome hashing up of the same old argument on every occasion seems to be peculiarly characteristic of all evil systems. Falsehood is hard to kill, for it has many lives. The truth is impossible to kill, for though it has only one life, that life is eternal. Curiously enough, this apologist for the lodge professes not to belong to any secret society himself, but to the universal church of Christ, which encircles with its love all those upon whom the Heavenly Father sends his sunshine and his rain! Heaven deliver the Bride of Christ from such secret foes under the mask of friends; and yet every open display of the malevolent spirit of the lodge towards her is really a matter of rejoicing. The end is near when the conflict narrows to a point where all people can see, whether worldlings or Christians, the true nature of the struggle;—that it is really between Christ and anti-Christ, the synagogues of Satan and the church of the living God.

The last Evening Record tells a remarkable story, which, if true in all its particulars, is about as good an evidence that we are in the last days as anything I have yet seen. It seems that last Sabbath a citizen of Boston, W. C. D. Pattyson by name, was arrested for disturbing a meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society in Dr. Gifford's church at Brookline, by telling them that teas, sociables, and strawberry festivals were not the right way to carry on religious work. The Record is a somewhat sensational sheet, and the affair may not be correctly reported. Mr. Pattyson is highly spoken of, not only by the jail officials, but all who know him. His own story is that he did most of his speaking at the weekly meetings at which the Sunday-school lesson was discussed, and in all his remarks he did not depart from the text as there laid down. The Sunday-school lessons have certainly of late afforded texts in plenty for warnings quite in the old prophetic line, and the very fact that the churches are so annoyed and troubled when rebuked for their backslidings is perhaps the best possible sign that they need rebuke. This incident is quite a reminder of the old times, when Geo. Fox and his followers were haled to prison for disturbing the peace of the churches; and, like them, Mr. Pattyson may not have been altogether prudent and discreet in his speech, or in his methods. But no doubt there were many (possibly among his own disciples) who thought the same thing of Christ when he purged the Temple with his whip of small cords. Altogether it is a remarkable case, and reminds me of a somewhat similar one, many years ago, at the West, when a Methodist exhorter, an old Abolitionist, and one of the sweetest and noblest of men, was thrown into prison for talking holiness in a Presbyterian church.

Ex-President Blanchard, with Mrs. E. A. Cook, and a grand-daughter, paid me a flying visit the other day. He seems in better health than when I last saw him; and as I looked on his venerable face, so dear to thousands, North, South, East and West, I could have but one thought, which was of thankfulness to God that the years are dealing so kindly with him, for such men are not for every generation, and their lives grow more precious to the world, like the Sybilline leaves, as the number of their years grow less.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, July 8, 1891.

The Washington Young Men's Christian Association is blessed with a very capable and energetic set of officers, who are untiring in their efforts to provide such eminent speakers for their Sunday afternoon meetings that the interest will be kept up even during the heated term. They have recently adopted a plan that is worthy of being followed by other associations, which is to get prominent clergymen who are taking their annual vacations to come to this city for the purpose of addressing the association; and the first to accept the invitation was Rev. Dr. William McKibben, of Cincinnati, Ohio, who delivered an address on "Strength," Sunday afternoon, taking for his text the words of St. John: "I write unto you, young men, because you are strong, and the word of God abideth in you." He told his hearers that young men are weak in not having had experience; that they must listen to advice, and not forget that they have the model young man in Jesus Christ, who did his work before he was thirty-three years old; and that repentance and faith are the only things to save a man; that the young man who invested his powers in the bank of Jesus Christ was the young man who would have the government bond, with interest increasing, in all ages to come.

Sunday and Monday were temperance days at Glen Echo, and the exercises on both days were under the auspices of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, of Boston, was the principal speaker on both days, Sunday's address being based upon the query—"Has the night of death no morning?" and Monday's upon, "A dream of to-morrow." Next to Mrs. Livermore's oration the feature of Monday's exercises that was most pleasing was the mass meeting of children held in the afternoon. The little ones recited and sung as only children can sing, and were afterwards addressed by Rev. Dr. S. M. Newman. Later, Rev. Dr. E. S. Todd talked most interestingly on "Young Women's Work."

Mrs. Maggie P. Platt, in a spirited address to the Good Templars, told them that it was not public sentiment, not education, not political parties, but backbone, which was needed to fight the liquor traffic. "It is backbone," she said, "which will make men go to the polls and vote for the total overthrow of the liquor interests. I do not believe in any check-rein, but a clean sweep of the whole business, and this can only be accomplished by plenty of backbone."

The W. C. T. U. have begun a crusade against some of the so-called non-alcoholic drinks which are sold from druggists' soda fountains, and it is proposed to have specimens of these drinks analyzed for the purpose of ascertaining whether they contain alcohol. If they do the druggists are to be prosecuted for selling them.

A bulletin issued by the census bureau this week gives the number of public school pupils enrolled in 1890 in the entire United States as 12,592,721. Truly this is a most gratifying statement, showing, as it does, that in round numbers, one-fifth of our total population is engaged in acquiring knowledge which will make better men and women of them, even though the most of them be compelled to leave school and go to work before they have received more than a foundation upon which to build an education. There is good ground for hoping that the nation which has one-fifth of its population at school will in the near future make some giant strides in moral reform; for while it is true that education does not of itself make moral men and women, it does make men and women more amenable to sound arguments against immorality of all kinds, besides making them more accessible to both written and spoken arguments, to say nothing of the knowledge which even a partial education gives of the examples set before the world in the lives of good men and women. When you educate a nation you have gone a long way toward Christianizing it.

"God be with you till we meet again," was sung by the Christian Endeavor delegates and their friends who had gone to see them off, as the special Minneapolis convention train started for the West on Monday night. Before boarding the train the delegates took part in a service of song, prayer and talk, which was attended by as many as the largest church in the city could accommodate. *

You can cure a hundred drunkards easier than you can cure one opium-eater. I have heard of cases of reformation but I never saw any. You never heard a sermon against opium, but it seems to me there ought to be ten thousand pulpits turned into quaking, flaming, thundering Sinais of warning against this plague narcotic.—Talmage.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ANTI-SECRECY AND TEMPERANCE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Custer City, Pa., July, 1891.

Editor Cynosure:—Rev. L. G. Jordan, formerly in the employ of the National Christian Association, nicknamed "Texas Cyclone," has just closed a month's work in this county (McKean, Pa.,) in the interests of Prohibition, under the direction of the county committee.

All except political bummers and slavish secretists, coupled with whisky-slingers, unite in praise of his logic and force of speech. While Prohibition was his theme, the lodge system received some of his shafts and winced. Bro. Jordan is a brave man, and worthy the recognition and approbation of all Christians.

Bro. Jordan related to me a lodge experience of our Prohibition County Chairman (M. S. Howe), as told him by Mr. Howe. He was a K. T., and prosecuting a liquor-seller; the liquor-seller sent for Mr. Howe, pleading sickness as a reason for not coming himself. Mr. Howe went to him, received the Masonic grip, and then Mr. Dispenser of "Liquid Hell" and his friends tried to persuade Mr. Howe to remember his lodge bond and quit the prosecution; like an honest citizen, he refused, and Boniface appealed to his lodge to prosecute Howe for un-Masonic conduct in prosecuting a lodge brother. It opened Mr. Howe's eyes. Thank God! May thousands be opened and stay open.

Bro. Jordan will work for a season in Sandusky, Ohio. I cheerfully recommend him to the confidence of anti-secretists and prohibitionists there and elsewhere.

I would say, further, to the loyal United Brethren of Sandusky and vicinity, help Bro. Jordan, who, in his fearless lodge opposition, will, indirectly if not directly, help our cause.

IOWA PROHIBITIONISTS AND SECRECY.

DeKalb, Iowa, July 4, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—The Iowa State Convention of the Prohibition party met June 10th, in the Good Templars' hall at Des Moines. It was the largest ever held in the State. They were, as usual, silent in regard to one thing, which is most subtle in protecting the rum fiend—the lodge. They say their "platform is broad enough for all true reformers to stand upon." So, according to that, they do not consider the work of the National Christian Association, represented by the Christian Cynosure, a true reform, though it is greatly encouraged and promoted by the best of evangelists and lecturers of this age. I would respectfully refer them to such men as D. L. Moody and many other evangelists and ministers, who give the Gospel trumpet no uncertain sound on the lodge question. They are in every orthodox church.

We are glad at the head of the lecture list to place the name of Joseph Cook, whose lecture has been widely circulated in printed form, and can be had by addressing the Christian Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison street, Chicago.

We will give a few names of those departed, whose memories every patriot delights to honor. Their words shall burn upon the altar of the heart of every true reformer:

The voice of John Quincy Adams:—"I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

Thaddeus Stevens, who certainly knew what he was talking about, said:—"By Freemasonry trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

The words of George Washington, Charles Sumner, William Wirt, Judge Marshall, President Fillmore, Wm. H. Seward, Daniel Webster, and other eminent Americans, confirm the above.

In "An Address to the Ministers of Iowa," by the Prohibition party, they say: "Whatever affects the morals of our sovereign citizens, reacts through popular elections and party legislation upon all the laws of the commonwealth." Then why does the Prohibition party ignore the secrecy question? Do not the lodges, with their Christless worship in secret, now affect "the morals" which "react" upon legislation and "trials by jury?" Does true reform ignore this?

They claim the ministers as "conservators of the public morals." Then why do they not heed the voice of Moody, the great evangelist, or Rev. B. Carradine, the wise and eminently faithful M. E. pastor of St. Louis? There are a host of others to mention, did space permit. It is wise in them to claim, in the "address," that "Religion must undoubtedly furnish the motives for such political action and legal enactments as will secure the protection of the public morals." The religion of Jesus Christ is the only true and reliable standard. It is of, or really belongs to, his church and not to the lodge. The lodge is a false standard of morals and religion, having altars and prayers, but in secret, and ritualistic, which form of prayer rejects the name of Christ. Then why does the Prohibition party ignore the secrecy question? Lodge religion is no protection to public morals. Jesus says: "Without me ye can do nothing," and he declares, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." It is because of false standards prohibition is not already won.

CYRUS SMITH.

SCOTCH RITE MASONRY—THE CRADLE OF THE REBELLION.

YORK, Pa., July 1, 1891.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—The anti-secret citizens of the world are under many obligations to President J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, for his having given them "more light" upon many dark and mysterious matters; but I do not see how we can ever give him all the thanks he should have for his great Scotch Rite book.

As a ritual, this book is worth five dollars; as a history of a great humbug, it is worth fifty dollars; and as an exposition of the great and bloody Jesuitic-Masonic-Slaveholders' Rebellion, it is worth five hundred dollars to every true American and every true lover of civil and religious liberty everywhere.

As an eye-witness in Maryland before the war; as an observer in Baltimore during the outbreak of the rebellion; as a United States Internal Revenue official, at York; as a member of three companies of Pennsylvania militia; and as a sailor in the South Atlantic blockading squadron and the United States Navy in other places, I do not hesitate to indorse all President Blanchard says in his great book, in regard to the horrible conspiracy to destroy the Republic. And I will say, too, that I can add much to the sufficient evidence which he gives.

American citizens, North and South, blue and gray, do not yet understand the terrible rebellion. But President Blanchard's interesting volumes will certainly give them many astonishing facts to meditate upon. Yours etc.,

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

PITH AND POINT.

(Opinions received in private letters.)

TRUE TO ITS CONVICTIONS.

"We enjoy your paper very much indeed. I am glad, in this policy age, to see some who will stand up strong in their convictions."—REV. A. A. MYERS, Clifton Springs, N. Y.

LODGERY A CRIME AND A SIN.

"The cause you represent is a grand one, and should demand the earnest attention and hearty assistance of every true defender of the cause of Christ throughout the civilized world. Lodge secrecy is not only a crime, but a damning sin, and a curse to my race, especially. It is an evil that must be crushed out at all hazards."—REV. O. L. REESE, White Castle La

DANGER OF LODGE OATHS.

"I regard any secret society in which Christian men by oath bind themselves into alliance with wicked men, a menace to their own character, to their truest loyalty to country, to their usefulness as Christians, in every avenue of influence. Its effect to the Christian is a plug to outspeaking against every evil; to the rumseller and vicious persons in the lodge, a shield from proper condemnation, and a comfort and assistance in his evil work."

WHEN HARMFUL.

"The 'Society of Jesus,' the Mormon hierarchy, and such of the so-called fraternities as bind themselves under secret oaths to such a loyalty to the order as conflict with obligations to the church, the state and the home, are harmful."

OF COURSE IT'S WRONG.

"I am opposed to all secret societies. I believe the principle to be wrong."

THE LODGE THE ALLY OF WICKEDNESS.

"Secrecy, however needful on occasion, is the natural ally of selfishness and wickedness. Need must approach necessity, to justify its use in associations of men. In a settled, peaceful state of society, in which there can be no call for combinations on behalf of public safety, I do not approve of organizations which demand the pledge of secrecy."

ALL HARMFUL.

"Secret societies are all harmful to the church, the state and the home. The moral cowardice of the church has been a great feeder of secret societies."

LODGERY ANTAGONIZES CHRISTIANITY.

"I am a member of two of the great orders; but in my experience as a pastor I find that the most faithful members of lodges are, when church members, about the least faithful; and, after a membership of some seven years in one, and ten in another, I am less favorably impressed than at first."

"GILT-EDGED, AND GUILTY-EDGED."

"I am emphatically and openly opposed to ALL secret societies—'the gilt-edged and guilty-edged.' The principle of sworn secrecy, which is the chain connecting them into one world-wide 'secret empire,' makes the system subversive of the objects and principles underlying the church, the state and the home—the only divinely ordained institutions."

LODGERY LICENSES EVIL.

"Secrecy in society has proved itself to be a corrupt principle, giving license to more or less of evil in all; and the aggregation of this evil is tremendous."

ALL OPPOSED TO CHRISTIANITY.

"I don't know of any secret society helpful to the Christian church. Every one of them is more or less antagonistic to the Christian principles."

FOOLISH OR WICKED.

"I am opposed to all secret societies. At least, I know of no exceptions to make; some are chiefly foolish; others more especially wicked."

LITERATURE.

TWO CANNIBAL ARCHIPELAGOES—New Hebrides and Solomon Groups. By Emma H. Adams, author of "Fiji and Samoa," etc. Oakland, Cal.: Pacific Press Publishing Co. Price 60 cents.

The out-of-the-way places of the globe—lands heretofore best known as the far-off missionary fields of the church—lands from which have come to us tales of captivity and bloodshed among barbarous islanders and men-eaters—are gradually becoming better understood in the light of recent geographical research, and their pecularities form a particularly interesting chapter in the history of humanity and the efforts to introduce civilization and Christianity among these benighted people. The New Hebrides and Solomon groups of islands in the Pacific Ocean have been especially prominent in the history of missionary labor and cannibalism, and this feature adds much of interest to the author's description of their physical and social peculiarities. The book should find attentive readers, and derives value from the personal reminiscences of the author in the lands which she describes.

ALDEN'S CYCLOPEDIA OF UNIVERSAL LITERATURE: Presenting Biographical and Critical Notices, and Specimens from the Writings of Eminent Authors of All Ages and All Nations. Vol. XVIII. From Seeley to Tacitus. Published by John B. Alden, New York and 242 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

This convenient work is not only an alphabetical and concise series of biographies, but a collection of choice extracts from the literature of the past; and in this respect it possesses a great degree of interest. For instance, here we have life-sketches of Horace and James Smith, two English poets of excellent reputation in the early part of the present century. These men were brothers, true Londoners, possessed of many attractive personal traits, and, consequently, enjoyed a prominent place in metropolitan society. They were also men of wit, and wrote a number, each, of very satisfactory poems, beaming with healthy sentiment and natural humor. Yet it is understood that the quality of their poetry did not allow them to be classed with Byron and Shelley and Scott among the published collections of "British Poets," and their works are gradually fading into oblivion. But the province of this Cyclopedia is to perpetuate their memory, and preserve specimens of their verse and wit, so that the present and coming generation may know something of the men who amused the English people with their talents, a century ago, and left, when they died, a host of pleasant recollections to be cherished by their survivors. Sir Philip Sidney, Shakspeare, Seward, Prof. Silliman and a hundred other noted characters are also incorporated in this volume, which is, throughout, replete with interest.

THE JULY MAGAZINES.

The Century for July has for its frontispiece a fine portrait of Horace Greeley, illustrating "Greeley's Estimate of Lincoln," a hitherto unpublished address by the great journalist. Besides continuations of the Squirrel Inn and The Faith Doctor, are the following papers: A Day at Laguerre's—a characteristic French sketch by the author of "Col. Carter of Cartersville;" Provencal Bull-fights (in France), illustrated, by Joseph Pennell; the Paintings of Fra Bartolommeo Della Porta (1745–1517) and Mariotto Albertinelli (1474–1515), illustrated—forming new chapters in the Italian Old Masters series, by W. J. Stillman; Gen. Miles' Indian Campaigns, with portrait and other illustrations, by Major G. W. Baird, U. S. A.; Across the Plains in the Donner Party, 1846—A Personal Narrative of the Overland Trip to California, illustrated, by Virginia R. Murphy; Lunar Landscape, illustrated (revelations from the great Lick telescope), by Edward S. Holden; Tao: the Way—An Artist's Letter from Japan, by John La Farge; Paris, the Typical Modern City, described, by Albert Shaw. There are also several short stories and poems, with the usual crisp departmental notes and notices, topics, open letters, bric-a-brac, etc. New York: The Century Co.

Knowledge, for July, has 64 pages filled with the freshest intelligence concerning persons, towns, cities, nations, scientific, literary and miscellaneous topics, bringing down the information contained in the voluminous, costly, and behind-hand cyclopedias to the present date. As an auxiliary publication, designed for ready reference, it is timely and desirable, and, in connection with Alden's Manifold Cyclopedia, and with which it is uniformly printed, its usefulness is very great. Published monthly by John B. Alden, New York and 242 Wabash Ave., Chicago, at 75 cents per annum.

The Evangelical Repository for July has a review of Mrs. Surratt's Trial and Execution for conspiracy during the Southern War; Rev. H. R. Haweis has a readable paper on "Wit in the Pulpit;" Rev. Dr. Shedd, another on "Conjectural Criticism;" Rev. Dr. Chamberlain (from the Independent) relates his experiences "In the Tiger Jungle;" Emma B. Ryder advocates the relief of "The Little Wives of India;" "Recent Progress is Astronomy" is noted; and the other characteristic contents possess an abundance of interest for the home circle. T. J. McKalip & Co., publishers, Pittsburgh.

The July Missionary Review, edited by Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, contains a score of articles on missionary life and effort,—some of considerable importance, and all of value as sketching the mission work of the churches in various parts of the world. All friends of missions will find in it a fund of food for instruction, enjoyment and meditation. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, New York City.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly for July has a finely colored specimen of the sweet pea family (Lathyrus Splendens) for its frontispiece, and, as usual, is rich in other illustrations and horticultural and floral intelligence, a young people's department, and, altogether, maintains its prestige as a popular monthly visitor to the home. Published by James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

LODGE NOTES.

One of the medical examiners of the New England Order of Protection in Connecticut has been expelled from the Order for inducing a woman to disrobe under the plea that it was necessary to a medical examination prior to initiation. Criminal proceedings and a civil suit are also reported about to be instituted by the woman's husband.—American Legion of Honor Journal.

A lodge decision: No member can be kept in the order against his will or without his consent, and no person is authorized to pay assessments and dues for a member without his express or implied order. The beneficiary during a member's lifetime has no interest in his benefit certificate, and has no right to keep the member in good standing against his will.—K. of H. Reporter.

Wives, mothers and sisters "fail to see what good comes of these secret orders" "It makes a place for husbands, fathers and brothers to spend their evenings, and the Lord only knows what deviltry they are up to." "There can't be much good come from anything which is shrouded in so much mystery," etc. This feeling exists, too, very much more among the women than the men.—Fraternal News.

Persons belonging to secret beneficiary organizations should think twice before severing their connection with orders to which they belong, on account of increased assessments at the present time. All organizations are at present suffering from the effects of the grippe, a disease which as an epidemic has worse results in increased mortality than yellow fever, or any other of the occasional epidemic scourges visiting our country.—Intelligencer.

When the Crusaders were on the march to the Holy City, the Knights were in the daily custom of planting their long two-handed swords upright in the ground, thereby forming a cross; and before these they performed their morning devotions. On all military occasions they kissed the hilts of their swords, in token of devotion to the Cross, for the prayers of the soldiers were formerly considered of such efficacy that they were made an essential part of their duty.—The Companion.

In the Sovereign Jurisdiction of Odd-fellowship the gain for the past year has been 36,834, as far as reported to Grand Secretary Ross up to date. This leaves two Grand Lodges to hear from. For the previous year the increase was 28,-708, the increase this year being 8,126 above that year. Other branches of the order have increased in the same ratio. Illinois gained 25 lodges and 2,597 members last year, making a total of 733 lodges and 38,858 members. There are in that Jurisdiction 204 D. of R. lodges with 10,826 members, a gain for the year of 1,634.—The Companion.

"Masonicus" writes to the Glasgow (Scotland) Evening News as follows: "Sir:—In Tuesday's Evening News we read under 'Mems. for Freemasons' as follows: 'It is a matter of history that in the reign of James II. the office of Grand Master of Scotland was granted to William St. Clair of Rosslyn, etc., and his heirs and successors, by the King's Charter.' Now, I beg to ask the authority for this assertion. As a student of Masonic history I assert that there was no Masonic 'Grand Master of Scotland' previous to last century. The first Masonic 'Grand Master' in Scotland was William St. Clair of Rossline, and he was elected in 1736. The James II. Grand Mastership and the hereditary Grand Mastership are both Masonic myths; while the James II. charter has yet to be discovered. The 'charter' given to the Laird of Rosling by the Masons and Hammermen in 1628—in which he is appointed trade referee—is of more importance for Glasgow Masons, as it is genuine, and 'The Lodge of Glasgow' is mentioned in it, while the Melrose Lodge is conspicuous by its absence."—The Freemason.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

James Madison: "From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuse, outweighing any advantages promised by its patrons."

James G. Birney, candidate of the Liberty party for President, was a Freemason, "but never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and, as his sons grew up, he cautioned them against joining any secret order."—Gen. Wm. Birney.

Hon. Ezra Butler, ex-Governor of Vermont:—One Masonic obligation requires that a Mason shall vote for a brother in preference to any other person of equal qualifications. Is not this political Masonry? The Masons in Vermont are about one-twentieth part of the freemen, and they hold about three-fourths of all the important offices in the State. Is this owing to their superior fitness, or to political Masonry?

Philo Carpenter:—This saint of God (Moses Stuart) like the old prophets, was satisfied with the institutions and ordinances of God's house, and consequently did not give his influence or aid in supplementing the same with human ordinances and worldly alliances; in other words, he was opposed to secret, oath-bound societies, into which many good men, and even clergymen, have been, and are being "ensnared."

Hon. Cadwallader C. Colden, Mayor of New York and M. C.:—It is true that I have been a Mason a great number of years, and that I have held very high Masonic offices and honors. It is equally true that I have for a long time ceased to have any connection with the institution because I have believed, and do now believe, it is productive of much more evil than good. I have long entertained my present opinion, that a man who would eschew all evil should not be a Freemason.

Horace Greeley:—Many persons were brought to trial on account of the murder of Morgan, but no one was judicially found guilty of murder. It was established by secreting Masons that the oaths—at least in some of the highest degrees—that were administered, and taken by those admitted to Masonic lodges, disqualified them from serving as jurors in any case where a brother Mason of like degree was a party, and his antagonist was not.

Hon. Seth M. Gates, ex-Member:—Profoundly convinced by long experience and observation that Freemasonry is an evil and pernicious institution. I wish once more in my advanced age to lift my warning voice publicly against it and all kindred organizations, and to beseech Christian men to have no connection or fellowship with them. Jesus is not, and cannot properly be recognized in Freemasonry. He must be ignored in the lodge-room, in its lectures, instructions, and in its prayers.

Hon. Heman Lincoln, ex-Governor, Mass:—Freemasonry, as a distinct, independent government within our own government, and beyond the control of the laws of the land, by means of its secrecy and the oaths and regulations which its subjects are bound to obey under penalties of death, has occupied much of the attention of the committee. . . . We believe, in the language of the Edinburgh Review, that all secret societies are justly deemed odious, wherever the government is tolerably free, and can only be excused where the existence of arbitrary power, foreign or domestic, leaves no other means of escaping from hopeless slavery.

Gen. Henry Sewall, a companion of Washington:—I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army. . . . I was led by the influence of this "perfect rule of faith and practice," during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its charity appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion deism because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity unsustainable; its titles fulsome; its rites barbarous and absurd; its oaths extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken, and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1891.

THE SINEWS OF WAR.

Persons who do not read the Bible sometimes say that money is the root of all evil, evidently supposing their statement to be a quotation from God's Word. More careful speakers know that the wealth of the world is claimed by Jehovah as his own, and that even its distribution is declared to be by his own determination. Being one part of God's creation, it is included in the statement that all was very good. It is good, and when honestly obtained and rightly used is one of the powers which make for righteousness. When men acquire riches by oppression, fraud, or force, and when they use them for their own gratification or glorification, then they begin to love the creature more than the Creator; they have that love of money which is the root of all evil. They are in the company who lie, steal, cheat, and corrupt their fellow men for gain.

It is evident that the duty to use property for man's need or God's truth continues while the possession of property continues. Men who have means often complain that calls continue. It seems hard to give this year, when we gave last. Yet we receive this year, and must impart or become robbers of God. It is matter of experience that endowed churches are dead churches. The stream of Christian beneficence must continue to flow, or it will stagnate and become pestilential. The church, the Bible cause, the mission enterprise, the church building fund, all come before the well-balanced Christian mind from time to time, and each receives as God has prospered, if duty is done.

It is plain that the church should be the great reforming and benevolent agency in the world. By right there would never be societies for the promotion of temperance, anti-slavery, opposition to secret societies, or other moral reforms. The only excuse for the origination and maintenance of these societies is that the church becomes worldly, conservative, or cowardly, and refuses to perform its duty. When the liquor shop, the lodge, the tobacco farm, the auction block, or any other moral evil, becomes intrenched in the church, individuals must combine for the overthrow of that specific iniquity. When that work is accomplished, the society will naturally dissolve, while the church, intended to antagonize not some evil but all evil, to maintain not some truth but all truth, will live on.

During that period when a refusal to do duty on the church's part compels the creation of societies for moral reform, such organizations have a valid claim on the prayers, testimonies and purses of Christians. Readers of the Cynosure have observed that the Presbyterian ministers' meeting in Chicago, and the Baptist ministers' meeting in Boston, were recently addressed on the lodge question—the former by Rev. E. R. Worrell, the latter by Rev. J. P. Stoddard. We are now also finding in the religious press a recognition of the truth which we have insisted upon so long, that if men sustain lodges they will not support churches. They will be glad to come marching to church once a year with uniforms and a band of music; they will be glad to have some professed minister of the Gospel humble himself by preaching the praises of a worldly, Christ-rejecting lodge, made up of believers and infidels, but they will not attend the church nor support it. Our papers are beginning to see this truth, and we may expect in the near future a powerful testimony from them and from the professor's desk and minister's pulpit.

For a time, however, we must wait; and during this waiting time all those who are enlightened respecting the vast evils resulting from secret orders should make some offering each year to diffuse information concerning them. Last month our expenses were about seven hundred dollars and our income was about four hundred. All probably understand that the summer months are the time of the year when the income of all benevolent societies is small. Can we not have a free and cheerful offering from all our friends for the extension of this work? We are not giving for mere temporal relief when we teach men the dangers arising from secretism; we are warning them against a paganism that destroys the soul. Our labor is not to advance some one sect, but to save men from Christ-rejecting lodges, which are destroying all churches and tending to make them retreats for women and children. The ruin of secret orders would tend to restore our Sabbath, which they use for their railroad travel to conclaves, etc. It would also help to close the saloons which are gay with bunting when a lodge conclave comes to town. We earnestly request all those who love openness, fair-play among men, and, above all, the church of Jesus Christ, to send to our Treasurer, Rev. W. I. Phillips, 221 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill., at once, some offering for the work. All contributions will be reported in the columns of the Cynosure, unless directions to the contrary are sent. If we act cheerfully and promptly, we may expect the good work to advance yet more rapidly as time passes, until all those who are willing to know and obey the truth have it placed within their reach. For the Board of Directors,

CHARLES A. BLANCHARD,
Financial Secretary.

VACATION.

This word denotes freedom from care or the intermission of stated employments. It, the vacation, grows out of the need for change which inheres in the human mind. Uninterrupted strain results in physical degeneration, insanity, or death. In the Mosaic system, that marvelous arrangement for the well-being of man, there was full recognition of this need. The Sabbath rest was absolute. Each year three great feasts gave time for religious and social converse. Business was set aside. The seventh year pealed out a release from customary employments, and was to be spent in culture of mind and heart. Gainful pursuits were to cease, and a season of rest refresh and strengthen for toils yet to come. When the Jubilee arrived, it seems that the Sabbath year was doubled, though this is not entirely clear.

In this mammon age, when the craze for pleasure, wealth, and display permeates all classes, the vacation has been sadly perverted. Instead of being treated as a right of mankind, it has come to be considered the privilege of classes. And those who enjoy it are they whose toil is least exhausting, and whose compensation is highest. The men who labor for thirty to sixty dollars per month are not expected to take a vacation, and in many lines of labor they are not even permitted to rest on the Sabbath.

Mr. Depew and his brother directors have been acquitted in their trial for manslaughter. It may be that the verdict was warranted by the facts in the case. It is none the less true that those gentlemen in compelling their employes to labor seven days per week are shortening the average life of the men about twelve years. A man who voluntarily, for the sake of gain, labors without Sabbath rest is a suicide, and one who thus labors because he must or starve is murdered. In addition, there are the lives lost in accidents caused by the overstrain of men—many of them young—thus forced to endless toil, and incapable of doing the work assigned in such a manner as to render life secure.

The average American wage-worker has a very low opinion of the church, and he is coming to hate the employing class. These feelings are, like all malevolence, the fault of those cherishing them. At the same time, there is a measure of excuse. The responsibility is divided. It is not strange that a man who labors hard seven days a week, for two dollars per day, should be alienated from the church, which seems to care so much for itself and so little for him.

Whenever we get back to our great Example, and go about doing good, rebuking the oppression of the poor, feeding the hungry, caring for the sick, teaching the ignorant, comforting the dying—then the common people will hear us gladly. Far be it from us to say that there are not faithful, self-denying and compassionate men in pulpit and pew; there are. But the fact remains as stated. The gap between the common people and the so-called better classes is widening. Nothing would operate to close that gap like a return to the divine plan of vacations, the blessed rest of body, brain, and heart for rich and poor, learned and ignorant, man and woman, adult and child—the Sabbath of God, not for some men, but for all men.

"FORCED TO JOIN THE UNION."

Owing to the action of the Seamen's Union the fleet of big schooners which finished unloading a cargo of coal at Robert Law's docks at Eighteenth street was unable to clear for Duluth last night.

Captain George Cooper, of the schooner Melbourne, came into the Des Plaines Street police station last night to secure the assistance of officers, and if his story is true the Seaman's Union has been party to a gross outrage. Captain Cooper is master of the Melbourne, which is owned in Detroit by D. Whiting, Jr. The vessel is one of a fleet of three which arrived at this port a few days ago laden with coal. The other two boats are the Delaware and Nopgen, and the fleet cleared from Oswego with cargoes consigned to Robert Law.

Yesterday morning, while Captain Cooper was absent from his vessel, a delegation from the Seamen's Union went on board. They found the craft in charge of the mate, with a crew of three sailors named Wm. H. Sawyer, William Owen and Axup Armitage. The men had signed articles for the round trip to Ogdensburg with Captain Cooper, but as they were not members of the union, the delegation ordered them to quit the vessel. This the men refused to do, and the representatives of the union went away, to return soon after with a force of eighteen men. They then proceeded to thrash the three seamen, and, taking them by force, carried them to the hall of the union, on Canal street, where they locked them up. Three hours later the men were taken to a house on Lake street and locked up in a small room, and told that they would have to remain there until they signified their willingness to join the union. The sailors were kept without food or drink until late in the afternoon, when they considered it best to comply with the wishes of their captors. Accordingly they agreed to become members of the union, and were taken to the hall, where cards were given to them upon payment of $2.55 each.

When Captain Cooper returned to his schooner he found her deserted, and was compelled to work his vessel down to the pier with the assistance of two tugs and his cook. He was unable to understand the cause of his men's absence, until 7 o'clock, when they appeared and told their story. They also said that their clothing was in the possession of the union, and that the organization refused to give it up, stating that they could get it in the morning. Captain Cooper came to the station in order to get police assistance in recovering the clothing, but as the officers could do nothing for him, he started out in search of the Harbor Master, in order to lay the case before him. The captain claims that the other vessels of the fleet suffered in the same manner, and that some of the men were roughly handled.

The sailors are an exceptionally intelligent lot of men for their class, and told a straightforward story. Sawyer showed the card he had been compelled to purchase for $2.55. It was the "probation card" of the union, numbered 3,062, and was signed by "T. J. Elderkin, agent."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

The above story is a little long, but we insert it just as found in the Inter Ocean, because it would lose by condensation. The case is a simple one. Some men, presumably Americans, certainly freemen, had covenanted to perform a certain service for another freeman, at a price named. These workmen did not belong to a secret society which undertakes to control the branch of service in which they were engaged. The lodge accordingly kidnaped the men and compelled them to pay into its treasury before they were permitted to go to the labor by which they were to earn bread. Of course we do not vouch for the facts; the story comes to us through the daily press. We do not, however, see any reason to doubt their substantial accuracy.

If this be true, it is in line with many other events of similar character. A carpenter in Chicago was taken by union men and held by his feet over the edge of the scaffold three stories high, head down, and was told that he would certainly be dropped unless he agreed to join the union. Another carpenter was pushed off a second-story scaffold, a number of his bones being broken in the fall. He went to the hospital, and when, some weeks later, he crept out a wan, weak man, he found that all his best tools had been stolen in his absence.

The wrongs inflicted upon laborers by employers are not imaginary. Power is naturally cruel, and the power of riches is one of the most heartless of all. It naturally follows that wage-earners may combine, and that they may justly appeal to the public for protection from unreasonable and oppressive corporations or individuals. There is, however, a devilish virus in a secret organization. It seems impossible that men should unite, under cover of oaths and obligations, to conceal their joint proceedings without giving place to all the demons who infested the Gadarene. Organization is, and is to be; secret organization is always wrong, works out only evil, and is to be abandoned, unless our wage-earning population are content to become lodge slaves.

MASONIC DECEPTION.

An article of some length, on this subject, appeared in a recent number of the Wesleyan Methodist, from which we make the following extracts:

"To undeceive you, and to save you from being further deceived, I will now show you how and why secret combinations have become so numerous, and are still increasing. Mark the following: 'The great strength of our order lies in its concealment. Let it never appear in any place in its own name, but always covered by another name and another occupation.'

"Adam Weishaupt, one of the atheists who started the secret order called Illuminism, and constructed the worst of the higher degrees in Masonry, boasted that if it were broken up today he could have it stronger than ever in twelve months from now. How so? Simply by working under cover of another name and another profession, for the principles and purposes of the system being evil, must always be covered, concealed, for the same reason that 'Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light,' and for the same purpose 'his ministers also are transformed as the ministers of righteousness.' And the cover must always be something attractive. And when it is discovered and exposed another cover is put on, and the people say it is another thing, and he who will oppose it under the cover, say temperance, is opposed and slandered by the secret orders, as a man of one idea, a bigot, a sectarian, always running a hobby, and withal, opposing the sacred cause of temperance. And, of course, those who favor the covered 'order,' as being a good temperance society, will be praised as being wise and good. Hence it will require both wisdom and courage to expose and oppose the covered deceivers, and when exposed they will again hide under another cover, and Patrons of Husbandry will become Patrons of Industry. The Good Templars, hitherto recognized as temperance workers, will come out as Royal Templars of Temperance.

"In a place where I held quarterly meeting lately there were two men said to have come from Canada, and professing to work under the auspices of the Royal Templars of Temperance. One of them sang, and the other lectured, and all this for the purpose of organizing under the new cover; and men from distant cities, I was told, were there to help them."

ENGLISH-SPEAKING CATHOLIC WORKMEN ORGANIZING.

The formation of an immense Roman Catholic Labor Union, to embrace all the English-speaking Catholics throughout the world, would seem to be assured. The Chicago Western Catholic News says that in consequence of the recent Papal Encyclical letter, Cardinal Manning of England has began the work of organizing the union above referred to, and that Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore "is to organize the American branch, in which all classes of labor shall be embraced. The object is to oppose socialism, to find employment for members and maintain a good standard of wages. A small entrance fee will be charged. Being under the immediate control of the highest dignitaries of the church in the respective countries in which branches will be organized, there will be no danger, as now, of young men being led away from their duty as Catholics and citizens by the vague and unmeaning doctrine of socialism." The question naturally arises, whether such an organization will not be more inimical to the political and religious institutions of English-speaking nations than even socialism itself.

THE UNION OF YOUNG BAPTISTS FOR WORK.

The formation of "The Baptist Young People's Union of America" was completed at the convention of Baptists held in Chicago on the 7th and 8th instant. The convention was very large, over 1,000 delegates from various States being present, and very enthusiastic in uniting for the better success of the Christian work in which the Baptist church is engaged.

The objects of this organization are the unification of the Baptist young people; their increased spirituality; their stimulation in Christian service; their edification in Scriptural knowledge; their instruction in Baptist history and doctrine, and their enlistment in all missionary activity through existing denominational organizations.

The membership of this union consists of accredited delegates from young people's societies in Baptist churches, and from Baptist churches having no young people's organization.

The constitution provides for the thorough government of this Union; and it is a gratifying fact that it has not taken upon it any form of lodge secrecy; that its work is to be done openly in the sight of God and men; and, although it is founded in sectarianism, its scope comprises one of the largest and most efficient orthodox churches in the United States—a church sufficiently endowed with spirituality, talents and wealth to make this young people's society a valuable auxiliary in the performance of the duties that pertain to the religion of Jesus Christ, in and out of the church.

This society should never be permitted to fall into desuetude. The Baptist denomination cannot afford to let it lose either its earnestness or its usefulness.

REAL AND FALSE BENEVOLENCE.

While meditating the subject of "Lodge Charity," upon which quite a number of our Reform workers are now expending considerable criticism and animadversion (and justly so), we recall to mind the fact, which may not be so very generally known as it ought to be, that upon the walls of one of the chambers occupied as a court by the Holy Inquisition at Avignon, France, was painted a picture representing the "Good Samaritan." The contrast between the work of the Inquisition and that represented in the painting, if it were not so horrible, would be a subject for boisterous derision; but the difference was hardly greater than that existing between the real benevolence of the Christian religion—"Freely ye have received; freely give" to all who are in any need, poverty, sickness or tribulation—and that of the lodge: "Pay John Smith five dollars weekly in sick benefits; he is all square on the books of the lodge." In other words the lodge is willing to assist him because he has been faithful to his obligation and has paid his weekly dues. Is this benevolence? Again, if the prisoner brought before the Inquisition renounced his Christianity under the brutal treatment he had received at its hands, it would then play the "good Samaritan" by letting him go, with liberty to heal his own wounds, and to feel that he had sold himself, body and soul, to the devil to save his crippled carcass from further torture. That's another sort of benevolence not contemplated in the Lord's beautiful parable. The fact is, that next to Christian belief, few virtues are more greatly perverted than true benevolence. Personally it means practical help from all men to the first person who manifests a real need of assistance; and, again, it means a liberal response to every appeal for aid by any worthy enterprise that has been established to advance the interests of Christian progress. In this connection let all read the leading editorial in this number of the Cynosure, entitled "Sinews of War."

—The Cahensly movement for the appointment of special bishops for the various nationalities of non-English-speaking Romanists in the United States failed to gain the approbation of the Pope, and he wisely withheld his consent. There would have been trouble in the church had the scheme succeeded, and a religious war, with all its attendant evils, has been happily averted. The interests of the whole country would have suffered from the quarrels between the several factions.

—A New England clergyman, a Master Mason, writes: "I am indebted to you for the reading of the Cynosure. I enjoy the perusal, and perhaps, in time, it may convert me to its anti-secret principles. But as yet"—and then he goes off in defense of secret societies. It is to be hoped that God, by his Spirit and the Cynosure, will take from him the light of Masonry (spiritual darkness) and let the Sun of Righteousness bestow upon him "the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world"—if they will only let it,—and for which the flames of the three tallow-dips that stand about the altar of Masonry are but a poor substitute.

—The exaltation of Christ, the Saviour of men, as their Advocate with the Father on high, as the enlightener and strength of all his people, is the great principle of all Christian worship; for he is the only foundation of the Christian religion, and the only ground of our hope for a pure, peaceable and glorious existence beyond the grave. It is not found in altars of Parian marble, in gilded crosses surmounting our churches, or in the formal adoration of unsaved men and women. We must go deeper than that—deep down into our own hearts, throwing open their doors to the light of the Sun of Righteousness, and allowing the Holy Spirit to perform its perfect work in cleansing us from all iniquity. Nowhere is Jesus more highly exalted than in those bosoms over which sin and Satan once reigned, but which have now become the temples of the Holy Ghost. Does the lodge offer anything to its novitiates that can be compared to this combined exaltation of the Saviour and the saved?

—That the Secretary of the United States Treasury should temporize with a lodge of Knights of Labor, or submit to its dictation, is hardly to be expected by the people whom he represents in his high office. It was intimated, a few days ago, that he gave the Knights but little encouragement when they preferred their demands, and proposed to do what he considered fair in restoring some of the discharged workmen if they met his requirements, and to retain such new men in his employment as the Knights by their arbitrary measures had compelled him to procure. The representatives of the Federation of Labor (President Gomper's society) graciously repudiated "the right to dictate to the government whom it shall employ," but they objected to the Knights of Labor obtaining precedence over them in making up the quota of workmen under any new arrangement. Mr. Foster should do as he pleases, independently of lodge rule. Powderly suggests that the men take the chance to go to work and make no further pother about it.

—An advertisement in a recent Sunday newspaper, for "an organizer for a Fraternal Endowment Order," inspired a reporter with a desire to investigate the character of the advertiser; and this is what he learned: "It was the old story of money accruing from members who would not stay in long enough to win and whose assessments, lost to them, swelled the fund to be drawn on by those who stuck it out till endowment time. Endowments, by the way, are paid in installments of one-eighth the amount of the full certificate and at periods of time varying with the age of the member. Thus a man 30 years old taking a $5,000 certificate would pay in about $365 in five years seven months and one-half, and at the end of that time would receive $625 and a like sum at the end of like periods thereafter until he had received $5,000." "New members and lapses in membership make us prosper," said the advertiser; and then he offered the reporter $50 if he could organize a lodge of fifteen members. The attraction of secrecy keeps these swindling concerns going.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—President J. Blanchard, now on a visit to New England, will be in attendance at the National Temperance Convention, at Saratoga, N. Y., which began on the 15th and will close on the 17th inst.

—Bro. H. L. Kellogg arrived safely with his family at Auburn, Cal., where they will sojourn for a season. A letter from him on the 6th inst. left them in ordinary health and on the eve of a visit for a few days to San Francisco. It is hoped by their many friends, that rest and the sea-breezes of the Pacific Coast, with their pleasant surroundings, will soon invigorate and restore them to permanent health.

—Bro. W. Fenton, of St. Paul, Minn., was announced to speak on Thursday evening of last week in the First Evangelical Swedish Lutheran church of that city, and on Friday night in another Lutheran church. Bro. Fenton is an energetic, earnest worker in the anti-secrecy cause, and strikes many effective blows at the lodge system—with the usual result of stirring up the indignation of the lodge advocates against himself and his fellow-reformers. There is nothing lukewarm about Bro. Fenton.

—Rev. Dr. B. Carradine, of St. Louis, is reaping abundantly and with joy where he has sown in tears. He has steadfastly exalted the church of Jesus Christ and her Divine Head against her foes, and in their first rank he found the secret lodge. A generous revival has been experienced by his people, and the Centenary M. E. church of St. Louis has received a considerable increase in membership. In the course of about three weeks some 150 souls were saved and 200 brought completely under the power of the Holy Ghost in what the Doctor calls "spiritual sanctification."

THE HOME.

THE KING.

Softly he cometh,
This King,
No sound on the mountains afar,
No herald save one silent star,
Nor highway with triumph to ring!

Lowly he cometh,
This King,
No robes of bright purple and gold,
No pageantry royal and bold,
No banner its glory to fling!

Meekly he cometh,
This King,
To sit in our earth-shade of woe,
To wear our humanity, so
That souls in their sonship may sing!

Quickly he cometh,
This King,
Lord, even so! Longing we wait
Outside of the pearl-builded gate,
Outside of the glory so great,
Till thou our glad welcome shalt bring!
Thou, Brother, and Saviour,
And King!

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

V.

But Mr. Clarke did not come back. Mother went in to see the desolate wife and children, and helped them much, I am sure, in their need. Many a basket of vegetables and piece of fresh meat, paid for by my mother's generous hand, found their way into that house. Mrs. Clarke, thoroughly frightened by the consequences of her sin, kept from further wrong-doing, restored home and children to their former neatness, and waited and watched for her husband's return. She was proud, if poor, and would not write to her parents for help.

Our examinations were never so hard and long as that year. Perhaps my anxiety about Grace, together with the sorrow at the Clarkes', made them more irksome than usual. Anyway, no one was more thankful than I when the last question was answered, the last closely-written sheet handed in. That afternoon we gathered in the "play-room" for a jubilee. Some one improvised a throne out of chairs and benches, with a rickety old table, discarded from school-room use. The throne was draped with a red shawl, a green piano-cover, and a water-proof.

"Grace Darling for Queen!" cried some one, and with one consent we captured her and set her upon the throne, while Tom gravely perched a Tam O'Shanter cap on her head in lieu of a more imposing crown. She had been unusually thoughtful all day, and even now, as the merry crowd gathered about her, there was a sweet seriousness in her smile that slightly checked the clamorous mirth.

"Wild mob," called out Tom in stage-ic tones, "our Sovereign hath somewhat to communicate unto these her lawful subjects. Cease thy revelry and give heed."

A quick flush dyed her pale cheeks, but she said, "I was thinking whether to say it or not, Tom."

"The spirit of a prophet is mine," quoth he, in deep tones, bowing profoundly, folding his arms, and dropping his head as if in deep thought.

Our Queen looked round on us, her serious eyes glowing with thoughts apart from the humor of the hour, and said, hesitatingly, "I've been thinking how happy we all are here, having so much fun; there are so many who are miserable, it doesn't seem fair. I was wishing we could do something."

She stopped, and again looked round upon us, her cheeks now vying in color with the bright-hued Tam O'Shanter on her head. No one spoke. It was plainly an effort for her, but she went on. "Fanny and I have been finding out lately what an awful lot of trouble drink makes,—we want to do something to help."

"What have you thought of, O Queen?" It was mad-cap Gussie Mills who asked the question.

"Nothing, yet; but there are so many to help. I thought maybe, if we got together and talked about it before school broke up, we might find some way. Do any of you know people who drink?"

I was shocked to see several faces turn crimson and several pairs of eyes drop in embarrassment. Had these boys and girls fathers or brothers or friends who were under the curse? Had it been right in our midst, and yet we had not known? Again Gussie broke the silence, all the levity gone from her manner.

"My father had a dear friend who died of delirum tremens. Oh, it was fearful!"

Her bright face paled and her lips quivered as she spoke. For the first time I felt there was something more to this girl than a supreme love of fun.

"I wish I could tell you what Fanny and I have seen lately," continued Grace. "But—why can't we do something?"

"Who for?" asked Tom.

"Any one that needs help."

"I don't know any one who drinks," put in Gracie's brother. He seemed rather astonished that his sister should have any such knowledge. We had both of us resolved to tell no one about the Clarkes, so Grace had not even told Robert.

"You may know somebody, sometime," his sister answered him.

"But how could we help them?" demanded one of the other boys.

"I think God would show you how."

You may understand, or you may not, how that sentence fell among us like a sudden thunder-clap. We were not a heartless set, nor irreverent, I trust, but sacred topics held little place, if any, in our conversations. None of those gathered about our Queen knew, as I did, that she was looking forward to soon seeing Him of whom she had just spoken, and that by this sure expectation she had come to know that there are other things besides lessons and a general good time to be thought of and lived for, even by boys and girls.

"Couldn't we have a club, or a society, so that when school breaks up we'll still belong together?"

There was neither assent nor dissent for some moments, when Tom said quickly, without a trace of nonsense in his voice, "Let's call it the Grace Darling Society."

"Oh, no!" was the earnest protest from the throne, but it was drowned in claps and cheers.

"Well, if this isn't too unparliamentary for anything," cried out Gussie Mills, "and in the presence of all these learned masculines, too! We should 'resolve,' and 'move,' and 'second,' until we get so mixed up we don't know what we do want. I know that much.

Here one of those "learned masculines" came to the rescue.

"It is moved that we unite ourselves into a society to be known as the 'Grace Darling Society.' Any remarks?"

"I object," said Grace, but all most disrespectfully ignored the remark, and the sage youth continued, "All those in favor of the motion" ("Which hasn't been seconded, but that's of no consequence," interrupted Gussie), "signify it by saying, Aye."

"Aye! Aye! Aye!" came a full chorus, so that Grace clapped her hands to her head in mock terror, and our principal came hurrying in to see what was going forward. We dispersed, then, after Tom had taken upon himself to proclaim a meeting of the new organization next day.

"Whatever made you think of what you did this afternoon, Grace?" I asked her when we were alone.

"It popped into my head yesterday that it would be splendid if we could belong together. When we were all in the room there this afternoon, it was such a good chance to speak."

"Weren't you scared?"

"I guess I was—at first. I wish they hadn't named it that, though."

"Well, I'm glad they did. You've got a big thing on your hands now; what are you going to do with it?"

"Do with it? I guess it will do with me. I do believe, Fanny, that Gussie Mills will help hard, don't you?"

"She might, if she'd be serious for ten minutes at a time."

"She was serious for five minutes this afternoon, so I think there's hope for her."

At the second gathering of the Grace Darling Society, its founder would have shrunk from all notice, but she was helpless in the hands of her friends, who very soon made her president, with Tom Dixon for secretary, or "flunkey" (a la Gussie Mills). Then we dispensed with all parliamentary form, though some of the boys were inclined to scoff. To this day I do not know how that harum-scarum crowd accomplished anything, but there remains in my possession a paper, signed by twenty-five well remembered classmates, modeled after nothing but the suggestions of the hour, and labeled afterwards by Bob Darling as "The Articles of Inauguration of the Grace Darling Society." They read as follows:

Senior School. Class 3. Play-room. } 3:30 P. M. June 3, 1876.

I.

We, the undersigned, do hereby announce ourselves to the world in general, and this city in particular, as the Grace Darling Society.

II.

Like unto that Grace Darling of historic fame (See Sixth Reader, page 98,) we declare as our object and purpose the following: "To take life-boats out on the stormy sea of life to save drowning sinners."

III.

The manner of summoning the members of this Society to the aid of said sinners, or for any other purpose, shall be by postals, dictated by our president and founder, writ by Tom; said postals to be charged to our several accounts.

IV.

We, the undersigned, do hereby solemnly promise to help whenever, wherever, and whomsoever we can.

Then followed the names, written with dash, flourish, and blot. It all had an exterior appearance of nonsense, but I am sure every boy and girl there had caught the earnest spirit of our president, and that the names were signed in good, honest purpose to help, though we knew not from whence nor in what shape work might come.

After the meeting, Grace, Robert, Tom, Gussie and I were standing together on the street corner near the school building. "Now we'll see who's the best sailor when the breaking waves dash high," said Gussie. "Oh, I wish it was real, and we had to go out in a big storm. Wouldn't it be jolly?"

"I guess it is real enough, Gussie—Oh, Fanny! see there!"

We all started at Grace's sudden exclamation and followed her looks. What we saw was a drunken man, so drunk he reeled from side to side, almost falling. His clothes were muddy, his hat battered, yet Grace and I both recognized the father of our little friends, Delia and Sophia. It was, indeed, Mr. Clarke.

CAN'T AFFORD IT.

"Here, Dan, is something that may interest you," said Farmer Brown, as he handed the boy a bulky letter.

"The postmaster missed his mark there, sure," said Dan, glancing at the untouched stamp.

"That will send a letter to your mother, Dan, and not make you any poorer, either," answered the farmer.

"I dare say it will," responded the lad, as he proceeded to moisten it at the mouth of the steaming tea-kettle.

"And you can have the two cents you thus save for marbles," suggested Mr. Brown, thoughtlessly.

"That would be cheating," whispered Dan's conscience. "The stamp has already done its duty in carrying one letter."

"It will carry another. It is not marked," argued Dan.

"But you know that it was a mistake," urged the monitor within.

"That was the postmaster's fault, and not mine," was Dan's inward reply.

"It is a very small thing, and the government will not miss it, no, not even know it."

"Will you not know it, and can you afford to be dishonest for so small an amount?" the small voice whispered.

Dan trembled, for it seemed that some one had spoken the words right in his ear. Flinging the stamp he had loosened into the fire, he exclaimed, "No! I cannot afford to sell myself so cheap."

"What's wrong?" asked the farmer, glancing up from his paper. "Lose the stamp after all your trouble?"

"Worse than that," replied the boy sheepishly.

"What! burned your fingers with the steam?" questioned his employer.

"No," said Dan, determinedly; "I sold my honor, or came near doing so."

"What do you mean, boy? The stamp is all right. It would never have been found out."

"But I knew it all the time, and two cents is a small amount to get for your self-respect; besides"—

"Besides what?" queried the man.

"God knows about it, and he looks upon the heart," answered Dan.

"It's a mighty small thing to worry over, I am sure," replied Mr. Brown. "The postoffice department would not have been much the poorer, I assure you."

"It would have been I who would have been poorer. Had I sold my honor for two cents, I should have made the worst bargain I ever did."

And so Dan gained a victory, and he was never sorry that he had obeyed the voice of conscience. —Belle V. Chisholm.

CHILD LIFE IN SIAM.

It is always interesting to learn how boys and girls in distant lands amuse themselves. In this account—taken from "Siam and Loas"—the most noticeable thing is, that no mention is made of schools.

When the Siamese young folks get up in the morning, they do not go to the washstand to wash their faces, for the simple reason that Siamese houses can boast no such article of furniture. So our little Siamese friend just runs down to the foot of the ladder—for the house is built on posts—to a large jar of water with a cocoanut-shell dipper.

There she washes her face by throwing the water over her hands and rubbing them over her face. She needs no towel, for the water is left to dry. She does not brush her teeth, for they are stained black by chewing the betel-nut. Her hair does not require combing, either, for it is all shaved except a little tuft on the top of the head, and that is tied in a little knot, and not often combed.

After breakfast is over, the children go off and find some pleasant place in which to play. The girls play at keeping house, and make dishes of clay dried in the sun. Little images of clay washed with lime are their only dolls.

The boys in Siam are very fond of pitching coins, and spend much of their time in this game. They play leap-frog, and very often jump the rope. Now, that so many foreigners come to this country, they have learned to play marbles, too.

In the month of March, though usually dry and hot, winds are blowing. At this time, the Siamese, young and old, are much engaged in playing games with kites, which are fitted with whistles, and the air resounds with the noise produced by the toys and the shouts of the multitudes of people engaged in the sport.

As the streets in Siam are almost all rivers and canals, the Siamese boys and girls early learn to row, and paddle their little boats almost as soon as they learn to swim, which they do when they are only four or five years old.—Selected.

SOME INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT COTTON-WEAVING.

The weaving of cotton into cloth was first done in India centuries ago. Nothing woven in America can compare with the filmy fabrics wrought in East Indian looms. One man will take months to complete a single piece, which is so exquisitely fine that we cannot wonder that it is poetically called "woven wind." Who but the elves or the brownies could sew seams in a web as dainty as this!

The tree cotton of India, with its reddish purple flowers, is grown about the temples of the Hindoos, and from its yellowish fibres is made the sacerdotal tripartite thread of the Brahmins—the emblem of their trinity.

From the Hindoos the Egyptians and the Persians learned to use cotton for clothing, but the Persians at first employed it only in the vestments of priests.

In China previous to the eleventh century cotton was rare and precious, and a cotton robe was deemed a fitting gift for an Emperor. It was grown only in gardens, and Chinese poets sang the beauty of its flowers. It was early known in Arabia, for its name—cotton—is derived from an Arabic word.

The word muslin comes from Mosul, in Asiatic Turkey, where it was at one time largely manufactured, just as at a later date cambric received its name from Cambray, in France.

Europeans began to wear cotton clothing in the time of the crusades.—Harper's Young People.

THE INEVITABLE.

I like the man who faces what he must
With step triumphant, and a heart of cheer;
Who fights the daily battle without fear;
Sees his hopes fail, yet keeps unfaltering trust
That God is God; that somehow, true and just
His plans work out for mortals; not a tear
Is shed when fortune, which the world holds dear,
Falls from his grasp; better, with love a crust
Than living in dishonor; envies not,
Nor loses faith in man; but does his best,
Nor ever murmurs at his humbler lot,
But with a smile and words of hope gives zest
To every toiler; he alone is great,
Who by a life heroic conquers fate.

TEMPERANCE.

BILLY MYERS' MARE.

One day Mr. Hunt, the temperance lecturer, was making a hard assault on rum-drinking, in a neighborhood where a Dutch distiller, named "Billy Myers," was a sort of king. This man was present, and continually interrupted the speaking by saying in a loud voice, "Mr. Hunt, money makes the mare go!" At first this raised a laugh, which Mr. Hunt took in good nature.

At last he stopped for a personal talk with his tormentor, and said, "Look here Mr. Myers, you say money makes the mare go, and mean that I lecture on temperance for money, don't you?"

"Yes, that is what I mean, Mr. Hunt."

"Well, Mr. Myers, you carry on a distillery, and you do it for money, don't you?"

"To be sure I do, Mr. Hunt; money makes the mare go."

"And so, Mr. Myers, you say I have a mare, and you have a mare also; suppose we trot them out together, and see how they compare?"

The meeting was held in a grove, and the sharp lecturer knew a thing or two, and so the old distiller found out, for Mr. Hunt pointed to a young fellow who was quite drunk, and was steadying himself by a tree, and said, "Mr. Myers, who is that young fellow?"

The distiller started as if stung, as he answered, "That is my son."

"Your son, is he, Mr. Myers? He has been riding your mare, and got thrown, hasn't he? And who is that young fellow sitting so drunk on that log out there?"

The distiller uttered an exclamation of real pain, as he said, "That is my son, too."

"He is, is he?" said Mr. Hunt; "I guess he has been riding your mare also, and she has kicked up and thrown him over her head, hasn't she? Your mare must be a vicious, dangerous brute, isn't she, Mr. Myers?"

The distiller could not stand it any longer, but said, "Look here, Mr. Hunt, I won't say another word if you will let me off."

Billy Myers' mare is a very dangerous beast. She steps off very gaily at first, but she is sure to kick up before you are through with her. The man who starts out on that beast is pretty sure to come home on foot, if he comes home at all, which is by no means certain. Don't ride Billy Myers' mare—Exchange.

A CURSE FOLLOWS THE SALOONS.

In the American Wool Reporter of Boston, of recent date, there appeared two letters written by a special correspondent of that paper, in which two places in Tennessee, Cardiff and Harriman, were described. These places are near each other, only ten miles apart. The founders of Harriman decided to have no saloons in their place, so capital, recognizing the wisdom of the choice, preferred to risk itself on that basis. Those who wished to have their homes unpolluted by the saloon, located here, so Harriman to-day is a sober, industrious community, with schools and churches and growing productive industries.

The East Tennessee Land Company the week before held its second annual meeting at Harriman, and its members thereof were surprised at the growth of the place, and were much pleased by the financial showing. An excess of resources over liabilities reached nearly $3,000,000, two dividends paid amounting to $107,000; and a third one declared.

The other place, Cardiff, was started one month later than Harriman, amid the blare of advertising trumpets, with a mammoth lot sale and wonderful promises, its promoters claimed for it the benefits of their experience elsewhere; of unlimited capital at their disposal, and great mineral wealth surrounding. They did not hesitate to say that the new town of Harriman would be wiped away, and made merry over the fact that its founders had declared there should be no saloons there. Only fanatics and fools would try to build a town that way. Cardiff invited the saloons, and the picture of the place, drawn by this correspondent, is a gloomy one. The town was not growing, it had no industries in operation, its few places of trade were nearly empty, its one bank was doing little or no business, its citizens were not hopeful of its future, and the only place which showed any life was the saloon and pool room. So the fact is plainly brought out here as in all cases, that the saloon is the greatest curse of any community. The class that is attracted to a place on account of saloons, is a class not desirable for any place to have. If saloons prosper, then in like ratio the citizens are impoverished. Governor Burleigh, of Maine, says, "The total deposits in the savings banks now amount to $47,781,166, an increase of $3,804,081 during the last year. This statement is worth more than all the assertions of those favoring saloons. The last census shows that Maine has increased her population by 12,150 in ten years. What is more remarkable is that its saving bank depositors have increased in number in one year about as much as the population has in seven, so there is on an average one person in every family who has a nest egg in the savings bank, and the average deposit is $340.03. If the saloons had been in existence, this amount and more would have been deposited in them.

Baron Liebig says that "brandy, in its action on the nerves, is like a bill of exchange drawn on the strength of the laborer, which, for lack of cash to pay for it, must be constantly renewed. The workman consumes his principal instead of interest—hence the inevitable bankruptcy of the body."

Dr. Albert Day claims that moderate drinking families furnish the pupils to the saloons. The family is in the primary school. The parents in the house where there is moderate drinking are more responsible for most of the inebriates that disgrace and infest the community, than the rum-seller.

Archdeacon Farrar, in one of his temperance addresses, remarks: "Cruikshank offered £100 for a violent crime committed by a total abstainer; and the money remains unclaimed to this day. I offer as much for proof of any one case—either in the church or out of it—where drunkenness has been cured without total abstinence; the only safe way to stop drinking, as the Irishman put it, is to 'leave off before you begin.'"

Rev. B. Fay Mills, the evangelist, is pronounced on the prohibition question. He says: "I would like to have a little sermon on temperance, and I would like to make it so plain that everybody could understand. Sometimes a person will insult me by asking me which side of the temperance or prohibition question I am on! Which side am I on? Well, you go to the drunkards and thieves, and burglars and gamblers, and saloon-keepers and the makers of the accursed stuff, and find out which side they are on, and then put me down on the other side. Why is it that these accursed saloons exist to-day? Because men worship the god of hell. Suppose a man should come here to-day and take one of your fairest and brightest children, and by making a few passes over it convert it into an idiot; the whole community would be after him. Millions of dollars would not induce you to license him to do such a thing if he could do it in ten minutes; and it is only a question of five years, or possibly ten or twenty, and you will allow him to do that very thing, and only for a paltry few hundred dollars."

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. A seeker after truth.—vs. 1-4. The fame of Jesus' miracles and teachings had reached all classes and conditions, and stirred in many hearts a desire to know more about the truths he proclaimed. Among these was Nicodemus, one of the governing and influential class. Had Jesus been guided by the dictates of worldly wisdom, he would have grasped eagerly at the chance to enroll so great a man among his followers. So far from this he proceeds at once to lay before him truths that he knew would be unpalatable to the proud Pharisee. Peter and John he called at once from their fishing-boats to become fishers of men, but Nicodemus receives no such call; nor was this entirely for the reason that he would not probably have responded to it, but because he was not fitted for discipleship. He belonged to a class of which we have the inspired Word that but few are called. He had not the courage for an open and pronounced disciple, and we are not told that he ever became one. He was far too cautious and prudent ever to stand as one of the pillars of the new spiritual kingdom. Yet, though timid, he was sincere. Every reform has its Nicodemus;—men who are secretly its friends, while at the same time they are so fearful of reproach and persecution that they shrink from being personally identified with it. Let us learn from Jesus' treatment of Nicodemus to have a very tender charity for such, and remember that all are not cast in the heroic mould necessary for reformers. The most timid may be sincere, and in their way do real, if not valiant, service for the truth; as we know that Nicodemus did on more than one occasion. But there was still another and profounder reason. He, though a master in Israel, was not even a little child in the kingdom of spiritual truth, for he had never been born into it at all. He was in the condition of some who stand in Christian pulpits, and are utterly without heart experience of the things they are set to teach.

2. The new birth.—vs. 5-10. The new nature can never be evolved out of the old, any more than an oak can be evolved out of a palm. That which is flesh is flesh. It belongs to a kingdom by itself, and between that and the spiritual is a great gulf fixed, as Prof. Drummond so strikingly brings out in his great work. One may be moral and upright, and yet be altogether outside of this spiritual kingdom. No wonder the natural man finds such a doctrine hard to accept, and inquires, like Nicodemus, "How can these things be?" But the how is among the secrets that cannot be searched out by human wisdom. One can see the effect of the Spirit's work, but not the way in which that effect is produced. But when even the natural life is an unfathomable mystery, how absuredly foolish to deny that there is such a thing as a spiritual life simply because we cannot understand it!

3. The way to attain the new birth.—vs. 11-17. Christ always discourages any useless discussion of mysteries which cannot be fathomed by human understanding. Nicodemus had not asked, "What shall I do to be saved?" He did not probably feel any need of salvation, and so he felt willing to take up the question as a mere metaphysical subtlety. Christ, however, brings him at once to the practical point. If Nicodemus was so much of a materialist as to ignore or overlook a doctrine so clearly taught even in the Old Testament as the new birth, what would be his amazed incredulity if Jesus should try to tell him of those unrevealed mysteries that none could know save He who had his home in heaven from the beginning? The one thing needful is to fulfill the conditions of spiritual life, just as it is necessary that a living man should breathe and eat and sleep, but not at all necessary that he should be able to explain the philosophy of breathing and eating and sleeping, and tell just how they are related to the phenomenon of life. So belief in Christ is essential to this new and heavenly life, and our ignorance of the way it operates to bring about such a result makes no difference. The result is always the same, whether in the little child or the man of fourscore. Mr. Pentecost suggests that the new birth "may be another incarnation repeated over and over again in every individual who surrenders himself to God to be his habitation;" and that it is really "just Jesus Christ 'formed in us the hope of glory,' by the overshadowing of the Holy Ghost." This opens before us not only a glimpse into celestial mysteries, but also a wide field for practical thought. Do we realize that "as he is, so are we in this world." Christs to bewildered and suffering humanity. "For God so loved the world." Here is the key to this great mystery;—in the yearning of the Divine heart to make us once more partakers of his own nature;—to call us once more his children. "God so loved the world."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Lutherans of Chicago, whose pastor is Rev. Carl Freytag, are building a new church on a foundation of 42x65 feet, with a tower 96 feet high, the whole to cost about $10,000. A parochial school will be connected with it.

—Perhaps one of the largest Lutheran gatherings ever held at York, Pa., one of the centers of Lutheranism, is the one which began on July 15 at Highland Park in the suburbs of the city. It is the first annual reunion of the Lutherans of York, York county and vicinity. When it is remembered that there are over thirty Lutheran ministers in York county alone, each of whom serves a large congregation, some estimate can be made of the large attendance. The speakers announced are Rev. J. G. Morris, D.D., J. G. Butler, D.D., H. W. McKnight, D.D., Geo. Scholl, D. D., and Rev. A. Stewart Hartman, and Rev. H. H. Weber.

—The Roman Catholics, who have been for some time disturbed by the Cahensly movement to establish sectional or national bishopries in the United States, are feeling better, and think they have won a certain, even though a temporary, victory over the Cahensly following.

—The Iowa Reformed Presbyterian Synod and Chautauqua will be held at Colfax July 21-28.

—The News of New York is publishing a symposium on "religious unrest." In the first article of the series, Dr. Morehead, of the Moody Training School, says that the Bible will be found to be all the stronger for the fierce scrutiny to which it is being exposed. As an illustration of the perishable nature of the theories of the critics of the Bible, Dr. Mendenhall is quoted as saying he had counted 747 theories as to date, composition and authorship of the books of the Bible between 1850 and 1891, and adds, "Of these 747 theories 603 are defunct, and many of the remaining 144 are in the last stages of degeneration and dissolution."

—The archbishop of Paris recently asserted that one-third of the graduates of the public schools had become, or were becoming, entire strangers to the church. As they refused to be confirmed, they had to be regarded as pagans.

—The crusade against creeds has been going so fast and far and furious that a good many have taken alarm, and there are signs of a strong reaction. Attackers of Calvinism are being attacked in turn. Many prominent ministers in England and America, including Mr. Spurgeon, have reaffirmed their adherence to thorough-going Calvinism, and it is probable that creed revision and theological tinkering has gone about as far as it will go in this decade.—Christian Standard.

—A Moravian missionary named Letzen, with his wife, has for thirty years past been preaching and working at a station in the Thibetan Mountains, without the sight of a European face, and with the postoffice fourteen days distant, separated from them by the high passes of the Himalayas and dangerous streams.—Harper's Weekly.

—In the past twelve years the number of students in Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational) has increased from forty to one hundred and sixty-seven; and the Faculty from six to fourteen.

—The American Sunday-school Union recently reported the receipt of $500, which was willed to the society more than forty years ago. But the will was broken and the widow was not able to carry out the wish of her deceased husband. However, the daughter, upon succeeding to her share of the estate, sent five hundred dollars in memory of the original bequest, which, though declared invalid by the law, she gave as carrying out the wish of her stepfather who entered into rest so long ago.

—Dr. Warneck, of Germany, computes the revenues of the missionary societies of the world for 1889 at the following amounts, when reduced to Federal money: Eighteen societies in Germany, $750,000; the Danish Missionary Society, $35,000; three societies in Norway, Sweden and Finland, $167,000; eighteen Dutch societies, $134,000; the French Evangelical Missionary Society, $89,000; twenty-nine societies in Great Britain, $6,125,000; and thirty societies in the United States and Canada, $4,250,000; total for Protestant societies of Europe and America, $11,325,000.

—The Presbyterians of the North, in the United States, raised, last year, for foreign missions, $942,690.64. The Presbyterians of the South raised $112,751.49 The Presbyterian churches of the country have, therefore, reached over the "million line" in the work of foreign missions, —The Finnish Lutherans in the Northwest have organized a Bible society, with headquarters at West Superior, Wis. They are now engaged in publishing the Bible in Finnish.

—The Catholic Indian lobby at Washington find in the action of the government asking for troops to be sent to the Moqui reservation, fresh ground for attack on Commissioner Morgan. He thwarted plans that had been formed for establishing a Catholic contract school at that place.

—During its long period of existence the British and Foreign Bible Society has issued 124,000,000 copies of Scripture writings, translated into 290 tongues.

—Mr. Gladstone is credited with the opinion that for every pound sterling expended by Great Britain for foreign missions she receives back ten in trade.

—An ordinance has been submitted to the council of the Russian Empire, forbidding Hebrews to observe their Sabbath by closing their places of business.

—There are at present 553 Protestant pastors, evangelists and teachers engaged in Gospel work in Italy.

—Mr. William Woodward, of Baltimore, now ninety years old, has been a Sunday-school teacher for seventy-two years.

—Before Christianity entered India, lepers were treated with shocking inhumanity. Many of them were buried alive. The English rulers have put a stop to this custom, and for fourteen years there has been a special Christian mission to the 135,000 lepers in India.

—A Syrian woman, a convert to Christianity, who is now in this country, says that the Christian missionaries have done wonders in her lifetime, in spite of the degradation of heathenism and the persecutions of Mohammedanism. When it was announced in her native city, on Mt. Lebanon, that Protestants had arrived, many sent to the markets orders for so many pounds of Protestants, not knowing what they were. But as of old, the leaders stirred the people up, telling them that Protestants were devils, and had them stoned out of the city. But they came again and again, until they were heard, and now in that place they have two high schools and many primary ones, and thirty Christian teachers; there are two fully organized native churches and many native helpers, teaching the Gospel to their people.

—Dr. A. L. Hopper writes from Canton: "I am, after forty-seven years' service on the field, just leaving to return to America. I hope the Lord will give me some useful work, such as instructing those who are coming out as missionaries. Forty-seven years' experience and observation I think will enable me to give useful information and instruction. I have to be thankful for a degree of success, having baptized nearly 500 converts from heathenism in this most difficult field and trained some fifty-seven Christian workers. Most of them were from my own church, and only one of these has not stood firm."

—The new administration in Vincennes, Ind., having ordered saloon-keepers to close up on Sundays, the latter, who are in the majority in councils, retaliate by reviving an old ordinance requiring that all business be suspended on Sunday. As a consequence drug stores, cigar stands, barber shops, lemonade stands, ice cream parlors, etc., are closed on the sacred day.

—The Belgian government has issued the following order respecting Sunday work on the State railways: From July 20 all goods traffic on Sunday is to cease, as well as on the great festival days, and on these days no goods are to be received for conveyance, except perishable articles, which are to be conveyed by fast trains. Until October 20 these regulations are to be applied with caution, so as to gradually accustom the public to them, with a view to cause no irritation. It is anticipated that 1,300 of the 1,500 goods trains running on Sundays may be withdrawn, and give to the personnel two more days off a month.

—The Northern Presbyterians' figures at their late General Assembly are thus summed: Returns from twenty-nine Synods show that there have been during the year past, 405 licenses granted, and 1,171 candidates for the ministry on the list, or 48 licenses and 115 candidates more than last year. The additions to the churches during the year number: on examination 56,199, and by letter 36,689, or a total of 92,888. The entire present membership is 798,445, a net gain of 27,445. The total contributions for benevolence and for home expenses amounted to $13,536,240.94.

—The British and Foreign Bible Society, during the eighty-one years of its existence, has issued from its London house alone, 29,000,000 complete Bibles, nearly 32,000,000 New Testaments, and 11,845,000 portions of the Bible. This makes a total of 72,500,000 books issued from the London headquarters.

Should be provided with Ayer's Pills. No other aperient is in such general demand or so highly recommended by the profession. Mild but thorough in operation, these pills are the best of all remedies for constipation, biliousness, heartburn, indigestion, flatulency, loss of appetite, liver complaint, and sick headache. They break up colds, fevers, and malaria, relieve rheumatism and neuralgia, and are indispensable to travelers, either by land or sea. Sugar-coated and compounded of the purest vegetable cathartics, they may be taken with impunity by old and young. Physicians recommend these pills in preference to any other. H. W. Hersh, Judsonia, Ark., says: "In 1853, by the advice of a friend, I began the use of Ayer's Pills as a remedy for biliousness, constipation, high fevers, and colds. They served me better than anything I had previously tried, and I have used them in attacks of that sort ever since." *

Nothing made with sugar, eggs and milk should reach the boiling point.

In mixing cake dough use cups of exactly the same size for measuring the different ingredients.

The molasses to be used for gingerbread is greatly improved by being first boiled, then skimmed.

Two or three rose-geranium leaves, put in when making crab apple jelly, will give it a delicious flavor.

In flavoring puddings, if the milk is rich, lemon flavoring is good; but if the milk is poor, vanilla makes it richer.

To keep paste for any length of time add a lump of alum to it while it is cooking. To strengthen it add a small quantity of glue.

To suppress a sneeze—a thing very often desirable—press the finger hard against the upper lip. It will always prevent a sneeze.

If a cake cracks open when baking, it is either because the oven is too hot and cooks the outside before the inside is heated, or the cake was made too stiff.

Beat the yolk of an egg and spread on the top of rusks and pies just before putting them into the oven. The egg makes that shine seen on bakers' pies and cakes.

To prevent hair from becoming prematurely gray, take one ounce glycerine, one ounce bay rum and one pint strong sage tea. Mix and add a few drops of the oil of bergamot.

The pungent odor of pennyroyal is very disagreeable to ants and other creeping things. If the herbs cannot be obtained, get the oil of pennyroyal and saturate something with it, and lay around places infested by these pests.

To stain furniture to imitate old oak, paint it with a dark oak stain (all stains now come put up in pint cans), put on three coats every other day, letting each application dry thoroughly, then polish with a cloth dipped in linseed oil. Stop when it is dark enough.

To make gum arabic that will remain sweet, dissolve one pound gum arabic in one pint of boiling water, adding a piece of borax the size of a walnut. Pour into a large-mouthed bottle; shake once or twice every day for four days, and then add one tablespoonful of alcohol.

A good plan for keeping butter cool and sweet in summer, is to fill a box with sand to within an inch or two of the top; sink the butter jars in the sand, then thoroughly wet the sand with cold water. Cover the box air tight. The box may be kept in the kitchen and used as a table.

For a creeping skirt make a bag open at both ends and twice as long as the child's dress. Gather and sew one end into a band; hem the other end and run in a wide elastic. Button on over all the skirts, then turn the end having the elastic in up under all the clothes. In this way the child's clothes are all in a bag and thoroughly protected.—The Cottage Hearth.

To annihilate plantain weed, chop it off close to the ground and pour upon the exposed fiber a few drops of kerosene. Digging them up does no good, since the roots are long, tough and difficult to reach, and if only a tiny part of one is left the plant seems to grow and thrive in defiance of all one's hardest efforts to remove the stubborn weed. Try this method.

In these days of the "pesky fly" it might be well to try the following, which we find in an exchange, recommended as a positive exterminator: Twenty drops of carbolic acid evaporated from a shovel, will banish them from a room quicker than all the sticky fly paper in existence. A small piece of camphor gum held over a lamp till it is consumed will also do the work well.

One of the homely materials that can be made beautiful by decoration is a coarse huckabuck, which is made for embroidery. It is particularly pretty for bureau and sideboard scarfs, and is very easy to decorate. It is specially adapted to drawn work, as the threads are coarse and alternate so regularly that it is easy to slip the needle beneath them without the trouble of counting. Another pretty material for darning is honeycomb canvas. Linen floss is more effective than silk for this purpose, as the meshes of the canvas are so large that silk would not fill them as well as the floss.—Good Housekeeping.

There are some patent medicines that are more marvelous than a dozen doctors' prescriptions, but they're not those that profess to cure everything.

Everybody, now and then, feels "run down," "played out." They've the will, but no power to generate vitality. They are not sick enough to call a doctor, but just too sick to be well. That's where the right kind of a patent medicine comes in, and does for a dollar what the doctor wouldn't do for less than five or ten. We put in our claim for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

We claim it to be an unequaled remedy to purify the blood and invigorate the liver. We claim it to be lasting in its effects, creating an appetite, purifying the blood, and preventing Bilious, Typhoid and Malarial fevers if taken in time. The time to take it is when you first feel the signs of weariness and weakness. The time to take it, on general principles, is NOW.

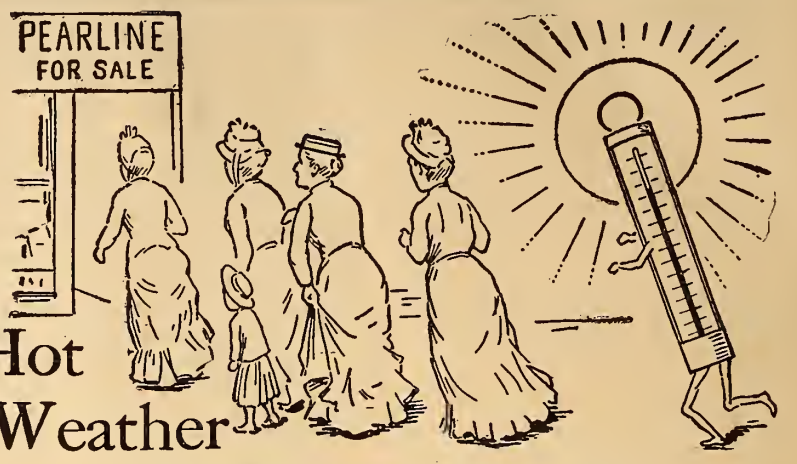
General Washington Opposed to SECRET SOCIETIES. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern, AND COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES. Composed of the two pamphlets combined in this title, bound together in cloth. $1.00 each.



Hot Weather

Drives Women to their Senses.

It's the time when they must have something to lessen their work. It's the time when they must have Pearline. Nothing else saves as much or does as much, in all washing and cleaning—and it's done without harm.

Soak your clothes in Pearline and water—no soap—Pearline contains all the soap necessary—two hours, or over night, rinse well, and they will be clean—particulars for this way of washing on every package. Hot weather increases the number who use Pearline—but in cooler times there's no falling off.

It's easily explained, you can drive women to use Pearline—some of them have to be driven to it. But, once they've used it, you can't drive them into giving it up.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 190 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Odd-fellowship Judged by its own utterances; its doctrine and practice examined in the light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth 50cts; paper covers, 25cts.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of his sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5cts each.

The Anti-mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 53 "Cynosure" tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. Postpaid, 25 cts.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Dury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church, is clearly shown. 10cts each.

THE COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA

What Is It? It is a Library of Universal Knowledge and an Unabridged Dictionary of Language in one work, in one alphabetical arrangement. This novel combination is an infinitely convenient one, which, together with its unique and handy form, leads one to consult it ten times where he will once refer to any other cyclopedia or dictionary by the side of it.

"In convenience of form and freshness of information, it stands pre-eminent. The combination of cyclopedia and dictionary in the same work is a most valuable feature. I expect to get more real service from it than from anything else in my library."—F. S. FITCH, State Supt. of Public Instruction, Lansing, Mich.

The Basis of the Cyclopedia proper is the last complete edition of Chambers's Cyclopedia, which is so thoroughly revised, brought down to date, and Americanized, that it would be unfair to the original to say it is "reprinted"—it is virtually a new work, the Chambers being used simply as good material to work with; many thousands of new (especially American) topics have been added. The pronunciation of all titles is an altogether unique feature that gives universal satisfaction.

"I find it exceedingly useful for handy reference. The pronunciation I regard as a valuable feature. The members of my family use this ten times where they once use the Britannica, Appleton's, or Chambers's—all of which they have access to."—CHAS. H. COREY, D.D., Pres. of Richmond Institute, Richmond, Va.

"I like the Columbian the better the more I examine it. I have written to * * * my warm commendation of it."—PROF. JAMES STRONG, S.T.D., Editor McClintock & Strong's Cyclopedia of Biblical and Theological Literature.

The Dictionary feature is based on the great Dictionary of Stormonth, which is universally recognized among scholars as the peer of Webster, Worcester, the Century, and others, as an authority; it, also, is thoroughly revised, Americanized, and greatly enlarged; every word having recognized place in the living or classic literature of the English language is included, thus entitling it to be called an "unabridged" dictionary.

"After a careful examination, I can cheerfully recommend it to every educator."—W. E. ROBINSON, Supt. of Schools, Detroit, Mich.

"I feel free to pronounce the Columbian Cyclopedia the teacher's vade-mecum. Teachers will not often be obliged to go beyond its pages for help."—GEO. J. LUCKEY, Supt. of Schools, Pittsburgh, Pa.

"I have Appleton's, Chambers's, and The People's cyclopedias in my library, but use the handy COLUMBIAN nearly altogether when the information sought comes within the volumes now complete. The great amount of new matter added to the standard text of all cyclopedias, and the neat style of typography and binding, make the work the most useful and every way desirable reference work for a reasonable amount of money that I have yet examined."—WM. H. ALEXANDER, Surveyor of Customs, Omaha, Neb.

Who Edits It? Its Editor-in-Chief, RICHARD GLEASON GREENE, formerly editor-in-chief of "The Library of Universal Knowledge," also of "The International Cyclopedia," has probably had more experience in the direct line of his work than any other living American; he is assisted by an able corps of trained writers in the various departments of learning.

"It meets more fully my ideal of what a work of this kind should be than any other I know."—J. F. CROOKER, Supt. of Education, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I have several Cyclopedias, among them the Columbian; this I much prefer for every-day reference."—WM. H. TAYLOR, State Assayer and Chemist, Richmond, Va.

"We did not think—to be frank—when we began to examine the Cyclopedia, that it promised to deserve very strong commendation. But the more we studied its characteristic features, the more highly we learned to regard it, and we now feel justified in commending it as a very comprehensive, well-arranged, and useful work. By the great body of intelligent men and women who do desire a cyclopedia which is reasonably comprehensive, accurate, intelligible, orderly in plan, and low in price, this will be found abundantly worth attention."—The Congregationalist, Boston.

How Large Is It? In 32 volumes of over 800 pages each, it will contain about 26,000 pages and about 7,000 illustrations. "The feature that strikes me most favorably is the new departure in respect to size. Each volume is 8 inches long, 5½ wide, and 1¾ thick, and answers the practical definition of the word 'handy' better than any other book of reference that I have ever come across. Standing within hand-reach, and easily handled, one is apt to refer to it ten times hand-running when he would once to a big, bulky, and burly volume not so close to him (or, better, her), and heavier to hold."—FRANCES E. WILLARD.

"The size of the volumes is just right for convenient handling. The type is good, the illustrations abundant, the arrangement of matter is such that all topics are easily found. It is difficult to imagine any improvement in these respects."—J. B. MOFFAT, President Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pa.

What Is the Price? That is the most remarkable feature about it. Though approximately the same size as Appleton's Cyclopedia, which is published at $80.00, and about 50 per cent. larger than Johnson's, which sells at $48.00, and comparing favorably with them in every important respect, the retail price for the set of 32 volumes, in extra cloth binding, is only $25.00; half-Morocco binding, $32.00; by express; postage, 16 cents a volume, if by mail. Vol. 25 ready July 15, others at intervals of about a month.

$5.00 cash will secure immediately, by express, volumes 1 to 16, in cloth binding, the remaining volumes being delivered as installments of $1.25 for each are paid; 25 cents a volume extra for half-Morocco. be accepted in full payment for $21.35 the complete set, in extra cloth binding; for half-Morocco binding send $6.00 additional. These special reduced prices will be slightly advanced Aug. 1*st.* Sample volume, 60 cents (postage, 16 cents), returnable and money refunded; specimen pages free.

A College Education is a good thing for young man or young woman—what a pity that it is clear out of reach of fully 95 per cent. of the brainiest, bravest, worthiest of the young folks of the country! But do you realize that For $25, or 7 cents a day for one year, the fair equivalent of a college education is within the reach of any go-ahead boy or girl? It may seem incredible, but it is true! If one had only his choice of the two, what he could learn at college, or what he could learn from the Best Cyclopedia published, thousands of wise people would choose the Cyclopedia—it covers the entire circle of human knowledge—it is a teacher who never grows weary of being questioned—is always at hand, your lifetime through, and not for a few months only.

The Columbian REVOLVING BOOK-CASE, of which a picture is here given, is made to hold a full set of the Cyclopedia. Size of the case 14 inches square by 18 inches high; price $2.50 (and cheap at that) when sold separately, but with the Cyclopedia it is furnished for only $2.00.

The Book-Case is furnished either in oak, antique finish, or in hard maple, cherry finish, as you prefer. It is knock-down as well as revolving, held together by four rods and four screws; may be taken to pieces in five minutes, and put together in 10 minutes. It is a beautiful piece of furniture, though so fabulously cheap—delights everybody.

It is made to stand on a desk or table, and is so excellently adapted to its use that it may fairly be compared to adding a handle to a good knife-blade—you could use the blade by tying it to a stick, and you could use the Cyclopedia without the Revolving Case, but you would very unwillingly do without either after having tried them. We have, also, larger Revolving Book-Cases, to stand on the floor, 4 shelves high (adjustable shelves), giving a total of 136 inches of shelf room, holding 100 to 150 volumes; price-list on request.

Which Cyclopedia? GOOD LUCK for those who wish to buy, there are several good cyclopedias in the market. Each cannot, of course, be better than any other, but each is undoubtedly better than it would be but for the competition of its rivals; each has some special merit.

Appleton's is the pioneer of (living) American cyclopedias, and has great merit—but pioneers will grow old, and most people want a new cyclopedia when they buy; then, it costs a good deal of money: $80.00 in cheapest style, besides many annuals which are necessary to its completeness.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA is the newest in the field, covers virtually all the ground covered by Appleton's, and a great deal besides; is about the same size in amount of matter, and costs less than one-third as much money.

Johnson's is later than Appleton's, and by many good judges has been considered the "best" for popular use; like all cyclopedias not published very recently, it needs bringing down to date. Some object, too, to the heavy, clumsy form of volume. It costs $48.00 in cheapest style.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA is about 50 per cent. larger than Johnson's (in amount of matter), and costs about half the money—it covers practically all the ground covered by Johnson's, and besides includes an unabridged dictionary of language.

The International CYCLOPEDIA is esteemed by many better for general use than either Appleton or Johnson. The publisher and editor-in-chief of the Columbian Cyclopedia naturally think well of the International, as it was formerly edited and published by them.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA covers about the same ground as the International, rejecting, however, a vast amount of Scotch, English, and other obsolete matter, and adding a very great amount of valuable original matter, particularly upon American topics, and also an unabridged dictionary of the English language.

The Britannica is the "old giant" among cyclopedias. The publisher of the COLUMBIAN recommends every one to buy it—who can afford two cyclopedias—if you can't afford two, it will not serve you; it is a vast library of valuable knowledge, very useful to men of profound learning and unlimited leisure, but for popular use, for convenient, quick consultation, on live topics, it is about as well adapted as a broad-axe would be to sharpen a lead-pencil—you want something handier. The "old giant," we said—consult the topic "Africa," for instance, and you find in a sort of "P.S." that "Livingstone is dead!" Look for "General Graut," and he not only "isn't dead," but "isn't born yet," so far as the cyclopedia is concerned! These are characteristic facts.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA treats every important topic found in the Britannica, and many thousands of others besides; with the two cyclopedias side by side, you will refer to the COLUMBIAN in nearly every case, and find all you want.

"The days of big, cumbersome, expensive cyclopedias are past, and we congratulate the reading public that they are able to get such an excellent work as this at such a low price."—JAMES ALLISON, Editor of the Presbyterian Banner, Pittsburgh.

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

First, We do not offer any man a premium to renew his own subscription. If a man has taken this paper a year and does not care enough about it to take it longer without being hired to, we do not offer him a premium.

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

☞Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, postpaid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

Any two of the following named books, and the Cynosure one year, sent to new subscribers only, upon the receipt of $2.00. These books will be sent to any address upon receipt of price.

The type of these books is always good, and nearly always large (Long Primer, or larger); the paper is always of good quality and good weight, not so thin as to be transparent, nor so thick as to be clumsy; the printing is always good; the binding is extremely neat, strong, and durable, just the thing for choice library editions which one wants to preserve a lifetime—it is either what is known as "half-seal," cloth sides, marbled edges, or half-Morocco, marbled edges; the books are 12mo in size, 7 3–4 inches high, and of corresponding width:

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

It has developed that in the official report of Jan. 24 last, ex-Bank Examiner Drew, of Philadelphia, failed to state that the Keystone Bank was indebted, on account of clearing-house certificates, in the sum of $544,851.46, which amount was not given in the bank's liabilities.

Fire Wednesday in the car stables at Sixth avenue and Forty-third street, New York, caused a loss of $60,000, fully covered by insurance. A business block at Eastlake burned, causing a loss of $40,000; insured for $15,000.

The rainfall during the past week was generally in excess over all agricultural districts, the only regions not reporting an excess of rain including the territory from the Upper Lake Region westward to Dakota and from Texas westward to Southern California. The rainfall was unusually heavy in the Lower Mississippi Valley.

A collision of railway cars at Aspen, Colo., Saturday night, caused a boiler explosion, by which seven persons were scalded to death, and several others were injured.

One woman and about 40 Indians were killed on the 7th inst., near Skeena, B. C., by a terrible landslide in the mountains.

A young man and woman were drowned Sunday, while picnicking at Western Springs, Ill., in the Des Plaines river; two boys were drowned in the Calumet lake at Pullman, Sunday, and another young man was drowned in a clay pit in the northwestern part of Chicago—also on Sunday.

The St. Louis Hotel at Duluth, Minn., was burned on Sunday; losses over $150,000.

A fire at Germantown, Pa., on Sunday destroyed thirty-two horses, many of them valuable animals; loss $35,000, partly insured.

On Sunday Mrs. Mollie Carpenter and her seven-year-old son were drowned in the Delaware river.

The Christian Endeavor General Convention at Minneapolis, Minn., last week, was very largely attended, and very enthusiastic.

FOREIGN.

While Queen Victoria, the Emperor of Germany, and other princely personages were at dinner Monday night in Windsor Castle, a water-pipe in the dining-hall burst and flooded the apartment. The services of the fire brigade were found necessary to stop the deluge.

During target practice on the British warship Cordelia, in Australian waters, a gun exploded, killing two lieutenants and four seamen, and wounding thirteen other persons.

It was decided Wednesday at a conference of prominent Hebrews in Lemberg, that efforts should be made to guide the tide of Jewish emigration toward the Argentine Republic.

The grip is working havoc among the inhabitants near the Straits of Belle Isle, Quebec, many having succumbed to the disease.

Princess Louise, Schleswig-Holstein, and Prince Aribert, of Anhalt, were married Monday in Windsor Castle, England. Queen Victoria and Emperor William, of Germany, were witnesses of the ceremony.

Off Dover Sunday night the steamer Kinloch was in collision with and sunk the steamer Dunholme. Seventeen of the persons on board the latter are missing.

On Tuesday the House of Commons at Ottawa, Ontario, passed the bill to incorporate the Buffalo and Fort Erie Bridge Company which purposes to build a bridge or a tunnel at Niagara Falls.

The Springfield Union, one of the leading provincial newspapers in Massachusetts, printed a "special Northfield edition" on the 8th inst., containing eight folio pages, filled with the proceedings of Bro. Moody's "World's Student's Conference," including very full reports of the sermons and addresses delivered by the various speakers. It can be obtained of the publishers for 5 cents per copy. It was a meritorious enterprise, and, we trust, a profitable one.

Readers of the Cynosure will find on the ninth page of this issue two interesting letters from ex-President J. Blanchard—one from Boston and the other from Saratoga Springs, N. Y., indicating the tendency of opinion relating to two great subjects—the signs of the times as touching the Second Advent of Christ, and the progress of temperance reform. The editorial correspondence of the Cynosure will prove, if the Lord wills, one of its most acceptable features.

The most noticeable feature of Catholic life in Chicago is presented to the visitor by the grand establishment of the Jesuits in West Twelfth street, their majestic church, their grand college, the fine parochial school buildings in various localities of their parish district, the institutions of charity, the magnificent building devoted solely to Catholic associations and sodalities; all is calculated to inspire the Catholic heart with unbounded joy and delight. To the honor of the sons of St. Ignatius let it be known that, in their church of the Holy Family last year the number of communicants reached as high as 200,000.—Western Catholic News.

It was of the doctrines of this Society of Jesus that the Parliament of France said, in its decree of March 5, 1762: "These doctrines, the consequence of which would destroy natural law, that rule of morality which God himself has implanted in the hearts of men, and, consequently, would break all ties of civil society, in authorizing theft, lying, perjury, the most criminal impurity, and generally all passions and all crimes, by the teaching of secret compensation, of equivocation, of mental restrictions, of probabilism and philosophical sin; destroy all feelings of humanity among men, in authorizing homicide and parricide, annihilate royal authority, etc." "All is calculated," says the Western Catholic News, "to inspire the Catholic heart with unbounded joy and delight." We should think so!

Messiah's Herald, printed in Boston, copies the Inter Ocean's account of Rev. J. P. Stoddard's recent victory in the Baptist Ministers' Meeting, June 22, and then uses it as a text for a logical criticism of the lodge, by Rev F. O. Cunningham, of Somerville, Mass. The paper is so sound in its deductions that we propose to reproduce it for the benefit of Cynosure readers. An interesting letter on the same subject, from Bro. J. P. Stoddard is printed in this issue. The Christian Conservator (U. B.) says "The discussion will give light and do good. We hail it gladly, and are sure it will open blind eyes. We wish he could have a like discussion with the Liberals and open their eyes on the lodge question."

There is no doubt that Bro. F. J. Davidson's charge, St. Matthew's Baptist church, on Second street, New Orleans, the destruction of which by fire has already been noticed in this paper, was burned by incendiaries. The services on Sunday evening, June 11th, had closed, when a suspicious person appeared in the rear, and soon afterwards the church was in flames. Remnants of paper and rags saturated with oil, subsequently found, too plainly told the story of persecution. "Since the organization of the church," writes Bro. Davidson, "it has been going through hard trials and tribulations, and though the enemy has given it many a bruise, still God, 'even our God,' has been with us." There was insurance for $650 on the burned edifice, which will soon be rebuilt. Bro. Davidson is entitled to the sympathy and material aid of all Christian people.

"The public school system, as at present conducted, would soon die of dry-rot, like many of the churches, were it not for the enlivening influence of Catholic teachers and others of that faith."—Western Catholic News.

Well, it never showed so many (if any) symptoms of "dry-rot" until recently, "as at present conducted," and since the influx of Romanists into the school boards and Romanist teachers into the schools. "As at present conducted," there is a worse element than "dry-rot" at work in it—the fine hand of the Catholic priesthood in distributing popish literature among the children's desks, advising them to pray to the Virgin Mary—a species of idolatry that belongs to the nunnery, perhaps, but not to the homes of Christian children and youth. The object is obvious—to transform the people's strongholds of education into papal nurseries. What do Protestants think of that?

As we go to press the whole religious world whose minds are stayed on God mourn the continued illness of Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon, of England, whose sermons and writings have ever been strong arguments in favor of the power of the Holy Spirit upon the truly converted man. Born at Kelverton, Eng., in 1834, he was set apart in his infancy, by his parents, for the office of an Independent minister. At the age of 16 he united with the Baptist church, and at once became an active tract distributer and school teacher. In 1851 he removed to Cambridge, where he began to deliver cottage sermons in his neighborhood. Here he, then and there, became known as the "boy preacher," and when eighteen years old he assumed the pastorate of a small Baptist congregation in the village of Waterbeach. Three years later he was called to preach to the members of Park Street chapel, in London, and performed his duties so acceptably that within two years it became necessary to greatly enlarge the church edifice. As his congregation continued to increase rapidly, Surrey Hall was hired to accommodate the crowds who flocked to hear him; and not long afterwards his parishioners built for him the Tabernacle, in Newington Butts, which he has made famous by his ministrations. This was in 1861. Since then, through his influence, important evangelistic and philanthropic enterprises have been added to the field of his labors, including the Stockwell Orphanage, a college where hundreds of young men have been trained for the Gospel ministry under his care, the Golden Lane mission, and others, while he has preached nearly every Sabbath, during all these years, to thousands of hearers. Very many of his sermons have been printed weekly and distributed, ever since 1854, in enormous numbers, while many of them have been translated into foreign languages. He is also the author of several wholesome books which have achieved deserved popularity. They comprise: John Plowman's Talk; John Plowman's Pictures; Morning by Morning; Evening by Evening; The Treasury of David; Lectures to My Students, etc., and he has also edited a monthly magazine, The Sword and the Trowel. Quite recently, in view of the numerous heterodox beliefs which have sprung up like mushrooms, and more poisonous than toadstools, he has deemed it wise to issue his Confession of Faith, which is firm in its adherence to the orthodox beliefs, the truth of the Bible, loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ, and the work of the Holy Spirit.

LODGE CHARITY CRITICIZED.

[An Open Letter, addressed to Rev. A. H. Jolly, pastor of the Presbyterian church, Alexandria, Pa. It is but justice to Bro. Stoddard to state that the person at whose suggestion this criticism was written failed to get it inserted in the local paper, and for the benefit of Cynosure readers in the vicinity of Alexandria, it was forwarded to us for publication.]

DEAR SIR:—I note in Our Church News a sermon preached by yourself to the Knights of the Golden Eagle. Allow me as a fellow-traveler to the bar of God to make a few suggestions and inquiries regarding the same.

I can but admire your presentation of Christian charity. How the same mind that so clearly pictures Divine charity can fail to see that institutions like this, which you say is "a helper in the benevolent work of the church of Christ," can be otherwise than drying up the fountains of charity, and inculcating supreme selfishness, is most astonishing. Indeed, sir, may I not justly conclude that while you have a desire for the salvation of men, the desire to gain their favor has led you to extol an institution which your better judgment would have condemned?

The selection of your text seems most unfortunate, for if there is any in the Bible that clearly condemns lodge selfishness this is one. "Who is my neighbor?" You say: "It matters not whether friend or enemy, the Knight of your Order must help another because he is an Eagle;" and then ask: "Is not this a step toward the Samaritan's principle to help a man because he is a man?" I reply most emphatically, No! It is a long step in the opposite direction. How long do you think it would take a man schooled night after night to pass by suffering humanity, excepting such as could give an Eagle's sign, to arrive at the state where he would help a man because he was a man? Can it be that you believe drilling in selfishness will produce generosity? You say: "There is an element of self-interest in all that these fraternities do, yet they are doing much good." Soon after, you say: "It is not a real good that is born of selfishness." Please be kind enough to explain in what respect these fraternities are doing "much good," if, as you say, "there is an element of self-interest in all that they do," and "it is not a real good that is born of selfishness." You mention the Johnstown disaster. The lodge did there manifest its charity with a vengeance, if newspaper and other reports can be relied on. When the great heart of the nation was throbbing in sympathy with the unfortunate, and the people, forgetting creeds, sects, and parties, were pouring in their millions for the common good; churches taking collections, business men opening their treasuries in response to crying humanity; what did the lodges generally do? Sent money! Yes; to whom? Brothers in the lodge. Lodge representatives were there. As the Priest and Levite looked on the wounded Jew, they looked on suffering humanity. Here, perhaps, is a woman wounded and bruised; they look at her and "pass by on the other side." There, an unfortunate who was too poor to join the lodge; they look at him and "pass by on the other side." At last a sign is given! The Eagle is found! His needs supplied!

Shame on the institution teaching such un-Christian, un-American—shall I say, inhuman?—sentiments! You are right when you say: "There is an element of self-interest in all that these fraternities do." But "who is my neighbor?" It is not he who passed by on the other side!

You speak of these ancient Knights, named after a bird of prey, as follows: "Your swords are but toys in your hands; incapable of the keen edge of the Damascus steel; utterly unfit for use as weapons of defence." Again: "The honors you are to win are not with the sword, but with the offices of human kindness." You recognize that to praise the new jack-knife of a boy who is proud of it will win his regard, but as you were addressing those supposed to be men, would not a suggestion to "put away childish things" have been more appropriate?

If their swords are mere toys, how could you, as a minister of Christ, encourage them to play with them in the house of God? Do you not know that to give the boy a toy pistol will create in him a desire for the real? To play soldier makes him desire to be one. You say: "It is one way of caring for ourselves, by pledging help to others, but it is this binding of one to another that makes society, that protects property, that opens the public reading-room and hospital, and makes provision for helping any whose needs may be presented." True; but why? Because in accord with the Divine will. You must show the Eagles to be in accord with the Divine will, before you can prove their binding men together right. Again you say: "The church cannot be a beneficiary organization; it cannot pay sick benefits to its members; it cannot send its members night after night in turn to nurse the sick." Partially true! The church cannot pay sick benefits, for it has none. All its benefits are well. What do you take church members for? A band of idiots, incapable of acts of charity? It cannot be! Then, as you are a minister of Christ, let me entreat you never to make such a foolish statement again. Speaking of the things of this life, the church is a beneficiary organization. It can, and in many instances does, pay stipulated amounts of money to its sick members. If you desire names of churches who send members night after night in case of sickness, I can give them. Because some professed followers of Him who went about doing good neglect duty, is it becoming in you, a minister of Christ, to try to belittle the work of the Divine institution to build up a man-made organization? Does not he present an unenviable character who, to gain the favor of the enemies of his God, voluntarily betrays the cause he professes to represent?

In conclusion you say: "Be so loyal to your order and the cause of Christ that you will let the Crusaders' sword fall from your hand and grasp with a firmer grip the sword of the Spirit of God."

How soon will they drop their "toy" swords when a minister of the Gospel, who exhorts them to do so, urges them in the next breath to be loyal to the order! How can they be loyal to the order and not wear its trinkets? Though you preach that men should have the sword of the Spirit, if, at the same time you encourage them to "unequally yoke themselves with unbelievers," will you not be leading them to hell and not to heaven?

May God, by his Spirit, awaken you, and all who are adopting the same policy, to a sense of the fearfulness of such a course. Would it not be well for all ministers of the Gospel to consider the word of the Lord: "Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully." Jer. 48: 10.

Very respectfully, W. B. STODDARD.

HALF-WAY STATIONS.

BY B. EISENTRAUT.

The position many ministers and other Christians, in a general sense, have chosen in this day for mutual protection through life in joining various orders of secret societies, may justly be called half-way stations of Christianity and Christian principles. The apostle St. John gave, in the first century, a true and graphic account of this degenerate state of God's people in the Revelation.

The words preceding the epistles to the seven churches of Asia give sufficient evidence within themselves to prove that they were intended to illustrate the great changes of time wherein the influences of the world's revolutions would govern also the ministry of the Christian era. St. John was dictated to begin to write from the days of his own apostleship and his own experience in saying (Rev. 1: 19, 20): "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter; the mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches."

First Epistle—Apostolic Age—Vagabond Jews at Ephesus tried to drive out evil spirits in the name of Christ and were found to be liars. (Acts 19: 13–20).

Second Epistle—A later period—"These things saith the First and the Last, which was dead and is alive"—Christ. Christians endured the persecutions of ten cruel emperors within 250 years in the Roman Empire, before the reign of Constantine.

Third Epistle—Christians began to waver in devotion, like Balaam of old, from A. D. 323 onward.

Fourth Epistle—Thyatira—Ministers of the Gospel suffered a false doctrine to be introduced through Mohammed and the Koran; which warred against Christianity, as Jezebel made war against the Jews.

Fifth Epistle—Sardis—"These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead." Pope Leo III., assuming to be a divine administrator of God's people, a vicar of Christ, caused a division in the Roman Empire in A. D. 800. Christ is reproving Anti-christ.

Sixth Epistle—Philadelphia—A. D. 1530. The Reformers opened again the pages of the Bible; using the proper key to unlock the temple into a new Jerusalem.

Seventh Epistle—Laodicea—About 1750. "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So, then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth." Many of our Christian churches, within the last century, have enjoyed a tranquil and peaceable period, and are holding the position which the Revelator illustrated in saying they look upon themselves as being rich and increased with goods, as having need of nothing. But, also, many of these professors of Christianity have come to be more of recruiting officers for secret societies, than advocates of the Gospel. Their reasoning in society is more enticing for earthly considerations and mutual protection than the pathway of faith. They are neither cold nor hot. They have no desire to cast away the Word of God, but often look with pitying eyes upon persons that condemn these secret societies—these half-way stations—as being blinded with ignorance, in not knowing their real charitable (?) designs.

I was amused, a few days ago, at a Fourth of July celebration, and am still shocked, at the audacity of a member of the Odd-fellows' society to take the stand as a solicitor for the order, giving also a clear statement of its charitable precautions by stating that competent physicians were now chosen to examine each applicant, which in former years had been sadly neglected, for the welfare and prosperity of the order. Let Christians step out from such lukewarm charitableness, such delusions of an anti-Christian foundation.

THE BEST FOR JESUS.

BY REV. ISAAC HYATT.

Do we think of it as often as we ought, and act upon it as we should, that the best we have should always be given to Jesus our Lord? The best of our time, our faculties, our possessions—in short, the best of everything we have, should be laid at his feet, to be used as he directs. This should be done, not to secure his favor but to show our love for the favors he has shown us. Christianity is a living, acting principle. It arouses man to action, and sets on fire the noblest faculties of the mind and purest emotions of the heart.

It manifests itself in kind, benevolent acts and falling tears, which ever carry with them a power that awakens and strengthens the best within us. Therefore, to carry out its design, whatever we do for its Author should be our best endeavor, and whatever we give in his name ought to be our choicest treasures. There is not half the pleasure in giving what we do not want as in giving what we prize most highly. Jesus gave the best he had for us. We ought to esteem it a favor to give the best we have for him. When we place our offerings in the contribution-box, let it be the best we have. If it be a cent, select the newest and brightest we have. If it be a nickel, let it be our cleanest. Never give torn or depreciated currency, if it can be avoided, to Jesus. A clerk in a grocery store, who is also treasurer in a good-sized city Sunday-school, says that in the six days he is at work in the store he does not begin to receive the amount of mutilated money that he does during the forenoon in Sunday-school. All such currency as is considered by tradesmen as doubtful, is contributed to pass for its face-value for Christ. Let us think before we do any such thing again. For if we bestow our alms as we ought, we worship God. And to lie in the act of worship is the worst kind of lying. Jesus will make his abode with the poorest, and cheerfully share the best he has with them; but he will never enter the kitchen of the rich unless he can have a hearty welcome into their parlor.

A sincere desire to please God in our thoughts, words and acts will bring to the front the best we have as an offering to Jesus, our best Friend.

> "Take my love, my God; I pour
> At thy feet its treasure store;
> Take myself, and I will be > Ever, only all for Thee."

VITTOBA, THE BOMBAY BOOK-SELLER.

BY REV. W. J. GLADWIN.

The young people among the Cynosure readers will all be glad to hear this interesting story. Vittoba was born thirty-six years ago, a worshiper of idols. After many years he got tired of bowing down to dumb images. Then he heard the Gospel. Did he put it off, and wait many years, as so many of you do in these Christian lands? No, he received the truth into his mind, and he received Jesus into his heart. He was a cart-man, driving two bullocks hitched to a large two-wheeled cart, and carrying loads of various kinds, wherever hired. He used to attend meetings regularly and contribute his copper pice along with his testimony.

Finally, he saw how much could be done by selling little tracts about the streets to the multitudes of people in Bombay. Then he gave up his carting business for the difficult work of book-selling. Part of the time he carries a large bundle of books, and at times has a hand-cart, which he pushes along with his excellent wares. So you see how his work changed. Formerly his cart used to draw him, but now he pushes the cart. In all the cities of India there are many native hawkers. They go about and shout out what they have to sell. Vittoba goes around to the houses, telling the people what good things he has for sale. When there are heathen festivals, where many thousands of people gather together to worship their images and to go through other strange performances, Vittoba goes there to sell his books for Christ's sake. A short time ago he and other book-sellers visited several towns north of Bombay. Among other places, they went to Daman, which is a Portuguese city, and the people are almost all Roman Catholics. They sold two hundred Gospels and fifty New Testaments, almost all of them being bought by poor Romanists. The Roman priests came to India about four hundred years ago, and they have many thousands of followers among the natives. These Romanists are just as heathenish as any other heathens. They worship the images of the saints, the Virgin Mary, etc. Their minds are full of all manner of superstitions, partly those which their heathen ancestors followed, and partly the equally silly superstitions of Romanism.

Vittoba plods along at his work, no matter how the people laugh at him, no matter about the hot sun nor the pouring rains. He knows he is doing God's work, and that his labor is not in vain in the Lord. He enjoys his Sunday rest, I assure you. He goes to meetings with his family, and takes his usual part there. I met him, the other evening, about dusk, coming from his work, and he looked so much like an old farmer coming in from his field after a hard day's toil. I asked him why he did not get more Christians to work at this good business of book-selling. He said: "Most of them like easy work. They want to be clerks, school-masters, etc." But Vittoba understands what it is to bear the cross, and he knows, as all do who honestly try it, that this is the happiest and sweetest work, in the long run.

I wonder how many of those who read about Vittoba understand what this means. I imagine I hear many of you say: "I do, I do;" but do you carry it out? Do you really bear the cross daily? Ah, some of you are silent and look down. Well, then, you do not know what it is, unless you have tried it.

Now, let me tell you another good thing. There is a circle of people in America who are helping Vittoba every day. Is not that nice? It came about this way: A humble little class of Sunday-school children got together $4, and their teacher asked me how they could best send it to help save the heathen. It was too large a question for me to answer at once. So I waited to think and pray over it. Finally, I wrote to the teacher that those $4 would keep a native worker in India one month, and if they could get twelve other classes, or any persons, to take up the other months of the year they might support a man right along. So there was more thinking and praying by several people, and the matter was arranged. I do not know who all those people are. I wish I did, but the Lord knows them, and I am sure he is blessing them if they offer these gifts with prayerful hearts.

Just see how good actions grow. When that plan was started, I published it in American papers, and others have adopted the same plan of supporting native workers in India. The first circle of support was started in Wheaton, Ill., and the next away off in Philadelphia. When we get a circle in San Francisco, another in New Orleans, and another in Boston, we will have the United States pretty well surrendered, and should expect the rest of the country also to surrender rapidly to this plan. However, let me say this: That as much as we need money out here, I am anxious people should not send their dollars carelessly. We want it sent with prayers and consecration, and faith in God.

Not only can circles thus be formed to support either native or European workers in India, but many single individuals can do this much alone. I received a letter last week from a Christian friend in Wisconsin who is sending money to support a European worker for a time. If all who read this will just now stop and listen very attentively, I really believe that some of you will hear a "still small voice" whispering, "Go thou and do likewise." How nicely many of you could do it! Only $4 a month for a native worker. How many of you could easily give this amount, and how many more could raise it among your neighbors. European missionaries can live comfortably upon $15 to $20 a month; that is, if they are willing to live in the humble style of a common laboring man. When I first came to India my mission salary was over $80 a month as a single man, but I found that I did not need so much, and I resigned my salary the first year. Having tried the plain and economical style of living for nearly twenty years in India, and having found it just as healthful and convenient as any other, I speak the things which I do know, and testify that which I have seen and handled. To any truly consecrated soul it is just as happy to live in this humble way—yea, more so—than living in a more "swell" style. Besides, we know that in thus humbly following the example of our meek and lowly Jesus we are taking the best means of getting hold of the hearts of the multitudes of poor natives to whom we wish to present the Gospel of Christ.

The Lord wants many more of his saved children to go out to the "uttermost parts of the earth" with the Gospel of his Son. "Who will consecrate his service this day unto the Lord" for this great and blessed work?

Any interested in our mission work may write us freely. The Sunday-school teacher who opened the first circle to thus support our book evangelists in India is still carrying on the good work. His name is W. I. Phillips, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

THE POPE'S BLESSING ON THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Speaking of the blessing which the Pope of Rome recently pronounced upon the forthcoming Columbian Exposition in this city, according to a special telegram from Springfield, Ohio, July 13, Rev. J. B. Helwig, of the First Lutheran church, late Prohibition candidate for Governor, and ex-President of Wittenberg College, lately said: "And to my mind, one of the unfortunate things that has already happened in connection with the Columbian Exposition in Chicago, is the blessing which the Pope of Rome has pronounced upon it. Judging from past results and consequences, the blessings of the Pope of Rome are rather to be feared than sought, rather to be repelled than craved, especially by the people of this country. Judging from the consequences of the Pope's blessing, is it not an inauspicious omen that he should already pronounce his blessing upon our World's Fair? In the time when our country was in the struggle for its life Napoleon of France sent Maximilian to Mexico in order if possible still more to embarrass our government at Washington; and the Pope at Rome gave Maximilian his blessing; but what was the result? Maximilian was shot in Mexico, and poor Carlotta, his wife, wasted away and died in a lunatic asylum in Spain; and woe be to this land or anything pertaining to it whenever it is found to be worthy of the papal benediction; and, both with the Pope's blessing and the profanation of the Sabbath, we have our fears with regard to the result of our Columbian Exposition."

OUR GLORIOUS BIBLE.

The Bible is a very positive book. It does not deal in uncertainties; it knows no "if," or "perhaps," or "peradventure," but from end to end the divine "shall be" glows as it were in letters of fire from every page. To-day the dandelions stud the grass with their yellow stars of promise, perfumes of lilac and apple-blossom are everywhere, and the very mosses are green and soft on long forgotten graves, because in all the ages that have passed not a single summer has laid herself down to die and be buried under her fallen leaves, without the sure promise clasped to her heart, "that while the earth remaineth seed-time and harvest shall not cease." And yet some of us are troubled, and anxious, and care-laden; so much so that we cannot stop to listen to the sermons preached by every bird of the air and flower of the field. You want to be freed from some financial strain, delivered from the prospective shadow of want. "No good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly." Do you believe it? Bread is a good thing, and here is the promise, "Thy bread shall be sure." Love is a good thing, and more of us are more hungry for affection than for bread. Wisdom is a good thing, our troubles being mostly caused by the lack of it; and though we might name a long category of specific desires they could all be easily classed under these three heads.

And so to you, O anxious and heavy-laden ones, comes the message of these lengthening days, these sweet south winds, this yearly miracle of bud and blossom. Seed-time has succeeded to harvest, and harvest to seed-time, and the changeless rock and the shifting cloud have alike borne witness to His truth that fails not; and shall he keep his word with the seasons as they come and go, and not with you "O ye of little faith?"—Elizabeth E. Flagg in the Independent Christian.

ANTIQUITIES WHICH CONFIRM THE BIBLE.

No "scientific investigations" are yielding better returns than the antiquarian investigations going on where time has buried deep the ruins of ancient civilization. It is remarkable how they confirm the Bible. Two new "finds" of unusual interest are announced by Egyptian explorers. The first is the discovery of a tomb believed by eminent archæologists to be that of the famous Cleopatra. It is twenty-five feet under ground, in a chamber ten feet long, with a sarcophagus in the form of a pyramid, and decorated with exquisite carvings. The investigations are not yet complete, but have proceeded far enough to make it certain that the tomb is that of some extraordinary personage. The other discovery is that of a will at Illahun. This will was written on papyrus and dates back to the reign of Amenamhat III., 2550 B. C., the name of the month and day being given. The phraseology is quite modern in form and shows that people even in that early day knew how to give away their property when they could no longer use it, as well as they do now. As the testator settles his property upon his wife it indicates the legal status of woman. It is also another proof that the Egyptians had a written language in that far-off day. —Selected.

ROMANISM IS GAINING WHAT IT LOST IN THE REFORMATION.

The reverses of the papacy these twenty years past have not been without their consolations. The prominence which every word and movement of the prisoner of the Vatican enjoys before the world has fixed attention upon him and his office, such as has not been seen since the days of Luther. The reception of the Encyclical illustrates this statement. The whole civilized world waited for it, read it, commented upon it. Why? Because the civilized world is now pretty well acquainted with the social problem; it has learned to appreciate the fact that the pope leads the Catholic millions; and to understand that the pontiff's utterances are bound to have an immense influence on these millions. It was once thought by the innocent non-Catholic that loss of the temporal power meant the disappearance of the pope; the phenomenon of his continued and very prominent existence has now to be accounted for; and we have no doubt that when the phenomenon has been explained to the satisfaction of non-Catholics, they will be clamorous partisans of the restoration of the temporal power. The man who leads the Catholic millions of all nations must for the sake of the nations be utterly free from the compulsion of the ambitious and the interested. Non-Catholics have learned much from the pope's imprisonment; their own interests will yet compel them to defend him against injustice, as in former times selfish kings were forced to draw the sword in his defense.—Catholic Review.

SECRET SOCIETIES—PRO AND CON.

Secret societies to some of our people are the same as shocking machines. The harder the shocks, the tighter some people hold on and suffer to be deluded.—Baptist Vanguard.

Not only secret societies, but all sorts of benevolent societies do much good, and exert a wholesome influence to a very large extent in the community; but truly a check should be put upon the useless waste of money that usually attends the existence of societies among our people. —Southern Christian Recorder.

When you admit that "a check should be put upon the useless waste of money," etc., Bro. Bradwell, you admit all that the Vanguard contends for in the above clipping. What's the use, then, in trying to differ when you really have the same opinion? But to take a step in advance, it is highly questionable and hard to prove, (1) that secret societies are benevolent; (2) that they exert a "wholesome influence" to any extent in the community.—Baptist Vanguard.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The last days of Pompeii—Should Boston fear a foreign foe?—The Royal Ark and its victims—The daisy at the South.

A somewhat lurid-looking card was put into my hand the other day, with Mt. Vesuvius pictured on one side, belching forth fiery streams on terror-stricken people who are running wildly about, or kneeling with arms outstretched imploringly to heaven, among their burning temples and palaces; and on the other an invitation to attend the grand spectacular performance of "The Last Days of Pompeii," which still continues to be the leading attraction to amusement seekers of Boston and vicinity.

But isn't it rather ghastly, when one comes to think about it?—the idea of reproducing in mock semblance that frightful tragedy, which perhaps comes as near, on an infinitely smaller scale, to the scenes of the last great day as any event known to history. Was it for nothing that luxurious, wicked, heathen Pompeii slumbered in careless security on her vine-clad slopes, then woke for one brief, terrible instant—too brief almost for her death shriek to go up to heaven, ere the black, sulphurous billows rolled over her, and the places where she had sung and danced and feasted knew her no more forever? And yet was poor, pleasure-loving Pompeii worse than other cities of that land and age that she should be thus singled out to stand an awful object-lesson, like the rebel angels of old "suffering the vengeance of eternal fire"? Among all the forms of vice and sin which she practiced, was there any that could not, at least in essence, be found in Boston, New York or Chicago, to-day? A year ago thousands crowded daily and nightly to Oakland Gardens to witness the "Fall of Babylon." Nothing would seem to remain new except for some enterprising caterer to the public amusement to eclipse both these shows by getting up a representation of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah.

The Traveller lately sent out its reporters to interview the officers of the White Squadron on what kind of a defence Boston could make in case of an attack from some naval power. Of course, army and navy men are inclined to look at the matter from their own professional standpoint, and it is needless to say that their opinion was very unfavorable to Boston's ability to repel any such attack. The various replies made by leading women as to what they could do to help save the city if it was threatened by a foreign foe, are interesting reading, and, hypothetical as the idea seems of a hostile fleet coming in sight of our shores, it will do for a newspaper topic in hot weather, when, if at any time, the stream is apt to run dry. The Professor of Botany at Wellesley, who is as sweet in face and soul as the flowers of whose habits she has made such an affectionate and life-long study, gave the characteristic answer that "she would use her knowledge of healing herbs and plants to relieve the wounded;" a reply which ought to be very much to the satisfaction of all who believe in the "ministering angel" role as the only one appropriate to women. But of all sensible answers to a somewhat foolish question, Mrs. Eliza Trask Hill's may well bear off the palm: "Women," she said, "who have left the ball room and the theater in the last three years, and given up the frivolities of fashionable life for the love of country, are even now agonizing before God on bended knees, spending whole days in prayer, so distressed are they over the dangers that are threatening their beloved country. It is not the attack of a foreign foe from without, but the attack of foes from within that we fear. Give us loyal men and women on shore, and enemies in the harbor will soon be vanquished!" I felt like giving a cheer for Mrs. Trask Hill. She has uttered words of truth and patriotism which not only Boston but the nation needs to hear.

The Transcript suggests that perhaps one reason why the Mafia episode dropped so suddenly out of sight, is the fact that the Italian government is just now devoting all its time to smashing a recently discovered secret society in the Neapolitan provinces, which is said to be very much like the Mafia, "an unhappy mingling of amateur and professional murderers." Another illustration of the folly of all this was talk so freely indulged in at the time of the New Orleans trouble. It is true that matters are always liable to come up and cause more or less unpleasant feeling, as in the Behring Sea affair, and there may be a good deal of bluster on both sides; but every year gives the European governments more and more to occupy them at home without going to war with their neighbors across the water. America's foes are within her own bosom; and the only invading forces she has any reason to dread are being landed daily at Castle Garden. No thoughtful person can read the long list of foreign secret societies, and then the numerous so-called "patriotic" societies which have risen to combat them, without feeling that here are all the elements of a most terrible civil conflict. "Any white male person born in the United States, of good moral character, a believer in the Supreme Being, and in favor of free education and opposed to the union of church and state," can become a member of the Junior Order of United Mechanics. "To maintain and promote the interests of Americans;" "to assist Americans in obtaining employment;" "to encourage Americans in business;" and "to establish a sick or general fund," are four out of its five avowed objects. The fifth and last, which has reference to maintaining the integrity of the public schools, is all that gives it the smallest right to be called a patriotic order. Their grand mistake, beside that of trying to combat Rome with her own Jesuitic weapons of secrecy, is to fancy that selfishness and race prejudice are patriotism. Alas for the nation if, in her hour of peril, she must rely on these dark-lantern orders to defend her!

The long-threatened collapse of the benefit system is beginning, but Commissioner Merrill can have the comfort of knowing that he has faithfully warned the deluded depositors in these concerns that their folly would one day bring them to grief. He says that his office is fairly besieged by members of the Royal Ark and other short-term orders. It is probable that the former is hundred of thousands of dollars in arrears, and its victims, some of whom have deprived themselves and families of the necessities of life to keep up their membership, can never hope to get their money back. The officers who talked so glibly on the advantages of the system when they got their poor dupes to join, are either missing, or have no satisfactory account to give of the large sums paid into their coffers.

I see it stated that before the war there was no such flower as the daisy in Virginia, but that now the fields around Richmond are white with daisies, the seeds having been carried in bales of hay brought by the Union soldiers when camped near the city. Is not this a pretty and poetic prophecy of the union that may one day exist between these long-severed sections, when New England capital has not only built up a New South, but planted it with New England ideas? How the homesick Northern invalid's heart will leap when he sees the golden-eyed daisy of his native fields smile up to him, a token that he is not an exile but still under his country's skies. Is not the free, hardy, plebeian and yet royal-hearted daisy a more fitting choice for a national flower than the golden rod which really suggests too much the American love of mammon?

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, July 15, 1891.

It is curious how a man will listen to the most elaborate arguments made by eminent orators in the cause of religion or temperance without being convinced of the error of his manner of living, and then, at some unexpected time, a few words spoken by some old friend or neighbor will do what the great orators have failed to do. A case of this kind has just come under my observation. A popular business man, about forty years of age, whose principal fault consisted of his determination "to take a drink whenever I feel like it," was one of half-a-dozen gentlemen assembled in a social group when the subject of alcoholism came up. It was discussed in about the usual way, all the gentlemen present being teetotalers except the business man, who said, after listening to his friends tell about the harmfulness of alcohol: "Well, I take a drink whenever I feel like it, but I have no use for a man who will allow liquor in any shape to become his master, and I know hundreds of men who do the same thing without injury to themselves or to society."

"Are you certain of that last statement?" asked one of his oldest neighbors.

"Yes, I—I think—I—am," was the hesitating reply.

"Well, now let us see about it. You remember Blank, the Seventh street merchant; he was just that kind of a man when I first knew him. Do you remember what caused his failure?"

"Yes, excessive drinking and neglect of his business."

"That was my impression. Now, do you see that haggard-faced, slouching figure creeping along on the other side of the street? You know him; he was your school-mate, and the champion athlete of your school. Now tell me what destroyed his health and his prospects, and made of him the pitiful object he now is?"

"Whisky," laconically answered the business man.

"You were on the committee to raise money to pay the rent for our sick neighbor, whose husband is serving a term in prison for having committed forgery, and you know all the circumstances. He started out with almost the same ideas as you now express; what was it that made him a felon and branded his innocent wife and children with disgrace?"

"It was drink, that ruined him; but," becoming excited, "these men allowed liquor to become their masters."

"True, and so will drink become your master, unless you stop while there is yet time."

"Impossible!"—somewhat irritably.

"Come, come, don't get offended. Answer two more questions, and I am done. You say that you know hundreds of men who drink whenever they feel like it, without injury to themselves or others; now, candidly, is it not from this very class of drinkers that all the confirmed drunkards come?—and is it not a fact within your own personal knowledge that many of your acquaintances, in paying for their drinks, use money which should go to provide for their wives and children?"

"Enough, enough; you have presented the evils of moderate drinking in an entirely new light to me, and from this time forth I shall never swallow another drop of intoxicating liquor."

To say that the gentleman who made this conversion was happy when he heard the fervent "Thank God," which the wife of this business man uttered when she heard the good news, is almost superfluous.

Public interest in Glen Echo Chautauqua is on the increase, and the beautiful grounds are visited daily by hundreds of our people who greatly enjoy the lectures, music and other features. Last Sunday an invitation was extended to the children of every Sunday-school in the District of Columbia to visit the grounds, free of charge, tomorrow, which is to be "Children's day."

The Gospel meeting of the Y. M. C. A. was addressed Sunday afternoon by Rev. Dr. James M. Crocker, of Saratoga Springs, New York, his subject being "Birth implies Manhood."

The new Y. M. C. A., composed entirely of colored men, installed its permanent officers Sunday afternoon; it has now a membership of 225, which is being constantly increased.

At two meetings of Good Templars—one on Saturday evening, and one on Sunday evening—addresses were delivered by Mr. J. T. Kean, G. C. T. of the State of South Dakota, and Captain Karlstern, from Australia, both of whom gave cheering accounts of the progress of temperance in their respective localities. *

TESTIMONY AGAINST TEMPERANCE LODGES.

A dear, good brother in the ministry of Christ thus gives his testimony against the utility of secret conclaves for the purpose of carrying on a successful temperance campaign. It is taken from a private letter, and the brother's name is necessarily withheld from publication; but every true believer must appreciate the purity of his motives and the value of his experience.

"In my boyhood Morgan was murdered by the Masons. I read and heard about it. Then and there I got the seed-germ of anti-secret societies. In college, at Yale, I saw so much of the evil of such societies, to the pockets, habits and morals of students, that the germ sprouted and became a living, growing principle.

"In 1847, I organized a church in ———, and we took our position for free missions and total abstinence, and against all secret societies. These positions were all unpopular; but I thought them right, and think so now. I began an effort against the prevailing intemperance, and we had quite a reformation.

"The next year, the Sons of Temperance organized. I heard their lecturers, and saw nearly all temperance people joining the society. Brother ministers went in, one after another. I was entreated, scolded, denounced, but never saw one good reason for changing my course. The total abstinence pledge covered all alcoholic beverages, whether they had one or fifty per cent of alcohol; so a secret society, like the Sons, with only a small per cent of the Evil One, was wrong, and, in some respects, more dangerous than a Masonic lodge.

"I found the Sons, in many cases, a stepping-stone to the lodge.

"I have been maltreated here for years, for not joining the Good Templars, but have outlived it, and am none the less a temperance man in the view of all.

"While I have seen some reformed in the lodge, I have seen none transformed. I have seen inquirers and seekers go in there for safety—and stay there. I have known no professing Christian made a better man by the lodge."

The noon prayer meetings at the Cynosure office continue, and efforts are constantly made to give them a distinctive feature in the public religious exercises of the great West Division of Chicago—interesting and profitable to a large circle of regular participants. They need, however, the earnest prayers of all who appreciate the value of such meetings.

The Annual of the University of Deseret—1891–92, at Salt Lake City, Utah, is received, and from its contents we infer that the institution is enjoying a fair share of local patronage. The studies and government of the University indicate a strong and varied curriculum and a system of training admirably devised for obtaining the best results, mentally, socially and physically.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

BOSTON, July 16th, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your kindly mention of our work here is appreciated, and as others have given notice of my brief address to the Baptist ministers of this city, June 22d, with comments, it may be in order for me to say a word. If I have given just occasion for an anti-Roman editor and "Freemason of over fifty years'" standing to publish the Baptist ministers of Boston, in his reform (?) journal, as "idiotic asses" and "more stupid than the beast on which Balaam rode," because, as he avers, they allowed "an idiot, as to the meaning of Masonry and the Bible," to "slander an order as much purer than they [the Baptist Ministerial Association of Boston] are as Michael is than Abaddon," it was not what I intended.

The simple record is this: I have improved whatever favorable opportunities came in my way to distribute the writings and speeches of such men as John Quincy Adams, Daniel Webster, Charles Sumner, Charles G. Finney, Joseph Cook, Dwight L. Moody, Geo. F. Pentecost, Roland D. Grant, F. O. Cunningham, B. Carradine and E. P. Goodwin, giving their views of secret societies in their own words. I have conversed freely with Masons, Odd-fellows, and all who called on me, giving such information as they sought, and I was able to impart. When asked to speak publicly, I have responded by stating my objections to secret societies as well as I was able. The chairman of the program committee of the Baptist Ministerial Association of this city called at my rooms, and asked me to address that body upon secret societies. I readily assented, and I went with Bro. Wheeler to see Dr. Gordon and arrange the time so as to accommodate us both and not conflict with other appointments.

June 22 was the day assigned me, and I was informed that fifteen minutes was the usual time allowed to such addresses, but twenty minutes would probably be tolerated. I wrote what occupied nineteen minutes in reading, and appeared as requested. After an ordinary opening of devotional and business exercises, I was introduced by presiding officer P. S. Moxon, D.D., and, after brief preliminary remarks, began reading. The attention was all that could be desired for fourteen minutes, when Geo. H. Cleveland, pastor of the Baptist church at Melrose, rose to a point of order. Not being sustained, he abruptly left the room, requesting his name erased from the Association's roll of membership. I proceeded to complete the reading, and as some wished to hear further on the subject, a motion prevailed to extend the time twenty minutes. I gave a brief chart talk, hearing and replying to such questions as the brethren wished to ask, when the meeting heard from Dr. Northrup and other brethren, and adjourned with prayer. It was quite evident that a deep feeling pervaded the assembly, and but for the steady hand with which the presiding officer guided the movement, there would possibly have been more confusion. Reporters came for my manuscript, which I gave them, with permission to publish in whole or in part as they liked.

Our Boston dailies have treated the matter fairly, and a very commendable interest has been awakened. If the secretists have received "a crumb of comfort" from the secular press of Boston, it has escaped my notice, and I feel grateful to God and to the ministers and reporters for the vindication of free speech and the privilege of being heard and honorably reported on one of the most perplexing and unpopular themes of the day. The spirit of liberty has not wholly departed from the grand old Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

It was announced through the papers that Rev. Sullivan L. Holman would speak, as a Mason, the following Monday. He filled his engagement, and succeeded in convincing all present that either he had a hard subject to handle, or that he was not a skillful manipulator of stubborn facts. It is sad to witness an ordained minister of the Gospel of Christ, straining the truth, and quibbling for forty-five minutes, in an attempt to defend a religious system which willfully and intentionally rejects the atonement, and that, too, in the face of Him who says, "Whoso denieth me before men, I will deny before my Father and the angels."

Outside of Boston, some severe strictures have been given, as mentioned above. Over two columns in the "American Monitor," started and run to oppose Romanism, reflect the Masonic sentiment by a "Mason of over fifty years'" standing. Is not such an imputation of stolidity and diabolism, coming from the editor of an anti-Romanist journal worthy the attention of the justly celebrated "Committee of One Hundred?"

Will the brethren who carry on the Music Hall Sabbath services silently indorse this man as an ally and co-worker, or will they speak in vindication of their traduced and maligned brethren?

Some of these men whom the Monitor has weighed in its Masonic balance and found wanting, are upon the platform, in the front ranks of the defenders of our liberties and free schools for a free people, against an insidious foe in hiding, and of them it may be reverently said: He that is not with them is against them. If anything is more cowardly and disreputable than personal abuse, it is to stand by and silently witness an honorable man, or body of men, branded as "idiots" and demoniacs; and a discriminating public would be tempted to construe such recreancy as a silent indorsement to be referred to the realm of Masonic mystery for a true explanation. A loyal public will expect, and I trust not in vain, to hear words of no uncertain meaning on this living question. J. P. STODDARD.

FROM OUR WASHINGTON AGENT.

VOSE, Wyoming Co., Pa., July 16, '91.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I never grow tired of the ever-changing beauties of the Pennsylvania hills. Having plenty of wholesome food, fresh air and clear spring water, why should not I rejoice in the Author and giver of every good and perfect gift?

Leaving home one week ago, my first stop was at Steelton, Pa., where I have so often received a cordial welcome at the home of Bro. John White's. This was no exception to the rule. Not far from Steelton, nestled among the hills, is a home which gives every evidence of industry, neatness, and thrift. The buildings are all tastefully painted; the fences are all up; gates and doors are all on their hinges. In short, a glance tells that the man living there is diligent in business.

This is the home of Bro. Wm. Smeltzer. His fervency of spirit and service of the Lord led him to help sustain our work. Contributions to our cause, given without solicitation by brethren White and Smeltzer, led me to rejoice, and more fully to trust Him who has always helped in times of need, and whose promises are sure for the future.

A secret society, of the Powderly style, has been formed in Steelton, among the steel workers. The hope is to compel the company to pay the men higher wages. They purpose doing this by the usual strike methods. In this they will probably not succeed. The company knows who are the leaders of this society, and I was told by one in a position to know, that in less than an hour after each meeting the company knew the plans suggested and the action taken. They have already discharged several of the leaders. A general strike was ordered for the 9th of July, but has been postponed, and the works are running as usual. Those who refuse to join this secret society will gain favor with their employers, while those who strike will be thrown out of work and have their places filled by new men.

Doubtless many work hard for little pay. Some get but 11 cents per hour, while others receive from $3 to $5 per day. Some, who are receiving the most pay, make the most complaint. A man was discharged for being a leader in this secret society the day I was at Steelton; he had received $130 per month for very ordinary work. When will men learn that to fight those who give them bread is unprofitable as well as ungrateful? Especially is this true when warfare is carried on under cover of night. Two employes of this company stated that always when the men had any grievances and presented them to the company in a respectful manner, they were respectfully heard, and nearly always their requests were granted.

At Wilkes Barre I found an open door in the Free Methodist church, and a helping hand in Bro. A. G. Miller, the F. M. chairman for this district. I spoke to fair audiences, all things considered, on Saturday, Sabbath and Monday evenings. On Sabbath afternoon I spoke, with others, to a company largely composed of red-nosed, blear-eyed fellows, who stopped on their way to the saloons to hear the music. How sad to see the multitudes going down to death through strong drink!

I spoke in the Free Methodist church here, last evening, to about seventy-five persons. Farmers are very busy securing crops. I speak, by appointment, to-night in a school-house at Prospect Hill; to-morrow evening in the Baptist church at Russell Hill; Sabbath afternoon and evening in the church here. I find a pleasant home with Bro. Shearer, pastor. Several testimonies of seceded secretists have been very interesting and profitable. When Bro. Armstrong, of Wilkes Barre, was initiated into what is called "The Mystic Band of Brothers,," he was allowed to retain but little of his clothing. Two men held drawn swords pointed at each breast, while he was compelled to take a horrible oath. He thought that about two-thirds of the members of the lodge to which he belonged would get drunk before returning home, after the lodge was dismissed. He is now trying to walk in the light, and is, of course, out of the lodge. W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN ENERGETIC MAYORESS.

McCUNE, Kan., July, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—You have perhaps heard of the election laws of Kansas which allow women to vote at municipal elections for school officers, etc.

Now we, Kansans, take some pride in our women, and our law, and the following extract will tell you precisely why we do so:

Mrs. Dr. Paxton is mayoress of Kiowa, and she handles the official ribbons and whip with neatness and precision. Immediately on assuming the duties of the office, she discharged the old marshal and appointed one to whom she gave strict orders to close the eleven joints (saloons) of the town. The citizens immediately held an indignation meeting and protested against the adoption of measures which promised the total annihilation of their business. Among those appointed to wait upon her "honoress, the mayoress," was her husband, Dr. Paxton. When the committee made known to her their mission, she politely, yet promptly, informed them that she had taken a solemn oath to enforce the law and that she had not yet been in politics long enough to learn how to swear to a lie and still be respectable. The joints (saloons) were closed.—Arkansas City Traveler.

They are far less corrupt and more conscientious; more honest and honorable, and for these reasons make better voters and better officers than men. We are soon going to have an entirely free ballot for them in Kansas, and a political field, clear and clean, for them to operate in. We need their instinctive ideas of honor and right to have an untrammeled bearing upon the important political work of the times.

Allow me the pleasure of commending Mrs. Paxton, Mrs. Lease, Mrs. Emery, and others like them, to your favorable consideration.

Yours truly, J. L. SWITZER.

MASONRY AND ODD-FELLOWSHIP SELF-CONDEMNING.

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 11, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I see by the clipping you sent me from the Companion Odd-fellow for July that I am charged with "vilifying" the Odd-fellows. Whence I conclude that the Odd-fellows themselves are constrained to testify that the principles of their institution are "villainous," for I did nothing but expose their own principles expounded and indorsed by a combination of the highest Odd-fellow authorities in twenty-seven of the United States. In the light of Christianity, the Bible, their principles are infamously blasphemous,—proclaiming, as they do, regeneration founded upon the ancient abominations and salvation of Egypt, and without Christ.

They also charge me with calling the Freemasons "liars, murderers and idolaters." If I have called the Masons liars, it is because they make a bare-faced, scandalous lie fundamental to the very existence of Masonry, and so spiritualize that lie in their own souls as to make it the foundation of their doctrine of resurrection, immortality, salvation, etc. That is not only lying, but it is, in the light of Christianity and the Bible, blasphemy. If I have called them murderers, it is because their principles involve murder, in testimony of which we have the history of murder actually committed by the fraternity, and justified by true Masons in pursuance of their own wicked Masonic principles.

If I have called them idolaters, it is because they practice idolatry in their lodge work, essential to the existence of their institution—even the ancient abominations of Egyptian idolators.

For all of which they ought to hang their heads for shame in the presence of honest men, instead of making their honest boast of it.

The First Lutheran church of this city has become so much interested in the subject of secret societies, that the lecture delivered to a large audience on last Thursday evening is to be continued on next Thursday evening. Will readers of the Cynosure please pray that the true spiritual light of God may shine in the hearts of his people, and the spiritual darkness of lodgery disappear.

W. FENTON.

PITH AND POINT.

[How to Best Oppose Seeret Socicties—Extracts from Private Letters.]

"By the preaching of the Gospel."

"By regarding and speaking of them as childish and un-Christian, and by declining to unite in their ceremonies."

"Speak against them; write against them: preach (at times) against them."

"Expose their wrongfulness, ways and tendencies. Bring out the arguments against them and show their preposterous puerilities. Lift men above the level of such nonsense and doings. Fill the measure with wheat, so that there will be no room for such chaff."

"I think the press the best medium through which the work of opposition can be carried on, and thus: Let every one opposed to the lodge supply friends and acquaintances with suitable literature, directly or indirectly. Perhaps the indirect method would answer the best purpose. The person supplying the means would, of course, give names and addresses of those to be furnished with reading matter. Then let the publisher send the books or papers, accompanied by a polite note (or postal card) stating that a 'friend' had subscribed for them, and would also deem it a special favor if they were carefully read. This method would often secure a reading, when otherwise such matter would go directly to the waste-basket, or perhaps to be left in the postoffice."

"Ignore them."

"I know of no other way of so successfully opposing those (secret societies) which are objectionable, as by imparting information through the press, and preaching the Gospel. I think the young should be fully warned against them."

"Supplying in the church all the legitimate inducements they (the lodges) offer."

"Preach the truth in the love of it; the Gospel is infinitely better than any of them"—(the lodges.) "I have seen much evil in the churches from these sources."

"Exposing their unprofitable principles."

"Distribution of literature and other methods of getting people to see the truth."

The best means of opposing the injurious ones (lodges) is to pour on the light; pitch into them and expose them, as the Cynosure is doing. A little legislation might be a good thing. For such crimes as the murder of Morgan, and similar cases, if the perpetrators could be caught, hanging would be none too good, but I should think it would be salutary."

"Don't know. A hidden enemy is hard to fight. I am in fighting trim, but as the fellow comes, himself, with darkness, I don't know where to hit. The iniquity so inflicts our churches, and schools, and families, that the case seems almost hopeless." [Let judgment, then, begin at the house of God, and root out the evil there; then, when the sanctuary is cleansed, forbid its existence in the family, and cast out its representatives from the school-boards by the votes of freemen.—ED.]

By "the same variety of methods which a man with 'horse sense' will constantly, courageously, and consistently use to make his convictions felt and respected about any evil thing."

"The best method of opposing it I judge to be by the dissemination of knowledge, especially of its un-Christian character and evil influence, hiding much that will not bear the light."

"The best method of opposing them is not to oppose them at all; but try to show a more excellent way to secure every good end which they profess to gain. The church was designed to meet all the higher social needs of its members—all helpfulness in health, or, in sickness, all sympathy and counsel while fellow-travelers in the narrow way." [If the church members are one-half lodge members, the lodge will be better supported andhave more influence than the church. A house divided against itself cannot be kept in good repair.—ED.]

Oppose them "individually and personally, in a quiet loving way, and also by inculcating correct principles in the Sunday-school and church."

By "agitation of the question in a Christian spirit, and from a Christian standpoint, by the pulpit, platform and press. The expression of sentiment by political action at the opportune time. Personal work among the individual members of our respective churches."

"Evangelize."

LITERATURE.

SABBATARIANISM: A Treatise in Defense of the Christian Sabbath. By Aura Claire Showers. Introduction by Rev. R. W. Hawkins. Chicago: Thos. B. Arnold. 1891.

We are glad to see the growing interest in the Sabbath and Sabbath-observance question. The war is not only between Christians and the working and pleasure-loving worldly masses, but between sincere Christian men and women as to the true Sabbath to be observed—whether Saturday or Sunday, under the Bible instructions, should be kept holy. On this subject the author of this little book of 93 pages says: "It is difficult to believe that any connection, professing loyalty to Christ, would hold so persistently to a Judaic law as do these modern Sabbatarians. With them the observance of the seventh day of the week is the great mark and seal of discipleship, and the refusal to do so is the 'mark of the beast.' We look for Judaism among the Jews. There alone should it be found. But when those who talk glibly about 'atonement,' 'regeneration,' and other essential doctrines, insist upon a strict observance of the Jewish Sabbath, honest souls are frequently entrammeled for want of Scriptural support for their time-honored beliefs." The object of Mr. Showers' work is to introduce the Scriptural reasons for the adoption of Sunday as the Christian Sabbath, and indicates thought and research in his efforts to neutralize the opposition—so senseless and disturbing—with which it is met by the Seventh-day people. The subject is thoroughly discussed, and, with the authorities quoted, should do much to settle this vexed question. It is more important, however, that the Sabbath, on whatever day it occurs, shall be more rigidly devoted to the service of the Lord of the Sabbath than it now is. Mr. Showers' book deserves a wide circulation.

The Review of Reviews, as one of its functions, presents month by month to English-speaking readers the world around the men, the questions and the affairs that are first, in the right sense of the word. Its current number presents a man who is verily much talked about wherever the Jews and the Russian trials are heard of,—Baron Hirsch. The Review dubs him "the Millionaire Moses of the Nineteenth Century." His energy and wealth are surely making ways of deliverance for his oppressed people. The most prominent article in the Review for July, is one prepared by Professor Herbert B. Adams, of the Johns Hopkins University, entitled "University Extension and its Leaders." It is an account of the popular movement for the dissemination of advanced education among the people, in which the leading educators of America are now earnestly engaged, and it is illustrated with fine portraits of Professor Adams himself, Bishop Vincent the head of the Chautauqua movement, Presidents Eliot of Harvard, Dwight of Yale, Adams of Cornell, Gilman of Johns Hopkins, Low of Columbia, Harper of Chicago, Northrop of Minnesota, Mr. Melvil Dewey, Professor E. J. James, and various other gentlemen. It is the most striking article and the most complete ever written upon the University Extension movement. In the same number a competent authority has prepared a thorough review of all the ballot reform legislation of the American States in recent years, including the enactments of the legislatures of 1891, thus bringing the record down to the time of going to press with this number of the magazine, with a map showing all the States which have adopted the Australian system.

The July number of Our Day presents a finely engraved portrait of Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, which plainly shows the inroads of age upon the features of this once fair and talented lady. There is something painful in the view it gives us of the latter days of one whom the world has so greatly admired in the past. Ex-President Cyrus Hamlin appeals to the Christian world for international aid for the persecuted Jews; to which is added a graphic account of the expulsion of these persecuted people of God from Russia. Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts dilates upon "The Manifold Worth of the Sabbath;" Joseph Cook contributes a characteristic paper on "The Wickedness of Licensing the Liquor Traffic" and his usual Monday lecture—"Unsolved Southern Problems—General Sherman's Death." In closing the letter, he says: "I am not a Republican, I am not a Democrat; I am simply an Independent in politics. Let those principles which lie nearest the hearts of loyal citizens be championed by the party now in power, and we will support that party. If that party will not champion these principles, there should be a reorganization of politics, and it should be commenced over the open graves of the greatest patriots and generals of our civil war. Let us complete Sherman's march to the sea.' The usual editorial book notices, "vital points of expert opinion" on current topics, questions to specialists, and a number of editorial notes and comments, conclude a strong number of this vigorous periodical. Published at 28 Beacon street, Boston, once a month, for $2.50 per annum.

The American Garden, as usual, presents a July number brilliant in illustrations of summer vegetation, the frontispiece (a full-page engraving) showing a Lily Pond at Newport at R. I., on the Rogers' estate, accompanied by a description of a garden home made by the "richest woman in America," with two other views of garden scenery in the same connection. The other illustrated papers in the current number are: "The Ornamental Cherries of Japan," with "Japanese Flowering Cherries in New England," and the various species of Japanese flowering cherries; "Sub-Tropical Gardening;" No. 2 of "Easily Cultivated Orchids;" "Eel-worms in Leaves of Cultivated Plants;" "Horticulture in Archipelago de Haro, Washington:" "El Mercado Central, Asuncion, Paraguay;" and "A Matter of Walks and Gutters, Tarrytown." Other papers relate to: "Grape Growing on the Islands of Lake Erie;" "Burning over Strawberry Patches;" "Horticultural Advantages and Possibilities in New England:" "How Things Grow in South Dakota;" "A Discovery of the First Importance to Fruit-growers and Gardeners in General," and several others of considerable interest on other timely topics. Published in New York City at 20 cents per number.

The July issue of the Associate Presbyterian Magazine (S. H. McNeel, publisher, Chesley, Ont.) is wholly filled with a report of the proceedings of the recent Associate Synod of North America, at Columbus City, Iowa. Its convenient form and elaboration admirably fit it for preservation as a work of reference. Terms (monthly) $1.50 per annum.

HOME AND HEALTH.

USE ONIONS AND BEEF.

The most life-giving and digestible food that can be given to one just recovering from an illness is chopped beef. Just take a pound of the finest round of raw beef, cut off all the fat, slice two onions and pepper and salt. Then chop the onions and meat together, turning them over and over until both are reduced almost to a pulp. Then spread on slices of rye bread and eat as sandwiches. People talk about celery being a nervine, but let me tell you that there is nothing which quiets the nerves without bad results like onions. The use of them induces sleep, and much strength is obtained from them. That is the ideal food for convalescing or for any one who is in a weak state of health.—Grocers' and Canners' Gazette.

A VALUABLE GLUE.

Householders will be glad to hear of a very permanent glue, which is made by an admixture with common glue of one part of acid chromate of lime in solution to five parts of gelatine. The glue made in this manner, after exposure, is insoluble in water, and can be used for mending glass objects likely to be exposed to hot water. It can also be made available for water-proofing articles, such as sails of awnings, but for flexible fabrics it is not suitable. A few immersions will be found sufficient to render the article impervious to wet. It is necessary that fractured objects ahould be exposed to the light after being mended, and then warm water will have no effect on them.

DIET FOR DYSPEPTICS.

The Southern Health Journal and Home Magazine says: "It is a great mistake to suppose that dyspepsia is cured by violent exercise, because in many cases rest is more useful than exercise. Violent exercise defeats its object by producing exhaustion, the latter condition producing indigestion. The dyspeptic needs to be nourished. Many persons advocate starvation as a cure for dyspepsia, but it is sure to work injury. It is beneficial to abstain from certain kinds of food at times, and short fasts even are beneficial; but as a habit, the dyspeptic should eat moderately of a varied diet, and above all things, regularly. Sleep is one of the best nerve foods, and plenty of sleep is a necessity for the thin, nervous victim of dyspepsia. A short nap before dinner rests the stomach and prepares it for the work of digestion. Rest is infinitely better than stimulation, for the latter serves oftentimes simply as a spur to a tired horse or a goad to a weary ox."

MILK INSTEAD OF MEDICINE.

Leading physicians are becoming bolder. Many have courage now to prescribe a certain diet instead of drugs. Is not the food an important factor in determining the character of our future lives? The infant whose mother drinks alcoholic stimulants while nursing it will, three chances out of five, be addicted to use of such stimulants when grown. A weary business man comes home from his office at night, nervous and out of temper. A glass of Jersey milk heated to about 90 degrees, sipped a little at a time, and no food taken with it, or at most only a little bread and butter, will do more toward restoring him to happy mind and good physical condition than all the tempting viands that can be placed before him. A lady in Platte county, Mo., was pronounced incurable, A well-known physician in Kansas City advised her to give up all medicine, and, in order to prolong her life, prescribed three ounces a day of a mixture of sweet Jersey cream and sponge cake. Inside of ten days she began to gain strength. In less than a month she regained the use of her voice and was able to sit up. In three or four months she was well and has been well ever since.—Jersey Bulletin.

The presence of dandruff indicates a diseased scalp, and if not cured, blanching of the hair and baldness will result. Hall's Hair Renewer will cure it.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure Bilious and Nervous Ills.

SECRET SOCIETIES Condemned

BY THE PRESS.

Courant, Hartford, Conn.:—The secret society fosters snobbery, and tends to create division among the best friends.

Springfield (Mass.) Republican:—We shall get over secret societies as we are getting over a good many other childish things.

Christian World, Cincinnati:—There is no use in denying that the leading secret societies are, in their practical workings, essentially deistic.

Our Record, Utica, N. Y.:—We are confident that the great objects of equality, fraternity, and morality may be attained without resorting to the vail of secrecy.

Evening Journal, Chicago:—Assemble a party of young men together anywhere, with all restraint removed and perfect secrecy enjoined, and the result will be pernicious.

Republican, Springfield, Mass.:—There is not a moral, political or social purpose which secrecy can aid more than openness. .... It is the meat of petty rather than large minds.

Advent Review and Herald:—And parents should avoid bringing their children in contact with the evil, and not send them to public schools where secret societies are tolerated.

Watchman and Reflector, Boston:—We have before spoken of the low prejudices and antipathies which this secret fellowship engenders toward those who are outside, and of the unworthy and vicious friendships which it creates among those who are within.

Daily Herald, Cleveland, Ohio:—If the "secrets" of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Knights of Pythias, Sons of Malta, and the entire crop of secret societies could have sunlight let in upon them, we fancy the members thereof would be pronounced foolish boys of a larger growth.

London News, Madrid Correspondence, 1868:—The whole of this insurrectionary movement has been under the direction of a revolutionary committee, most of whom, I am told, are members of the Freemason's society (of which there are not less than forty-nine lodges, numbering 21,000 members, in Madrid), who have been for months arming the people in preparation for this outbreak.

Harper's Magazine:—As the larger portion of the Whig party was merged in the Republican, the dominant party of to-day has a certain lineal descent from the feelings aroused by the abduction of Morgan from the jail at Canandaigua. His disappearance and the odium consequent upon it stigmatized Masonry, so that it lay a long time moribund, and, although revived in later years, cannot hope to regain its old importance.

The Interior, Feb., 1877:—That Masonry is a religious system exceeding every other in the impressive character of its religious rites and ceremonials, and that it offers salvation through the practice of its rites and precepts, is an indisputable fact. If salvation can come to the soul through the channels of the morality taught by Masonry, then there is no need for the Christian religion. The objection we make to it is that it teaches salvation without Christ.

Utica, N. Y., Daily Herald:—The abominations of Know Nothingism are now conceded by all. The outrages of the secret society of Tammany, notwithstanding its endorsement by Gov. Seymour, are familiar to the American people and a disgrace to American politics. The excitement produced by the interference of Masons with politics is a matter of history. Everywhere and at all times, secret societies, so far as they dabble with politics, must exert a baleful evil.

Scientific American, New York:—Once joined, however, and held by working upon his fears through the blasphemous oaths of secrecy that he is forced to take, he is inducted, by sheer force of example, through a routine of profanity, intemperance and gambling; while, in many cases, if young and innocent, his course leads to graver faults, committed more through a sense of shame and false pride than depravity, and due to the tacit, if not open, instigation of his unscrupulous elders.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 23, 1891.

INDIVIDUALISM.

The generic sin of the world is selfishness, and the form which it takes in society is the development of an intense individualism, manifested in the self-aggrandizement of the individual—a disposition to become a law unto himself, to repudiate, in a large degree, the distinction between meum and tuum, to ignore the rights and privileges of others, to revive the degenerate principle that "might makes right."

This disposition is largely asserting itself in various ways—in commercial, financial, social, religious and industrial circles, and in the secular press. In the churches it manifests itself by its disregard of ecclesiastical authority, and by its assumption and defence of unauthorized dogmas. This is the outgrowth of a fancied independence, based on the assumed privilege of "thinking for one's self," leading to the increase of an unwholesome liberalism, heresy and schism. It also engenders an impatience of rebuke for misconduct, the resenting of parental and spiritual authority, applications for divorce without a scriptural excuse, a want of respect for the old and unfortunate, and a general ignoring of wholesome laws framed for the preservation of the public peace and prosperity. The tendency of this disposition, if not restrained, is to promote criminal offenses and insecurity in society.

The causes of this individualism originate, of course, in the natural depravity of the race—the unregenerate heart—the selfishness that manifests itself in the creeping infant, and which often requires curbing with a firm will and a strong hand. The growth of this disposition, unless checked by judicious training, is rapid as soon the child is brought into contact with the world, and is then promoted, too frequently, by undue admiration and flattery, by over-indulgence, and improper training. All these serve to inculcate a self-importance and personal ambition sufficient to corrupt the mind of any youth.

When the youth arrives at maturity, he is taught that immense advantages, social and political, can be obtained by uniting with one or more prominent secret societies. Once within these magic circles, his selfishness and ambition receive a new impulse; and, believing that "in union there is strength," and supported in all his enterprises by lodge influences, his individualism grows like a wen. An enlarged ambition and an inordinate thirst for political preferment follow, until he becomes the "Sir Oracle" of his district, and is sent to Congress or the Legislature. Less shrewd, but quite as ambitious, however, his individualism may ultimately lead him to a more undesirable goal. He is often found in labor councils, fomenting strikes and strife, often exhibiting his importance as a "walking delegate," and possibly as a ward politician, familiar with the "fine work" of that profession. Or he may become a thief and robber.

The secret oaths of the societies to which he belongs insure him influence and protection, shield him from the majesty of the law and the sword of justice, so that he is enabled to defy them and set at naught the best interests of society.

Such a being is the outgrowth of a system which every citizen, and especially every Christian, is under obligations to oppose and, if possible, to suppress. The welfare of the country and the interests of Christianity demand it.

HOW MASONRY "SAVES" A MAN.

It is but a few months since the civilized world was startled by dispatches sent out from England, conveying the details of an alleged huge banking fraud which had been perpetrated in London by two "smart" financiers who came there from Chicago. The particulars are probably still fresh in the minds of many of our readers. These men (it was stated) offered depositors 25 per cent interest upon moneys left with their institution; that is, for every $1,000 deposited they returned $250 and gave their paper for the full deposit.

The amount raised in this manner, by ad captandum advertising, was estimated at millions; for the avarice of the English depositors seemed to blind them to the inevitable danger to which they exposed their capital. It was not long before the female part of the banking concern decamped with its funds, and the two principals also disappeared from the public gaze. Then the story was told as it has been here recalled to memory, and the victims of the banking house were left to bewail their misplaced confidence.

There was some show of attempts to arrest the defaulters, and the women were traced to America and placed under police surveillance. Whether the money was recovered in part is not clearly understood; but the excitement over the affair died out, and the press became silent about it.

One of the principals, who claimed one of the females for his wife, was of English birth, but long resident in Chicago, where he attained considerable reputation in one of the professions, and lived ostensibly in peace with his lawful wife and children; but a little more than a score of years ago, he deserted his family, and allied himself, by concubinage or bigamy, to the woman who figured in his banking operations abroad.

His real wife, left with but limited means of support, and several young children, was forced to seek subsistance for herself and them by working as a seamstress, eking out a tedious existence and in the most reputable manner rearing her family to maturity. All these years her husband lived in the city without communicating with her, and even endeavored to obtain a divorce, but in this scheme he was thwarted by the evidence of the spotless character of his wife, who still lingers in her deserted condition, having the sympathy and support of a large circle of friends.

Her husband, the man whom the press and the world know as the defaulting London banker, is a free man, and was recently seen walking at liberty about the streets of Chicago, untrammeled by fears of justice or molestation on account of his defalcations; and it is probable that he will never be brought before any earthly tribunal to answer for his crime.

Does the reader wonder why he enjoys this immunity—this undeserved freedom—this opportunity to commit other crimes with the same impunity?

He is a thirty-second degree Mason, and there is not a court of justice (so-called) that will ever summon him before it to answer for his offences. Masonically, he is "saved."

ANTI-SECRECY IN THE FREE METHODIST CHURCH.

The Christian Cynosure of July 9, after brief comment on an editorial note that appeared in the Free Methodist, touching secret societies, adds: "By the way, we haven't heard that any of our Free Methodist brethren are preaching on this subject nowadays." . . .

By looking over the files of the Free Methodist it will be seen that the church is not by any means silent on this question.

For over thirty years she has taken an unequivocal position against organized secrecy of every kind and grade. Her doors have been closed against members of every secret order. Her ministry has been outspoken in opposition to them. Every time the church doors are opened a public sermon is preached against secrecy in the following question proposed to candidates for membership, with more or less comment, "Will you abstain from connection with all secret societies, keeping yourself free to follow the will of the Lord in all things?" Thus it will be seen that even in our church relations we do not fellowship the "beast."

It is true that opposition to organized secrecy is not the special issue of the church. Holiness to the Lord is our foundation principle; and while our ministers are laboring to promote this work they are necessarily brought in contact with sin of every kind, which must be exposed and denounced. Not only secret societies, but other forms of iniquity, such as the pride and worldliness and formality of the churches, Sabbath desecration, and immorality of every kind must be openly rebuked by the servant of God. To this thorough work the ministry of the Free Methodist church is committed in the fear of God.

Anyone desiring farther information as to the attitude of our ministers toward secret societies or any other evil, may be supplied with "facts and figures" by calling at 108 Franklin St., Chicago.—Free Methodist.

Every true Reformer will heartily thank God for the Free Methodist church and the noble work in which it is engaged.—ED. CYNOSURE.

COMMENDABLE SELF-SACRIFICE.

There was received at this office, last week, from a Christian brother in Michigan, the sum of $60, to be forwarded to Bro. Gladwin, in India, for the purpose of maintaining a native missionary in that country. We are not at liberty to mention his name and address; but he is a farmer who lives upon cleared land, which is low, on which he can raise no grain, which gives him much extra work to drain it by ditching, and on some parts of which he cannot use horses or oxen without putting mud-shoes upon them. His house is built of logs and deficient in many of the appliances pertaining to a more advanced condition of life; and yet this man, with a commendable self-sacrifice, prefers to contribute liberally to the cause of Christ and deprive himself of the luxuries and even the comforts of life. What an example is this for well-fed, well-clad and well-housed Christians everywhere! "Verily, they have their reward," and so will he.

THREE IMPORTANT RELIGIOUS CONVENTIONS.

The July conventions of this year indicate the existence of a wholesome interest in the Christian religion, and a manifest desire to exalt its great Founder and Head.

The World's Student Conference, at Northfield, Mass., originated by D. L. Moody, and inspired with a desire to prepare young men for the work of able evangelists, began on Saturday evening, June 27, by which time 375 students had arrived. Mr. Moody presided at the evening assemblage, and preached from Psalm 139: 23, "Search me, O God," etc. The services were conducted by the great evangelist in his characteristic manner. Sunday's services were interesting; Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, Scotland, preached on Abraham's prayer for Sodom and Gomorrah and its power. The second discourse was by Prof. R. E. Thompson (Covenanter), of the University of Pennsylvania, from Matt. 10: 2–4—Christ sending out the Twelve to preach. In the afternoon President Harper spoke on "Difficulties of College Men," and their duty—to get acquainted with the Bible, and to have close contact with God. His address was quite effective. In the evening, on Round Top, Dr. L. W. Munhall spoke on "God's Revealed Will" concerning men and women. President Harper also lectured on "Jonah," in Stone Hall, to a very large audience, confirming the truth of the narrative. The first college conference, on Monday, was devoted to "How to awaken and maintain interest in Bible study"—three methods—the intellectual, the devotional, and the practical. At 9:30 Mr. L. W. Messer, of Chicago, organized the Bible training classes, ten in number, the leaders of which made up, daily, the public training class led by Mr. Messer. An inductive class for Bible study was organized on Tuesday by Mr. Spear. President Harper lectured on "Nahum" and his prophecy against Assyria, with the fulfillment thereof.

The foregoing summary will very well indicate the character but not the real practical value possessed by the exercises of this conference during the ten days on which it was held. It will be seen that the Bible is the grand standard about which all its members rallied from day to day; and where the Word of God is thus honored and studied, Wisdom holds her court. It is encouraging to learn that there was a larger representation from individual colleges than at any previous conference.

The Christian Endeavor Convention at Minneapolis, Minn., last week, was attended by large numbers of delegates and visitors from throughout the North, and the proceedings of this, the tenth annual gathering of the associated bands, were replete with harmony and a disposition to make the work of all a success. The report of Secretary Baer shows a membership of over 1,000,000, and of this number 14,000 were present at the convention. Among denominations, the Presbyterians have 4,019 Christian Endeavor societies; Congregationalists, 3,545; Baptists, 2,381; Methodists, 2,068, and Christians (disciples), 801. As to individual members the growth is marvelous. At Philadelphia, in 1888, 310,000 members reported; at Chicago, 1889, 485,000; at St. Louis, last year, 660,000, and now the 16,274 local societies have 1,008,080 members. It is stated that 82,500 members of these societies have become church members within the past year. Among the noted persons present were the following: Frank E. Clark, founder of the C. E. movement; Rev. O. H. Tiffany (M. E.), who preached the annual sermon; C. W. Johnson, Secretary of the United States Senate; Rev. Dr. Wilbur Chapman, of Philadelphia, Rev. Dr. Geo. H. Wells, of Montreal, and several other prominent ministers. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, the representatives of 1,008,000 members of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of this continent in convention assembled, reaffirm our allegiance to the sacred observance of the Sabbath day and hereby express our condemnation of and strong opposition to the opening of the Columbian Exposition on that day.

President Clark was re-elected, with a long list of honorary vice-presidents, representing every State, Territory and province, and several from some of them.

The third convention was the great International Congregational Council, which opened in London, Eng., on the 15th, and which marks an era in the history of the Congregational church. There were enrolled about 300 delegates, 100 of whom are from the United States, 100 from England, and 100 from Wales, Scotland, Ireland, and the colonies. Among the representatives from the United States are men who have been foremost in the greatest contests, political, moral, and religious, of the day.

The Congregational church in England, like the Congregational church in the United States, has always taken great interest in public affairs, and several times the church councils in England have sent protests or advisory letters to the ministry.

On the 14th Rev. Dr. Goodwin, of Chicago, preached before the Council. He contended that the Pilgrim Fathers and Congregational leaders were as truly called of God as were the Apostles. The general line of his argument was against the new theology and in favor of orthodox views in regard to the Bible. The church was thronged.

The council was informally opened on the morning of July 13 by a breakfast in honor of the American and British Colonial delegates. At a meeting at Memorial Hall in the afternoon, Rev. Dr. Bean of Australia was elected president and Rev. Drs. Cyrus Northrup of Minnesota, A. H. Quint of Boston and Rogers of London, vice-presidents.

President Northrup, of Minneapolis, speaking for the council, gave a glowing picture of the position of Congregationalism in the United States, sketching its growth since the early Plymouth times. He claimed for Congregationalism the adhesion of the best men and women in the United States, and the representation of the best thought and intelligence, American and British.

Chicago was ably represented in the council by Rev. Drs. E. P. Goodwin, of the First church, F. A. Noble, of the Union Park church, Simeon Gilbert, and others. Dr. Goodwin preached before the council on Wednesday.

Dr. Goodwin will be remembered by Cynosure readers as the eloquent and logical divine who addressed the National Christian Conference, last spring, on "The Word of God our Guide," in which the religion of Masonry was severely but truthfully scored.

His sermon before the London council, the other day, was a masterly defense of orthodox views of the Scriptures, which caused unwonted cheers to ring through the City Temple. This indicated the general tendency of the sentiment of the delegates, which is overwhelmingly in favor of the honest old interpretation of God's words. Mr. Goodwin argued that the Pilgrim fathers and Congregational leaders were called of God as truly as the Apostles, and spoke strongly against the new-fangled notions which the Christian world has recently been called upon to denounce.

On Wednesday evening, last week, the council discussed the place of Congregationalism in the making of Great Britain and America. Dr. Bradford Fullerton reviewed the Congregational polity as the leading polity of New England and as the origin of American civic life. Congregationalism was described by Dr. Fullerton as having been the reservoir of the other American denominations and the original of the town system of government which has marked the political constitution of the United States from the beginning of colonial days. It has been the inspiration of the republican form of government, and has greatly modified the politics of the other churches. Its scheme of government by the people was held up as the first principle of the political aspect of the Christian church, and as the foundation of all modern thought in secular politics. The spiritual power of the Congregational church, said Dr. Fullerton, is immense, and is far beyond its numerical strength. This eloquent exposition of Congregationalism and republicanism was absorbingly interesting to the English preachers, and opened to them a view of the matter which struck them with the force of novelty.

The council discussed a number of other topics designed to advance the work of the denomination on both sides of the Atlantic, reports of which have been furnished to the daily press.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—President Charles A. Blanchard last week attended the International Educational Convention at Toronto, Canada, and on Monday of this week he left for the Pacific Coast. He will be absent about six weeks.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley, the lecturer and financial agent of the N. C. A., has been laboring for a week or two past in Iowa, and has met with gratifying success in his labors. During this week he will sojourn at Morning Sun, Iowa, among such staunch friends of reform as Rev. C. D. Trumbull and his local coadjutors.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, the N. C. A.'s college agent, has been doing missionary work this summer at Marietta, Minn., but is now attending to affairs in Northern Dakota. He expects to resume his labors in the South next fall. He has also found time to write a 16-page tract on a Biblical subject, of which further mention is to be made at a later date.

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard, the New England agent, spoke three times last week in Bro. Dow's meetings in Boston, and is this week attending the Douglas camp-meeting in Massachusetts. The Woman's Voice, of Boston, which has hitherto been strongly inclined to support Masonry, has evidently experienced a change of heart, as it has voluntarily published two of Bro. Stoddard's recent addresses. Mrs. Stoddard is this week laboring among friends of the cause at Putnam, Conn.

—Rev. M. H. Nichols, the agent on the Pacific Coast, is still laboring in Washington State. Quite recently he has discovered a promising lead of tin ore, and it may be that the Lord is about to open up some new resources of material aid for the cause in a country which has been in the past and is at present so lodge-ridden that our reformers have met with most discouraging receptions. Bro. Nichols has been obliged in his labors to walk hundreds of miles, simply because he has not been able to excite interest enough among the people to have them pay his way among them. It is to be hoped that a brighter prospect may soon be opened up in that benighted region. Let Bro. Nichols have the earnest prayers of our readers.

FROM THE CORRESPONDING EDITOR.

BOSTON, Mass., July 13, 1891.

The paper read by Secretary Stoddard to the Baptist ministers here, excels in power any and everything I have seen from his pen, and he has written much and well. The murders of Morgan, Cronin and Hennessey are working a change in the public mind, and secret societies sink steadily.

The churches have not done all their duty and Boston lodges have silently controlled the politics of Massachusetts; but a change is coming, and the Baptists are taking the lead, as they did in the struggle with slavery. The Congregationalists will follow not far behind.

There is a little Jewess here, with the Slavonic name of Bæyertz, who learned English in England. Dr. Gordon's great church is crowded below with I know not how many hundreds to hear her. I have heard her three times, and though the churches are all thinned by July, which drives to the country all who can go, this wonderful little woman's crowds increase continually. She is familiar with the whole Bible, and is perfectly sound and orthodox on the redemption by Christ. Dr. Gordon is a brave disciple of Christ, and deserves the thanks of New England for opening his great Clarendon Street church to the teachings of this wonderful woman.

In her lecture on the restoration of the Jews, she holds, with Moody and the Pre-Millennialists, that the Jews are to take Palestine, and Christ's feet are to stand on Mt. Olives, etc., etc. But she says the Jews will assemble in their unbelief in Christ and set up Judaism, restore the old sacrifices there, and will not see Christ till they say "Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord," and they will come to this though dire and terrible judgments and calamities. She errs when she undertakes to literalize the words of the prophets, and explain beforehand all that will happen in Judea when Christ comes. The last chapter in Zechariah is much relied on by them. Christ's feet are to stand on Mt. Olives, the mountain to split, etc., etc. In this same chapter we read that in that day "the Lord will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem," and "while they stand upon their feet their eyes shall consume away in their holes." The old sacrifices shall be re-established, and all the pots in Jerusalem shall be "holiness to the Lord," and all nations shall come up to Jerusalem and boil the sacrifices in these pots, which, like the bells of the horses, shall be inscribed "holiness to the Lord."

It will not do to literalize such prophecies, any more than it will to literalize the prophecies of David's sons sitting forever on his throne. That prophecy is fulfilled by Christ, who, as old Simeon said he would, when a babe, now "sits on the throne of David, to order and establish it forever." And the prophecies concerning Jerusalem are all fulfilled and to be fulfilled in the heavenly Jerusalem, to which every true child of God "is now come." Heb. 12: 22. And the devil, who Adam Clarke truly says is "God's ape," wishes to hold up that old Jerusalem in Palestine in the foreground, to divert the attention of the best Christians on earth from that "heavenly Jerusalem" and the reforms needed to get men to see and enter into it. More of this hereafter. "The devil never works with bad men while he can get good men to work with."

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, July 16, 1891.—This is the tenth General Convention held under the auspices of the American Temperance Society, of which Justin Edwards and Hon. Wm. E. Dodge were formerly presidents. Theodore L. Cuyler is now president, and made an opening address. The large Methodist church here has been filled below during the two days' session; and last night, when Joseph Cook spoke, the galleries were filled. He was followed by Judith Ellen Foster, of Iowa, in a rambling, self-sufficient speech, of which herself was the chief object. This woman went from Iowa to Buffalo to verify the reports of Grover Cleveland's immoralities, to help the Republican party defeat him. She has ever since been an open stump-speaker for Republican candidates, and yet, with brazen assurance, calls herself "non-partisan." She has the tones, air, and address of an insincere, false woman.

Helen M. Gougar, a totally different sort of a person, dropped into the Convention on her way to speak at Glen's Falls and elsewhere. She was called to the platform and spoke with great acceptance to the crowd. She advocates the Prohibition party, and speaks with great force. I learn that she and Gov. St. John have been holding large and triumphant meetings in Illinois.

This Convention is called and engineered by John N. Stearns, a seven-degree Mason, who supplanted the venerable and talented Dr. John Marsh, by the aid of secret societies. But it draws together a multitude of good men and women, and much forcible truth is uttered. Of course, it is non-committal and so inconsistent. We passed strong resolutions condemning every voter who gives support to candidates who will license the sale of liquor; yet some of its prominent members are avowed and devoted Republicans. But the sentiment of the great majority is strong for third party Prohibition, and that sentiment steadily increases. J. BLANCHARD.

THE HOME.

HOME, SWEET HOME.

Weary and faint lay the old grandsire—
He had bidden adieu to earthly things;
His hands were clasped like a saint at rest,
In the holy calm death's angel brings.

"The way had been long—he had been so tired,
So glad to reach the end," he said;
Then closed his eyes with a parting smile,
While we kept our vigil beside his bed.

The sands of life were ebbing fast—
We felt "the "last of earth" had come,
When, sudden, the voice of a little child
Sang sweetly and clearly, "Home, Sweet Home."

At once the wan lips opened wide,
The dim eyes beamed on us in prayer,
And we caught the pale lips' wistful words:
"There's no place like home—help me reach there."

Then, while he gently fell asleep,
We took up the strain of the little child,
And sang the old man to his heavenly rest,
Safe in the fold of the Shepherd mild.

And the smile still lived on the dear, calm face,
On which the shadow of death had come;
But our grief was stilled, and our hearts were glad,
For we knew he was sheltered at "Home, Sweet, Home."

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

VI.

"What's the matter? Do you know him? Who is he?" asked our companions, but we were too excited to answer.

"Oh, I wonder where he is staying? Can't we follow him, Fanny?" said Grace.

I hesitated, but only because I had been anxious about her all the afternoon; she seemed to be in such pain, that standing and walking were extremely trying.

"That's no work for a girl," broke in Bob; "you go right home, Gay. Who is the fellow, anyway?"

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed Grace, not heeding him a bit. "He's turning that corner, Fanny; we mustn't lose him!" and she started off at as quick a pace as she could. Tom sprang forward and stopped her.

"Do you want to know where he lives?"

"Yes, oh, yes!"

"You shall know. We belong to the Grace Darling Society, don't we?" and with his face all aglow, he paused long enough to give the "President" a graceful military salute, and then caught Bob unceremoniously by the jacket, saying, "Come on, old fellow, you've got to go, too," and the pair rushed pell-mell around the corner after the staggering man.

We girls walked several blocks in silence, until Gussie, who was in no wise afflicted with bashfulness, asked abruptly, "Who was that man?"

I kept still. Grace looked uneasy, but finally said, "I'd tell you, only—well, if he was my father, I'd rather folks wouldn't know about him."

"I'm not folks," said Gussie, crossly. "You know I'm not a telltale. Besides, how am I going to do any helping, if you don't tell me things? I want to help."

"Well, we'll tell you," said kind-hearted Grace. "Maybe you could help."

So she heard the sad story.

I had always thought Gussie a pretty girl, with her refined features, clear complexion, large, laughing blue eyes and bright hair, but as she listened to what we told her, it seemed to me her face grew beautiful in its mingled expression of earnest sympathy and honest indignation.

"I've read of such things in books," she said when we had finished, "but I never half believed they really happened. Oh, I do hope the boys will find out where he stays."

When we reached the corner where Gussie left us, she bade us good-bye very soberly and walked on slowly and thoughtfully. I took Grace right home, insisting for once that she should not stop to go into Mrs. Clarke's. We decided to say nothing to her about her husband unless we had some definite news that might bring hope to her.

After supper I went to Grace's again, anxious to hear what news the boys had brought home. I found Grace on the veranda.

"What's the news, Gay?"

"Why, the boys haven't come home yet. I can't think what keeps them. Mrs. Dixon came in to see if Tom was here. I told her about Mr. Clarke—no, I didn't say his name—and all I knew of the boys, and she said then she knew Tom was all right. She says he's always looking after beggar children and old men and women. He calls it man-hunting."

Just then a hearty laugh sounded not far away, followed by the boys themselves, who dropped breathless on to the steps.

"Where have you been all this time? Did you follow him? Oh, do tell us!"

Bob went into the house and Tom would not say a word till he came back, which he soon did with a pitcher of water in one hand and a bag of cookies in the other. Tom proceeded without invitation to bury his face in the pitcher. After that we got the story of their "hunt," interrupted by spasmodic attacks on the sugared cookies.

"We followed him at a respectful distance for two or three blocks," began Tom, "when he steered for a saloon."

"But he was drunk already," interrupted Grace, horrified."

"Yes, ma'am; and therefore didn't care how much drunker he got. We were bound he should not go in, so Bob tackled him."

"Wouldn't have if you hadn't made me," put in honest Bob.

"That doesn't concern the story in the least, sir. What did you say to him, Bob?"

"Politely invited him to change his mind."

"And he—oh! it was too funny!" broke out Tom, and the boys both laughed until the tears stood in their eyes. Grace looked so distressed that Tom stopped when he noticed it, and said, brokenly, for the laugh was not all out,—

"Oh, I can't help it! That fellow, drunk as he was, took Bob by the ear—poor Bob, he was so astonished he never wiggled—led him to the edge of the sidewalk, tripped him up and laid him out in the road just as nice as could be. Before Bob could get up, or I could get to him, the fellow was in the saloon."

"Where were you all the time?" I asked.

"About half a block off, kind of reserve force, you know,—we thought it best not to both speak to him."

"Did he hurt you, Bob?" asked his sister.

"No, he did it too scientifically."

"What did you do next?"

"We hung around for pretty near an hour," continued Tom. "It was getting monotonous, when a brilliant idea struck Bob. You know Big Jake, the policeman who picked me up when I got my foot hurt last winter? Splendid fellow! Well, his beat is just around the corner from where we were, so I stayed on guard and Bob went for him. He came back with Bob, and we told him we'd like the man to come out sometime before midnight, as we were bound to find out where he lived."

"And what do you think Tom told him?" interrupted Bob. "Jake wanted to know the man's name, and Tom told him he was our brother."

"Well, so he is," declared Tom.

"And then when Jake wanted to know why we had to find out where he lived, Tom said we belonged to a new humane society, and were working under its auspices."

"Well, I had to say something, hadn't I? And that's all true. He'd have thought we were funny to be chasing around after a man whose name we didn't even know."

"Won't you get back to the story?" pleaded Grace.

"Bob, get back to the story," commanded his friend, and Bob obeyed.

"Jake went into the saloon and in about ten minutes out walked our man. We bolted and hid until he'd gone a piece, and then the chase went on. Tom, you tell the rest."

Tom looked at his handful of cookies regretfully, but made no resistance.

"We tagged him a long ways, and then if he didn't go into another saloon. We hadn't any Jake to help us there, but we didn't need him, for the saloon-keeper kicked the chap out in less than three minutes. He staggered along and then fell down and rolled right into the gutter. Some people stopped, and in a few minutes more he'd have been carried to the police-station. What do you suppose Bob did? I never could have managed without him. He dashed in somewhere, came back with a pitcher of water and plumped it right into the fellow's face.—Say, Bob, you did that as if you wished it had been a whole tubful. Were you mad at the poor brute?"

"Yes, I was—making such a beast of himself!"

"Anyhow, it brought him to. We helped him to his feet, and told him if he wasn't double quick about getting home we'd let the 'peelers' get him. We escorted him a ways, and oh, I wish you could have heard Bob lecture him! Folks say Bob has but half a tongue;—I guess they never heard him when he's in earnest. He just—"

"Leave that out," quoth Bob, "or I'll have to finish your story."

"Well, he promised Bob he'd go home if we wouldn't follow him. Said he had a good home and a good wife. So we left him. Wasn't that all right, Mistress President?"

"It was just right," she answered in a low tone. She had risen from her seat, at the climax of the boys' story, and now stood with her slender white hands clasped, her great, glowing eyes gazing far off at the setting sun. Her face looked strange and unreal to me, with that solemn joy upon it, and a great pain shot through my heart as I looked at her, for, somehow, I saw more plainly than ever before how near she was to her Father's home.

"You have done more good than you know," she said at last, turning to the boys, "and if you'll come in, I'll get you the very nicest supper I can find,—if you've any room for one,"—looking at the empty cooky-bag.

"Oh, we've just been getting up an appetite," answered Bob, as he demolished the last one at a crunch.

We went in and had a merry meal together, and then I went home to tell mother the good news. She met me at the head of the stairs.

"I've good news for you, Fanny."

"So have I for you."

"Mr. Clarke's ——"

"Home?"

"Yes. How did you know?"

Then I told her of the first work of our Grace Darling Society.

"God bless that child!" she said, with tears in her eyes. "May this be the beginning of many good things."

We decided to give the other members some idea of what the boys had done in the name of the society, and accordingly had a gathering the next day. I was made spokeswoman, and tried to give the boys all the credit they deserved.

"We ought to keep some notes of what we do, oughtn't we?" asked some one.

The idea seemed to meet with favor, and as we had no book, no treasury, and no money, Gussie offered what was left blank of her Botany notebook for our use.

"Make Gussie scribe," was the next proposition.

"No, no," she said, "I should spoil it all."

"No, you won't either," declared Tom. "We don't want any dry bones and sawdust nobody'll ever read; make it just as spicy as you like, Gus."

So Gussie was made Chief Recorder of the G. D. S., and this is the first entry she made:

"Here Beginneth a History of the Work of the Grace Darling Society, Incorporated July 3, 1876, with Grace Darling as President, Tom Dixon, Esq., as Secretary (to write postals), and the writer as Chief Scribbler (to fill up these pages).

ENTRY I.

On the afternoon of the 9th of June, 1876, five members of the G. D. S. were enjoying a social chat, when the Captain of the crew (President) espied a poor craft reeling to and fro, making no signals of distress, but in visible danger of capsizing. After a brief consultation, our Captain dispatched two trusty sailors, Tom Dixon and Bob Darling, who promptly flew to oars and steered for the sinking vessel. They encountered many difficulties, but before night fell had the satisfaction of bringing the craft into port, when they proceeded to report to the Captain. Signed,

G. MILLS.

Gussie, who was quick of thought and pen, wrote the above during a "recess" in the meeting. It was read aloud and approved, though I thought I saw the very tiniest shadow of a frown on the President's face. Then our meeting ran into general chat.

"Only two more days to Closing Day. Oh, did you have the cruelty to answer all the geometry questions, Grace, and are you going to get the prize?"

Of course it was Tom who asked this.

"I don't know," she said. "Ask Principal Hight—he can tell you."

"I hope Grace will get every single prize there is this year," said Gussie, emphatically. "There isn't one of us has been as faithful right straight through as she has. She—"

But a little hand from behind, placed across her mouth, prevented further speech, and Gussie, throwing back her arms, pulled Grace over and gave her a sudden, hearty kiss. Gussie had never been known to kiss anybody in school before, and the boys groaned.

"I wish they'd tell us beforehand who gets a prize and who doesn't," grumbled one of the unfortunates, who from year to year plodded faithfully along, each time "just missing" getting any. "It's dreadful on Closing Day to sit there looking at the medals and books, and then have somebody else get them all."

"Oh, that's the most fun," sang out Tom. "Don't I remember one year when I knew just as well that I was going to get the drawing prize—why, I was positive—and when that fellow with the gray wig said, 'First prize in drawing,'—I got my feet all ready to jump. But he happened to say next, 'Robert Darling.' I sat still. Oh, I think it's heaps of fun—so exciting, you see—not to know before the last minute."

"How many meetings are we going to have—our society—before Closing Day?" asked the girl whose remark had called forth Tom's speech. She evidently didn't agree with him and wanted to change the subject.

"What is there to do?" asked another voice.

"I've thought of a plan, if you all like it," said Grace. "Let's meet to-morrow; it's our last chance before school breaks up."

"All right. What's your plan?"

"I won't tell till to-morrow, so you'll be there," she said, laughing, and we had to abide by her wishes.

NO.

Somebody asked me to take a drink.
What did I tell him? What do you think?
I told him—No.

Somebody gave me a cigarette.
Do you think I accepted the poisonous treat?
I told him—No.

Somebody asked me, one day, to play
A game of cards; and what did I say?
I told him—No.

Somebody asked me to take a sail
On the Sabbath day; 'twas of no avail,
I told him—No.

"If sinners entice thee, consent thou not,"
My Bible says, and so, on the spot,
I told him—No.

Oh Somebody! If you are really my friend,
Don't ask me my health and my strength to spend,
For I will say—No.

WHAT CAN IDOLS DO?

A missionary in India tells the following story of a little boy who, in a mission school, had been taught about the one God, and about Jesus:

"One day this boy, who lived in a house with a heathen, said to him, 'There is only one God, the one who made the earth, and sky and everything. He gives us the rain and the sunshine; he knows everything we do; he can save or kill us. But these images you pray to are only lumps of baked clay. They can't see nor hear; how can they do any good, or save you from any trouble?'

"The heathen paid no attention to him, but soon afterwards he went on a journey. While he was gone, the little boy took a stick and broke all the images except the largest, into the hands of which he put the stick.

"When the man returned, he was very angry at what had happened, and exclaimed:

" 'Who has done this?'

" 'Perhaps the big idol has been beating his little brothers,' said the boy.

" 'Nonsense!' said the man; 'don't talk such stuff as that! Do you think I am a fool? You know as well as I do that the thing cannot raise its hand! It was you, you little rascal! it was you! To pay you for your wickedness I will beat you to death with the same stick.' And seizing the stick he went towards him.

" 'But, said the boy quickly, 'how can you worship a god like that? Do you suppose if he can't take care of himself and the other idols, he can take care of you and the world—let alone making you.'

"The heathen stopped to think, for this was a new idea. The more he thought, the more senseless the idol seemed. After a while he broke his idol, and went and kneeled down to pray to the true God, and called him 'My Father.' "—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

GOV. ST. JOHN ON PROHIBITION.

A special telegram from New York City to the Inter-Ocean, dated July 12, reports the following: "For the first time since the new prohibition tabernacle was opened the building at Port Richmond, Staten Island, was crowded to its full capacity. Ex-Governor St. John, of Kansas, made one of his characteristic speeches. Mr. St. John said that those who participated in and aided the rum traffic were as bad as the rebels who fired on Fort Sumter. He said that the whole license system was a sin against God and should be made a crime. Mr. St. John said that he had heard that one of the prominent features of the World's Fair at Chicago was to be a beer paradise. He hoped that this was not true, but if it proved to be the case he called upon all persons in favor of prohibition to boycott the World's Fair and leave the big beer garden for the beer guzzlers."

A STERN RECOMMENDATION.

General Scott was in command at Rock Island Ill., when the cholera broke out there, and after various injunctions in this order as to sobriety and cleanliness, he adds this curious paragraph, which was recently printed in the Magazine of American History:

"In addition to the foregoing, the senior surgeon present recommends the use of flannel shirts, flannel drawers, and woolen stockings; but the commanding general, who has seen much of disease, knows that it is intemperance which, in the present state of the atmosphere, generates and spreads the calamity, and that when once spread, good and temperate men are likely to take the infection.

"He, therefore, peremptorily commands that every soldier or ranger who shall be found drunk or sensibly intoxicated after the publication of this order, be compelled, as soon as his strength will permit, to dig a grave at a suitable burying-place, large enough for his own reception, as such grave cannot fail soon to be wanted for the drunken man himself or some drunken companion. This order is given as well to serve for the punishment of drunkenness as to spare good and temperate men the labor of digging graves for their worthless companions."

THE LAWS GOVERNING PROHIBITION.

The friends of Prohibition have obtained some signal victories from the Supreme Court of the United States, in a series of decisions of the utmost importance, by which the application of prohibitory laws to the manufacture and sale of liquors has been thoroughly established as a principle in no wise in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. It will be worth while at this time to recall these decisions:

1. License by the United States to carry on the wholesale liquor business in any State does not give power to carry on such business in violation of the laws of the State.

2. A State may pass laws prohibiting the retail of intoxicants without a license, and providing restrictions in the granting of such license.

3. Restrictive and prohibitory State legislation is not contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment.

4. Companies for the manufacture and sale of liquors have no greater rights than individuals possess, and are not exempt from restrictive or prohibitory State legislation.

5. State prohibitory laws, as police regulations, are not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States.

6. Brewers or distillers may not claim compensation for property because it has diminished in value by reason of State prohibitory legislation.

7. States have the full right of prohibiting the manufacture of intoxicants, whether for home use or for exportation to other States.

8. States may not prohibit common carriers from transporting liquors into or through their territory.

9. States may not prohibit the sale in original packages of liquors imported from other States.

10. In the decision of last week, States, under the Wilson Act, may deal with liquors imported from other States precisely as though they were not so imported but produced at home.

These decisions constitute a wall of strength to the cause of Prohibition. They are principles enunciated by the highest court of the land, and will stand as long as the Constitution, of which they are the interpretation, shall stand.—The Independent.

LIQUOR-DRINKING.

Few people would call the Hon. Chauncey M. Depew a fanatic on the question of liquor-drinking. The Educator records his experience as he told it to a party of railroad men.

"Twenty-five years ago I knew every man, woman and child in Peekskill. And it has been a study to me to mark boys who started in every grade of life with myself to see what has become of them. I was up last fall and began to count them over, and it was an instructive exhibit. Some of them became clerks, merchants, manufacturers, lawyers and doctors.

"It is remarkable that every one of those that drank is dead; not one living of my age. Barring a few who were taken off by sickness, every one who proved a wreck and wrecked his family did it from rum and no other cause.

"Of those who were Christians, who were steady, industrious, and hard-working men, who were frugal and thrifty, every single one of them, without an exception, owns the house in which he lives and has something laid by, the interest on which, with his house, would carry him through many a rainy day.

"When a man becomes debased with gambling, rum, or drink, he doesn't care; all his finer feelings are crowded out. The poor women at home are the ones who suffer—suffer in their tenderest emotions; suffer in their affections for those whom they love better than life."

A NUMBER ONE FOOL.

A gentleman walking with a friend one day through a commissariat store-house in Hong Kong, China, came to a part of the establishment where four Chinamen were engaged in emptying a large tub of rum, and carrying it in gallon measures to another portion of the building.

Addressing himself to one who seemed to be the leader of the party, he asked:

"Do you like rum, John?"

"No, sir," said the Chinaman, promptly.

"Why not?"

"Rum not proper, sir; make Chinaman number one fool!"

There is a sad truth in the Chinaman's answer. Many a man who might have lived happily, acted wisely, and died peacefully, has made himself a "number one fool" by taking intoxicants; has died as the fool dieth, and been buried in the drunkard's dark, dishonored grave. Let us learn from the Chinaman that rum is "not proper," and so avoid being made a "number one fool." "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise"—Indian Witness.

If the prohibition party is such a small concern, and is made up out of "cranks," "disappointed office seekers," "reformed drunkards," and what not as some folks would like to make believe, why make such a "fuss?" "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad."—Exchange.

The young men are gradually becoming convinced that it is a political impossibility for either old party to take up prohibition and succeed, and that the only hope is in a third party committed uncompromisingly to the utter destruction of the whole liquor business.—Chicago Lever.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Jesus and the sinful woman.—vs. 5–8. Christ had none of the spirit of the religious fanatic, but his first and foremost thought was how he could best fulfill the mission on which he was sent. The hour would come when, in order to finish that work, he would be obliged to expose himself to the full rage of his enemies, but to do so now would only be to thwart it. The greatest prudence is perfectly compatible with the most noble fearlessness. Matthew tells us (4: 12–16) that his departure into Galilee was a direct fulfillment of prophecy. On those benighted regions, with their mongrel, half-heathen population, so despised by the more orthodox and polished Jew of the metropolis, a great light was to shine;—even the visible presence of the Lord himself, going in and out among them, making his home in one of their chief cities, and choosing his disciples from among its simple, peasant population. "And he must needs go through Samaria." Whatever the sorrow or trial that may betide us in this life, we "must needs" go through it. There is no way of going around it, and if there was, what opportunities for helping others we should probably miss.

2. The living water.—vs. 9–15. Nothing could be more beautiful than the fine tact with which Jesus begins the conversation with this fallen woman, by asking her for a drink of water. It aroused her curiosity at once. How did it happen that this strange Jew had so trampled on all the prejudices of his nation as to ask this favor from her? "If thou knewest," etc. We cannot blame this poor woman that she did not know what a marvelous privilege was hers, when we ourselves are so slow to realize the blessings that may be ours for the asking. "Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with," etc. She was the type of multitudes, in the fact that her horizon was too narrow to take in anything but the most material interests. It evidently struck her as a very desirable thing never to thirst again, or have to come in the heat of noontide, with her heavy water-pots on her head, to draw water. And too many of us have low and earthly ideas of what the eternal life consists in. We say that in heaven there will be no pain or care, no sorrow or sickness. This is true; but it does not make the bliss of the heavenly life, as some ignorantly think; for many of God's saints have experienced the deepest joy in the midst of most abounding trials. Nor is it eternal life simply to live forever; and those who think it is make identically the same mistake as this poor, ignorant Samaritan woman, who thought of the living water only as something that might relieve her of her daily drudgery.

3. The true worship.—vs. 16–26. Before she could be made to understand the great offer of salvation, or accept it, she must be led to recognize the Messiah in the one who was speaking to her. And this was done by the simple command to "call her husband and come hither," thus showing her, as by a lightning flash, her past life. Essentially this must be the method pursued with every sinner. Conviction must precede conversion. No thought seems to have crossed her mind of denying the charge. She felt at once that the mysterious stranger before her was a prophet whose divine insight it was of no use to try to deceive; and so she attempts to turn the conversation from herself to a disputed point in their religious worship. How often some theological question of minor, and often of no real, importance has been used to turn the attention of the church from some great sin that she was cherishing in her bosom. It was so in slavery times; and we see the same spirit working now. The time and strength which are so sorely needed in the fight with the lodge, the saloon and other evils is spent in discussing questions of orthodoxy or heresy, thus splitting into factions and often making bitter partisans of those who should be one. It is easy to find men with not an ounce of practical Christianity about them who will argue all day over some unessential point of religious doctrine. They seem to feel that their ability to talk glibly on these subjects atones in some way for their neglect of heart religion. Christ's example may well be studied by all Christian workers who have to deal with this class of persons. He entered into no controversy with her, but showed her at once the folly of contending over such an issue, when the time was coming that the Jew would not worship at Jerusalem, nor the Samaritan on Mt. Gerizim. The essential thing was not where but who she worshiped;—whether the true, spiritual Jehovah, or that corrupt idea of him inherited from heathen forefathers. God is a Spirit with whom all times and places are alike. He only requires that we worship him in spirit—with our hearts and not with our lips only; and in truth, with perfect sincerity—asking for what we really want, and speaking no praises that we do not feel. The Father seeketh such to worship him. What honor is put on the childlike soul to have its worship sought of God himself.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Charles Pratt, who established the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, and James B. Colgate, who has just given a million dollars to Colgate University, have been devoted followers of the Baptist faith. Both gave their money while they were living.—Philadelphia Ledger.

—The chief of police of Chattanooga, Tennesseee, has given his official order for the arrest of all merchants and saloon-keepers doing business on Sunday.

—By the order of Mr. Rockefeller, the pumps of the Standard Oil Company are not to be run on Sunday hereafter.

—The Rev. Samuel Plantz, Ph. D., who is pursuing a special course of study in church history at Berlin University, writes that there are 908 students in the university from America, eighteen of whom are Methodist ministers.

—It is stated that in Australia the National Scripture Education League is making a vigorous campaign for the restoration of Bible teaching in the State schools.

—The Chautauqua idea is being applied to missions, and a new movement called "The Cross Bearers' Missionary Reading Circle" has been started. A three years' course of reading on missionary topics has been arranged.

—In the past twelve years the number of students in Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational) has increased from forty to one hundred and sixty-seven; and the Faculty from six to fourteen.

—London, the greatest city in the world, has no Sunday newspaper. Toronto, the finest city in Canada, has none. There is not a city in the world that would not be better without it.

—H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass., has just received an order for 100,000 copies of that wonderful tract, "Will the Old Book Stand." This brings its record into the third million. This is one of the best tracts in the world against infidelity. Price 5 cents each.

—The Rev. Dr. Hermann Adler, the newly-elected Chief Rabbi of the United Congregations of the British empire, in succession to the late Dr. Nathan Adler, his father, belongs to the priestly family of Cohen (said to be descendants of Aaron), though his ancestors bore the present surname for many generations.

—The Rev. C. Meyer, a Lutheran minister of Herndon, Kan., has distributed nearly $10,000 worth of seed wheat among the impoverished Lutherans on the Kansas frontier. He acted as the agent of the Ohio Synod, which contributed over $5,000 to the fund. He also raised some money in the eastern part of the State, and charitable farmers of Nebraska contributed considerable seed.

—According to Dr. W. H. Roberts, American statistical secretary of the Presbyterian Alliance, the Presbyterian and Reformed denominations throughout the world have 20,265,500 adherents.

—The movement is assuming shape to hold an annual congress of the Nonconformist churches in Great Britain, such as is already held by the Established church. In view of the strength and influence of the evangelical churches, such a step as this will prove very important in its relation to national institutions.

—The membership of the M. E. church is 2,283,967. Their contributions for missions, home and foreign, averaged fifty cents per member. The membership in foreign mission fields is a little less than 75,000, including probations. The necessary force in foreign lands consists of 626 missionaries and assistants, 417 native ordained preachers, 661 unordained native preachers, 72 teachers, 1,237 native teachers, 1,237 local preachers, helpers and other workers. They reported 11,189 conversions during the year. They sustain 18 theological schools, and 45 high schools, and 1,027 day schools. In all these schools the pupils aggregate 33,844. The value of churches, chapels, parsonages, orphanages, schools, hospitals, is estimated at nearly $3,000,000. These missions collected for missions and benevolence $24,610; for self-support, $126,131; for building and repairing, $53,540, and for all other local purposes. $100,668, a total of $304,949, or an average of $4 per member.—The Missionary Intelligencer.

—It is expected by president-elect Harper that the University of Chicago will open in October, 1892, with an endowment of $10,000,000.

—The proposed hospital or infirmary for Princeton University students, for which money has been subscribed, is to bear the name of Dr. McCosh's wife.

—Mr. Moody is urged by influential clergymen and educators to make another visit to Scotland, for the purpose of holding evangelistic services.

—The effect of the Briggs troubles, as respects attendance of students at Union Theological Seminary, is much discussed. The prophecies are favorable and unfavorable, according to predilections of the prophets. The Presbyterian reports specifically as to the intentions of some in a way that shows Union will lose and Princeton will gain.

—At a public meeting in New Orleans, Dr. B. W, Palmer, a distinguished Southern Presbyterian minister, speaking of the Louisiana lottery, said: "If the lottery cannot be stamped out by the usual means, it will have to be crushed by revolution."

—Prof. H. T. McClelland resigns a chair in the Western Theological Seminary to accept the pastorate of the Bellefield Presbyterian church, Pittsburgh. Rev. M. W. Jacobus, son of the commentator, gives up the pastorate to accept a chair in the theological seminary (Congregational) at Hartford, Conn.

—A pleasant duty of the late Canadian Presbyterian General Assembly was the distribution of a bequest of $117,000, given by a Mrs. Nichol.

—There are 553 Protestant ministers, evangelists, and teachers sowing Gospel seed in Italy.

—At the late Lutheran General Synod held at Lebanon, O., the church extension board made a cheering report, showing no deficiency in the treasury, considerable debt wiped out, and the receipts for the year amounting to $79,855.18. The permanent fund for loans to new churches is $101,119.66. Hon. Frank Howbut of Colorado Springs, Colo., sent a communication to the Synod, donating ten acres of land in the "Garden of the Gods" for the purpose of establishing a "National Lutheran Home for the Aged."

—There are now over 15,000 local societies of Christian Endeavor in 32 Protestant denominations. The Presbyterians lead, the Congregationalists next, then the Baptists, and the Methodists are fourth. Each of these four denominations have over 2,000, the Presbyterians having 3,500

—Slowakian Lutherans are found in Pittsburg, Cleveland, Chicago and in the coal mining districts of Pennsylvania. Organized congregations are found at Freeland, Nanticoke and Mt. Carmel, served by Past. Novomesky, a member of the Pennsylvania Synod. These people all are poor, but are devoted lovers of the Gospel and are willing to contribute as liberally as possible to the cause.

—The ministers and other Christian workers of America are to have a rare opportunity during the remainder of July and August to hear two of the most eminent preachers of Great Britain. The Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, Scotland, who has came into prominence so rapidly in that country and exerted such a wide-spread influence among the ministers, is to be at the Bible Institute in Chicago until the 5th of August. Immediately following him the Rev. F. E. Meyer, of London, England, will speak at the Institute through the remainder of the month of August. Mr. Moody sends out a cordial invitation to all Christian workers to spend their vacation listening to these able men. There is no charge for attendance upon the lectures. Further information can be had from R. A. Torrey, 80 West Pearson street, Chicago, Ill.

—The Rev. Abbe Baillarge of Joliette, has just collected statistics showing the Roman Catholic strength in Canada to be as follows: One cardinal, 5 arch bishops, 22 bishops, 2,352 priests; 43 male religious orders, with 250 members, and 66 female orders with a membership of 964; 1,914 churches and chapels, and 307 missions; 17 seminaries, 3 universities, 53 colleges, 333 convents, 166 academies, and 3,203 schools; 69 hospitals, and 48 asylums. These represent a Roman Catholic population of 2,048,000 in 1,157 parishes. In Newfoundland the abbe states that there are two bishops, 58 priests, 77 nuns, 137 churches and chapels, 7 seminaries, 1 university, 15 convents, and 130 schools, with 79,000 Roman Catholics in 41 parishes.

—The British and Foreign Bible Society has an army of 150 colporteurs working in towns and villages of India, together with 330 Bible women, all scattering the Word of God.

—Tracts of land have been purchased in Marlboro and near New Haven, Conn., by the trustees of the Baron Hirsch fund for the colonization of Russian Jews. Another bit of news is that St. Louis Jews have formed a society for the education of their exiled Russian brethren.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Mr. John E. Potter and wife, of Philadelphia, were robbed of a valise containing $1,200 worth of diamonds and jewelry last Wednesday at the Palmer House. There is no clue to the thief.

Chief of Construction Burnham, in a report, shows that work is in active progress all along the line at the World's Fair grounds. Seven hundred men are employed.

The Illinois Central commissioners who went to South America last March to inquire into the extension of Chicago's trade in that direction, have returned, and Mr. Powers gives a favorable report of the work accomplished.

Alvin Wheeler, a colored man, and an employe of the postoffice, shot twice at his wife without effect, and then killed himself.

At a meeting of the Loyal Women of American Liberty Mayor Washburne's efforts to drive the gamblers from the city received the indorsement of the ladies.

In the conspiracy case brought by the architectural iron workers against the striking operatives, on Friday a detective testified to having joined the strikers, attending all their secret meetings, and learning all their plans. It was a great surprise to the alleged conspirators, as his testimony is damaging.

COUNTRY.

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

First, We do not offer any man a premium to renew his own subscription. If a man has taken this paper a year and does not care enough about it to take it longer without being hired to, we do not offer him a premium.

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

☞Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, postpaid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

We offer as a PREMIUM for subscribers to the Christian Cynosure the choice of nearly

Stop that cough! Else the bronchial tubes will be enlarged and the delicate tissues of the lungs exposed to injury. No other medicine is so speedily operative in throat and lung troubles as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A few doses have been known to break up an obstinate and distressing cough. Sufferers from asthma, bronchitis, croup, consumption, sore throat, and whooping cough find a sure relief in the use of this preparation. It soothes the inflamed membrane, promotes expectoration, and induces repose. Don't be without it in the house. Sallie E. Stone, Hurt's store, Va., writes: "I have found, in my family, that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral was always a certain cure for colds and coughs."

When you feed, do you know the weight of a forkful of hay?

Planting on poverty-stricken soil is like fishing in barren waters.

No cow that is kept all the while indoors can be perfectly happy.

Clover, corn and skimmed milk will grow pigs and make nice pork.

Try on your own farm to make home production overbalance home consumption.

The surest way to improvement of stock is by the introduction of improved blood.

To know what to feed saves the pocket-book; how to feed saves the man; when to feed saves the pig; the combination makes a feeder.

In transplanting use plenty of water about the roots of plants. This will often prevent wilting even under a hot sun.

When a farmer once raises small fruits for himself and family he will never be without them again if he can prevent it. There are both enjoyment and health in small fruits.

New novelties in plants are often old varieties re-named, and the "novelty" dies out after the first season unless it is something superior to anything of its kind already in use.

Give the currants plenty of room, good attention and keep the worms off with white hellebore. The currant is about all the fruit some farms have, and it deserves good attention.

A few peach trees, planted every spring, for family use, will provide a constant supply each season, the younger trees coming into bearing as the old ones die out. A dozen trees require but little labor.—Selected.

SCRAPS OF WEATHER WISDOM.

When you see gossamer flying, be ye sure the air is drying.

When the glow worm lights her lamp, the air is always damp.

If the moon rises haloed round, soon we'll tread on deluged ground.

When the peacock loudly bawls, soon we'll have both rain and squalls.

If the moon shows like a silver shield, be not afraid to reap your field.

Evening red and next morning gray are certain signs of a beautiful day.

When rooks fly sporting high in air, it shows that windy storms are near.

When ducks are driving through the burn (brook), that night the weather takes a turn.

If at the sun rising or setting the clouds appear of a lurid red color, extending nearly to the zenith, it is a sure of sign of storms and gales of wind.

A rainbow at night is the shepherd's delight. This is also a good sign, provided the wind be westerly, as it shows that the rain clouds are passing away.

A rainbow in the morning gives the shepherd warning, that is, if the wind be easterly, because it shows that the rain cloud is approaching the observer. —London Notes and Queries.

They poulticed her feet and poulticed her head,
And blistered her back till 'twas smarting and red,
Tried tonics, elixirs, pain-killers and salves,
(Though grandma declared it was nothing but "narves.")
The poor woman thought she must certainly die,
Till "Favorite Prescription" she happened to try.—
No wonder its praises so loudly they speak;
She grew better at once, and was well in a week.

The torturing pains and distressing nervousness which accompany, at times, certain forms of female weakness, yield like magic to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, and adapted to the delicate organization of woman. It allays and subdues the nervous symptoms and relieves the pain accompanying functional and organic troubles. Guarantee printed on bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

THE COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA

What Is It? It is a Library of Universal Knowledge and an Unabridged Dictionary of Language in one work, in one alphabetical arrangement. This novel combination is an infinitely convenient one, which, together with its unique and handy form, leads one to consult it ten times where he will once refer to any other cyclopedia or dictionary by the side of it.

"In convenience of form and freshness of information, it stands pre-eminent. The combination of cyclopedia and dictionary in the same work is a most valuable feature. I expect to get more real service from it than from anything else in my library."—F. S. FITCH, State Supt. of Public Instruction, Lansing, Mich.

The Basis of the Cyclopedia proper is the last complete edition of Chambers's Cyclopedia, which is so thoroughly revised, brought down to date, and Americanized, that it would be unfair to the original to say it is "reprinted"—it is virtually a new work, the Chambers being used simply as good material to work with; many thousands of new (especially American) topics have been added. The pronunciation of all titles is an altogether unique feature that gives universal satisfaction.

"I find it exceedingly useful for handy reference. The pronunciation I regard as a valuable feature. The members of my family use this ten times where they once use the Britannica, Appleton's, or Chambers's—all of which they have access to."—CHAS. H. COREY, D.D., Pres. of Richmond Institute, Richmond, Va.

"I like the Columbian the better the more I examine it. I have written to * * * my warm commendation of it."—PROF. JAMES STRONG, S.T.D., Editor McClintock & Strong's Cyclopedia of Biblical and Theological Literature.

The Dictionary feature is based on the great Dictionary of Stormonth, which is universally recognized among scholars as the peer of Webster, Worcester, the Century, and others, as an authority; it, also, is thoroughly revised, Americanized, and greatly enlarged; every word having recognized place in the living or classic literature of the English language is included, thus entitling it to be called an "unabridged" dictionary.

"After a careful examination, I can cheerfully recommend it to every educator."—W. E. ROBINSON, Supt. of Schools, Detroit, Mich.

"I feel free to pronounce the Columbian Cyclopedia the teacher's vade-mecum. Teachers will not often be obliged to go beyond its pages for help."—GEO. J. LUCKEY, Supt. of Schools, Pittsburgh, Pa.

"I have Appleton's, Chambers's, and The People's cyclopedias in my library, but use the handy COLUMBIAN nearly altogether when the information sought comes within the volumes now complete. The great amount of new matter added to the standard text of all cyclopedias, and the neat style of typography and binding, make the work the most useful and every way desirable reference work for a reasonable amount of money that I have yet examined."—WM. H. ALEXANDER, Surveyor of Customs, Omaha, Neb.

Who Edits It? Its Editor-in-Chief, RICHARD GLEASON GREENE, formerly editor-in-chief of "The Library of Universal Knowledge," also of "The International Cyclopedia," has probably had more experience in the direct line of his work than any other living American; he is assisted by an able corps of trained writers in the various departments of learning.

"It meets more fully my ideal of what a work of this kind should be than any other I know."—J. F. CROOKER, Supt. of Education, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I have several Cyclopedias, among them the Columbian; this I much prefer for every-day reference."—WM. H. TAYLOR, State Assayer and Chemist, Richmond, Va.

"We did not think—to be frank—when we began to examine the Cyclopedia, that it promised to deserve very strong commendation. But the more we studied its characteristic features, the more highly we learned to regard it, and we now feel justified in commending it as a very comprehensive, well-arranged, and useful work. By the great body of intelligent men and women who do desire a cyclopedia which is reasonably comprehensive, accurate, intelligible, orderly in plan, and low in price, this will be found abundantly worth attention."—The Congregationalist, Boston.

How Large Is It? In 32 volumes of over 800 pages each, it will contain about 26,000 pages and about 7,000 illustrations. "The feature that strikes me most favorably is the new departure in respect to size. Each volume is 8 inches long, 5½ wide, and 1¾ thick, and answers the practical definition of the word 'handy' better than any other book of reference that I have ever come across. Standing within hand-reach, and easily handled, one is apt to refer to it ten times hand-running when he would once to a big, bulky, and burly volume not so close to him (or, better, her), and heavier to hold."—FRANCES E. WILLARD.

"The size of the volumes is just right for convenient handling. The type is good, the illustrations abundant, the arrangement of matter is such that all topics are easily found. It is difficult to imagine any improvement in these respects."—J. B. MOFFAT, President Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pa.

What Is the Price? That is the most remarkable feature about it. Though approximately the same size as Appleton's Cyclopedia, which is published at $80.00, and about 50 per cent. larger than Johnson's, which sells at $48.00, and comparing favorably with them in every important respect, the retail price for the set of 32 volumes, in extra cloth binding, is only $25.00; half-Morocco binding, $32.00; by express; postage, 16 cents a volume, if by mail. Vol. 25 ready July 15, others at intervals of about a month.

$5.00 cash will secure immediately, by express, volumes 1 to 16, in cloth binding, the remaining volumes being delivered as installments of $1.25 for each are paid; 25 cents a volume extra for half-Morocco.

$21.35 be accepted in full payment for received before Aug. 1, 1891, will the complete set, in extra cloth binding; for half-Morocco binding send $6.00 additional. These special reduced prices will be slightly advanced Aug. 1st. Sample volume, 60 cents (postage, 16 cents), returnable and money refunded; specimen pages free.

A College Education is a good thing for young man or young woman—what a pity that it is clear out of reach of fully 95 per cent. of the brainiest, bravest, worthiest of the young folks of the country! But do you realize that For $25, or 7 cents a day for one year, the fair equivalent of a college education is within the reach of any go-ahead boy or girl? It may seem incredible, but it is true! If one had only his choice of the two, what he could learn at college, or what he could learn from the Best Cyclopedia published, thousands of wise people would choose the Cyclopedia—it covers the entire circle of human knowledge—it is a teacher who never grows weary of being questioned—is always at hand, your lifetime through, and not for a few months only.

The Columbian REVOLVING BOOK-CASE, of which a picture is here given, is made to hold a full set of the Cyclopedia. Size of the case 14 inches square by 18 inches high; price $2.50 (and cheap at that) when sold separately, but with the Cyclopedia it is furnished for only $2.00.

The Book-Case is furnished either in oak, antique finish, or in hard maple, cherry finish, as you prefer. It is knock-down as well as revolving, held together by four rods and four screws; may be taken to pieces in five minutes, and put together in 10 minutes. It is a beautiful piece of furniture, though so fabulously cheap—delights everybody.

It is made to stand on a desk or table, and is so excellently adapted to its use that it may fairly be compared to adding a handle to a good knife-blade—you could use the blade by tying it to a stick, and you could use the Cyclopedia without the Revolving Case, but you would very unwillingly do without either after having tried them. We have, also, larger Revolving Book-Cases, to stand on the floor, 4 shelves high (adjustable shelves), giving a total of 136 inches of shelf room, holding 100 to 150 volumes; price-list on request.

Which Cyclopedia? GOOD LUCK for those who wish to buy, there are several good cyclopedias in the market. Each cannot, of course, be better than any other, but each is undoubtedly better than it would be but for the competition of its rivals; each has some special merit.

Appleton's is the pioneer of (living) American cyclopedias, and has great merit—but pioneers will grow old, and most people want a new cyclopedia when they buy; then, it costs a good deal of money: $80.00 in cheapest style, besides many annuals which are necessary to its completeness.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA is the newest in the field, covers virtually all the ground covered by Appleton's, and a great deal besides; is about the same size in amount of matter, and costs less than one-third as much money.

Johnson's is later than Appleton's, and by many good judges has been considered the "best" for popular use; like all cyclopedias not published very recently, it needs bringing down to date. Some object, too, to the heavy, clumsy form of volume. It costs $48.00 in cheapest style.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA is about 50 per cent. larger than Johnson's (in amount of matter), and costs about half the money—it covers practically all the ground covered by Johnson's, and besides includes an unabridged dictionary of language.

The International CYCLOPEDIA is esteemed by many better for general use than either Appleton or Johnson. The publisher and editor-in-chief of the Columbian Cyclopedia naturally think well of the International, as it was formerly edited and published by them.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA covers about the same ground as the International, rejecting, however, a vast amount of Scotch, English, and other obsolete matter, and adding a very great amount of valuable original matter, particularly upon American topics, and also an unabridged dictionary of the English language.

The Britannica is the "old giant" among cyclopedias. The publisher of the COLUMBIAN recommends every one to buy it—who can afford two cyclopedias—if you can't afford two, it will not serve you; it is a vast library of valuable knowledge, very useful to men of profound learning and unlimited leisure, but for popular use, for convenient, quick consultation, on live topics, it is about as well adapted as a broad-axe would be to sharpen a lead-pencil—you want something handier. The "old giant," we said—consult the topic "Africa," for instance, and you find in a sort of "P.S." that "Livingstone is dead!" Look for "General Grant," and he not only "isn't dead," but "isn't born yet," so far as the cyclopedia is concerned! These are characteristic facts.

The COLUMBIAN CYCLOPEDIA treats every important topic found in the Britannica, and many thousands of others besides; with the two cyclopedias side by side, you will refer to the COLUMBIAN in nearly every case, and find all you want.

"The days of big, cumbersome, expensive cyclopedias are past, and we congratulate the reading public that they are able to get such an excellent work as this at such a low price."—JAMES ALLISON, Editor of the Presbyterian Banner, Pittsburgh.

BUSINESS.

Notify us when you wish your paper stopped. If you return papers not wanted, send your name and address. Then we can cross your name off the list. Of course you will also be sure that all arrearages are paid.

When renewing give the same name that come on the address label of the paper. This is important, as other members of the family sometimes write, giving different initials, and so two papers are sent where only one is wanted.

Write to us at once when you change your postoffice address, and not wait two or three months and then complain of not getting your paper.

When sending us new subscriptions, state in every case whether you are working for premiums or not. Because many of our friends (to whom we wish here to return our hearty thanks for their kindly interest in our work) prefer to receive no pay for their effort in extending the circulation of the paper.

Any two of the following named books, and the Cynosure one year, sent to new subscribers only, upon the receipt of $2.00. These books will be sent to any address upon receipt of price.

The type of these books is always good, and nearly always large (Long Primer, or larger); the paper is always of good quality and good weight, not so thin as to be transparent, nor so thick as to be clumsy; the printing is always good; the binding is extremely neat, strong, and durable, just the thing for choice library editions which one wants to preserve a lifetime—it is either what is known as "half-seal," cloth sides, marbled edges, or half-Morocco, marbled edges; the books are 12mo in size, 7 3–4 inches high, and of corresponding width:

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

General Benjamin Franklin Kelley, who raised the first regiment of loyal troops south of Mason and Dixon's line during the war of the rebellion, died Thursday at his home near Oakland, Md.

The publication of Center Thoughts, the official organ of the non-partisan W. C. T. U. of Illinois, was begun Thursday at Monticello.

An incendiary fire at Eldon, Iowa, early Thursday morning destroyed eight frame buildings, causing a loss of $40,000.

At Spirit Lake, Thursday, the Iowa Knights Templar elected W. F. Cleveland, of Harlan, Grand Commander, and E. O. Soule, of Iowa Falls, Deputy Grand Commander.

A receiver has been appointed for the Rock Falls Lumber Company at Tomahawk, Wis. The assets of the concern are $32,000, and the liabilities $15,000.

Local World's Fair associations have been formed in seventy of the 106 counties in Kansas.

Hard Bros. & Co., spring bed manufacturers at Oneida, N. Y., have assigned, with indebtedness amounting to $125,000. R. M. Bingham & Co., of Rome, N. Y., manufacturers of carriages, sleighs, saddlery, and trunks, have assigned, with liabilities of $225,000.

At Jersey City Wm. Brennan and his wife assaulted a policeman who had aroused Brennan's ire by serving a warrant on him previously. The officer shot Brennan dead and mortally wounded his wife.

Fourteen patients have been discharged from the Koch Hospital at Denver as cured of consumption.

The school election at San Jose, Ill., July 13, at which women were permitted to vote, is likely to be declared illegal from the fact that a question of taxes and not the election of school officers was under consideration.

The Comptroller of the Currency has authorized the Second National Bank of Aurora to begin business with a capital of $200,000.

The Comptroller of the Currency has approved the Centennial National Bank, Chicago, as a reserve agent for the First National Bank at Kalispele, Mont.; also the Chicago National Bank, of Chicago, for the First National Bank, at Castle, Mont.; the Fort Dearborn National Bank of Chicago, for the State National Bank, of Cleveland, Ohio; the Merchants' National Bank, of Philadelphia, for the Drovers' National Bank, of the Union Stock Yards, Chicago.

A Chinese laundryman who has been plying his vocation for months in New York, ironing clothing, is, it is stated, a victim of leprosy. It must make his customers nervous to think of it.

Friday evening the Chicago and Erie road had a bad wreck near Hepburn, a small station about forty-five miles east of Lima, Ohio, and it was reported from Kenton by telephone that nine persons were killed and many more wounded. The accident happened at a sharp curve about a quarter of a mile east of the town, the trains being the third section of an east-bound beef train and a work west-bound; the work train had a large number of employes on board.

Government officers recently raided a number of illicit distillers at and near St. Louis, and several firms have been prosecuted for alleged frauds.

Mrs. Richard Middleton, of Pisgah, Ohio, after having been apparently dead for 16 hours, was discovered on Friday to be alive. Fortunately the undertaker noticed her condition before he began the embalming process.

A hotel was wrecked at Superior, Wis., by a storm on Thursday afternoon, killing four men, and injuring others. Much damage was done by storms in Minnesota about the same time.

A plot to destroy the police force at Middlesborough, Ky., resulted in the lynching of Frank Rossimus, a conspirator, and the jailing of Gillis Johnson, another implicated man.

Dun's weekly commercial report assures the country that business is enjoying generally improved conditions, and that financial news from Europe tends to strengthen mercantile confidence. A remarkable increase in the manufacture of pig iron is noted.

Thirty-one pauper immigrants were refused admission to the United States at New York, Friday, and twenty-eight at Boston.

Ward's bank and the postoffice building at McCune, Kan., were destroyed by fire Thursday. Loss, $15,000.

Manager Ward, of the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Line, claims that before snow flies a company will be incorporated to build a road from Pierre to Denver. A direct route would be 350 miles.

FOREIGN.

In reply to a cable inquiry by Bradstreet's Monday, J. E. Beerbohm, of London, said that the reports of a failure of the Russian wheat crop were exaggerated, and that the probable Russian wheat surplus for export is likely to be about 64,000,000 bushels.

It is announced that the English Government will not persevere in the attempt to pass the measure known as the Atlantic cattle bill.

Reports say that the strike on the Northern railroad in France, is extending. Nearly one thousand men are involved.

It is believed that the French Government has decided to accede to the request of United States Minister Whitelaw Reid to remove the embargo upon American pork.

The potato blight has been most destructive in the Skibbereen district in Ireland.

A madman fired a shot at President Carnot in Paris Monday, but the bullet sped wide of its mark. The affair created much excitement.

There will, it is reported, be a heavy shortage in the wheat crop of France and of Hungary this season.

The Voice of Masonry, published in this city, in its July number, had a characteristic fling at what it is pleased to call "the Blanchard coterie"—The National Christian Association—the ground of its paragraph being the alleged recantation of the statements and sentiments of the late Thurlow Weed in reference to the murder of William Morgan by the Masons. Bro. Stoddard, on page 8, refutes this allegation, as it has been done before, by evidence that the Voice of Masonry and Masonry itself cannot overthrow. The same paper alleges that Mr. Weed also loaned money to aid in the erection of the Masonic Temple in New York. Can any of our older readers give us some information on this subject?

The Pope is ill again. He may be "infallible," but God is no respecter of persons, and his so-called "vicegerent on earth" is as liable to suffer from sickness and death as any of his less infallible creatures. "The only disquieting symptom," we are told, "is that he is apt to fall into a profound sleep, even when taking an airing in the Vatican gardens." The prophet Elijah suggested, on one occasion, that Baal might be subject to a similar malady. Even Homer was suspected of sometimes nodding. It is clearly a (human) family disease. But the Head of our church—praise His name!—never sleeps.

"I think Kansas will come out all right" (writes a good brother in that State), for, right along beside this Alliance bluster, is going on an honest adjustment of debts, in one way or another, and that has really been the only trouble with the State—going too fast." This is probably the truth in a nut-shell. Per contra, P. S. Moxon, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Farmers' Alliance (a secret society, one of whose magnates, a judge on the bench, recently reversed a Supreme Court decision to favor a member, and was severely scored therefor by the higher authorities) is preparing a circular to be sent to every Alliance lecturer in Kansas, alleging that the country is going to ruin at lightning speed. There is evidence that in working its spurious "reform" machine the Alliance politicians are going too fast and too far, with the probable result of losing their influence before it can do them any good at the next election.

Rev. Dr. E. P. Goodwin, the talented and pious pastor of the First Congregational Church of Chicago, will not suffer where he is best known on account of the indecent attack made upon him by Rev. Dr. Parker of London and his wife. It seems hardly possible, as stated in cablegrams from England last week, that any intelligent and refined lady should "compare Dr. Goodwin to a theological corpse that had lain in the grave for 200 years, and had been dragged out stinking, with the grave clothes not too gracefully draped around him." Or that this celebrated English divine should express himself "so shocked by the doctrines that Dr. Goodwin advanced that he felt it necessary, he says, to fumigate his pulpit in the city temple." We hope that the reports are exaggerated. Dr. Goodwin is a staunch orthodox Christian, as evangelical in his preaching as Bro. Moody, as well versed as any of his compeers in Bible literature and divinity; and, like Paul, is not moved by every wind of doctrine. If his religion is two hundred years behind the unsettled and dangerous theology of the present day, let us all thank God and take courage.

Last week, at Crawfordsville, Ind., the Good Templar fraternity were greatly perturbed by a published statement that their lodge-room had been used by some of its members for gambling purposes. The press account charges that the chief of police of the city and other prominent citizens, who are not members of the order, are known to have participated in the scandalous affair, and that on Sunday the play-tables were in use all day and nearly all night. A quarrel of considerable magnitude among the players led to an exposure of the scandal. Then the Good Templars passed resolutions condemning the players, and charges were preferred against the guilty members of the lodge. All the keys were collected and placed in the hands of the lodge trustees. The Good Templars of Crawfordsville have been in hot water for the last three months. Several fights have occurred in the hall, and three of the principal members have been fined in the police courts. One member is suing another for bodily injuries received in the hall, and an officer in the Grand Lodge of Indiana was expelled for testifying in behalf of a saloon-keeper who wanted a license. This exposure may recall a similar affair which occurred some years ago at Vineland, N. J., or in that vicinity, of which President Blanchard was cognizant. Such things only serve to confirm the idea that the devil is in the lodge, whoever the other members may be.

There is one part of the Masonic obligation, running through several degrees but little changed in form, and not at all in spirit, that is not only humiliating and derogatory to true manhood, when taken by any citizen of the United States; or, indeed, any other established nation, but may, for all that he knows when the oath is administered, confer upon him a lasting taint of treason to his government. It first occurs in the obligation of the Fellow Craft, when he swears that he "will support the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of the United States, and of the Grand Lodge of this State, under which this lodge is held." The penalty for failure in keeping this oath is brutal in the extreme, and would disgrace a cannibal. It is true that he may remember to what he has already sworn, but he cannot tell what course the two Grand Lodges which he has sworn to support may pursue to undermine the government under which he lives and overthrow it. It may not be credited that the Grand Lodges of the eleven seceding Southern States, in 1861, ordered the hostilities which drenched the Southern soil with blood, but with the power which they possessed over their respective members, under the foregoing and similar other obligations, there is a reasonable belief that they may have united and concentrated their influence with that result. If this is so, the possibility of destructive power in the Grand Lodges is sufficient cause for the denunciations which the Cynosure and its friends continually utter against the lodge system. The Constitution of the United States of North America is and should be paramount to every other constitution or system that would endanger it, whether secretly or openly—in the lodge or in the monastery.

TESTIMONY AGAINST THE LODGES.

[From Private Letters.]

I.

From the beginning of my ministry, in 1832, I have been known as decidedly opposed to Freemasonry. My father was a Freemason. About 1818, he sued a man for a settlement of accounts. His attorney was not a Mason, but his contestant's was. At the close of the trial he invited his brother Mason to dine with him. I was ten years old. Father said to him, at the table: "You were rather hard in your plea on a brother Mason." He replied: "I did for you the best I could." I clearly saw that father expected him to favor his side because of their Masonic relations, and his opponent's attorney recognized the obligation. That idea became rooted in my mind. When I became a Christian I saw its deadly evil. My older brother was a Mason. I asked him to tell me all about the society. He said he couldn't do it. I urged him to tell. No, he couldn't do it. Vexed, I replied: "You can, if you will." He finally said: "Have you read 'Light on Masonry?'" "No," I said. "Get it and read, and you will know all." I did so, and knew all; and my heart was fixed. I think there is a difference, in one respect, between Freemasonry and other secret organizations. Freemasonry exacts a bona fide oath; others do not. This places it above all others. All are wrong in principle, but they are not so devilish. The secret of Masonic power lies in its present complete control of the press. The right to discuss the question publicly is denied. Editors are forbidden to discuss it, or to suffer its discussion in their columns. The Independent tried it, but succumbed to opposition. I tried it in a local country paper; but its proprietor found matters too hot, and cried: "This must be stopped!" Now, there must be such a combination to sustain this work that we can say: "It must move on!" I do not believe anything effectual can be done until this bondage to a few men working in secret can be broken.

[The National Christian Association, which publishes the Cynosure, offers such a combination as he suggests is necessary for the promulgation of the truth. He should join it, aid in its support, and work actively with it. He would find it a genial pursuit.—EDITOR.]

Ought associations to discuss it?—I see no reason why not, but a mean, dastardly spirit that succumbs to evil. Every Mason will indeed cry out: "You know nothing about it." But they knowingly lie. My brother said that I would know all about it by reading "Light on Masonry." And every Mason who will tell the truth will say the same. I read Mr. Finney's Letters to my congregation where I ministered twelve years, and good resulted. The church was with me. In another place, where I labored eight years, I persistently refused to join the Sons of Temperance, although urged by the most prominent member of the church, who was a Mason. No offense was taken. The cause of temperance has retrograded from the time of the introduction of secret societies; the great mass of temperance people, not joining those organizations, are becoming indifferent, having nothing to do. They are necessarily "left out in the cold." "You could come in," they say. No; I could not come in, and outside there was no place to work.

II.

I well remember the Anti-masonic excitement of sixty and more years ago, and have been an Anti-mason ever since, and opposed to all secret societies. When I entered college, all the literary societies were, or had been, secret. Three of these were recognized by the Faculty, and all the students were assigned, in some order, to one or another of them. Many students were opposed to secrecy, who yet joined because they desired the benefits of a literary society. The subject was warmly discussed in each of these societies, and secrecy was, for a time at least, removed from two of them. Since that time each of those societies has ceased to exist, and others have multiplied, with secrecy—only one existing without it, except the "Society of Inquiry," which has been maintained from near the beginning of the college. Each society has its own house, and there is no little effort at the beginning of each year to gather in new comers. There are no signs of any loosening of the hold upon secrecy, though there are always some in college who consistently stand against it. It has a vast and strong network, embracing, I suppose, all the older literary institutions. These, with the Masons, Odd-fellows, Temperance brotherhoods, and other organizations, furnish a body embracing the principle of secrecy formidable, indeed, to contemplate. In these organizations are men of distinguished ability and worth, scattered through all the professions and all lines of business. I do not understand how Christian ministers, missionaries, and other very devoted Christian men, can favor these organizations; yet I know they do. Nor do I see how eminent divines can favor the use of intoxicating drinks, and the license of their sale; yet some do it, and even encourage young theological students to drink wine, even when they try to check intemperance—as, for example, Dr. Crosby.

My father became a Master Mason, but died a few years before the murder of Morgan; but I do not think he would ever have taken another degree had he lived many years longer. His brother, who took the same number of degrees with him, publicly renounced the order, and headed his communication with the text (Eph. 5: 11), "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." This was not very long after the Morgan revelation. About that time a Baptist minister, who had renounced Masonry, gave an address, in the town where I resided, against it. He said the Masonic ladder had three rounds, which were called "faith, hope, and charity." For these he claimed there should be the substitution of "infidelity, profanity, and barbarity;" and to the proof of it his address was devoted. All candid hearers, I am sure, were satisfied with the proof. It then seemed as if Masonry must soon come to an end; but I fear that it was never stronger than to-day. It has gigantic proportions and strength.

If our colleges and all literary institutions would take a decided stand against all secret societies and forbid their existence within the limits of their control, such a course would, in my view, be a most encouraging sign and promise of the wane of all secret organizations. So with reference to the use of alcoholic drinks and tobacco. All honor is due to Oberlin, which started and has persevered, hitherto, on the basis of total prohibition. I rejoice that a number of Western seminaries are conducted on the same principle; and it is my earnest desire and prayer that the time may be hastened when all the schools in the land—especially the academies, collegiate and professional—shall be thoroughly prohibitory of the evils here referred to. I am too far along in years to do much; yet I most gladly give my feeble word of encouragement to all wise movements in this line of effort.

Rev. James H. Fairchild, D.D., in a Pittsburg address, said: "The point is not that the working of a secret organization may be perverted to selfish ends, but that in its very nature it strongly tends to such perversion. A worthy institution may be perverted, but an institution in which the tendency to perversion is inherent and constitutional, is not a good institution."

A LETTER FROM "BEULAH."

[The following beautiful letter from the venerable Dr. James C. Jackson, once an active and earnest Anti-slavery Reformer, now 83 years of age, to his old friend and associate, George W. Clark, of Detroit, well-known to Cynosure readers as the stirring Reform song-writer and singer, has been sent to us for publication, as a memorial of the writer, who has evidently reached the "Land of Beulah," so graphically described in "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress." The balmy air, and the charming view of the better land afforded from that retreat, appear to have inspired the Doctor, and to influence those who share its sentiments with our worthy Bro. Clark.—EDITOR CYNOSURE.]

NORTH ADAMS, Mass., June 26, 1891.

George W. Clark, Esq., 76 West Montcalm Street, Detroit, Michigan,

MY BELOVED GEORGE:—Your letter of May 9th, telling me of Bro. Charles Foote's death and burial, came duly to hand. I was glad to hear of his last hours, and that he went away peacefully and to the comfort of his wife and his children, and to you, his most intimate and beloved friend, for your love to him and to me and to all whom you have known intimately who have themselves been true to human rights, and to those who have suffered from want of enjoyment of their rights to the full, you occupy a high place in my estimation. I have always loved you since we first clasped hands. I have always honored, esteemed and greatly appreciated your talents, your zeal, your faith, your purity of motive, your fidelity to the right as it has been given to you to see the right, and I have placed you in one of the largest and most beautiful chambers of my heart and carry you there day by day in a wealth of unspeakable love. I cannot tell you how great that love is, for I am not so conditioned as to be able to express it. I can only say, George, dear, that it has grown with my growth and strengthened with my strength; the fullness of it will not be known to you until we shall meet and sit down together in the kingdom of Jesus our Lord and Master, our glorious Saviour and our King.

Harriet's departure has left me very lonely. Her place is vacant; her voice is still; her smile is absent; her gracious, loving look I cannot have; her seat at the table is unoccupied, or if it is occupied the occupant is not Harriet. So, now my steps have begun to totter, and my physical strength in many ways is enfeebled, I miss her presence and her power. In the nature of things, however, it will not be a great while before I shall go from earth, and the places that have known me will know me no more forever.

I am glad whenever I think of it that I have lived, and that by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ I have been able to live for others. I have not a consciousness in a single instance of having sought to live at the expense of another person. It has always given me more delight and greater comfort to live for others than to live for myself, and to give my time and strength to others at my own expense, rather than to save my strength to others' loss. Still under a close review of my life of the way in which I have spent it and the results which visibly have come from it, were I able to begin it over again with the benefits of my past experience, I would never live as I have lived. I would start out on and after a plan marked by a very much greater simplicity of personal habits and associations. I would make my body to hold a subjected relation to my spirit; I would eat, drink, work, sleep after such form and manner as would give me freedom of action. I would have time and place and opportunity for communion with Jesus Christ, and through him, and through him alone, with God, and through him intermediately with his Saints in Light, and through him communally with my fellow-men. To do this I might have to wear clothes as plain and unfashionable as he wore; and I might have to become a wandering evangelist, going about and proclaiming glad tidings; or I might be located in a house and very comfortably situated; or I might be like a hermit in his cave or cell. How my conditions might be would have to be determined by the effects which they would be likely to have on my liberty of person, and the influence upon my growth in the divine life, for in my present conceptions of life, a life of bodily indulgence, of large worldly mindedness, of intense personal selfishness, is not worth the having. When one has enjoyed it and it has passed, there is no pleasure in its recollections nor no comfort in its memory. It is a cheat, a falsity, a wretched dream. It gives no satisfaction. Human experience in this direction is uniform in its testimony. So were I to begin life over again, knowing what I know, I would start out to win my crown on a basis of endeavor originating in entirely different conceptions of what life to a human spirit ought to be, might be, can be.

I am glad to be able to tell you that I am living in very rich conceptions of heaven, of its blessedness, of the happiness of its people, and of Christ their living Head. Give my love to Louisa and your children and to Mrs. Foote. Mrs. Johnson of Brightside is with us at present, and Mr. Johnson will be with us soon. They, together with Miss Lee and Mr. Smith, send you love. I am yours faithfully,

(Dr.) JAMES CALEB JACKSON.

HOLMAN'S DEFENCE OF MASONRY.

Rev. Mr. Holman (not now a preacher, but engaged in secular business) said that he was not there to advocate or champion Masonry, but he had been for twenty years chaplain of a lodge, and while it was not, in his opinion, the province of any minister to champion any organization except the church of God, he felt it his duty, in the interests of justice and fairness, to state the facts in regard to the organization to which he belonged. As to Mr. Stoddard's statement that the ceremonies of Masonry are absurd, ridiculous and indecent, a description of any rite, however solemn, may be caricatured. "Never in my life," said Mr. Holman, "did I realize the fact of death and eternity so vividly as when I took the final degree making me a Master Mason. And in Masonry I never witnessed any ceremony which I would not be willing to hold in my own parlor before my family, That 'throat-cutting' oath; who takes it and executes it? Your ministers and leading men in the churches. Do you believe that they are cut-throats?" —Crucifer, in Cynosure.

This extraordinary and sophistical statement of Mr. Holman in the controversy with Mr. Stoddard should be analyzed. First: The ceremonies which he says he should "be willing to hold in his own parlor, before his own family," and "nothing in them that would bring a blush to the face of the purest maiden;" let me ask why he does not hold his meetings in his parlor? Why does he not invite his wife and daughters to witness those ceremonies? They are an open secret; he need not pretend they are edifying simply to the initiated; they are known and read of all men who care to know them. Would he like to see denuded candidates, hoodwinked and cable-towed, led round the ring of grave spectators to show that they are not disqualified, according to Deut. 23: 1, for a position among Masons? Perhaps he would think this should not bring a blush to the the cheek of the purest maiden, and he may have supporters. But what would bring a blush?

Second: Then the profane and wicked oaths—justified because ministers take them, because George Washington took them, and judges and statesmen have taken them, and all such bosh, ad finum. What if they did? Does that make it right? The whole force of the argument is on their example, and this implies that their example is right. But was it? Was David's example in the matter of Uriah and Bathsheba right? Was Solomon's example in reference to Adonijah right?

Good men have been wheedled into many very questionable acts. When a man is told that he must take some oaths, but nothing that conflicts with duty nothing but that a Christian may take, and that the initiation into the lodge would be greatly to his benefit, who might not be induced to do it? He may not know what the oath is until it is read to him in open lodge, and then he concludes he has gone too far to back out. He is deceived. The glamour that gathers around the mystic circle; the untold and indefinable power in a body of men who can blight his hopes by a turn of their hands, or who can raise him to any position by their very wink, is no small matter, and may have potency with very shrewd men. These things weighed much with Ben Franklin once (if the adage is true); but when his nephew asked him if he also should join the lodge: "Oh, no," said Franklin,—"one fool in a family is enough." A similar answer was given by a neighbor of mine to his son, on the same question. "No," said the father, "one from the household is sufficient." This would show that very distinguished adherents of the lodge had no great respect for it, though they did not dare to leave it. Morgan's fate was before them. The blight of the whole body of Masons, from Dan to Beersheba, would follow them. It would be much more expedient to remain a quiet but silent member, rather than come out and defy the whole oath-bound body to ruin them.

So Mr. Holman, who strove in the usual Masonic method to commend the lodge, did vastly more to raise suspicion of his veracity than to show that the lodge was respectable. Why does he not deny that Masons do take these throat-cutting oaths or justify them by the importance of the occasion? Each would be equally futile. Why does he not attempt to show that nobody ever suffered death in consequence of having divulged a Masonic secret? He knows that the evidence is against him. Hence the effort often attempted to cover up by great names a nefarious institution. If facts were all known in reference to these men, the whole weight of their testimony might be against the lodge.

But certainly the lodge is useless. It is not needed. It may amuse, it certainly will swallow money, but it can have no necessary object, and men ought to be willing to relinquish it. S.

LODGE RELIGION CRITICIZED.

Lodge religion does not recognize Christ as the foundation. There are some people who claim that Christ is recognized in the lodge in some senses; but whatever there may be of truth in that statement, it is true that Christ is not recognized as the foundation of lodge religion: and my Bible tells me distinctly that "other foundation can no man lay, than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

Thus lodge religion is proven to be a false religion, because it is not based upon the only foundation.

Then lodge religion has, in nearly every one of the prominent lodges, a counterfeit regeneration. Christ said except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. The lodge ritual teaches us that a man may inherit the kingdom of God by adherence to his vows in the Masonic lodge. But there is a very material omission. The presence and power of God's Spirit is never invoked or even recognized in a lodge such as the one spoken of.

Lodge religion has oaths, by some declared to be bloodthirsty; I do not know positively; I never took one. But they are at least in direct violation of the command of Christ, when he said: "Swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; nor by your own head." A man has no right, if he is loyal to Christ and to his commands, to take any oath of the character which must be taken to gain admittance to a lodge.

Lodge religion has high-sounding titles. If they mean nothing, they are childish and foolish; if they mean something they are blasphemous. No man on earth has any right to even take a title which is "worshipful." When John, on the Isle of Patmos, fell down before the angel, more worthy of worship than a man, the angel said: "See thou do it not." When Cornelius fell down before Peter, whom he awaited in answer to prayer, Peter said, "Stand up, I myself also am a man." But in the very name "worshipful," which is assumed by the master of one of these lodges, there is an assumption of divine attributes, and a recognition of the right of one man more than another to worship in thus drawing comparisons. A man has no right to take the Name of names, and assume the character that goes with it.

Lodge religion has a tendency to degrade the individual, and to degrade his ideas of what worship is.

Lodge religion, again, is misleading; misleading because it does not present the "whole counsel of God." It garbles Scripture. It is said to rest on the Bible, but the Bible on which it rests is sadly mutilated, the most precious name of all being omitted.

Lodge religion flatters men. It teaches men that there is only the necessity of certain rites, certain forms, a certain ritual to be obeyed, that the man may finally reach heaven. Man is a sinner; he must know this if he reads the Bible carefully, for the character of man is shown there. What men need to be told to-day is that they are sinners, and that needs to be proven to them by the power of God's Spirit; and never till a man recognizes his sinfulness, is he in a position to receive the grace of God.

Lodge religion makes much of its charity. How badly they must misuse the Greek work charis, which means love. Their charity is extended to the widow and the orphan of their own members, who were in good standing in the order and had paid their debts to their own lodge. This has no relation to true Christian charity, which goes out, to relieve any widow, any orphan, anyone in need, anywhere. There is no such thing as confining the spirit of ministry, if it is in us as it is in the Gospel of Christ.

Lodge religion is of the earth, earthy; we are told distinctly that Christians are to keep themselves unspotted from the world, and that this is a part of pure religion.

Lodge religion is suspicious because of its secrecy. I spent an hour talking with a policeman the other night, in regard to his work, and how it was constantly bringing him in contact with wrong-doers. I said to him: "Doesn't it give you a peculiar feeling to realize that your only duty is to grapple with felons; that you have nothing to do with the peaceable citizens?" after talking a little while, he said: "At one o'clock the lights go out and the streets become dark, and it is then that I have especially to keep my eyes open. If I hear a firm and steady step coming down the street I make up my mind that that man is all right and honest, and I pay no attention to him; but if I hear a hesitating, halting step, I immediately think: 'that man needs attention;' and I watch him." "Then," I said, "you believe that under the cover of darkness and secrecy, is the time for the performance of foul deeds?" "Certainly," he said; "that is the reason we double our force in the night time." So that works done in secret are a cause for suspicion. Darkness suits foul deeds and wicked counsels. The Gospel tells us to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather to reprove them.

It is the mission of the church to stand in its place as the light of the world, and its testimony is directly opposed to all things which are secret, and done under cover of darkness.

Lodge religion is dangerous to Christianity, because so many professed Christian ministers sit in the council of the lodge room, and hear their Bible and their faith mutilated and torn to pieces, and are silent. How can any man belonging to a lodge in this country, have any respect whatever for the teachings of a man who will sit quietly, listen to the mutilation of the most sacred teachings of the Word of God, and yet claim to be one called of God to proclaim his truth.

Again, lodge religion is contrary to the spirit of brotherhood. In the spirit of the Gospel of Christ, there is no Jew nor Greek, bond or free, perfect or maimed. But it has been proven that there are these distinctions in the lodge, and so the true idea of brotherhood is entirely done away with.

The Good Samaritan did not ask for the "grip" before he came to the assistance of that poor man. He ministered to one who not only did not belong to his fraternity, but who was separated from him by centuries of national prejudice.

Loyalty to the personal Christ is the supreme duty of the hour. Separation from the world, consecration and concentration upon the mission of the church, is what is most demanded. I firmly believe that the church of Christ is unique in its foundation,—the Rock of ages on which it rests; there is no organization on earth that can take its place. Here abide faith, hope and love, these three, the three links of truest brotherhood.

The church's sphere is self sacrifice. Her mission is her commission. When we preach the Gospel of love in the spirit of Christ, then shall the poor have the Gospel preached unto them, and the broken heart shall be bound up. The church is to "preach deliverance to the captive, and recovery of sight to them that are blind."

I do not believe in delegating this work to a body of reformers who have no Christian principles. It is the mission of the church of Christ to reprove the unfruitful works of darkness, and to be the light of the world.

It is a day of loose ideas in religion. Fundamental truths are carelessly ignored and denied. In the midst of these conditions, the church has no right to cater to the world in matters of entertainment for revenue. Abraham would not accept a thread or a shoe-latchet from a pagan king, and it is time for Christ's people to have some independence of spirit.

Wouldn't it have been queer if, when the children of Israel were commanded to build the tabernacle, they had got up a great fair, and got the Philistines and the rest of the Canaanites to come and buy of them, and had built the tabernacle in that way? There wouldn't have been any story of the tabernacle to come down to us.

It is the privilege and duty of every Christian to stand in the tent of meeting, even Christ, and with trumpet voice demand, "Who is on the Lord's side?" The golden calf, which was the result of human construction, was a sample of devil worship. The church must be true to her King. A person cannot accept Christ as Saviour alone, they must accept him as Lord also, and must be loyal to him; let us remember that. Our citizenship is in heaven, whence we wait for our King, and may we be ready to meet him with joy, and not with grief.—Rev. F. O. Cunningham, in Messiah's Herald.

THE ENGLEWOOD CHURCH SPLIT.

The difficulties in the First Presbyterian church at Englewood, this county, which are now in charge of the Circuit Court, have been advanced another step. On Tuesday Judge Horton appointed Geo. H. Sherling receiver, and it is anticipated that he will be able in time to effect a settlement. All the parties to the suit, consisting of fifty-six members of the church as complainants and the trustees as defendants, are ordered by the court to turn over the property to the receiver. He is authorized to collect rents and issue certificates to pay off mortgages and liens amounting to $16,000. For the present there are two factions managing the affair. On one side are Elders Warner, Gould, Roberson, Page, Douglas and Mowatt, and on the other are Elders Drysdale, Miner, Dunn, Thompson and McKeand. Each faction has the option of bidding for the lease, and the receiver is allowed to execute it to the highest bidder. A further provision is made that the pulpit is to be occupied by a minister of the Presbyterian church. The sheriff has a custodian in possession of the premises by virtue of executions, and he is directed to turn over the property to the receiver. Mr. Sherling gave bond in the sum of $15,000. An appeal from this decision was taken by complainants to the Appellate Court.

THE POPE AND PRESIDENT HARRISON.

A dispatch from Rome, July 21, states: "President Harrison's views on the matters advocated by Herr Cahensley and the St. Raphael societies, as outlined to Cardinal Gibbons at the accidental meeting which took place between the President and the Cardinal at Cape May Wednesday, July 15, have been communicated to the Vatican. President Harrison told Cardinal Gibbons frankly that, while not disposed to interfere in church matters, he was glad to have the opportunity of expressing satisfaction at the published remarks of the Cardinal on the subject, and at the rebuke administered at home and abroad to foreign interference in domestic affairs of the United States.

"The President's views, it is announced from the Vatican, produced an excellent impression upon the Pope, who declared that he has never favored the plan of appointing bishops of the nationalities of the Roman Catholic communities in the United States, as advocated by Herr Cahensly and the St. Raphael societies. The incident, it is added, is thus closed."

Would it be more than a fair return for the kindness shown by President Harrison to the Pope were the latter to order his adherents in the United States to refrain from hostility toward the public school and to fully recognize the latter as the most proper place for the education of future American citizens, and as the strongest bulwark of religious liberty ever provided?—Chicago Daily News.

Rev. J. P. Lytle, D.D., says: "Masonry has damned all who ever trusted in it for salvation. It is now leading away thousands from the church, and from paths of virtue by association with the intemperate, unclean and profane, and is dragging them down the road which leads to the chambers of eternal death."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The marriage of Miss Elaine Goodale.—Women and reform.—A menace for the future.—Do corporations have souls?—The waning summer.

The marriage of Miss Elaine Goodale to Dr. Eastman, with his Sioux blood and Harvard education, is not merely a bit of romance in real life, but a subject which gives room for quite a variety of trains of thought. For instance, that true love is sometimes one of the best and most practical expounders of theology. "He hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the earth." How little extraneous circumstances matter, such as the color of the skin, if mind and soul meet on the same plane of cultured Christian manhood and womanhood. Mrs. Eastman's marriage is a far prettier poem than any thing she wrote in her girlhood's days, when she and her sister Dora, from a quiet farm-house among the Berkshire hills, dawned upon the literary world;—two rising twin stars that recalled the Davidson sisters. It is a question whether the latter would have fulfilled the promise of their youth had they lived to maturity. Prodigies seldom do; but in these days they come into life surrounded by healthier conditions. An early death is not now a foregone conclusion with all young people who show precocious piety or genius, but the practical needs of to-day, with its imperious demands on every faculty, give little time or opportunity to the poetic bent. Mrs. Eastman long ago bade farewell to the muse, to throw herself heart and soul into her self-denying work among the Indians; and Helen Hunt Jackson will always be remembered, not as the poet, but the philanthropist,—the woman who laid all her rare poetic gifts on the altar as other women lay their jewels, to write romance. Every now and then we see a wail over "the decadence of poetry;" as if poetry must always seek the channel of rhyme and printer's ink, when, in truth, it is a spiritual essence that will not be confined to any given mould. There is no lack of poet souls among us, but such souls are as eagerly responsive to the call of reform as was Job's war-horse to the sound of the trumpet; and so it comes to pass that in America we do not bury our "mute, inglorious Miltons" in country church-yards, but under some of our thousand-and-one benevolent or philanthropic organizations where the poetic afflatus finds its outlet—not in an epic poem, but in faithful, earnest work for God and humanity that will last a whole eternity longer.

Wellesley College hopes to organize a Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, when it opens in the autumn. There is no reason why it should not have a most prosperous organization of Ys, and every reason why it should. It was established more on missionary than reform lines; but to keep in touch even with the world of science, it needs to give a place in its curriculum to this great all-absorbing question of temperance. And having admitted this, others, including the anti-secrecy cause, will have to follow. Prohibition has been a nucleus and gathering point for many diverging lines of reform, all evils being so connected that it is almost impossible to oppose one without having the attention drawn to some other that is allied to it, and so on. It is like beginning house-cleaning, which, as everybody knows that has had any practical experience of it, involves a constant discovery of cobwebby corners and hidden things of darkness that must be dragged out into the light. But the air of reform is the healthiest that can be breathed. Look at reform workers generally, and see what a cheery, sturdy lot they are! I am convinced that nothing would be more conducive to the health and longevity of Wellesley students than to make a specialty of studying the various reforms of the day, with a view to active labor therein when they leave their college halls.

More and more are women coming to the front as reformers. Perhaps it is only poetic justice that they should, having been so often accused of being at the bottom of everything which goes wrong in this very disordered and topsy-turvy world. Even Ruskin, who has said some of the most charming things about the sex, and also some of the rudest, has affirmed that not a single abuse exists on the earth that woman could not prevent if she would. And here is the Congregational Conference, held a little while ago at Marlboro, declaring through one of its speakers, whose theme was the Romanist question, that "the women of New England are answerable for much more of the discourtesy and mischief, the slights and indignities suffered by Irish Catholics, than the men." I am a little afraid this may be true, for I have seen women so full of unreasoning prejudice and antipathy against foreigners, as to cause them to forget both their ladyhood and their Christianity, if they had any of either. But I am sure also that the same woman who will look down on foreign help, and give them to understand, in a variety of ingenious ways, that they are of an inferior race to herself, will not treat American help any better. Such mistresses have done more to make domestic service a menial profession than all other causes combined, and, if possible, should be made to see and feel their error. If the graduates who go out from Wellesley will only bring their cultured Christian common sense to bear on this question, they will earn the blessings of their sisters even to unborn generations.

A Pawtucket letter to one of our anti-Catholic exchanges speaks of the hot weather as depleting the attendance in the lodge-rooms, but states: "One item of news has leaked out, and that is that for the past two weeks a patriotic organization has been considering the advisability of organizing a military company." What is to be the end of all this?—the secret military drill under the control of Jesuits on the one hand, and these quasi military companies on the other? If this continues, how long before the clash of arms between these opposing factions will be heard in our streets? European governments forbid this unauthorized arming of citizens, justly considering it a menace, and our own should do likewise.

Democratic Governor Russell does not seem disposed to profit by the fate of his Republican predecessor, but continues to imitate his example in toadying to Jesuitism, as shown in his remarks at Holy Cross College, Worcester. Will the voters of Massachusetts ever learn that all the difference between a Republican and a Democratic governor is just the difference between tweedledum and tweedle-dee.

Corporations have long had the reputation of being soulless, but it is something to have it practically so decided in a court of law. A fire insurance company in Boston has refused to pay a claim of the Texas Standard Oil Company on the ground that the latter set fire to its own property. The argument of the defence is that a corporation cannot, like an individual, commit arson. So that the interesting question which the courts will now have to settle is one that public opinion has generally decided in the negative: "Do corporations have souls?"

Summer is with us in all her glory, and yet an ear deliberately attuned to nature's harmonies cannot fail to notice the slow creeping in of a minor chord. One hardly realizes that the days are actually shortening, and the year already on its downward slope. But after the first chill of the thought has passed away how instinctively the mind leaps forward, past the days when the matin song of the birds is over, and the first hectic flush appears on the maple; past the autumn days with their golden harvests and their gracious, dreamy stillness; past the first biting frost and the first snowfall to the morning of the springtime when in a blessed resurrection the dead soul of nature shall revive again and put on her beautiful garments.

Can I close better than with these words of Ruskin, in which he pictures the first waking of a soul to the other life: "When the time comes for us to wake out of the dreams of the world's sleep, why should it be otherwise than out of the dreams of the night? Singing of birds, first broken and low as, not to 'dying eyes' but to eyes that wake to life, 'the casement slowly grows a glimmering square,' and then the gray, and then the rose of dawn; and last the light whose goings forth is to the ends of heaven."

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, July 22, 1891.

Many Washington clergymen are now away on their annual vacations, and the unusually large per centage of local pulpits that were filled by visiting ministers last Sunday has been commented upon. Among the visiting ministers is Rev. W. F. Johnson, D.D., late president of Biddle University, at Charlotte, North Carolina, who is temporarily in charge of Rev. Dr. Wynkoop's church, during that gentleman's absence in Europe. Dr. Johnson was born and raised in Ohio, but he has spent the greater part of his life in missionary work in India, and he contemplates returning to that country in the near future. He is a very pleasing speaker, and his sermon on "The pearl of great price," which was delivered on Sunday, proved him to be well supplied with unique and original ideas. His comparison of the seeker after God to the traveling jeweler of the East, who spends his life searching for the earthly pearl of great price, was a most beautiful one. He told his hearers that the pearl of great price is never found by accident, but only by those who seek diligently for it, and that when found it was always something far greater than was expected by the seeker.

Longfellow's well-known poem, "The Legend Beautiful," was the basis of a sermon preached on Sunday by Rev. Eugene R. Shippen, of Wichita, Kansas, in the pulpit of his father's church, which greatly pleased the congregation, and gave them a high opinion of the oratorial ability of the young minister.

Rev. Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Indiana, who has been United States Consul-General of Constantinople for nearly two years, passed through Washington a few days ago, enroute for his home, where he proposes spending his summer leave of absence. He is a very close observer; consequently he talks very interestingly about the Turks, their country, customs and religion. He said: "My impression of the Ottomans is a favorable one. The usual idea is that they are uncivilized, crude and coarse. This is not correct. They are a nation of teetotalers, and their natural instinct is for truth-telling. Their religion, although not of my kind, seems suited to their requirements, and they live up to it. With the exception of proselyting to the Mohammedan faith, the Turk tolerates all religions. America's diplomatic relations are very slight compared with those of the countries on the European continent, but her educating and civilizing influences far surpass those of any European nation. Robert College, on the Bosphorus, five miles from Constantinople, has fifteen professors and 200 students. At Scutari, opposite Constantinople, is a school for girls, purely American, having ten female instructors from this country. Though these schools are doing much to throw light into the dark places of the empire, they are excepted by the people only with toleration. There are drawbacks to the pleasure of living in Turkey; for instance, I doubt if there are a dozen post-offices in all Palestine, and brigandage is still common, the government not having succeeded in crushing out that class of criminals. The train on which I expected to have left Constantinople, had not business interfered with my arrangements, was captured by these outlaws, and the passengers were robbed and dragged to the mountains, with no hope of rescue until the government had paid 400,000 francs for their release, but not, however, before several hundred of them had died from exposure and ill-treatment. I think that this last outrage will awaken the government to more active measures in the suppression of these outrages."

"Moral Insanity" was the subject upon which Rev. Dr. Francis A. Horton, of Providence, R. I., talked for nearly an hour on Sunday afternoon, to the Young Men's Christian Association. The speaker characterized sin as moral insanity, and hell as the madhouse of the universe, and exhorted his hearers to remember that only Christ could save them to sanity, by taking away their insane hearts and giving them new ones. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

CRESCENT BEACH, Mass., July 23, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The Douglas holiness camp-meeting in Connecticut is fairly well-attended. I was on the ground a part of four days, and although not permitted to speak from the platform, I distributed 300 of Dr. Goodwin's address on Secret Lodges, "Signal Lights" and much miscellaneous literature. Bro. McDonald, in charge, when asked, said: "We cannot admit temperance or any side issue; we have one theme, and one object, and that is Holiness. I know, personally, some of those secret societies, and I do not differ with you as to their character; but this is not the place to discuss them, and it will not be allowed." He assented without hesitation to my request for the privilege of distributing tracts, and I am under obligation to the Doctor and the management for fair treatment from their standpoint; and although I differ with them as to methods of treating a great system of Baal-worship, yet I hope I did not transcend my privileges or give offence to any one who had "the mind of Christ."

It is in contemplation to hold the New England Annual Convention in December next, and I am "blazing lines" through the forest of difficulties converging in this point. I found a number who are interested, and two of our M. E. ministerial brethren who (D. V.) will speak. Neither the time nor place of the meeting will be settled until wise and judicious friends have been consulted; but friends, both East and West, should present this matter in believing, importunate prayer. Success or defeat in Boston and New England is not a local or unimportant matter, but one that concerns the land and the church universal.

I hope every one named in our company will pray that in God's appointed time and place the grandest convention ever held on this line in New England may gather to carry out a program in which the spiritual and heavenly shall transcend the human and earthly in every feature, and hasten the testing time when there will be no indifferentists or neutrals, but every man will stand in his own place for Christ or Baal. Many incidents might be added, but they would be in line and a substantial repetition of personal encounter common in the experience of every active worker.

I reached this Beach at 12 M., and found the shore lined with strollers and the glimmering waters dotted with bathers in great variety of costumes. My objective point was Gay College, and the Bible Conference in session. Brothers Bixby and Geo. C. Needham cheerfully consented to the distribution of Dr. Goodwin's address, and up to this (6:30 P. M.) I have handed out 185. Only one man has shown any nervousness over the matter, and when I answered his suggestion that I should desist, by informing him that I was acting under authority from the committee, he replied: "So much the worse; I am a Mason, and I will leave this building and never enter it again if that is the case;" and walked away. The addresses this afternoon were grand, especially the one by Dr. Nathaniel West, of Chicago, on the "Higher Criticism." We are to hear from Bro. Geo. C. Needham this evening on "Peculiar People of the Bible."

J. P. STODDARD.

FROM THE WASHINGTON AGENT.

WAVERLY, Pa., July 23, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since my last I have lectured at Prospect Hill, Russell Hill and Vose, Wyoming county; also in this place. Part of my lectures have been well attended and the best of attention given. Some Cynosures were planted and tracts distributed. I spoke in the Baptist church, Russell Hill, but otherwise my work has been with Free Methodist brethren. Though most of them are rich only in faith, a good disposition has been manifest to aid our work. Bro. Shear, pastor, expressed gratitude for the aid I could give him in his battle against the powers of darkness, as manifested in the lodge, and helped me what he could. Sabbath was especially a good day. There were many manifestations of the presence and power of the Spirit. In the class-meeting shouts of praises were abundant.

While in Wyoming county I met a young man who had become opposed to secret societies from his knowledge of the workings of what is known as the "H. O. S. Society" in the National Deaf Mute College, at Washington, D. C. For obvious reasons his name is withheld; but I give the substance of the facts as he wrote them down for me. "This society is in reality a hazing society, but has degrees to keep up its dignity. The members take great delight in hinting at the horrors new students have to go through to join it."

They begin the initiation by blindfolding. The victim or candidate is then led through the laundry and cellar. While passing through, they endeavor to make him believe he is going through a dungeon. Things are placed in his way which he stumbles over, and he is knocked on the head, breast, toes, etc. He is then taken to the lodge-room. The "Grand Mogul," who is disguised, as all present are, with black or white sheets, commands him to sit down on what looks like a cushioned stool; but which proves to be a tub of water carefully covered over.

He, of course ,tumbles in with the new suit of clothes which, perhaps, his mother has carefully prepared for him. He is then commanded to take off his clothes, and get into bed with a skeleton. The lights are turned out and hideous efforts are made to scare him.

The initiation is not always the same. They retain a few arrangements from year to year, but change others. At one time a chemical mark was made on a boy's forehead which did not wear off for months. A weak little fellow by the name of John McIlvaine was made very sick by being compelled to eat a candle, and drink dirty stuff which had been prepared. I inquired if the faculty indorsed these things. My informer replied that Gallaudet, president of the college, was a member of this society. While he probably did not know of all the foolish things done by the boys, yet he indorsed the organization by being a member of it. It is considered unmanly for an injured student to report to the faculty. All the boys will unite against him. So the one who does not like this buffoonry usually prefers to bear it in silence rather than call down on his head greater injury.

Not being able to hear, those who attend this college can never hope to be Masons; but the devil will see that they do not lack for opportunities to serve him. The boys, said my informant, wish to be like the students at Yale, Harvard and other colleges; hence this hazing society.

It was my privilege to spend one night with Rev. Nathan Callender, a veteran in our reform. Though bearing the weight of years, Elder Callender still battles hopefully and ably for the right. I am (D. V.) to speak for his people on Sabbath.

Lectures have been given all over this country by Elder Callender and his associates in former years. Many who have opposed the lodge in other years have gone to their reward; some have grown weary by the way, while others remain steadfast. I trust that God may help me to awaken a greater interest, that his kingdom may be here advanced as in other days.

I find a welcome home with Bro. Besecker, a reformer of the non-compromise style. Bro. Raymond, pastor of the F. M. church, has invited me to fill his appointment in a Methodist church in the country on Sabbath eve. Salvation is what the people need, and we who labor in reforms cannot preach too much of it. May the Lord help for his dear Name's sake!

W. B. STODDARD.

THE WESTERN AGENT IN IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The 2nd of July I left home to resume work in Iowa.

I spent the first night with Hon. Mr. Wood, who resides near Sycamore, Ill. A storm was gathering when I reached his home, during which a tree about two rods from the house was struck by lightning. The terrible crash of the thunder, and the lightning blazing like a ball of fire, startled us, and we were relieved when assured that none of the family were harmed.

The 4th of July I reached Mr. Morley's, near Brush Creek, Fayette county, Iowa. On the Sabbath I preached in the U. B. church of Brush Creek, and gave a short address at a Sabbath-school in the country. Mr. Morley has been a staunch supporter of the N. C. A. work during the whole time I have known him. He is so thoroughly impressed with the danger to be apprehended from secret societies, both to church and state, that his heart devises liberal things for the support of the National Christian Association work.

Leaving Brush Creek, I visited Manchester, Hopkinton and Scotch Grove. Rev. Mr. Amadon, of the Congregational church of Manchester, is thoroughly in sympathy with the N. C. A. work, and always ready to help. Rev. Mr. Acheson the pastor of the Covenanter church of Hopkinton, is a warm friend of the anti-secrecy cause, and his people cheerfully contribute to aid the N. C. A. in carrying forward the work of God committed to them. Rev. Mr. Potter, the pastor of the U. P. church of Scotch Grove, is in thorough sympathy with the N. C. A., and there are earnest supporters of the cause among his people.

I preached for Rev. Mr. Potter in the morning, and gave a short address at the prayer meeting in the evening.

Leaving Scotch Grove, I visited Stanwood, Cedar Rapids and West Branch. Both the pastor and people of the U. P. church of Stanwood are in sympathy with our work, and willing to help. While here, I went four miles into the country to spend a night with Bro. John Dorcas, of the Old School U. B. church.

Rev. James Parker, pastor of the Second U. P. church of Cedar Rapids, is a staunch friend of the cause, and, as his custom is, generously aided the work.

While here I stayed with Mrs. N. Bourne, who, with her son and daughters, was still living in the old homestead.

Rev. Mr. Parker wished me to spend a Sabbath with him, and preach to his people, which I promised to do at some future time. I had a pleasant and profitable interview with him, and also with Rev. Mr. Monteith, the pastor of the First U. P. church of Cedar Rapids. I arranged to send the Cynosure to fifteen of the pastors of the city.

While at West Branch I went, on Saturday, to Springdale and attended a Quaker monthly meeting, and called upon my old friend Laurie Tatum, who has for many years been a warm friend of the N. C. A. work.

Returning to West Branch, I called upon several of the Friends; among the rest was Wm. Oliphant, who, as he was wont to do, generously aided in the work.

Dr. Staples, who was a strong supporter of the N. C. A., has been called to his reward since I was this way before; but his brother is still here, and, as beforetime, a warm sympathizer with us in our anti-secret-society work.

I spent the Sabbath with the pastor of the Presbyterian church, and preached for him in the morning, at West Branch, and in the evening at a country church, of which he is also the pastor.

Since coming to Iowa, I have added over forty new names to the Cynosure subscription list, sought to build up the kingdom of Christ, and prepare the way for its coming, by laboring, as best I could, for the removal of its rival, the secret lodge system.

Will not the friends of Christ, by fervent prayer and generous contributions, help the National Christian Association to prepare the way for the more glorious triumph of the Redeemer's kingdom? Yours for Christ and his grace and truth,

C. F. HAWLEY.

Rev. Nathan Brown, editor American Baptist, and missionary to Japan, says: "If Freemasonry had existed in the days of Christ, and in the same form that it exists with us, he could not have condemned it more distinctly than he did in his Sermon on the Mount: 'If ye do good to them that do good to you, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans the same?' The Gospel is at war with every system of clique or clan, caste or combination, that seeks to create distinctions in the human family."

CORRESPONDENCE.

A VOICE OUT OF DARKNESS.

RAYNE, La., July 8, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This being my first attempt at expressing my sentiment as regards darkness and the works of Belial, I hope you will not consider me arrogant and honor this with a position in the waste-basket. The lodge and I are about as compatible as water and grease, the only difference being that both these substances are of use to man and beast, while the new-fangled idolatry is of no service to men, and beasts do not instinctively adhere to its principles. If they (the beasts) possessed reason, I believe that they would be still farther from it. No man can consistently boast of his reason, and Christian graces and fidelity, and worship at the shrine of the prince of darkness. Ours is an enlightened age and country, a progressive nation. From whence came our light and progress? Did the anti-Christs and idolaters bring it to us? I am impressed that they did not. But I rather believe that Christ himself brought the light that he intends for us to go to heaven by. No man can put a poor depraved human being in heaven by simply teaching him a few signs, passwords, degrees, etc., and giving him the grip. Let us go to the cross of Christ, and there see the light. There is where I first saw it. I went into several secret organizations, and all of them asked me a question to which I had to answer that I was "seeking for more light." I was permitted to look around myself and see what was what. And I have been looking ever since the day that the light of truth dawned upon my stultified conscience and the works of darkness (the lodge failed to bring the light) in which I was engaged. I have continued to see more and more light from the very day that my connection with the so-called institutions of light was severed. With my Bible, now, as a light unto my path and a lamp unto my feet, I am a happier man and a better Christian preacher. I have just become able, since I pulled out from Satan's camp, joined heart and hand in the Christian army, to preach the text, "Ye are the light of the world."

And I must say, right here, that the dear Cynosure, blessed paper, is a strong prop for me in holding up the light of the Gospel to the world and in crying aloud against the works of the devil. I am out of darkness now, and I don't think that I can be hoodwinked and carried into it any more. No, I cannot go back into Egyptian darkness and bondage any more. I am truly and humbly grateful to the Cynosure for the precious gift. Long may this great herald of truth live to disseminate truth and teach true morality, virtue and religion. Being almost surrounded by Catholicism, I don't think that I could get a better paper to help me to teach the truth as the Bible gives it. I petition the Lord every day to bless the Cynosure with a long and successful life, for I believe that as long as it lives it will do good. It helps to keep one out of darkness, and I hope to see the day when millions more voices will be heard to speak out of darkness through its help. God bless the Cynosure! Pardon me for lengthy remarks, but my heart was full and so I couldn't help letting out some of it. In conclusion, I am yours for the cause that you are espousing and that every Christian ought to espouse. (Rev.) C. S. MOORE, (M. D.)

THE LODGE KILLS TRUE RELIGION.

ALEXANDRIA, Neb., July, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Being earnestly requested by a friend of Reform I write to you to tell you that there are many among us who are interested in this grand work, and that there are a few of us who have not bowed the knee to Baal, nor offered sacrifices upon false altars. For the past few months I have been a close observer of the workings of the lodge, and while I would not be harsh or unkind in what I have to say, yet I believe the voice of God comes to us in tones of thunder: "Come out of her, and I will receive you."

But observation, and what knowledge I have gained by reading, show very clearly that the lodge kills out all true religion, causes men to esteem lightly the cause of Christ, and puts a low estimate upon motherhood, and hinders, in general, the onward march of the Redeemer's kingdom. Surely the time has come when God will say to our lodge churchmen, as he did to Isaiah: "I hate, I despise your feast days, and I will not smell in your solemn assemblies." Yours for the work, MRS. R. E. GARRETT.

PITH AND POINT.

[How to Best Oppose Secret Societies—Continued. Extracts from Private Letters.]

"I have found quiet personal work the most successful way to oppose them, and to get and keep men out of such entanglements."

"Oppose them with the pure light of the Gospel, looking and working for a law to prohibit them."

"1. In a plain, common-sense, frank, firm manner, presenting one's own (not some others') objections against them. 2. Avoid all Kant, and cant, and rant. 3. To society men themselves, in a kind style. 4. To the public in the same way."

"First, by so indoctrinating church members with a sense of the moral wrong committed by being partakers of other men's sins that they will withdraw all support and countenance from them. Secondly, by the church going back to the first principles of primitive Christianity and caring for the poor and needy, the sick and afflicted, the orphans and widows. It is because the church has been unfaithful here that secular organizations have sprung into existence. Let the church now say: 'Behold, I show you a more excellent way,' and then do what it says; then the strongholds of Freemasonry, etc., will come down to the dust."

"It seems to me a subject beset with difficulties. Perhaps the only answer that is without question is, to use, on all occasions, 'the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God.'"

"Preaching, prayer, and legislation."

"By preaching the Gospel, and magnifying 'the church of the living God,' the pillar and ground of the truth."

"I do not know what the best method of opposing them is. My thought has been that it is better to seek to instill the true teaching of Christ, letting that produce its own results, rather than attempting open hostility."

"Chiefly by winning individual men into supreme loyalty to Jesus Christ, the light of the world."

"By more of the enlightenment of the Spirit. We cannot abide in the darkness with him."

"Ignore them, if possible." [We can't; they are like the frogs in Pharaoh's bed-chamber—too neighborly.—ED.] "Awaken true religion, which will kill them at the root; sometimes oppose them openly and freely."

"I think the best method is to let the light on them; that is, the true light—Christ. They cannot stand the light."

"My practice is, private, personal conference with those (who are) apt to be ensnared."

"First, Produce the conviction in those not members of secret orders of the real evil of the thing. Second, Then organize for consultation and eventual action. Third, When success in this line is sufficiently manifest, combine all forces to secure a place for newspaper influence. There ought to be in every large central place a newspaper bearing the anti-secret society banner."

"Keeping out of them; speaking against them as occasion presents, socially and publicly; circulating literature against them, and providing against their establishment in various institutions of learning."

One brother would refuse to receive a member into his church until he had renounced his secret order, doing so "with a kind and gentle spirit, letting light shine freely upon the subject, by tracts, or other appropriate means."

"By a calm and dignified statement of reasons why you oppose them. To bitterly fight them is to strengthen them."

"By general public gatherings for free discussion of secret societies, distribution of literature, prayer, preaching, and practice."

"Use the weapon which our Captain Jesus Christ himself used against the devil—Matt. 4—'It is written'—the Word of God. I quote Zech. 4: 6, and 2 Cor. 10: 3, 4."

"Holding conferences on secret societies; pastors preaching against them; writing against them."

"Oppose them with the Bible and with a Christian spirit,—with courage and vigor, and yet with a charitable consideration for the opinions of those who view the subject from a different standpoint."

"I do not preach against them. Incidentally, I occasionally refer to them, and always with a telling point against them; but I never preach a sermon on the subject. I think a minister ought to have his opposition fully understood, and, without keeping his church in a state of ferment on the subject, ought to keep hold of his young men, and, if they incline toward such societies, head them off by showing the true character of the lodges. I have placed Finney's book in such hands to good advantage."

"Let the light shine with ten thousand times greater effulgency, until even the dark recesses of the secret chamber shall be illumined. Do this in every way practicable—by press, circular and the platform."

LITERATURE.

JOHN OF WYCLIFFE: "The Morning Star of the Reformation." By Emma H. Adams, Author of "Fiji and Samoa," "Two Cannibal Archipelagoes," etc. Oakland, Cal.: Pacific Press Publishing Co. 1891.

This little volume is timely. At a period when the social and religious world is stirred with the spirit of inharmony; when beliefs that made Luther and Wycliffe strong as pioneers in the work of the Reformation are wavering; when all sorts of heresies and schisms are attacking the Bible, and endeavoring to delay the coming of Christ's kingdom,—at this time such a book is needed to stay the stream of infidelity and worldliness that threatens to sink the church. Under Christ, the hope of the Christian religion rests in the fidelity of the present race of Christians and the proper training of the coming generation to meet the trials and temptations of the age now rapidly increasing in power and number, with the Word of God and the sword of his Spirit. These were the reliance of Wycliffe and his fellow-reformers, and by them they vanquished the errors of the times in which they lived and triumphed in the establishment of God's truth. The day is not far distant when more Luthers, more Wycliffes, more Calvins, more Melancthons, will be needed to overcome the enemies of the Redeemer. The story of Wycliffe and the stirring events of his day will do much to arouse the necessary interest in the cause for which he labored, and in which it is remarkable that he did not die a martyr to the Romish church. But God was with him through all, and suffered him to die peacefully in his bed. The narrative is pleasingly written, easily comprehended, and attractively illustrated. It is seldom that a better book for the younger branches of the household comes under our observation. Its price is 60 cents.

ALDEN'S CYCLOPEDIA OF UNIVERSAL LITERATURE: Presenting Biographical and Critical Notices, and Specimens from the Writings of Eminent Authors of All Ages and All Nations. Vol. XIX. From Taine to Waller. Columbian Publishing Co., 393 Pearl Street, New York. 1891.

Uniformity of excellence, conciseness and interest marks each succeeding volume of this desirable serial, which introduces to unlearned readers a rich store of literature from the pens of the world's most noted authors, and affords to the busy editor and scholar a ready reference to many choice specimens of word-painting and precious thoughts. The present issue covers the lives and writings of more than one hundred authors, most of whom are cherished favorites of this generation.

VACATION TIME: With Hints on Summer Living. By H. S. Drayton, M. D., Editor of the Phrenological Journal and Science of Health. New York: Fowler & Wells Co., 775 Broadway. Price, 25 cents.

A seasonable manual, supplying a variety of useful information about summer living, and taking into account the recreations and diversions pertaining to warm weather, in which both young and old are active participators. It treats of life at the seaside, in the mountains, of boating and bathing, games, excursions, the management of household economies, practical hints on eating and drinking, from a hygienic standpoint. The author is a practical physician, whose writings on popular hygiene have invested him with popularity, and who speaks with professional authority on the subject of which this little volume treats.

A pamphlet—"Papers Read Before the Academy of Anthropology, New York, from 1883 to 1891"—contains the names of 78 American, English, German and French authors; medical, legal, clerical, and scientific students of anthropology, who have, in 131 papers, covered the principal questions in this fruitful department of inquiry. Dr. E. C. Mann, of Brooklyn, is president of the Academy. The founder, Dr. E. P. Thwing, who was also its president during the first four years, is the only active member who was present at its organization. There are about 100 resident and nearly 200 corresponding and honorary members. Sixteen foreign countries are represented, and some of the most valuable papers come from those who are now resident. A few classes were held at the start; but latterly the academy has furnished free lectures, semi-monthly, at Cooper Union. A Handbook on Anthropology, a Memorial of Professor Armor, and The Involuntary Life, are among the publications of the institution. The field of its influence, it is stated, is widening every year.

The Home-Maker, a monthly magazine, edited by Mrs. D. G. Croly (Jenny June) for July has a beautifully illustrated description of "Geneva (Switz.), Real and Ideal," by Florence Gray; "A Florentine Landlord" (illustrated), by Jeanie Porter Rudd; "Art at Home" (illustrated), by Priscilla; a continuation of "Colonial Dames—A Narragansett Elopement," by Alice M. Earle; "The Three Fates," by F. Marion Crawford, and several other readable sketches and poems by various contributors, besides a copious household and editorial department of considerable interest. The illustrations are very fine, including the full-page copy of "The Light of the Incarnation," printed by Carl Gutherz, the Castle of Chillon, etc. Published at 44 East Fourteenth St., New York.

The Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter (published monthly at Pittsburgh, Pa., by Sproul & Willson), issues a double number for July and August, which is almost wholly filled with the proceedings, in detail, of the recent Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church at Pittsburgh, including the various reports of standing and special committees, statistics of the denomination, etc. It is a valuable document.

Our Banner, another able monthly magazine, devoted to the principles of the Reformed Presbyterian church, also issues a double number for July and August, likewise filled with the Minutes of the recent Reformed Presbyterian Synod at Pittsburgh. Published at Philadelphia—N. R. Johnston, editor and proprietor.

LODGE NOTES.

There is a movement of the craft in St. Louis, Mo., favoring the erection of a Masonic Temple.

The Masons of Ohio refuse to open their lodge-rooms to the Order of the Eastern Star? Is this Masonic charity?

The corner-stone of the new Masonic Temple at Saginaw, Mich., was laid, May 13, by Bro. John Q. Look, Grand Master.

Sir Robert Stout has been deprived of his Masonic rank by the Grand Lodge of England, for giving allegiance to a lodge chartered by the Grand Orient of France in New Zealand.

The great Masonic event in May was the laying of the corner-stone of the Masonic Home at Utica, N. Y., on the 21st, when there was a great outpouring of the fraternity in the State.

The Grand Lodge of Freemasons in Indiana held its seventy-fourth annual communication in Indianapolis, May 26 and 27, 1891. Bro. Jacob J. Todd, Grand Master, presided, and four hundred and sixty lodges were represented.

Orders, like shrubs, may grow too fast. The sap of life is weakened because of the numerous branches it has to support. These branches thus unsupported and unnourished sicken and gradually wither. So with orders.—Charleston (S. C.) Budget.

The Acacia Club of the City of Chicago has, for a year past, been engaged in collecting the material for an extensive exposition of American Freemasonry; already the collection has assumed the proportions of a complete and well ordered library.

The Keystone has this caption: "The Oldest Mason Certainly Dead." The oldest Mason never is dead, because no sooner is the eldest gone than the next eldest fills his station. Thus the procession of the eldest never ends.—Voice of Masonry.

The Loyal Legion of the United States has collected $50,000 for its proposed war library and museum at Philadelphia. The committee having the matter in charge hope to raise $50,000 for a memorial building to contain a library, museum, and muster-room. As a beginning for its museum, the society has secured a complete objective history of the development of fire-arms from the date of their earliest use, down to the present time.

The most exciting and sensational matter of the year has been that of the Prince of Wales, heir apparent to the throne and Grand Master of Masons, in the Tranby-Croft affair. Just think a moment of a man in his high station carrying with him a "baccarat" outfit and acting as banker in the game! Does it astound you, and do you pronounce it a stigma on Great Britain and on the Freemasonry of the world?—Voice of Masonry. It is certainly so considered.

One "healthy" lodge in good order, with its machinery well greased—able officers, staunch and true members—with a good bank account and fully able to meet its liabilities, is more desirable than a dozen whose existence hangs on a thread—dependent upon any material it may secure to keep it alive and whose benefits owing to its weak condition are naturally small. Fewer lodges and stronger ones should be the object aimed at.—Masonic Chronicle.

At the recent session of the Supreme Council of the Order of American Steam Engineers the following Supreme officers were elected: Recording Engineer, Charles E. Jacks, Boston; Corresponding Engineer, Frank Neal, Cincinnati; Treasurer, James E. Deas, Bridgeport, Conn.; Chaplain, William D. Carr, Boston; Senior Master Mechanic, J. J. Wilson, Wahoo, Neb.; Junior Master Mechanic, C. P. Baker, Grand Rapids; Inside Sentinel, H. K. Stroud, Missouri; Outside Sentinel, Leopold Callaway, Philadelphia; Members of the Board of Trustees, H. G. Connor, Philadelphia, and Bernard Bowen, Boston, for a term of six years; Justice of the Court of the Order, John W. Teller, Utica; Secretary of the Mutual Benefit Fund, Charles E. Jacobs, Boston.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. JOHN TODD, Pittsfield, Mass.:—Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere. I have never known any good results from them which could not have been attained in some other more appropriate way, and I have known great evils resulting from them.

HOWARD CROSBY, Chancellor University of New York, 1870:—We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the earth.

Idem, 1886:—The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous.

REV. MATTHEW L. R. PERRINE, D.D., Auburn Theological Seminary, REV. JOEL PARKER and REV. CHAUNCEY EDDY:—Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country.

REV. LEVI CHASE, Fall River, Mass.:—The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, "Why did not they renounce it before?" For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding.

REV. C. D. BURLINGHAM, in history of the Genesee M. E. Conference, 1860:—This new element of discord (Odd fellowship) began to introduce itself in our church, professedly as a mutual insurance company against temporal want, and a newly discovered and remarkably successful Gospel appliance for bringing the world, reformed and saved into the church. But our people very naturally looked upon it with suspicion, dreading its power as a secret agency acting through affiliated societies, and doubting its utility as a financial scheme. They feared it would drag the church, debased and corrupted, into the world.

REV. JOEL MANN, a renouncing Mason:—Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has a most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties.

REV. AARON LELAND, formerly Lieut.-Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association):—He stated that the first objection which presented itself to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution.

ELDER DAVID BERNARD:—I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 30, 1891.

THE NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

This great body of teachers met this year at Toronto, Canada. This city is beautifully situated on Lake Ontario, near its western extremity. It contains about 200,000 people, and is fairly well-built. Stores, shops, residences, colleges, and churches, stand on broad, straight streets, which rise from the lake shore, or lie along the bay. The finest buildings are the churches and the colleges. Of the latter there are quite a number. Toronto University, Wyclif College, Knox College, Trinity College, McAllester College, and others. These colleges are what we should call theological seminaries, while the university is what we should call a college, with perhaps some university attachments. The buildings for these schools are large, beautiful and well-appointed; they are noble monuments to the public spirit and intelligence of those who have erected them.

The arrangements for city travel are not of the highest order. There are no cable or electric lines. The old-fashioned horse-cars, some single, without conductors, and others for two horses, having them, are still used. Omnibuses are scarce, while hacks and cabs are more frequently seen. The water for the city is distributed from reservoirs which lie on the high ground, 220 feet above the city. In the fire department no engines are used, the pressure being sufficient to throw streams over the highest buildings. Hose carts and hook and ladder companies only are required. The houses, both public and private, are built generally of brick or stone, frame buildings being very rare.

The people are more restful, less hurried, and more courteous to strangers, than are we. If you ask the way to a point of public interest, the gentleman to whom you speak will often go several blocks out of his way to show you, and may join you for a walk to your destination. Their speakers are, as a rule, stronger in matter and less happy in manner than our own. Some of them have the English, nervous, hitching delivery to perfection. It would be no more than fair to acknowledge, however, that one of our United States professors, representing a celebrated Eastern university, also acquired a bad pre-eminence in this direction. The whole tone of the people was kindly. Military bands, numbering about forty pieces each, gave concerts three evenings in the Queen's Park, and at the same time in the Horticultural Gardens. One of them was called the band of the "Royal Grenadiers," and the other the band of "The Queen's Own." They play very evenly, and are said to do excellent work when massed. The concerts were enjoyed by thousands of people, the papers saying that there had never been such crowds present in the parks. A very pleasant peculiarity of these Toronto resorts is the absence of the "Keep off the Grass" signals, which are one of the chief adornments for which United States taxpayers are required to pay. I do not remember to have seen one such board in either of these beautiful parks. Hundreds and thousands of quiet, contented men, women and children loitered about under the trees and walked hither and thither at their own will. There was much less display and much more comfort than is found in our city breathing places of similar sort.

The papers estimated the teachers present at twenty thousand, which was probably twenty-five per cent too high. I think that fifteen thousand would be a fair statement. The day sessions were held in "the Pavilion" of the "Horticultural Gardens." The evening sessions filled a large rink, seating some 5,000 persons. Meetings of various departments were held in the Normal School building, and in various churches. The department of Higher Education met in the vestry of the Metropolitan M. E. church, a stately edifice, situated in a beautiful park which occupied an entire square.

The attendance on this section was unusually good. Nearly 100 were registered as members, and more than twice that number were usually in attendance. President Stanley Hall, of Clark University; Prof. E. J. James, of the University of Pennsylvania; Prof. Harms, of Harvard; President Garst, of Otterbein; Prof. Hall, of Oberlin, President Mills, of Earlham; Prof. Butler, of Columbia; Prof. Sanford, of Stanford University; Prof. Adams, of Johns Hopkins, and scores of others from colleges and universities were with us.

There were three sessions of the department, and two Round Table conferences, which were practically extensions of its work. It goes without saying, that there were decided differences of opinion, but there was a kindly spirit throughout, and much good was an evident result. At some future time I will endeaver to outline the leading discussions. The length of this paper will not permit that duty. It would not be well, however, to close this account of things seen and heard without mention of the noble address of President Gates, the new presiding officer at Amherst. It was a splendid testimony to the work of Jesus Christ, that great Instructor, whose words and works still enlighten, comfort and enthuse the choicest spirits among men.

THE LONDON INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL.

The Congregational Council in London, Eng., noticed last week, continued to develop the marked influence of the American delegates as manifested in the great unanimity with which their addresses were received and their sentiments indorsed. The paper read by Rev. Dr. Brand, of Oberlin, on "Modern Unbelief," contained, as one report expresses it, "a practical and sound admonition that Christians must learn to accept new truth without imagining that its acceptance involves sacrifice of old truth. Truth cannot be self-destructive. If man's faculties had been given to him perfected, had all scientific knowledge been implied in revelation, the world would have had little to do. We should not be men but gods. It hasbeen the great mission of imperfect human intelligence to improve itself, to seize upon all means and methods by which larger knowledge can be had in every field of unexhausted inquiry." This position, however, is subject to modification, since what may appear to be truth will be found to be otherwise when tested by the Gospel. Science is not a safe guide. Belief in the revealed Word of God may be strengthened by the revelations of science, but science should never be substituted for Bible truths, even when it fully indorses them. One of the clearest and most satisfying contributions to the council was the description by Dr. Fisk, of this city, of the education of Congregational ministers in the United States. In Congregational discipline right of individual judgment is emphasized more than in any other denomination commonly deemed orthodox. Liberty thus guaranteed finds gracious and wholesome vent in breadth, courage and consistency of views on all questions.

A special to the Advance of this city, says: "The International Council, just closed, has been a great success. The results have been so valuable that it was the unanimous opinion that the idea should not be abandoned, and it was voted to hold a similar council in America in the near future. English hospitality to the guests has been unbounded, every want being provided for, and the cordiality of greeting being shown in banquets and receptions, and in many other ways. American speakers have made a most favorable impression, their bright and forcible style being a revelation to Englishmen. A majority of the delegates now go to the Continent to be present at the unveiling of the memorial tablet to John Robinson at Leyden."

FRAUDULENT HISTORY.

"The foolishness of one age becomes its history in the next." So said the late Elihu B. Washburne. Thus the rise of speculative Masonry at the Apple Tree Tavern, in England, in 1717, has enveloped the order, in this century, with legends and traditions that pretend to trace its antiquity to the ages near the flood. And this without a shadow of proof beyond the adoption of the ancient heathen mysteries by the order—a borrowed antiquity that does it no credit. Another instance, that came near branding the fame of good old Cotton Mather with infamy, has recently been exposed. It came in the form of an alleged letter from the old Puritan, proposing a scheme to capture William Penn and his crew and sell them as slaves. The publication of this letter, not long since, was accepted as a seal of its genuineness, and it became a text for several eloquent pulpit orators, and it is stated that Rev. Heber Newton became quite enthused with the "exposure." Later developments distinctly show that this remarkable fiction (for it was nothing else) originated with F. R. Shunk, a clever newspaper writer and a son-in-law of Judge Jeremiah S. Black, about twenty years ago, in the Easton (Pa.) Argus. The New England antiquarians, however, soon gave it its quietus by declaring it an unmitigated falsehood. Fortunately, when its revival recently occurred, its former refutation was remembered and it will not now, it is believed, pass into the history of the country in this century, whatever its fate hereafter. It is said to have been a very clever fraud, and a very narrow escape of Mather's reputation.

MR. WEED NEVER RECANTED.

[Answer to an article in the Voice of Masonry for July, asserting Hon. Thurlow Weed's inconstancy to his original views of the Morgan Masonic murder. Mr. Weed stands fully vindicated and true to his first convictions.]

BOSTON, July 23, 1891.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I can speak from a personal knowledge of some things stated in the article appearing in the Voice of Masonry for July.

Whether, as stated in that article, Hon. Thurlow Weed loaned money to build the Masonic Temple in New York or not, I do not know, but as to his views of the Masonic order I have personal and positive knowledge. His aversion to Masonry continued until the day of his death, and any assertion to the contrary is a libel and slander upon his honorable name. One of the strongest statements he ever prepared, showing the murderous, persecuting record of the sworn brotherhood, was written in September, 1882, and sworn to in my presence and the presence of others in his library, No. 12 Twelfth street, New York, on the 28th day of September, only a few weeks before his death. You will find this document of over thirty pages, written by his daughter as he dictated, among the papers of the N. C. A. Just subsequent to his decease the N. C. A. had a hundred thousand copies printed and circulated, and the substance of his statements was printed in many leading papers at the time. This tract you can supply from your office, or I will furnish it to any one desiring it who will send five cents in stamps to pay postage to me, at 218 Columbus avenue, Boston, Mass.

In an extended interview on the subject, Mr. Weed related to me his experience in discussing the order, and how he had been followed by an unscrupulous and relentless persecution from the time he printed a single paragraph in his paper, in 1826, concerning the abduction of Morgan. He told how the order was used in the defeat of Hon. William H. Seward at the Chicago Convention, where Abraham Lincoln was nominated for President, and gave instances of its interference in governmental and military affairs during the war of the Rebellion. He was apprehensive of serious complications in State affairs growing out of its secret, unscrupulous schemings for power and place, and wished to leave his lasting testimony and warning to the American people.

If the author of the statement that Mr. Weed recanted is ignorant of the facts, he discredits his own intelligence, since means of information are at hand. If it is a willful slander upon the fair fame of a dead patriot, the author of such base calumny merits only contempt and detestation from every good citizen, whether in or outside of the secret lodge. When an institution is compelled to perpetuate its own existence by slandering the dead and insulting the intelligence of the living, it is time that, Judas-like, it should go to its own place.

OBLIGATION OF A PRINTERS' UNION.

Our Washington agent was recently permitted to copy the following oath of allegiance from the lodge-book of the Wilkes Barre (Pa.) Typographical Union, No. 187. It is mainly interesting as showing that the minor secret societies, like their big brothers, the Masons, make the rule of obedience to lodge mandates the most prominent feature of the obligation:

I (name) hereby solemnly and sincerely swear, or affirm, that I will not reveal any business, or proceeding of any meeting of this Union, or any other subordinate union to which I may hereafter be attached, unless by order of the Union, except to those whom I know to be members in good standing thereof; that I will, without equivocation, or evasion, and to the best of my ability, abide by the constitution, by-laws, and the adopted scale of prices; that I will at all times abide by the decisions of the majority, and use all honorable means within my power to procure employment for printers of any Union, working under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, in preference to others; that my fidelity to the Union and my duties to the members thereof shall in no case be interfered with, or trenched upon, by any allegiance that I may now, or hereafter, owe to any other organization, social, political, or religious, secret or otherwise; that I will belong to no society or combination composed wholly, or partly, of printers, with intent or purpose to interfere with the trade regulations, or influence, or control, the legislation of this Union; that I will not wrong a brother member or see him or her wronged, if in my power to prevent. To all of which I pledge my most sacred honor.

—Obituaries of Dr. G. J. McHenry and of Bro. A. F. Smith will appear in next week's issue.

—The number of fraudulent insurance companies, under various attractive titles, but technically classed as "skin" institutions, seems to increase. They often appear as benevolent schemes, under the guise of fraternal financial co-operation, and quite as frequently seem to be very successful in cheating unsuspecting persons. One, recently operating in West Virginia and Philadelphia, was broken up by officers of the law, which is said to have deluded 14,000 victims in New England, the Eastern and Central States. Some of these frauds have lodge attachments; others are secret only in the swindling operations of their managers. But in whatever guise there is secrecy in these concerns, it seems to carry with it the atmosphere of evil. They are best when avoided.

—We are indebted to S. A. Thompson, Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce at Duluth, Minn., for a copy (words and music) of his new patriotic song and chorus—"Flag of a Nation Free." It embodies the idea that a grand display of the aurora borealis, or northern lights, with its streamers of red and white in the starry blue sky, would suggest a beautiful and poetical derivation of the star-spangled banner. This conception is embodied in the first stanza; the second and third refer to the wars of the Revolution and the Rebellion, while the fourth suggests the perpetuation of the "old flag" until the Judgment-day. The libretto is stirring and striking, and the music will serve to introduce it into homes haunted with the spirit of melody. It may be obtained from the author and composer.

—The fifth annual Corn Palace festival will begin at Sioux City, Iowa, October 1, 1891, closing on the 17th of the same month. The Palace of this year will be of a larger and grander construction than its predecessors. The building will cover a space of 380 by 150 feet, and the center tower is to be 200 feet in height. As usual, it will be covered, outside and inside, with products of the field, corn predominating, ingeniously and fancifully arranged. It is in form lofty, with broken lines, pinnacles, buttresses, bridges, gables, ornamental windows, etc. The management, besides a liberal display of native products, has arranged for the exhibition of a great variety from Central and South America, including over forty varieties of fine woods, and about twenty-five varieties of tropical plants, with Indian relics, local views, souvenirs, etc., from those countries. The Mexican Band, comprising 56 performers, of fine reputation, has been engaged to furnish music for the exhibition. We shall refer again to this subject in a later issue.

—The ninth annual camp meeting of the Sandusky Union Holiness Association will be held (D. V.) at Portage, Wood county, Ohio, commencing on Thursday, August 13, 1891, and continue over two Sabbaths. The grounds have been refitted and repaired and will be lighted with natural gas, adding much to its convenience. The devotional work of the camp meeting will be conducted by an able corps of ministers and evangelists. Rev. H. Ackers, president, W. M. church, Big Prairie, O.; Rev. T. K. Doty, editor Christian Harvester, Cleveland; Bishop N. Castle, D.D., U. B. church, will be present first Sabbath; Bishop H. Becker, D.D., U. B. church, will be present second Sabbath; Wm. Dillon, editor Christian Conservator, Dayton; Rev. C. R. Dunbar (singer), Columbus, and other able workers are expected to be present to make the occasion both interesting and profitable. The object of the meetings will be the salvation of sinners and sanctification of believers, which will bring about a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord. All are invited to lay aside worldly care and come. Sleeping room will be provided free, and provisions reasonable. Persons desiring to rent or build tents, address L. Canfield, Scotch Ridge, Ohio. Railroads will make deductions for those who attend.

—Dr. Thwing writes to us from Brooklyn that he is spending his summer at home, enjoying a restful quiet in his study and in Brooklyn Library, such as cannot be had in travel or in summer boarding houses. He says: "'Outdoor Life in the Orient,' a companion volume to his 'Outdoor Life in Europe,' is now finished and in the hands of its publishers, Hurst & Co., N. Y. 'Ex-Oriente,' a study of Asiatic Thought and Life, is nearly all electrotyped, and will appear in early autumn. Its aim is to show the material conditions which form the anatomy of national life; the characteristics of the Oriental; the signs of a rejuvenescence of the East, and some divine and human factors of success in such a resuscitation. The value of Oriental studies to the preacher, teacher and physician who go as pioneers of Western civilization, cannot be overestimated. We are rapidly extending the material domination of the Anglo-Saxon race. Its moral supremacy should keep pace with its material conquests. But 250 copies will be printed on large paper as the first edition, for subscribers, one dollar each, and for libraries. The next book after this is one on India, like that on China and Japan, noticed above, which will make three of the Outdoor series. The 'Ex-Oriente' is for students and missionary candidates."

—The annual convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, to remain in session ten days, began at Lake Bluff, Lake Co., Ill., on Thursday of last week. The delegates were treated to an animated reception and musical entertainment on Wednesday evening. The program includes musical and physical culture. Every afternoon there are classes in physical culture under the instruction of Miss Lydia Newcomb. Each evening, except two set apart for entertainments, and Saturday, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, of Michigan, conducts a parliamentary drill. All exercises are open to both ladies and gentlemen. Each morning except Saturday there is a "children's hour," from 9 to 9:30, under the direction of Mrs. Addie Northam Fields. The principal control of these meetings is merged in Miss Esther Pugh, president, Evanston; Mrs. C. B. Buell, vice-president, Evanston; Mrs. Addie Fields, corresponding secretary, Petersburg, Ind.; Miss Lois Russell, recording secretary, Eau Claire, Wis.; Miss Mary G. Hay, treasurer, Indianapolis; Miss Mary Allen West, Chicago, and Miss Helen L. Hood, Chicago. The vice-presidents are Miss Frances E. Willard and Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, Illinois; Mrs. Judge East, Tennessee; Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, Massachusetts; Mrs. Emily Curtis, Wisconsin; Mrs. J. R. Nichols, Indiana, and Miss Lydia Newcomb, Michigan. A large number of sojourners from Chicago and elsewhere is registered at the Bluff.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Clarence Three Stars, a Sioux Indian, has been appointed trader at the Pine Ridge Agency, N. D.

—Mr. C. T. Yerkes will erect a bronze equestrian monument of General Sheridan in Union Park, Chicago.

—Frederick C. Havemeyer, organizer of the Havemeyer sugar refinery in Brooklyn, is dying at Throg's Neck, N. Y.

—Mr. Orrington Lunt, of Evanston, has donated $50,000 to the Northwestern University for the erection of a library building.

—Henry M. Stanley, the explorer, has met with a serious accident. According to information from Switzerland, where Mr. Stanley is staying with his wife, the explorer has fractured his lower thigh-bone by accidentally slipping while mountain climbing.

—At Chautauqua a banquet was given to Dr. William E. Harper, President of the University of Chicago, who leaves for Europe Thursday.

—The Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks will be consecrated as Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Massachusetts in Trinity church, Boston, Oct. 14.

—Miss C. B. Buell, of Evanston, Ill., was elected President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Tuesday, at Mountain Lake Park, Md.

—Emperor William of Germany slipped on board his yacht, during a rainstorm, and so injured his right knee as to lay him up for a time.

—The engagement of Miss Mary Lincoln, eldest daughter of Mr. Robert T. Lincoln, United States Minister to Great Britain, to Mr. Charles Isham, of New York, is announced.

—Rev. B. A. Imes, of Memphis, who, it will be remembered, spoke strongly in favor of anti-secrecy before the Convention of the A. M. A., a year or two ago, has accepted control of the Camp Nelson Academy in Kentucky, at which place he is also to serve as pastor of a church. He possesses a fund of talent that will admirably aid him in this arduous work.

—We were favored with a call, a few days ago, from Rev. G. W. Griffith, pastor of the Free Methodist church at Bingham, Iowa. Mr. Griffith, in harmony with the tenets of the denomination which he represents, in the courage of his own convictions, and in his desire to preach the whole Gospel of Christ, openly denounces the evils of the lodge system.

—A note from Bro. H. L. Kellogg, at Auburn, Cal., July 21, says:- "I find enough to do here. When not hard at work in the garden or about our old place, I must get ready for Sabbath work. I have spoken three of the fine Sabbaths we have been here, and have organized a new Sunday-school a mile and a half away." Readers of the Cynosure will be pleased with this news, which indicates our brother's continued zeal and activity in the work of reform. An article from his pen is filed for insertion next week.

—Rev. Dr. B. Carradine, whose recent revival in St. Louis was noticed in this column, two weeks ago, disclaims the printed report that 150 of his people had entered into a condition of "spiritual sanctification." The language is that of a reporter for some other paper than this, who interpolated the word "spiritual" for reasons best known to himself. The Doctor admits the sanctification of the 150, but believes, as every true Christian must, that sanctification is the specific work of the Holy Spirit, and necessarily only "spiritual."

—Rev. Alexander Thomson, whose removal from his recent home and pastorate to another at Washburn, Mich., formed a paragraph in the columns of a late issue of this paper, wishes us to state that the church over which he now presides is not the largest in Washburn; that it is only a small city, and that the credit of the good work performed during his ministrations at Bartlett, Ill., is to be shared by the church to which he preached. In making these statements we fear that our brother, with his characteristic modesty, has underestimated his labors and influence.

EARNESTNESS THAT COUNTED.

I am in earnest. I will not equivocate; I will not excuse; I will not retreat a single inch; and I will be heard. The apathy of the people is enough to make every statue leap from its pedestal, and to hasten the resurrection of the dead.

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.

VINDICATION OF MRS. SHEPHERD.

At a meeting of the Loyal Women of American Liberty yesterday, resolutions were adopted denouncing all those who have arrayed themselves against Mrs. Margaret Shepherd, founder of the society. "Mrs. Shepherd's moral character in Chicago," the resolution reads, "has received our careful attention, and the charges made against her have been disproved to our entire satisfaction."—Chicago Herald, July 22.

THE HOME.

BEYOND.

Beyond life's toils and cares,
Its hopes and joys, its weariness and sorrow,
Its sleepless nights, its days of smiles and tears,
Will be a long, sweet life, unmarked by years,
One bright unending morrow.

Beyond time's troubled stream,
Beyond the chilling waves of death's dark river,
Beyond life's lowering clouds and fitful gleams,
Its dark realities and brighter dreams,
A beautiful forever.

No aching hearts are there,
No tear-dimmed eye, no form by sickness wasted,
No cheek grown pale through penury or care,
No spirits crushed beneath the woes they bear,
No sighs for bliss untasted.

No sad farewell is heard,
No lonely wail for loving ones departed,
No dark remorse is there, o'er memories stirr'd,
No smile of scorn, no harsh or cruel word,
To grieve the broken-hearted;

No long, dark night is there,
No light from sun or silvery moon is given;
But Christ, the Lamb of God, all bright and fair,
Illumes the city with effulgence rare,
The glorious light of heaven!

No mortal eye hath seen
The glories of that land beyond the river,
Its crystal lakes, its fields of living green,
Its fadeless flowers, and the unchanging sheen
Around the throne forever.

Ear hath not heard the song
Of rapturous praise within that shining portal.
No heart of man hath dreamed what joys belong
To that redeemed and happy blood-washed throng,
All glorious and immortal.

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

[Copyrighted by "The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association," 161 LaSalle St., Chicago. Printed by permission.]

VII.

That night before we went home, we went in to see Mrs. Clarke. She met us at the door, her face as bright as ever I had seen it.

"Jim's come back!" she said, "did you know?"

"Yes, mother told me," I answered, for we were not going to let her know how the boys had followed him.

"I'm so glad," said Grace, squeezing the woman's hand. "He'll never go away again, will he?" she asked, with meaning in her voice.

"No, not if I can help it," answered the woman. "He has been drinking hard, though. But he says he won't touch another drop; he promised me."

"And did you promise him?" asked Grace again, with that deep under-thought, as she looked straight into Mrs. Clarke's eyes.

"Why, of course I won't. I guess I know better now," and she gave her head a toss. Grace shrank a little as if hurt, and her cheeks, so pale, grew flushed. But she went on bravely with what she had to say:

"I don't mean to be rude,—but I think—you know you said it was hard for him not to drink—don't you think he needs more help than just a promise?"

"What do you mean?" asked Mrs. Clarke.

"Don't you think he needs God to help him?"

The question was put so simply, so gently, so earnestly, I do not see how Mrs. Clarke could answer as she did. "Oh, I don't know," she said, shortly. "I guess if he's half a man he can just make up his mind to quit drinking and quit." Then as she saw the grieved look on Grace's face, —"There, there, child! I didn't mean to hurt your feelings. You're good with religion or without it. I wish I was half as good as you are."

The gravity on Grace's face deepened.

"Oh, I wish you loved him," she said, impulsively. Mrs. Clarke stooped and kissed her, as the children came running in, Sophia straight to Grace, and my pet into my arms.

"Oh, Drace, papa's tum home—he has!" said Sophia, jumping up and down, while wee Delia clapped her hands, and clinging to my dress, said over and over in baby language, "Pap-pap home! Pap-pap home!"

We went away glad for the joy that had come to the home, and Grace, at least, wishing there might be a higher, deeper joy there.

"What is your plan for to-morrow, Grace?" I asked her as we loitered along before separating till the next day.

"I'll tell you when to-morrow comes."

"Not before?"

"No, I want to think some more about it."

"Do you think the Society can do any good?"

"Yes, I know it can, if——"

"If what?"

"If they're in earnest."

"Don't you think they are? Surely they meant it when they promised to help," I said.

"Yes, I'm sure they did. I don't think many of them know what needs to be done—how dreadful some people are—and they only think now that it's fun to get together as we have lately."

"Do you know what needs to be done?"

"I've been thinking about it. Papa's been telling me some things. If we could get just a few people to stop drinking, or to promise never to touch any drink, it would be some good."

"Do you mean sign a pledge?"

"I guess if they learned to hate drink and to love God, they'd get along without a pledge; but it might help some one else to know they'd signed one."

"Did you ever sign one, Grace?"

"Yes, papa and I signed one together when I was a little girl."

"Is that what you're going to say to them to-morrow?"

"About pledges?"

"Yes."

"I'm not sure yet. Maybe when the time comes I won't say what I meant to. Would you sign one, Fanny?"

"No! I sha'n't ever need to."

"You sometimes taste beer and wine?"

"Why, yes, but ever so little. Mother never signed a pledge, and she never drank too much. I guess I can be as good as she is."

"Isn't she good?" said Grace, enthusiastically, to soothe me, I think, for she saw I was a little ruffled. If there was one thing I hated more than another, it was to be bound by a promise not to. It always made me want to do the very thing I had promised about. Besides, I did like the little tastes of wine I used to get out of mother's occasional glass, and what harm could it ever do any one?

The next day not one of the new Society was absent. There were fourteen girls and eleven boys. I wish there were time to tell all that every one said and did, for we were staunch friends, many of us having been together in our classes for several years.

"The meeting is called to order," shouted Tom, and to order it came after he had repeated the remark a few times. We were all seated in a triple semi-circle about our President. I shall never forget how beautiful she looked. She had grown much thinner in the last few weeks, and was most of the time very white, but that day a lovely color was in her cheeks, and her eyes burned and glowed like great, dusky stars. When all were still, she became visibly embarrassed, and put out one hand until it rested in my lap. I could feel how hot and trembling it was. I think some hint of the truth, which they had not yet been told, came to the friends gathered about her that afternoon, awing them into unusual stillness. Just as I was beginning to think I could not bear to sit there another minute, Grace took tight hold of my hand and began in a low voice that shook a very little:

"I've been thinking so much about all the trouble that is made in the world by drink. Papa has been telling me some things. Fanny and I have seen a little of it. Gussie says she has, too. People hurt and kill each other. Women and little children starve, and sometimes in winter freeze to death, and it makes every one who touches it so wicked. We all said we'd help; wouldn't it be good to help people not to drink?"

No one spoke. The silence was too intense to mean indifference. In a few moments the earnest voice went on, gaining now in strength and steadiness.

"When any one once learns to drink it's awful hard to stop. Papa says—I've read it, too—that some of them try and try, but they can't leave off unless God helps them, and they don't all ask him. Can't we do something?"

"What can we do, Little Captain?"

It was Gussie Mills who spoke.

"I thought if we would all promise never to touch a drop of anything that makes people drunk, and would read our Bibles every day, and pray, —then we couldn't help but do some good."

Oh, the true, brave spirit that shone in those dark eyes and spoke in that gentle voice! I wondered how they would respond, and if she would be terribly hurt when some of them refused to do what she had hoped for and planned for.

She said no more,—she had said it all,—and sat there with downcast eyes, and cheeks from which the transient color had all fled.

After a while of waiting, Tom sprang to his feet, and before he could say a word, Gussie, who sat at the other end of the semi-circle, was on hers.

"I'll do all that," said Tom, in a clear, steady voice, "and I'll help every one I can to do it, too!"

"So will I!" said Gussie, walking over to Tom and standing beside him, shoulder to shoulder. He held out his hand to her and she grasped it. He extended the other to his friend Robert, who sat near him. A moment's hesitation, and Bob was up, too. It was growing intensely exciting. Grace was trembling from head to foot. She rose, still holding my hand. I tried to draw it away, but those thin fingers clung fast, and those dear eyes pleaded with me. Had I not already promised I would help her? Then, she leading, we joined the three standing side by side. One after another got up, and at last, without a word having been spoken after Gussie's "I will," we all stood in one close circle without a break, bound together by two thin, white hands.

"Little Captain, won't you write it out for us?" asked Gussie, in a husky voice.

Grace nodded assent; she could not speak. Somebody brought pen, ink, and the book in which we were to keep our records. Grace hesitated a little—it was not easy for her to express her thoughts in writing—but in a few minutes handed the book to Tom, who read aloud:

ENTRY II.

JUNE 11, 1878.

We promise never to drink anything intoxicating. We will read our Bibles every day, and pray, so that we may be able to help others.

By this time the little fingers were quite strong and quiet again, so that they wrote steadily, and the Little Captain signed her name, handing the pen to me next. For the second time the twenty-five names were written down, this time to a solemn promise.

This was the last of our gatherings in the big, dingy old play-room, with its rickety chairs and tables, for the next day was Closing Day, and we would meet in the Hall above. We were loth to break up, and too serious for our customary final frolic, so we were all in our seats again, chatting in undertone, when a voice said,

"I know some one wants helping."

The speaker's name was Johnnie McFarline, distinguished among us mainly for his imperturbable good nature, that took everything, from a flogging to a compliment, with the same good-humored shrug and smile, and an odd facility for forgetting—lessons, rules, everything. He meant well enough, but he "forgot," or else he "didn't think."

"Who is it, John? We're with you."

"I don't know as you can help, but I thought I'd tell you."

John was a good hand at talking, downright eloquent, sometimes, so we drew our chairs closer and waited for his story.

A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM.

The following is among the many touching incidents which occurred at the Big Rapids camp-meetings. The facts are kindly furnished us by a sister from Big Rapids. The incident occurred at one of the evening services. A mother was pressed by an earnest worker to come at once to the altar. She declined to do so. Her little seven-year-old daughter heard it, and with touching pathos pleaded: "O mamma, do come to Jesus. My Sunday-school teacher told me that if we would just open our hearts that Jesus would come in." Such eloquence the mother could not resist, and, melted, said: "Go and bring your papa and I will go." The father at first refused to come;

but tenderly, patiently and persistently the little one continued to plead, until touched by the Holy Spirit, and won by the wooings of his precious child, he went with her and kneeled by the side of his wife. The little one then threw her arms around their necks, and pleaded with them to love the Saviour. Under her touching appeals and the movings of the Holy Spirit the father's heart finally melted, and rising to his feet he said decisively:

"I will go to the altar with my wife."

He went; and there at the altar, as father and mother kneeled in deep contrition, their precious daughter pointing them to Jesus, was such a scene as seldom is beheld.

When she was made certain that her parents were converted, she said she wanted to sing.

She was permitted, and wiping the tears from her eyes, she was lifted upon the altar, and her voice, soft and sweet, floated on the night air as she sang the following words of childhood consecration:

"I washed my hands this morning,
Oh, very clean and white;
And let them go to Jesus
To work for him till night.
Little feet be careful now,
Where you take me to;
Anything for Jesus
Only let me do.

I set my eyes to watch him,
At my work or play;
But, little feet be careful now
Where you take me to;
Anything for Jesus,
Only let me do.

I set my ears to hear him,
At my work or play;
But, little feet be careful now,
Where you take me to;
Anything for Jesus,
Only let me do."

A stillness as of death came upon us. I think the windows of heaven must have opened and,

"Did I fancy it then, or was it in the air,
Stirred by the wings of an angel there
As she joyfully took her flight,
To carry the news to that throne of love,
And record that beautiful scene above
In letters of living light."

All hearts were touched, and another person was converted on that night who traced conviction to the words of this little child.

What an encouragement for Sunday-school teachers to keep faithfully sowing the Gospel seed, and for all Christian workers to keep persistently pressing the Gospel invitation.—Revivalist.

THE THREE SIEVES.

"O mamma," cried little Blanche Philpott, "I heard such a tale about Edith Howard! I did not think that she could be so very naughty. One"—

"My dear," interrupted Mrs. Philpott, "before you continue, we'll see if your story will pass the three sieves."

"What does that mean?" inquired Blanche.

"I will explain it. In the first place, is it true?"

"I suppose so. I got it from Miss White, and she is a great friend of Edith's."

"And does she show her friendship by telling tales of her? In the next place, though you can prove it, is it kind?"

"I did not mean to be unkind, but I am afraid it was. I would not like Edith to speak of me as I have of her."

"And is it necessary?"

"No, of course, mamma, there is no need for me to mention it at all."

"Then put a bridle on your tongue. If we can't speak well, speak not at all."—Good Words.

PRESCRIPTION FOR LAZINESS.

All physicians are not as frank as the doctor who, having been visited by a lazy man who complained of dyspepsia, gave him the following prescription:

Recipe:

Wood saw..... 1
Cords of Wood..... 5

Order: To be sawed into stove lengths within two weeks.

Nor are they so frank as another doctor, who was visited by a lady who said that she was constantly troubled with loss of sleep, loss of appetite and languor.

The doctor wrote her a prescription.

"Follow this faithfully," said he, "and you will be able to sleep and eat, and will feel as brisk as a child at play."

The lady took the prescription and went out. She had scarcely reached the stairway before she opened and read it, thus:

"Stop at the first shoe-store you come to, buy six pairs of boots, and wear them all out in three months!"—Youth's Companion.

WHAT BECAME OF A LIE.

First, somebody told it,
Then the room wouldn't hold it,
So the busy tongues rolled it
Till they got it outside;
When the crowd came across it,
And never once lost it,
But tossed it and tossed it
Till it grew long and wide.

This lie brought forth others,
Dark sisters and brothers,
And fathers and mothers—
A terrible crew;
And while headlong they hurried,
The people they flurried,
And troubled and worried,
As lies always do.

And so, evil-boded,
This monstrous LIE goaded,
Till at tast it exploded
In smoke and in shame;
When from mud and from mire
The pieces flew higher
And hit the sad liar,
And killed his good name!

TEMPERANCE.

THE CAUSES AND TREATMENT OF DRUNKENNESS.

In a recent number of the Independent, there was a very interesting symposium on the causes and treatment of inebriety. The papers are by men of large experience in the treatment of the intemperate, and their opinions are entitled to great weight. They differ very widely as to the nature of drunkenness, the treatment to be employed, and as to the results. This difference itself is a strong testimony as to the greatness of the evil and the terrible hold it has upon its unhappy victim.

Charles A. Bunting, manager of the Christian Home for Inebriates, says: "Drunkenness is not a disease; it is not hereditary, but a sin. This is shown by two-thirds of all who come to our home. One-half and more neither had intemperate parents nor grandparents. Association was the cause in two-thirds of all the cases we have had, showing conclusively that it is a habit acquired. In 1,290 instances the habit was acquired after coming of age and leaving the domestic fireside. If drunkenness is hereditary, why is it that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the boys catch the 'disease' and the girls do not?" He then quotes the superintendent of the Home for Little Wanderers in Boston: "Out of 5,700 children, more than half of whom were boys, he could recall but one boy who had become a drunkard," a statement that could scarcely be made if drunkenness is due largely to the habits of parents.

In Mr. Bunting's view, the grace of God is the only remedy for intemperance. "Nothing but God can meet the needs of the drunkard. No medicine can eradicate the cravings of the victim of alcoholic beverages. It is not a disease, and Christ can and will destroy all desire for intoxicants, if the sufferer will apply to him for aid." He then details the treatment in the home of which he has charge, and the results. Kindness, good, wholesome food, and, above all, the Gospel of Christ, are the remedies. The patient is treated as a sinning man, and the grace of God is presented in all the richness of divine love. In an experience of thirteen years, with over three thousand cases, two-thirds have remained steadfast.

Dr. L. D. Mason, consulting physician to the Fort Hamilton Home for Inebriates, says: "A man may inherit the drinking habit, or he may acquire it through social tastes or environment, and so produce a condition of the nervous system that will beget a diseased condition. . . . The underlying cause of inebriety has been traced to heredity." This tendency to a habit may be counteracted and overcome. Nervous diseases and injuries to the brain also sometimes lead to intemperance. "The proper place for an inebriate is an asylum. Home treatment is a failure." Tonics, massage, a liberal diet, and as cheerful surrounding as the circumstances will permit, are the remedies. To this must be added mental and moral encouragement. Any debilitating disease of which the patient may be suffering must be cured. In a word, "His system must be toned up to a good average normal standard." As to the results, he says that of 4,663 cases, "forty-three per cent are doing well."

Police Justice James T. Kilbreth, whose opportunities of seeing drunk people are certainly very large, says: "I think that the chronic drinking habit among the poor is to be attributed to laziness, idleness, and, to a very large extent, to the absence of social comforts and agreeable surroundings which are enjoyed by persons in better circumstances. Among women drunkenness is caused, very largely, by laziness. It is to be remembered that the saloon is the poor man's club." These are sad words: "In my judicial experience I have seen very few instances of reformation in men who have become thoroughly addicted to the use of liquor."

Dr. Charles L. Dana, visiting physician to Bellevue Hospital, says that about 3,000 cases are sent to the hospital annually, and about one-third of these are women. The ages run from twelve to thirty, but the decade from thirty-one to forty includes the most. Indoor workers suffer the most. Mechanics, artisans, and small tradesmen furnish the largest number. About one-half are Irish. In the treatment the liquor is stopped at once, and then each person must be treated according to the features of his case. There is no remedy that can be relied upon. The advertised remedies are commonly worthless. The drugs that physicians use to effect a cure are such powerful remedies as strychnia, nitro-glycerine, digitalis, etc., and they must be used with great care. On one point his words are very emphatic: "There is no salvation in malt liquors and light wines, as has often been supposed." Among the causes mentioned by some is the excited life we live. We are impatient, and in a hurry; we attempt to crowd too much in a day. The result is exhaustion, with a resort to stimulants to revive the flagging system.

These witnesses occupy different positions. Their observations do not cover, altogether, the same classes. They all speak the truth, but no one covers all the truth. We think that it is beyond question that many inherit a tendency to the use of stimulants. There is a tremendous power in our social habits. Our busy, hurried life, the intense strain upon the nervous system carries thousands into the use of stimulants. But withal intemperance is a sin. Any treatment that ignores this must fail. The Gospel remedy is the great remedy. Legislation has its place and its use. When both drunkenness and drink selling are placed on the criminal list, much will have been done to hedge about the weak and to restrain the evil disposed. The education of the people as to the nature and the terrible results of alcoholic drinks will do much. But most of all, and over all, we must use the Word of God as the gospel of divine love to awaken a sense of sin, and to turn the heart away from the terrible vice. Here as elsewhere it is true, "By grace are ye saved, through faith."—United Presbyterian.

The National Prohibition Committee is taking steps to test the constitutionality of the new ballot law in Missouri. This law, like recently enacted measures in certain other States, embraces provisions that discriminate against parties small in number. The national committee believes that it can be overthrown.

Friends of the prohibition policy in Baltimore have lately been distributing a circular showing that the local saloons cost the city directly $456,171 in excess of the revenue received from them last year. Every saloon in this land inflicts a ten-fold greater financial burden than it relieves by its license fee.—Connecticut Home.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The religion of work.—v. 17. Christ was now beginning to feel the first outburst of that malignant rage and hatred which was to pursue him to his death. The priestly party, jealous of his growing popularity, was anxious to prove him guilty of some infringement of their law. They now pretended that his healing of a life-long cripple on the Sabbath was such a violation; and the first verse of our lesson contains, probably in the briefest synopsis, his answer to their charge: "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." The Father was the divine pattern for the Son, even as the Son himself is the divine pattern for us. God ceased from the work of creation when he made man, but this does not mean that he ceased from all forms of work. What inexhaustible activity of power and intelligence it must take merely to support the life on this one little planet. God, in his providence and watchful care over all his creatures, is working continually, and has so constituted us that we can be happy only in a life of intelligent activity. It follows, then, that the Sabbath rightly kept is not a lazy day; and also that there can be no right keeping of it until we enter into God's idea of for what the Sabbath was meant. It is only then that we enter into his rest (Heb. 4: 3), and make all our days, in a certain sense, Sabbath-days.

2. Christ one with the Father.—vs. 18–20. A new charge, more serious even than Sabbath-breaking, was now brought against Jesus—that of blasphemy. As this was one of the few capital offences under Moses' law, Christ's declaration that he was "one with the Father" gave his enemies the chance they longed for; and from that hour they strove to compass his death. Under Roman rule they had no right to inflict capital punishment, but they were continually endeavoring to excite the public mind against him; and on the occasions when they tried to stone him, they evidently hoped to make it appear that he was killed in a popular tumult, of which the government would not be likely to take any cognizance, esteeming it only as an outbreak of religious fanaticism. Christ's only answer to the charge is to reiterate his statement in even a bolder form. The cause of righteousness often demands that we speak out, fearless of the prejudices and opposition we may arouse, or the enemies we shall make by so doing. He is the faithful and true Witness, and if we are to be followers of him in any true sense, we must not shrink from giving testimony to the truth, both by words and actions, remembering that there never was a time when such witnesses were so loudly demanded as now. The claim of oneness with the Father necessarily involves the doing of similar works; and even greater than any he had already done were yet to follow. The raising of the dead may here be referred to, but the greatest of all Christ's works were those that he wrought on the souls of men. Of all miracles, what so wonderful as the giving of life to one spirit really dead? And yet daily is this miracle repeated, that we may "marvel" and believe. At another time Christ declares: "My Father that is in me he doeth the works." It was through the mysterious indwelling power of God in his human soul that he did such wonders; and yet it was vastly different from the spirit as manifested by prophets of old; for this power was his own, to use according as he willed. We touch here upon a mystery that no human speculation can ever fathom;—one of the unanswered questions that need all eternity for their solution. The right to judge men, and the power of life and death, which is an essential part of this right, belongs only to God as the King of the universe, and the transferring of them to his Son is a plain command that we honor the Son even as we honor the Father. It would be so understood in the case of an earthly king who should give his son a share in the government. To treat the prince with contempt would be the greatest proof possible of disloyalty to the sovereign. In the light of this text, how can any Christian continue to be a Mason or an Odd-fellow after he finds that the name of his Saviour is deliberately left out of their ritual? It is true that a prayer may contain his name many times and yet be false and formal; and, on the other hand, may not contain it at all, yet be sincerely addressed to "God in Christ." But this argument, when used by defenders of the lodge, is the merest sophistry. The point lies in the fact that the lodge intentionally omits his name, with the avowed purpose of keeping its ritual clear of anything which might offend those of its members who do not believe in him;—thus honoring men before God, whom they insult by this contemptuous treatment of his Son. "The hour is coming." It may seem a long way off, but every pulse-beat, though full of bounding life, brings us nearer to it. Let us live as in constant view of it, remembering that we shall have a just Judge;—just, because he shares our humanity on the one hand, and on the other has no will but the will of his Father, who is infinite in his goodness, wisdom, mercy and truth.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

has done a grand work ever since its inauguration. That work has made a wonderful growth. In its last report is made the following exhibit: One hundred and sixty-six permanent publications were added to the Society's list last year, of which 137 were English, 4 German, 5 Spanish, 6 Italian, 1 Swedish, 1 Portuguese, 7 Polish, and 5 Bohemian. The aggregate circulation of the periodicals was 2,321,300. Gifts were granted to Foreign Missions for use at stations to the amount of $9,910.29. In response to appeals, Christian literature to the value of $23,176.30 was distributed. The colporteurs, fifteen in number, made 113,683 family visits, held 3,542 public meetings, and circulated 84,757 volumes. The benevolent department has received from gifts and legacies $85,575.87, from sales by colporteurs, $24,803.24, which, with $14,350.03 allowed to it as a discount by the business department, $20,509.05 received from investment, and $6,779.79 in treasury April 1, 1890, makes a total of $151,016.90. The total amount expended was $124,702.52. The business department has received from sales a total of $166,422.37; from rents, $28,979.73; from sundries, $25,876.37, which, with temporary loans of $37,500, makes a total of $258,777.47. It has expended in manufacturing, purchasing, and issuing publications, $175,205.65; depositories, $27,660.69; taxes, special repairs, and life interest, $16,354.20, and for other expenditures, itemized in the Assistant Treasurer's report, $13,570.53.

BAPTIST.

—There are two Philadelphia Baptist preachers who are in the twenty-seventh year of their pastorates.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The South Brooklyn Congregational church, Rev. A. J. Lyman, pastor, recently received fifty-five persons into its membership, forty-eight of whom united on confession of their faith. This is the largest number that has united with that church at one time for a quarter of a century.

—Pilgrim church, Englewood, Chicago, has honored its name by making a gift of a costly pulpit and three heavy Gothic upholstered chairs to its namesake Pilgrim church, Indianapolis. The latter church is meeting its pledges for the new building with zeal.

—July 5 the church at Naugatuck, Conn., held a reunion of all its members who joined the church fifty years ago. At the morning service Rev. C. S. Sherman, who was pastor of the church twenty years, assisted in the service, and spoke feelingly of the memories called up by the occasion.

—Dr. George H. Wells, whom Plymouth church, Minneapolis, has just called to its pastorate, is a graduate of Chicago Seminary, a Congregationalist by preference, but has preached to a Presbyterian church in Montreal for twenty years.

—The new church building at Benton Harbor, Mich., is of brick, somewhat Gothic in style, with steeple 106 feet high and gables at the base of it. The auditorium is 58 by 69 and will seat about 600. It is in amphitheatrical style, the seats of finely polished oak.

DUTCH REFORMED.

—The Reformed church (Dutch) in America had the Eighty-fifth Annual Meeting of its General Synod recently at Asbury Park, New Jersey. The principal question before the Synod was that of a Federal Union with the Reformed church (German) in the United States. A joint commission of the two churches had prepared a plan of union, and it was adopted by the Dutch church at this meeting, and also by the Synod of the German church in special session at Philadelphia. The denominations retain their identity and discipline, but unite in mission work, new educational enterprises, Sunday-school interests (including libraries and lesson helps), and such matters as shall be determined from time to time.

JEWISH.

—The leading Jewish organs of Chicago have taken up the question of the Hebrew Sabbath and are giving it a pretty thorough airing. As a result there are strong prospects of the Jews of that city abandoning their Saturday worship and making Sunday their sacred day.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Work on the new Methodist University at Topeka, Kansas, will be pushed forward this season, and one wing at least of the building will be ready for use next fall.

—The Woman's Board of Missions of the Methodist church South, is to have a Bible and training school for missionary workers at Kansas City.

—Mrs. Mary Grant Cramer, sister of Gen. Grant, delivered interesting temperance addresses on a recent Sunday at the Centenary and First Methodist Episcopal churches, Syracuse.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Rev. W. M. Taylor, D.D., has recently celebrated the thirty-first anniversary of his successful pastorate of the Presbyterian church at Mt. Jackson, Pa.

—Dr. Sara C. Seward, formerly of Florida, N. Y., died suddenly from cholera at Allahabad, India, on June 15 or 16. She was the daughter of the late George W. Seward, the youngest brother of ex-Gov. William H. Seward. She studied medicine in Philadelphia. In 1871 she responded to the appeal for female doctors to practice among the women of India. For seventeen years Miss Seward worked in connection with the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—It seems likely that the great Protestant Episcopal church of New York City is going to be erected. Up to the present date besides the site $2,500,000 have been contributed. This amount of money would build at least three hundred ordinary churches.

—A Philadelphian, recently deceased, left $10,000 to be used to keep a lamp perpetually burning in his memory on an Episcopal church altar.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Rev. E. M. Smith, pastor of the Reformed Presbyteriau church, Baltimore, has resigned as the result of the recent expulsion by the Synod of five young ministers.

—The statistics of the Covenanter church, submitted to the last Synod, contain the following items: Congregations, 127; ministers, 123; elders, 503; communicants, 11,272; number attending Sabbath-school, 13,011; baptisms, 363; net increase, 31; contributions for foreign missions, $26,151; home, $6,559; Southern, $3,962; Chinese, $2,037; theological seminary, $12,657; Indians, $4,521; sustentation, $2,596; church erection, $13,624; salaries, $76,777; National Reform, $4,520; miscellaneous, $63,603: total, $216,407. An average of over $19 a member is creditable to the liberality of the brethren of this church.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Revision Committee of the Free church of Scotland is about to report in favor of extensive amendments of the Confession of Faith. A section of the committee proposes to join the committee of the United Presbyterian church in preparing a short creed similar to that adopted by the American Assembly.

—Mrs. Allie Law, of Oakland City, Ind., presented to the United Presbyterian National Assembly, recently in session at Princeton, Ind., the W. C. T. U. and the world's petition. The latter, besides the general indorsement of the assembly, received 103 individual signatures from members of the convention.

WESLEYANS.

—The question of the three years' pastoral term was some time ago submitted to eminent couucil, who have now reported. They hold that no power within the reach of the Wesleyan Conference can alter the present system, and it will be necessary to get an Act of Parliament. There is a strong current setting in throughout the Methodist church in favor of the proposed reform, but Parliament could not be expected to grant an act unless the feeling of the church becomes unanimous, or nearly so.—British Weekly.

—A convention of the English Wesleyan and Church Missionary societies, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the American Reformed Church society, and the Marathi and Madura missions of the American Board, has been called at Kodikanal, on the Pulney Hills, South India. The special object of the convention is to consider the gift of "the Holy Ghost" with a special view to the means for deepening spiritual life.

Y. M. C. A.

—The Triennial Conference of the Young Men's Christian Association of all the countries of the world is to be held in Amsterdam, Holland, from Aug. 12 to Aug. 16. The arrangements for the conference have been completed by the Central International Committee, located at Geneva, Switzerland, of which body the American members are James Stokes and Richard C. Morse, of New York City. For the first time India will be represented at the conference, delegates from that country having been elected the past year.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Maurice Lee, 105 years old, the oldest man in Chicago, was buried last week.

Nearly 850 prominent colored people were in attendance as delegates at the assembly of the Grand Lodge of United Brothers of Friendship and the Grand Temple of Sisters of the Mysterious Ten.

The Chicago Anderson Common Brick Company, with a capital of $600,000, failed, and Judge Blodgett appointed E. F. Lawrence receiver.

COUNTRY.

Over one hundred conversions is the record of the sixteenth camp-meeting at Bay View, Mich., which was in charge of Evangelists Keen and Sneadriter, and Singer G. D. Ederkin.

Fire destroyed the plant of the Kenosha Gas Company at Racine, Wis., Monday. Loss, about $15,000.

On Monday, Secretary Garrard, of the Illinois Board of Agriculture, sent warrants of $100 each to eighty-three counties, on account of fairs held in 1890.

Near Flora, Ill., Monday morning the residence of H. P. James was burned, and with it the remains of the entire family, five in number, who had, it is believed, been previously murdered by James.

Y. L. Spellman, a coal operator and member of the last Legislature, of Grape Creek, Ill., was fined $50 Monday for violating the law prohibiting coal operators from running truck stores.

About one-half of the business portion of Chrisman, Ill., was burned Monday. Loss, $75.000; insurance, about $40,000.

Senator W. H. Ross, of the Cherokee Nation, died Monday morning at Fort Gibson, of heart disease. He was a half-breed, 68 years of age, and was educated at Princeton.

The British Columbia fleet secured 17,800 sealskins in the waters of Behring Sea up to June 30.

At St. Louis Tuesday the Circuit Court decided that express companies are liable for goods received from owners until they arrive at their destination.

Twenty-five Northwestern Iowa shippers on Tuesday decided to sue the Northwestern Railroad Company to return money paid as discriminating rates during a term of years.

Fire on Tuesday destroyed the shingle mill of S. and J. C. Atlus, at Fort Madison, Iowa. Loss, $30,000; no insurance.

The Southern Pacific Railroad, it is reiterated, has passed into the hands of the Standard Oil Company through purchases made by John D. Rockefeller.

At Minneapolis, Tuesday, the General Grand Council of Royal and Select Master Masons elected Orestes A. B. Senter, of Columbus, Ohio, General Grand Master, and Henry W. Mordhurst, of Fort Wayne, Ind., Grand General Recorder.

The organizations of the Farmers' Alliance and the F. M. B. A. in Champaign county, Ill., seems likely to be dissolved soon.

Peter Pascoe, Jr., and James Dower, Jr., were suffocated by smoke Tuesday in the burning mine at Marquette, Mich.

Twenty Chilian army officers were shot, having been convicted of poisoning Admiral Montt and several other members of the revolutionary party.

The duty collected at Vancouver, B.C., on Chinamen for the year ending June 30 was $15,958, an increase of $12,395 over the previous year. The amount collected from each Chinaman is $120.

The steamer Charles W. Wetmore, which sailed from Duluth, Minn., the latter part of June, arrived at Liverpool, Tuesday, with a cargo of 95,000 bushels of grain. This is the first grain cargo shipped from a lake port direct to Liverpool without being rehandled.

John A. Roebling & Sons' wire mill at Trenton, N. J., was damaged $40,000 by fire Tuesday. Insured.

Reports received from various points in central Iowa show large damage done to the oat crop by a severe wind and rain storm early this morning. Very few farmers had harvested their oats, so the loss can be said to be almost general and to aggregate millions of dollars. The storm was very short in duration, exceeding not half an hour, but the wind blew a gale and rain poured down in sheets.

At Easton, Pa., Wednesday, the National Bank was robbed of a package containing $4,000 in $1 bills.

There are 64,391 postoffices in the United States, an increase of 2,000 offices during the last year.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOMES, HEALTHY AND CHEERFUL.

We will first direct our steps to the lowest apartment of our residences—the cellar. Much has already been said in reference to its cleanliness, and how much respect we owe to this necessary portion of our households. Many women are in the habit of placing all kinds of rubbish in this apartment, little thinking that most of the air which they breathe their in upper chambers has first passed through the cellar, and been vitiated by all foul and decaying substances. In order to convince those who are skeptical of the truthfulness of this assertion, we need only to advise them to close all upper-room doors, and to boil onions in their cellars. The odor of this vegetable will be perceptible from parlor to attic, and proves beyond question that much sickness is propagated in this manner. Dryness and ventilation are particularly neccssary, as many cases of fever and diphtheria can be traced to this neglect. Fruits and vegetables, and, indeed, every article of corrosive properties, are more apt to decay if left in a place where the surroundings are damp. The absolute necessity of a clean, dry cellar requires us to whitewash all walls and ceilings at least twice a year, and to place some lime and charcoal in different receptacles as often as the feeling of dampness can be experienced. These articles are recommended to purify the air, as well as to absorb moisture.

Little need be said about the kitchen, for every one knows that the principal instructions would be embraced in this one word—cleanliness. It is in this room that the habits of a woman can best be discovered, and where her filthy faults are manifestly proven. There is nothing more disgusting than the presence of vermin, and their existence depends chiefly upon the slothful habits of the cook. Powdered borax has been found very efficient in removing that predominant kitchen pest—the cockroach. Other expedients might be suggested, but the best of all can be found in the virtue of good common soap, with plenty of hot water.

The dining room should always be regarded as a place of pleasure, where families gather, not merely for the purpose of satiating their appetites, but to indulge in a free and pleasant discourse on the sociable topics of the day. All business cares should be discarded when entering this apartment, and a feeling of blissful serenity should promptly take possession of our busy minds. It is this control that allows us to feel the cravings of hunger, that assists the process of digestion, and that aids immensely in correcting the evils which ultimately lead to a chronic state of dyspepsia. Bright pictures, very often, have a charming influence in this respect.

It is a difficult matter to describe what care should be taken of the parlor, for each individual has a special taste of furnishing and decorating, which seems to be the entertaining subject among many women. This room, although little occupied, requires ventilating every morning, and the shutters should be allowed to remain open through the entire day. The same advice may be applied to the bedroom or chamber, with a little more emphasis, and an earnest plea for plenty of fresh air, and a greater welcome extended to the purifying rays of the ascending sun. It is an unhealthy practice for elderly people to sleep in the same bed with children, and as few as possible should be confined in the one room. No fire, no heat, nor light of any kind should be burnt all night, for they impoverish the air and unquestionably "feed upon our very vitals." Cold, damp beds are extremely dangerous, and no one should enter the chilling sheets without first having wrapped themselves securely in a good woolen blanket. The housemaid should never forget to turn the mattresses in the morning, and to thoroughly air the sheets, quilts and pillows. Water that has stood in a bedroom over night is not considered pure, and must therefore be used for washing purposes only. The spare room should be cleaned and heated at least once a week, to prevent the settling of a kill-dampness.

FOR THE TOILET

There is no more useful or elegant article than Ayer's Hair Vigor—the most popular and economical hair-dressing in the market. It causes the hair to grow abundantly and retain the beauty and texture of youth; prevents baldness, heals troublesome humors of the scalp and keeps it clean, cool, and healthy. Both ladies and gentlemen everywhere prefer Ayer's Hair Vigor to any other dressing for the hair. Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, E. Pittston, Me., writes: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time, and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and falling hair, so that I was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor, my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor to any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair." *

Between Two Opinions: OR THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR. By Miss E. E. Flagg, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc., etc. Everyone who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, interesting in narrative, should read this book upon the power of secret societies in politics, and the remedy. 389 pages, cloth, postpaid, $1.00.

If you move to the country in the summer, always make it a point to visit your city house one day out of the seven, and let it be your duty to open all windows and to turn on all water flows, for the plumbers' modern safety "traps" become useless and allow the sewer germs to take full possession of your homes, if the water in them has been permitted to evaporate.

When the women learn to apply themselves to the study of the art of making their homes cheerful, then, and not till then, will the club rooms, grog shops and poker dens lose their patronage; the men will be more devoted to their wives, and will look forward, at the close of day, with blissful anticipation to the joys to be found with their own families, at the side of the hearth, where mother and children sit with hallowed grace, the true and living pictures of that dear old melody—"Home, Sweet Home."—Hall's Journal of Health.

Our Old Fire Company.

"That was a gay old company that we belonged to, Joe, away back in '68, when you and I 'ran with the machine.' Do you remember that big fire in Hotel Row, one freezing night, when fifteen people were pulled out of their burning rooms and came down the ladder in their nightclothes; and how 'Dick' Greene brought down two 'kids' at once—one in his arms, the other slung to his back? Poor 'Dick'! He got the catarrh dreadfully, from so much exposure, and suffered from it five years or more. We thought once he was going in consumption, sure. But, finally, he heard of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and tried it, and it cured him up as sound as a flint. I tell you, Joe, that catarrh remedy is a great thing. It saved as good a man and as brave a fireman as ever trod shoe leather."

FARM NOTES.

DAIRY MUSINGS.

The fast milker has the fullest pail.

Cleanliness goes before profit in the dairy.

The man that figures closely never regrets that he began winter feeding early.

The temper of an animal has more to do with its value than has the color of its hair.

When you see clubs lying around the barnyard, look out for cows that have a long dry spell.

If you keeping a barking dog or a yelling man in the feed lot, you must have extra large measures in the bins.

Ought there not to be a law compelling dairymen to keep their dairies clean, or elsc to keep their products at home?

More winter-made butter and less summer production is what is demanded by both the markets and the profit side of the dairy.

Don't talk while milking. You can't milk so fast; the cow will learn to give down her milk slowly; and the talking excites the cow.

Hooks about the stable, upon which to hang the lantern, are an excellent thing. The lantern set down is frequently knocked over, and the straw or hay set on fire.—Exchange.

LAWN DECORATION.

When an old tree that has long shaded and adorned the lawn of the farm house has reached the end of its usefulness and must be cut down, or perhaps has already blown down, the stump may be made an attractive instead of being left as an unsightly object. In fact, nothing can be handled more effective in lawn decoration than the stump of a large tree. Vines may be trained over it, and it becomes an effective stand for a vase of flowers.

REMEDY FOR LICE.

Grease is destructive to all insect vermin which so much infest domestic animals, and at this season begin to multiply with great rapidity. Ten days only are sufficient to hatch a brood, and millions may be produced from one louse in the course of the summer. Their destruction now will save much annoyance in the future. Poultry may be freed from them by thoroughly white-washing the house with the hot lime wash, and well greasing the roosts with a mixture of any kind of grease and kerosene oil in equal parts. This mixture, with a few drops of creosote added, rubbed on the backs, brisket, neck and under the legs of calves, will quickly free them from the vermin.—American Agricultur ist.

RAISING EGGS CHEAPLY.

This is what a great many people try to do nowadays, yet how few are very successful. Mr. H. P. Wight, of Quincy, Mass., avers that whatever may be said regarding the best methods of feeding poultry to get profit from eggs, he has the best way. He has hens, ducks, and pigeons and almost all the year keeps them shut in. He feeds on the city refuse, which contains choice bits that the fowls are glad to get. Mr. Wight receives eggs almost all the year, and challenges any man in Massachusetts to get as many eggs in a year of such fine quality from any other system of feeding as he can by his food. He declares that his eggs cost him only five cents a dozen.

CLOVER VS. TIMOTHY.

The question as to the comparative value of clover and timothy is again being discussed, and here is more light thereupon. Henry Stewart, a practical farmer, who has had experience in both New York and North Carolina, and is a close observer, argues that one ton of clover hay contains nine or ten per cent. of albuminoids, while a ton of timothy hay has only 5½ per cent of these valuable nutriments. Clover hay, he continues, is always cheaper than timothy, and oftentimes 30 to 50 per cent cheaper. Hence farmers should grow timothy for sale and clover for feeding out to their stock. Again, Mr. Stewart claims that if a ton of straw containing 2 or 2½ per cent of albuminoids is mixed with a ton of clover hay, the mixture contains the same nutritious substances as two tons of timothy hay—certainly another argument in favor of feeding the clover, and one which we commend to the consideration of every reader who may be interested in the matter.—New York Witness.

Hot Weather Necessities.

Notice the large square package in the front rank. That's where it belongs—ask any woman who has used it. See what it does. It saves work, saves strength, saves health, time, and temper. It saves wear and tear, too—and that's money. Delicate summer clothes don't have to be rubbed and wrenched when they're washed with Pearline. Everything is washed easily—and safely. Pearline doesn't do any more in warm weather than in cold, but you seem to need it more then. It's a necessity. But it's a luxury, as well. Try it in the bath, and you'll think so.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 193 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Anyone purchasing a Bicycle or Tricycle through the Publisher of the Cynosure, can extend his subscription to the Cynosure 20 per cent of the purchase price. Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors one gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

PASTOR KOENIGS TRADE MARK NERVE TONIC

Six Years in Torment. 12

Rev. W. Stutz, Red Wing Minn.—Speaks a good word for Pastor Koenigs Nerve Tonic, when he says, that he recommended the Medicine, during a period of five years, to many sufferers from nervous disease with the best results. He informs us, that a woman, a member of his congregation had been cured of Epilepsy of Six Years Standing by the use of Koenig's Nerve Tonic.

Could not get along without it.

PLATTEVILLE, WIS., May, 1888.

The bottle of Koenig's Nerve Tonic has been received and almost used up, and that with a decided good result. My wife could not get along without the medicine. The impression is especially in cheering her, removing gloominess of mind and giving her a better appetite and color in the face.

The post of duty is the post of honor. The post of duty is never in more than one place at a time. If we are there at the proper time, we have honor from God.

In next week's issue of this paper (D. V.) will appear the Baccalaureate sermon preached by Pres. J. Blanchard before the faculty and students of Wheaton College, at Commencement, June 21, 1891. Its length will need no excuse for printing it in full, as its subject and its masterly treatment must commend it to the numerous friends of the venerable preacher and the Cynosure. Briefly told, it antagonizes, logically and scripturally, the Pre-Millennial doctrines of Rev. Dr. E. P. Goodwin, D. L. Moody, the Adventists, and others. It also dwells upon the fact that at the time when the Abolitionists were organizing and working against the encroachments of slavery, their meetings were disturbed and broken up by the friends of the slave power, while the gatherings of the Adventists, with their grotesque "ascension robes" and peculiar demonstrations, were left undisturbed. The President draws the inference that the devil came down in great wrath upon the Abolitionists while engaged in the Lord's work, and let the Adventists alone because they were doing his own cause no harm.

The annual National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic is in session this week at Detroit, Mich., and attended by thousands of war veterans and large numbers of the more recent and junior order of "Sons of Veterans." The action of the city authorities of Detroit, in appropriating a liberal amount of money to be expended in wines and liquors for the guests on this occasion, in opposition to the earnest protests of prominent citizens, was a reprehensible affair, and the consequence is that a repetition of the intemperance which distinguished a similar anniversary at Mllwaukee, a few years ago, where liquor was freely dispensed to the G. A. R., is among the special features of the present gathering. The example set before the rising generation in the orgies of this great secret organization is demoralizing and unworthy of men who claim to be the defenders of our country's federal and social institutions. Another important feature of the present National Encampment is the division in the ranks of the G. A. R. on the subject of Negro posts in the order. The whites in the Southern departments, especially of Louisiana and Mississippi, are strongly endeavoring to oust their colored comrades, or be mustered out themselves. Before we go to press next week the result will probably be known.

A high Masonic authority, the publisher of the Chicago Legal News, in a recent issue of that journal, noting the fact that "Dr. Walter A. Stevens, of this city, a thirty-third degree Mason, and an active member of the Supreme Council (Masonic), with his family, are spending the heated term in Salt Lake City," adds that the Doctor "is a close observer of the Tabernacle, with a view of determining to what extent it resembles the Temple erected by that old Mason, King Solomon." Really, the pertinacity with which the Masonic fraternity cling to the old tradition that King Solomon was a Mason would be amusing if it were not so monotonous, and had not been so often and so thoroughly refuted. The more significant part of the Legal News' paragraph, however, is the indication that Masonry would not object to unite its lodge system with that of the Mormons. It has been more than hinted in the past that a close affiliation of the two systems already and truly exists. The fact is patent that the old Mormon leaders were Freemasons.

One man at least has recently lost confidence in his lodge relations as a protector in a court of justice, and that is William J. Elliott, the former editor and proprietor of the Columbus (Ohio) Sunday Capital. On the 23d of last February, on High street, in that city, Elliott, with his brother, P. J., became embroiled in a quarrel, which soon assumed the proportions of a shooting affray. During the melee, the Elliotts killed Albert C. Osborn, a reporter on the Sunday World, and a bystander named Hughes. The trial began on the 11th of last May, and on the 28th of July culminated in the conviction of Wm. J. Elliott for murder in the second degree. By the laws of Ohio, the penalty for this crime is imprisonment for life. The prisoner is a Grand Army man, and while the verdict was being read in court, in a rage he pulled the Grand Army button, bearing the insignia of the order, from his coat, and threw it spitefully in the direction of the jury. Sentence was reserved, however, pending the motion for a new trial. The family of the murderer were present when the verdict was rendered and exhibited intense grief and prostration. The button seems to have been worse than a broken reed on this occasion.

It seems almost impossible for a secret society, especially one like the Farmers' Alliance, dependent upon a certain class of persons for its membership and support, to avoid lying in order to increase its growth. We think, sometimes, that the American people, especially the working population, are the most credulous on the earth; that they too readily believe the assertions of designing and ambitious politicians, instead of studying political economy for themselves, and, in so doing, not only butt their heads figuratively against a rock, but practically deprive themselves of political liberty by their obligations to the lodge. When one joins he swears: "I will faithfully support the constitution and by-laws of the order;" and that, too, perhaps, when he has already sworn to support the Constitution of the United States and of the State in which he dwells. Then, under cover of his oath, he can go forth as a lecturer, as some are now doing, and falsify the condition of the country, its government, and its agricultural interests, in the most approved pessimistic manner, and gain proselytes and votes to install some other falsifier in a good fat office. If corporations are soulless, and thus unaccountable to God for their mean acts, the secret orders may be classed in the same category, fearing neither God nor man.

RELIGIOUS ASPECTS OF THE SABBATH QUESTION.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

1. Those who deny the patriarchal Sabbath, but affirm the Lord's Day Sabbath—Hesse of England, Prof. Smythe of Andover, and others—and those Saturday-keeping Christians who affirm the patriarchal Sabbath, but deny the Lord's Day Sabbath, accept in one case the same kind and degree of evidence that they reject in the other; namely, one explicit text and half a dozen confirming references—the same sort of evidence that proves gravitation and hangs murderers; namely, a theory that holds and harmonizes all the facts involved. They only are consistent who, on like testimony, accept both the patriarchal and the Lord's Day Sabbath, so making the Sabbath as perpetual and universal as "man," for whom science, as well as Scripture, declares it was made.

2. Revelation declares, in Gen. 2: 2, 3, that the Sabbath was given to Adam. Was Adam a Jew? The Sabbath was made for the first man, and so for all men, and not for Jews only. In this claim, reason supports revelation. Why should any one suppose that a just God sentenced us to fifty-two days' "hard labor" a year for being Gentiles? Hath not a Gentile muscles that need rest, and a mind that needs change of thought, and a heart that needs a day for fellowship, and a soul that needs a day of worship, as well as a Jew?

Revelation and reason are confirmed by the most ancient records of the oldest nations in which the footprints of a primitive Sabbath are seen in the sacred "seven," "seventh day" and "seven days." For instance, the Acadians, the immediate descendants of Noah, as shown by their clay tablets, marked the 7th, 14th, 21st and 28th days of the month as "days of rest for the heart," and called them Sabbattu—the name Sabbath, as well as the fact, being older than the Jews, so that any prejudice against it as a Jewish term is unscholarly.

3. The Saturday-keepers should be required to establish their Genesis claims before they are allowed to battle with us in the Gospels. Before they debate "the change of day" let them prove what day of our modern week corresponds to the original Sabbath of God and man, not to keep which, they say, is as bad as theft or murder.

The Lord's Day Sabbath has the contested seat. The burden of proof is on them. Let this never be forgotten. To dislodge the Lord's Day they must prove: (1) That God's "seventh day" was twenty-four hours, not the period of redemption, that has continued from the creation of man till now, as geology teaches that each of the "six days" preceding were such periods, in which case our imitation of God's week would be, as all our imitation of him must be, in miniature. (2) They must prove that the original Sabbath of God and man was identical with Saturday in our age, having come down in unbroken succession, which seems at least unlikely, as the land of Abraham began each new month, as I have said, with a new week, and treated the days beyond the twenty-eighth as an interregnum between the four weeks of the previous and the four weeks of the following month. (3) They must prove that the Saturday of Adam on the Euphrates is literally reproduced in the Saturday of Adventists on the Mississippi. Saturday, taking the whole globe into account, is forty-eight hours long. Saturday, in the United States, occurs at the same time as the Lord's Day on the Euphrates. If the American Adventists are keeping the very same hours that Adam kept, so are the Presbyterians in Persia. If American Adventists would keep the present Saturday of Eden, let them keep the American Friday. But a church whose chief doctrine is that the Lord's Day is the Pope's Sabbath, would doubtless be afraid to keep what is, even in name, the Mohammedan Sabbath. (4) They must also prove that the Fourth Commandment, the only Old Testament Sabbath law of universal application, is not kept when a whole people are accustomed to work "six days" and rest on "the seventh day" after these six days of work. That we hold is not the "spirit" only, but the very "letter" of the commandment. Otherwise the Bible does not contain all things necessary to salvation, but must be supplemented by an infallible almanac of all countries and centuries, giving the unbroken pedigree of the Saturday family from the beginning. (5) They must break the force of the historic fact that Christ so timed his resurrection and reappearance and his Pentecostal re-incarnation as to make the Lord's Day more glorious in the eyes of his disciples than the Jewish Sabbath, and so gradually crowd the latter aside. (6) They must give good reason why Paul appointed the first day of the week for giving to benevolence, a leading feature of the old Sabbath; and why John used the new term "Lord's Day" to describe the day when he was "in the Spirit,"—a term never before found in the Bible, but often in the literature of the church "Fathers" who wrote shortly after John, and always unquestionably meaning the first day of the week. (7) They must show for this theory that the Roman Catholic church "changed the day" something more than the Roman Catholic claims, which they reject in other matters, and which, even in this case, are explained by Catholics to mean that the apostolic church which made the change was really the Roman Catholic church, and that the fact it was so changed is certified by the Roman Catholic church of later times.

Under the fire of criticism, the Seventh-day Adventists have practically abandoned their former position on this matter, in their official journals, though their preachers and members reiterate the old cries that the day was changed by Catholics and Constantine. They ought to make the old college song, with a slight change, the first hymn in their hymn-books: "C-o-n with a Con, s-t-a-n with a stan, t-i-n-e with a tine." Their Battle Creek Review and Herald, Jan. 20, 1891, admits that Constantine only recognized and protected a change already made long before the obscure provincial council which they used to name as the time and place of the change. Here is the admission in its exact words: "The change took place gradually. As Neander observes, the sabbatical idea of the observance of the first day, if the work had begun to obtain at the end of the second century, as some appeared by this time to have considered labor on Sunday to be a sin. The seventh day had by no means wholly ceased to be regarded as the Sabbath, as is evident from abundant testimony, showing that both days were observed; but a change was taking place. As Rev. George S. Mott, of the American Sabbath Union, in Pearl of Days "leaflets," No. 3, says: "Already in the Christian heart the seventh day was receding, and the first was taking its place." Coming down to the time of Constantine, we find that this idea of the sabbatical of the first day had increased, so much so that, in deference to the sentiment, Constantine passed the edict in support of its observance as a "day of rest."

After such an official Adventist admission, that the "change" was really made before the period when the apostolic church became a church of popes and Romish ritual, let us hear no more about the Lord's Day being "the Pope's Sabbath."

But, turning from controversy, the one thing that should be chiefly emphasized in considering the religious aspects of the Sabbath, is the contrast between God's estimate and man's of the importance of Sabbath-keeping. Strange to say, one of the editorial writers of the Independent, the press champion of the Sabbath, has voiced the "public opinion" of this matter by saying: "It is a duty to keep the Sabbath, but it is vastly more important not to cheat or lie, or do an injury to one's neighbor." Why, then, did God write the commandment against Sabbath-breaking twenty-eight times as long as the command against stealing? Stealing attacks man's lower rights to things—minerals, vegetables, animals. Sabbath-breaking attacks the higher right to life and health, rights of conscience and the rights of God.

SECRECY INCOMPATIBLE WITH CHRISTIANITY.

BY I. J. ROSENBERGER.

The rapid growth of the various alliances under the different badges of secrecy, when summed up, is simply astonishing.

While each and all seem to hold up some feature of plausible good, yet there is a principle underlying them all that renders them incompatible with Christianity. For the above our reasons are as follows:

1. "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? What communion hath light with darkness?" 2 Cor. 6:14 In secrecy there is a union, and that, in worship, of the Jew and the Christian, the believer and the infidel. This unholy alliance, this impious blending, is a clear violation of the text just quoted; for "he which is joined to a harlot is one body." 1 Cor. 6:16.

2. The wants of the Christian are all fully provided for in the church; hence he has no need of the benefits of a second organization. "All Scripture is given by inspiration; . . . that the man of God might be thoroughly furnished unto every good work." 2 Tim. 3:17. When an individual professes Christianity, and then steps aside to join a secret order, with a view to secure a good that his religion does not furnish, it is evident his system is defective, and hence he has not the religion that the Scriptures provide. The apostle clearly sets forth the high standard of good works in Christianity, when he says: "Make you perfect in every good work to do his will." Heb. 13:21. The apostle Paul, alluding to Christ, adds: "Comfort your hearts, and establish you in every good word and work." 2 Thess. 2:17. This is done by the Scriptures, through the organization of the church.

3. Much of the work of secrecy is a manifest species of "robbing God." The yearly reports of the various secret orders show that millions of dollars are annually spent for the support of the poor and needy. The truth of these reports we do not doubt; but the good that individuals do through these orders in caring for the needy, ought to be done through the church, for it is a work that belongs to the church. The evidence is abundant that all these were works of the early apostolic church. These are among the things that evidence the practical good in Christianity. Visible present good is a powerful incentive to the growth of Christianity. Many of the secret orders of to-day are but rival institutions to the church, in which thousands spend their millions in doing a work that can be done through the church, and rightly belongs to the church, and ought to be done in the name of Christ. Many of the patrons of secrecy spend more of their time and money in support of their order than they do in support of their church; because their order is doing the greatest amount of seeming good. Hence much of the work of secrecy is a pure species of "robbing God."

4. Much of the work of secrecy is called charity, but when tested, fails to be charity. For instance, the widows they support, the orphans they feed and clothe, their so-called deeds of charity, are all done by actual contract. To explain: I join a secret band. I pay my initiation fee and my monthly dues, with the contract that in the event of my sickness or my death certain services shall be rendered me. If my widow and my children come to want, certain aid shall be rendered them. Hence the aid and the service rendered are by contract; they are paid for it, and that in advance. Besides, a non-payment at any time renders all claims void. Hence the claim of charity on the part of secrecy, when examined, vanishes; is found not true.

5. Real objects of charity, secret orders will not receive. As a test case, let some poor penniless pauper present himself at the door of one of these institutions for admittance. It is a fact, not a door will open for his reception. To whom will admittance be granted? Simply to those sound in body and mind, and who have money. In short, secrecy simply proffers help to those who need no help. Hence secrecy is a union, a league, for mutual benefit, where aims are to fortify against the liability of future want; all within their own numbers. The Bible does not teach such doctrine.

6. Professor O. S. Fowler says: "No man should go where his wife cannot be admitted." The fact that men—fathers and husbands—leave their homes, night after night, often until a late hour, meeting with their respective orders in secret session in some chamber, with doors closed and guarded and curtains drawn; while the dear, lonely wife or mother is at home, caring for the children all alone, knowing she would not be allowed to join her husband! All this, and much more, surely has a chilly, severing tendency on the affection between husband and wife.

Another source of dissatisfaction is that money is being constantly paid out, time and service rendered, and so little visible good is manifest. Society is not improved. No reforms, no conversions; all the visible good is in the selfish line under contract.

7. The burial service of secret orders is vain, unintelligent, and not orthodox. In the final prayer at the open grave, the Odd-fellows pray thus: "May this our brother be borne from the lodge below to the Grand Lodge above." In point of intelligence, the foregoing sentiment is a striking parallel with the prevailing sentiment of the poor Indian, who earnestly prays that the Great Spirit may have borne their deceased brother from the hunting ground below to "the happy hunting grounds above." "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus," is a divine teaching. In the Masonic ritual the name of Christ is omitted. Think of professed ministers, elders and bishops, prominent divines, leaders of the people, offering up prayers, leaving Christ, their only advocate, not once named! To us it looks like a species of sacrilege.

8. The teachings of Christ and the apostles stand opposed to the principles of secrecy. Christ, when in the world, taught both in public and in private, but says, "In secret have I said nothing." "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in the light; and what ye hear in the ear, that publish ye on the housetop." Matt. 10:27. "God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing." Eccl. 12:14. Secrecy is evidently works of darkness, for "whatsoever doth make manifest is light." We are warned to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather to reprove them; for it is a shame even to speak of those things done of them in secret. Eph. 5:12. To love secrecy is to love darkness; and it must be "because their deeds are evil."

9. Secrecy binds its subjects to take upon them an unknown obligation, which is a grave sin. Moses defined this sin thus: "If a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of those. And it shall be when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing." Lev. 5:4, 5. The Gospel enjoins that faith precede; for "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Wisdom and prudence dictate that we ought to see before we step; to know before we speak. But here is a system a something, that only proffers to acquaint its coming inmates with the facts after they enter within the bars of their sunless walls. Hence many, when they come to the verge of initiation, in sight of the dark picture, decline to take upon them the obligation; while others, under the bitter pangs of the remorse of a guilty conscience, quietly withdraw after taking the obligation. How can such a system be made to harmonize the high standard of honor, set forth in the religion of Jesus?

10. The present great threatening storm-cloud, both in Europe and America, is secrecy; before which empires and republics are made to tremble. Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Knights of Pythias, with the various labor organizations whose "name is legion," including the Anarchists, Nihilists and Mafias, are all boats in the same broad channel; branches of the same tree; whose objects and aims are self. Many of them are monopolies fitted up to fight monopolies; a clear case of seeking to overcome evil with evil instead of overcoming evil with good. It is a "doing evil that good may abound." The sad occurrence of paralyzing the New Orleans court by the Mafia society in the case of the murder trial of the Chief of Police Hennessy, has been oft repeated all over this broad land, by different secret organizations. Judges and juries have been rendered powerless, unable to render justice, or rather unwilling, in view of their obligation to their brother in secrecy. As a result the guilty have gone free unpunished. The only difference between the case under notice and many others is, that in this case the ends, were secured by money and threats of vengeance, whereas secrecy usually secures the same ends, by secret signs, grips and passwords. Therefore in view of the foregoing facts, we conclude as we began, that secrecy is wholly incompatible with Christianity.

THE CATHOLIC BENEVOLENT LEGION.

The following description of this growing secret order, and its history, is from the Western Catholic News. It really differs but little from the great majority of secret benevolent societies, and, like them, requires its members to be "sound in body, wind and limb," having no room for any who really need its spurious (so-called) "charity." Its members pay for its support and take their pay in "benefits:"

The ninth annual convention of the New York State Council of the Catholic Benevolent Legion was held in Buffalo, N. Y., July 13, 14 and 15, 1891.

A number of Catholic gentlemen of Brooklyn in 1881 founded the Catholic Benevolent Legion. The order was incorporated on September 5, 1881, with the following as charter members: Dr. Geo. R. Kuhn, John C. McGuire, John D. Carroll, John Rooney, Thomas Cassin, John D. Keiley, Patrick F. Keany, William G. Ross, James H. Breen, David T. Leahy and Robert Myhan. The new corporation was authorized to begin business and issue certificates to its members on September 15, 1881.

The growth of the legion has, during its existence of ten years, been phenomenal; it has branches in fifteen States, the District of Columbia and the Dominion of Canada.

The association started out on broad lines, and proposed to bring together in subordinate councils the able-bodied Catholic men of the United States and Canada, and have them co-operate in their respective communities to accomplish a variety of purposes in which they would become mutually interested. The objects of the society, as defined by its constitution, are quite comprehensive, and are:

First—To unite fraternally for social, benevolent and intellectual improvment, male Roman Catholics personally acceptable, of sound bodily health, between the ages of eighteen and fifty-five years at the time of admission.

Second—To afford moral and material aid to its members and their dependents by establishing a fund for the relief of the sick and distressed members.

Third—To establish a benefit fund, from which, on the satisfactory evidence of the death of a member, who shall have complied with all its lawful requirements, a sum not exceeding $5,000 shall be paid to his family or dependents, as such deceased may have directed; and from which benefit fund a sum not exceeding $2,500 may be paid to a member who shall have become permanently disabled and unfit to attend to business or earn a livelihood, and who shall have complied with all the lawful requirements of the order, and have arrived at the age of expectancy fixed by the laws of the society.

To no single individual, probably, may the paternity of the legion be ascribed, although, if precedence were insisted upon, the honors might be fairly divided between the Hon. John C. McGuire and Dr. George R. Kuhn. In the early summer of 1881 these two, with Major John D. Keiley, Jr., Thomas Cassin, John D. Carroll, Judge John Rooney, William G. Ross, Gilbert Lloyd and a few others, all of Brooklyn, went carefully over the ground, discussing the possibilities of the future of the great organization that was thus slowly but surely evolved. Several private conferences were held. Finally a plan was matured, and a charter for the Catholic Benevolent Legion applied for on August 19, 1881. The certificate of the supreme council was duly approved by Justice J. W. Gilbert of the Supreme Court on September 3.

The supreme council, with that shrewd executive management that has characterized it to this day, decided that a number of subordinate councils should be instituted with as little delay as possible in different sections of the city of Brooklyn. Singly and in couples the charter members went to work in several parishes. The result was that within seven months eleven flourishing councils were on the way to a prosperous future in Brooklyn. The same systematic work that produced such result has been steadily pursued until to-day the order contains nearly 350 flourishing councils in the United States and Canada.

State Councils were instituted in Maryland on August 8, 1883; in New Jersey on February 22, 1884; in Indiana on December 5, 1889, and in Illinois on January 19, 1890.

The business of the councils is conducted with closed doors, as the members consider that "what is everybody's business is nobody's business."

During the years of its existence the legion has had a vigorous, healthy growth. The average number of applications for membership received each year has been 3,000. The 27,000 blanks that have been filed in may be seen neatly tied up in bundles of 200 each, in great cases that cover the side walls in the office of the supreme secretary. The membership on January 1, 1891, was 24,100. The total membership on January 1, 1890, was 19,778. Over 4,500 new members being admitted last year, and the loss by death and suspension was over 300. The work of organizing new councils was pushed briskly, fifty being instituted.

The total number of deaths since the organization of the order has been 890 to January 1, 1891, and the total amount paid out to widows and orphans of deceased members, $2,100,000.

The expectancy feature is not the least attractive in the legion. As there are six grades, a member may insure for from $500 to $5,000. Should a member become permanently disabled in the pursuits of a livelihood, when he has arrived at the age of expectancy he shall be entitled to a sum equal to one-half of the amount for which he is insured. The expectation years range from forty-four for a young man who joins the order at eighteen, down to eighteen years for a man who joins at the age of fifty-four.

TRUE POSITION OF THE CHURCHES ON THE LODGE QUESTION.

The United Presbyterian church has lifted up a warning voice against secret oath-bound associations and associations that require a pledge beforehand to keep laws not made known and secrets the nature of which they do not as yet know. This is certainly a most wise precaution. Why should any man want to bind himself without first knowing what it is he must do? Would any sensible man of business sign a note without first knowing what it contains? Men have done this, but it is regarded as foolish and unsafe. It puts a man in the power of another. Every safe business man must know with certainty what he obligates himself to do, and then he may be able to know how his business stands, and what he is able to undertake more than he is now doing.

The Mason or Odd-fellow does not know what he may have to do to fulfill his oath. No member of any secret society can know what he has bound himself to do until too late to retract in case the thing be contrary to his conscience. He finds himself ensnared, and he cannot escape the guilt of having foresworn himself. If he reveals the secret wrongs that have been done in the lodge he is branded as a perjured man. To denounce all wrong and bear testimony to the truth are duties that no man can escape by a promise beforehand that he will not do them. His promise would be in that case an unlawful one. He had no right to make it. To agree beforehand to do a wrong thing, or refuse to do a right thing, can relieve no one of his previous obligations to God and mankind.

Some complain that this position of our church is too strict, and that it keeps people out of the church who might otherwise join it. But should we not be proud of a church that protects her members against the ensnaring influences of the world? Young men especially should rejoice that there is something to hold them back when the hour of temptation comes. They need the help of the society of God's people, the church, to aid them in withstanding the almost irresistible tide of secretism that is flowing over the world. Its influence is felt in all ranks and brought to bear in many ways upon such as are making a start in life. The inducements of a worldly character are powerful. These societies promise social position, success in business, relief in time of sickness, promotion in office, civil and military, and support for a family in case of death. These and similar baits are presented as inducements to enter the lodge. It is not too much to say that they have a strange fascination for men not as yet independent, or established in their views.

To counteract these things the church needs to present, as clearly and positively as possible, the fact that it is not right to enter into bonds with others to work in the dark and conceal your doings from wife and children and best friends, as if you were a thief or a robber. It has a bad look. It cultivates secret, underhanded ways. It is contrary to the open, honest ways of rightousness, to the essential spirit of the Gospel, which requires Christians to let their light shine. This is the honorable work the United Presbyterian church has undertaken to perform. It is their personal liberty she calls upon all to maintain. Her mission is to save from the bondage of those men who propose a confederacy that may be used to shield them in wrong-doing. Every honorable man should glory in her position as worthy of her Master.—The (United Presbyterian) Christian Instructor.

JEWS IN RUSSIA.

There is no cessation (says the London Christian World) in the persecution of the Jews in Russia. Not a week passes without some new persecuting ordinance. The latest is one to compel all Jewish army doctors to resign or be converted to Christianity, and another to expel all foreign Jews from Southern Russia. Thousands from Odessa, the whole province of Kherson and the Crimea are preparing to emigrate to Palestine. Between 7,000 and 8,000 have already quitted Moscow. A synagogue in St. Petersburg has been closed, on the ground that it is an anomaly in a city where Jews are not entitled to settle. A story that 60,000 were preparing to emigrate to England appears to be unfounded. A petition in Hebrew has been sent by Russian and Polish members of the Society Chovevei Zion ("Lovers of Zion") in East London, through Mr. Samuel Montegu, M. P., to Lord Salisbury, "who sitteth first among the rulers of the kingdom." The style is extremely Oriental, and the appeal is very pitiful and pathetic. At this very moment the petitioners say, 3,000,000 of their brethren in the faith are plunged in the depth of misery. The waters are come into their souls; they sink in deep mire, where there is no standing. Plague after plague strikes them, and the last troubles make the former to be forgotten. Is there, they ask, no cure for the wounded daughter of Zion? They beseech the governors of this land to help their afflicted and downtrodden brethren, not with the sword, but by being their advocate with the government of Russia, so that it may make their departure easy, and with the government of Turkey, that it may enable them to live in safety, and acquire possession of lands in Palestine and the surrounding districts.

Dr. Thomas Scott, the great commentator, says: "Rash oaths are above all things to be avoided: but if men are entangled by them, they ought rather to infringe the sinful oaths than to add sin to sin and ruin to their own souls."

John G. Fee, Berea College, 1868, said: "It is Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and kindred associations that have spawned and now lend respectability to 'Regulators,' 'Ku Klux Clans,' and other bands of midnight assassins now ranging through Kentucky and other portions of the South."

CHICAGO TO SAN FRANCISCO.

BY PRES. CHAS. A. BLANCHARD.

It is now twenty-seven years since I crossed the Rocky mountains for the first time. Then the war of the Rebellion was drawing to its close, and the long arrears of national guilt and folly were being paid in lavished millions of treasure and precious human blood. No one of the Iowa railway lines then reached Council Bluffs. We took the Rock Island Railway to Grinnell, and from thence drove in our wagons to the Missouri. No bridge then spanned that rolling, muddy stream. A steam-ferry carried across fifteen or twenty teams at a time, and we were in line, moving up as each boatload departed, three days before our turn came, and we were landed on Nebraska soil. The Indian outbreak of 1862 was at that time hardly over, and those robbed and outraged red men were even yet taking tardy and partial revenge for the wrongs of years heaped upon them by worthless and savage whites. The Indian is more submissive to-day, but the whites cheat, insult, demoralize and slander him just as they did then. Gen. Miles was right when he said: "Between the politicians and the contractors, the Indian is between the devil and the deep sea."

But though some things are as at that time, much is changed. Now the continent is bound by iron bands, while web-like wires tingle with intelligence from ocean to ocean. Palatial trains, furnishing all the material comforts of home, rush from east to west, from west to east, bearing their wondrous freight of human hopes and fears. The gold-seeker, the health-seeker, the pleasure-seeker, the soul-seeker, all are here, and by day and night, hour after hour, the great trains rush along over plain, through mountain gorges, across the long steel bridge, or the lava beds, bearing them safely, swiftly to their destination.

Denver, Salt Lake, Ogden and San Francisco, then, comparatively speaking, villages, are now modern cities, with cable lines, electric lines, electric lights, competing railways, splendid hotels, fine churches, greedy, avaricious, sensual rich men, sensual spendthrift beggars, beasts of prey, male and female, who hunt for the weak and ignorant, and licensed liquor shops where all the guards of the soul are broken down and immortals are transformed into swine. In these modern cities are also honest men, who would rather be poor than steal, and women who love their children and their husbands, and patriots who tremble at the unwashed horde who rush from the ballot box to divide the spoils, and Christians who sigh for the desolations of Zion; and over all the Man of Calvary, patient, loving, unwearied, courageous, serene, keeps watch.

There is little of incident to relate concerning our journey. Gentle showers along the way laid the dust and cooled the air. Each night the moon hung her silver shield in the southern sky. Our companions were, without exception, pleas ant, kindly people, who caused hours which might otherwise have dragged to speed quickly by. The deserts from Grand Junction to Salt Lake City, and from Ogden to the Sierras, were awful in their solitude and desolation. The orchards of peaches and plums on this western slope were bending to the ground, in many instances actually breaking to pieces under their burden of fruit. Here, in San Francisco, and in Oakland, beautiful roses of every hue bloom in the cool ocean air; and dear Christian friends are also here, as elsewhere—God's best gift to mortals, after the gift of himself.

The editor of the Cynosure, our Mr. Kellogg, who for more than twenty years so faithfully performed his labors for our great cause, is located very pleasantly at Auburn, a beautiful little city, about 175 miles inland. After he is entirely adjusted to the new surroundings, we shall no doubt hear from him frequently. Here, in the city, we are debtor to many kind friends; notably, to our dear Brother Rev. John Kimball, of "The Pacific," who has for many years kept flying the flag of our great Captain on this ocean border. Lodges and liquor shops abound, and, as usual, they are found in close proximity. At a town some miles back I saw a building with the names of two secret societies on the second story, and the signs of two drams-shops on the first. These are among the things which our blessed Lord will soon destroy. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, July 29, 1891.

"Do you know," asked a gentleman of education and culture, who is a very close observer, and who is temporarily residing in this city, "what I consider one of the foulest blots upon the good name of Washington?" Knowing the gentleman to have traveled in all sections of this country and in many parts of Europe, and that any opinion he might express would be interesting, I answered: "No, but I should like to."

"The Sunday excursions up and down the Potomac river," he said, deliberately, "are, in my opinion, one of the greatest evils, and at the same time, I might say necessarily, one of the most powerful enemies that Christianity and temperance, to say nothing of good morals, have to fight at the national capital. On these steamboats, which I am informed are growing more numerous every year, nearly every imaginable form of sin is committed. In the first place, the running of these steamboats is an entirely unnecessary desecration of the Sabbath, and the open selling of intoxicating liquors both aboard of the steamers and upon the grounds to which they run is a violation of the laws of men which I am surprised to find existing here; gambling in many forms is, I am told, permitted on nearly all these boats, as well as at the places to which they carry passengers; and only yesterday I heard a poor heart-broken mother tell, with tears streaming down her prematurely old face, how her daughter, a young girl not yet eighteen years of age, was led to ruin by frequenting these Sunday excursion steamers. Could every good father and mother in Washington have seen her and heard her as she exclaimed in her misery: 'Oh, Father in heaven, is there no way to break up these Sunday excursions and save the young men and women of this town from being enticed to ruin, as my daughter was?' I tell you there would never be another Sunday excursion on the Potomac river. The good people would arise in their might, and if necessary, stop them by force.

"I have talked about the evils of these Sunday excursions with many church members, and with several ministers of the Gospel, since I have been here, and while they all deprecate the evil, nobody seems to have taken any particular steps towards trying to break it up; while they are opposed to them, the opposition is of the negative kind that seldom accomplishes anything, and I know of church members who actually allow members of their families to go on these Sunday excursions without making any effort further than the most formal and feeble remonstrance to the 'Well, I have no other time to go anywhere, of the son or daughter. This is all wrong. Compromising with evils of such magnitude is a reproach to the thousands of Christian men and women of Washington, and, besides, it is a violation of the teachings of the greatest of all teachers, who said: 'He that is not for me is against me.' If every person who believes in the teachings of Christ will keep those words constantly before them, and make a determined and concerted effort to show these Sunday steamboats and excursion resorts to be what they really are—recruiting offices for Satan's army—my word for it, many of them would be compelled by lack of patronage to cease their Sabbath desecration. Can you doubt what the effect would be if every minister and every church member of this great city would resolve to work together to abolish or mitigate this evil? Are there not many people who now patronize Sunday excursions who would not do so if their Christian friends and neighbors would remonstrate with them firmly and kindly, showing them the enormity of their offence against God and good morals? Undoubtedly. Why, it is possible for the Christians of Washington to so stir up public opinion on this subject that before the present season closes no man or woman who wishes to be considered respectable by their neighbors will be willing to have it known that they would even think of going on a Sunday excursion. There is also another way in which the evil can be reached. Let the attention of the authorities of the counties in which these excursion resorts are located be brought to the Sunday liquor-selling, which is everywhere illegal, and upon which these places depend for their profits; and if they refuse to put a stop to it, make cases against the proprietors of the bar-rooms for every drink they sell on Sunday and then employ lawyers to see that they are fully prosecuted. Once make it so that no liquor can be sold either on the boat or on shore, and the Sunday excursion will be a thing of the past, as they are conducted almost solely for the purpose of selling liquor. Am I not right?"

The indictment is a strong one, but candor compelled me to answer the last question in the affirmative, although it shamed me to do so. *

The United States is honeycombed by secret societies—some with one apparent object and some with another, just as in China, but all opposed to the Christian church, to the progress and perpetuity of the Christian religion in any form. The members of these societies are bound by solemn and horrible oaths to sustain their lodge constitution and each other against any and all outside influences; their duty to their Grand Master or High Generalissimo is paramount to all other duties—President or Bishop. Each society is endeavoring to outdo its neighbor, and all endeavoring to outdo and belittle the Christian religion. What shall be the end of this? For an answer, look to China.—Western Catholic News.

Or ask the Jesuits, or the Ancient Order of Hibernians (or the Clan-na-Gael), or the Catholic Benevolent Legion, etc., "the business of which is conducted with closed doors, because 'what is everybody's business is nobody's business.'" Will the Western Catholic News tell us what evil is not hatched out in these secret societies of the Church of Rome? We know what is.

"The Daughters of Veterans," the female counterpart of the secret order of "The Sons of Veterans," has arrived at the dignity of a "second annual encampment of its National Council, which began at Massillon, Ohio, on the 28th of July. This order was created at Massillon on Memorial day, 1885, and its first subordinate lodge was christened "Mrs. Maj. McKinley Tent, No. 1." Soon afterward the Secretary of State issued a charter to the society, granting authority to extend the order into all the States and Territories. Charters for "tents" have thus far been issued in seventeen States, and it is said that the order is steadily increasing in membership. The first National Council was held at Quincy, Ill., about a year ago. Probably when the Sons and Daughters of Veterans have become extinct, we shall have the grandsons and granddaughters—and then "great-grands" (which sounds decidedly Masonic), and so on down to the latest posterity. It is wonderful how the mystery of secrecy fascinates humanity—and misleads it.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE WASHINGTON AGENT.

Binghamton, N. Y., July 31.

Dear Cynosure:—I am reminded that another week has passed. It has been filled with labors abundant.

At Montdale, Elder Callender made me doubly welcome. It was a real treat to visit with this father in Israel, who has stood so long and faithfully by the truth as opposed to the lodge lie, at so much personal sacrifice. The Baptist church of which he is pastor refuses fellowship to those who prefer to unequally yoke themselves with unbelievers. They recognize no divine brotherhood but the Christian. The liberal collection given, unsolicited, by this people was thankfully received. Sabbath evening I filled an appointment to preach in the M. E. church at Jordan Hollow. Though not speaking wholly on the lodge question, I told the people of my appointments to lecture near by. Several expressed a wish that I should lecture to them. A gentleman who had recently joined the Odd-fellows agreed to come six miles after me. An appointment was made for last Wednesday evening. As my I. O. O. F. friend showed me every kindness possible, I felt under special obligation to show him and the people the falseness of that system of so-called charity. It was founded in selfishness; appeals to self-interest, as opposed to the general good; binds one man to help another, not because of his need, but his connection with his class; unlike Christ, it passes by the needy and has no room for the unfortunate man who has no money to pay fees, dues, etc. The church was crowded full of people. Many stood at the windows and door who could not find seats inside. I trust that the people saw that the spirit of so-called lodge charity and that taught by Christ are entirely different.

I lectured in the Baptist church at Clark's Green Monday evening. Elder Newell Callender made the arrangements, and helped what he could. The attendance and attention was good. The I. O. O. F. has drawn in many of the young men of that place. As those who were the most active in its organization are skeptics and infidels, its moral character can not be the best. A man by the name of Pentecost, who at one time attempted to preach the Gospel, but who has become such a victim to strong drink as to materially weaken his mind, appeared in defence of the lodge, addressing the audience and myself in an excited, railing manner. As his mind was not in a condition to make or receive an argument, I did not attempt to convince him of his error. All Christians in the audience must have felt grieved to see a life being thrown away in the service of the devil, which might have been so fruitful in the Master's service.

There are at least three divisions of the Baptists in this section. The Old School, or what are termed by some, "Hard Shell;" the Modern, and the Six Principle. On Tuesday evening I spoke in the Six Principle Baptist church, at Factoryville. The attendance was good. The Lord helped me by his Spirit, and it seemed as if conviction must have come to the hearts of some lodge members present. Bro. Starry has worked the degrees in the same church. Pres. C. A. Blanchard, when first engaging in lecture work, traveled all through this section. A rough fellow for whom nature did much, and who has been wrecked by the saloon and lodge, remarked that young Blanchard knocked the Masonic "lodge all to hell in this section." I suggested that perhaps it felt at home there.

Dr. Miles and wife, of Dalton, gave me a warm welcome on learning my relation to "Our Charlie." I am indebted to many friends for assistance and personal kindness which I have not the time to enumerate. I am realizing the fulfillment of God's promise, that those who wait on him shall not want any good thing. Bro. L. Woodruff, of this place, has opened his heart and home, and everything possible is done to make my sojourn pleasant. His sainted father, who has so recently gone on before to his eternal reward, took no little interest in our reform. His name will be remembered as blessed by many who knew him.

I go to see about meetings now.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM OUR ENGLISH CORRESPONDENT.

UNION AND NON-UNION IN BRITAIN.

Retford, Eng., July, 1891.

For years the question of union between churches of similar faith has been freely discussed in this country. Why such churches keep apart from each other is a problem which unsophisticated people can only solve on the supposition of sentiment. Certainly it is neither on the ground of economy of working, nor on that of Christian charity.

The General and Particular Baptists have at last sunk their differences and amalgamated their forces and we think they will be vastly bettered by the course they have adopted.

The amalgamation of two similar bodies of Methodists has been anticipated but not realized. Three years ago the Methodist New Connexion Conference made overtures which were understood to embrace all bodies of Methodists. The United Methodist Free Churches Annual Assembly cordially responded to these overtures, believing them to be honest. The result was that a joint committee, constituted of leading ministers and laymen of each denomination, was formed to consider on what basis such a union could be consummated. This committee carefully dealt with all the points of difference existing between the two bodies, and suggested a series of admirable methods for the overcoming of all difficulties standing in the way of union. After months of careful consideration, in which they were perfectly unanimous in their recommendations, they presented their report, in June of 1890, to the Methodist New Connexion Conference, and in the following July to the Annual Assembly of the United Methodist Free churches. One point of the report was singled out for adverse reference by the M. N. C., namely, the right of the minister to act as circuit chairman without election. The Annual Assembly of the U. M. F. C. returned a courteous reply to that reference indicating that practically the position of the minister had been conceded for the custom of electing the minister chairman was almost universal. Further negotiations were invited and a willingness expressed to meet, as far as possible, any difficulty which might still exist.

This year the M. N. C. Conference decided that the time for union had not yet arrived, or (to use the words of one of their own leading laymen), "The Conference has shut the door against any future negotiations with a rude and vulgar bang." The resolution declared that "further action in relation to the proposed union is not advisable," assigning as the reason that "the discussion of the question has developed serious differences of opinion among our ministers and people."

Surely they had understanding of the people and knew from the first whether these differences existed or not. It is very singular that many of the speakers in the M. N. C. Conference spoke strongyl in favor of union, but voted against it, which gives the impression outside that some pressure was brought to bear on the question of which the general public is kept in ignorance.

The press of the country is very strong in its comments on the disingenuousness of the entire conduct of the Conference. Not a particle of proof was adduced of any difference of opinion existing among the churches. The only sure way of ascertaining the opinion of the churches was through the quarterly meeting; but when this was suggested, the Conference, fearing the result of such an appeal, rejected it. The wish of the churches, so far as that wish has been made known by resolution, has been largely in favor of union. Many of the influential laymen of the Connexion deny that there is any serious difference of opinion among the people, and affirm that the opposition to union is confined to the ministers, who are afraid of losing the chairmanship of the quarterly meetings. Some influence of unusual force must have operated on the committee that prepared the resolution for the Conference, inasmuch as Mr. Shaw and Mr. Goodall, whose speeches were intensely strong in favor of union, voted against it. The only person who acted consistently was the Rev. W. Longbottom, whose vote went with his speech for union. His arguments in favor of union were unanswerable, and so were left unanswered. Most people think that the M. N. C. Conference has been "fooling" the U. M. F. C., and, if so, the conduct is not dignified.

THE CHURCH AND REFORM.

Millville, N. J., July, 1891.

Editor Cynosure:—The writer is a constant reader and admirer of the Cynosure. I am an old ex-itinerant clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal connection, now in my eightieth year. I was coaxed into Masonry some two-score years ago, when threatened with a physical breakdown, through overwork. I was soon voted chaplain of the lodge and considered (because of my ecclesiastical standing) quite an acquisition to the same by the lodge fraternity; but like President Finney, I soon learned that the lodge is no place for a professed follower of the Lord Jesus Christ.

My prayers, which always ended—as all prayers should with, "For Christ's sake," I soon learned were not satisfactory to the more experienced members of the order, the lodge master handing me a printed prayer in a Masonic ritual which was minus any reference to Christ whatever, which he said was the form of prayer which was wanted there, and which alone would meet the approval of "the brethren." Suffice it for me to say, I never used that prayer, and soon after left the order, never to return. I can now proudly say, with the father of my country, that I have not been in a lodge now for over "thirty years." (Washington said that he had not been in a lodge "more than once or twice" during that length of time.) But the devotees of the lodge are to be prayed for, if not as common infidels, as those who are at least on dangerous ground, for "God out of Christ is a consuming fire."—Bible.

With the sainted Bishops Hamlin and Ames and C. G. Finney, at whose feet the writer had the great privilege of taking lessons in revival work some sixty years ago in western New York, we cannot resist the terrible conclusion that the nominal church of to-day is being poisoned with lodgery, tobacco-using, worldliness and voluptuous living—those public and private sins by which the self-denial enjoined by the Saviour is wholly, or nearly, ignored.

A popular preacher remarked, from the pulpit, not long since, that it is now rather "popular to be a Christian; rather respectable to follow Christ." Don't believe it! Listen to Christ's own words on the subject: "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake." That it is rather popular to be a church member, a deacon, elder, leader, or even a private in a large uptown church of to-day, is quite true; but alas! how fallen is the church which darkens inward glory with outward splendor. How much work can such a church do for God or the cause of true reform? How much do they do?

God has graciously permitted your humble correspondent to participate, in a small measure at least, in some of the reforms of his day, for which he is very thankful. In a three years' sojourn in "the sunny South," prior to the war, he was permitted to study the evils of slavery at the auction-block, on the plantations and in the slave inquisitions of that day in eleven Southern States, the results of which were reported weekly to the Northern Independent and Northern Christian Advocate, and often copied into others of the religious and reformatory press of that day. After his return to the North, he delivered some two or three hundred lectures on the evils of American Slavery, for which he was mobbed in western New York State, and often had his life threatened. When the war broke out, he enlisted as a private, (refusing a commission) and went to the front to settle, if possible, with "blood and iron," the issue for which it seemed that the press, pulpit and rostrum were inadequate. (Alas! the pulpit and religious press of the country generally were then, as now, toward the prohibition, anti-secrecy and other reform movements of our day, altogether too silent or apologetical.)

He was soon after appointed secretary and chaplain of the Soldiers' Free Library in Washington, which position he held until honorably discharged at the close of the war.

Suffice it for us to say that he has lived to see the great evil of those days defunct and buried in the grave of the past—the conflict ended, and peace and tranquility restored upon the basis of a whole Union and no slavery. He is interested in all the living reforms of this day but is too old to offer much aid in their consummation. He is glad, however, to add that his faith in their certain success is strong and unrelenting.

The same Omnipotent hand that guided our ship of State through the tempestuous waves of secession and rebellion is still at the helm, and certainly will not permit us to be wrecked upon the shoals of intemperance and conspiracy; for

"Since God is God, and right is right,
And right the day must win,
To doubt would be disloyalty—
To falter would be sin."

P. Tower, An Old Reformer.

A NEW SUBSCRIBER'S TESTIMONY.

St. Maurice, La., July 17, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—I once belonged to secret orders, but found they are not the place for a Christian; therefore I am no more with them. Please put my name among the many.

(Rev.) P. W. Holmes.

THE PROGRESS OF GOSPEL RELIGION IN TENNESSEE.

Memphis, Tenn., July, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—It has been some time since I gave you any communication from this part of the country, and I believe yourself and some, if not all of your readers, have no objections to hearing how the cause of righteousness is progressing here. I am pleased to tell you that our church is moving along in the right direction; by this I mean that we are advancing in the way of truth. The first Sunday in July we had been worshiping in our present house of worship nine years, and we had an anniversary day. Papers were read by several of our young people; and here let me inform you we have more intelligent young people in our family than can be found in any other Baptist family in our city, among our people. The papers read were their own productions, and according to the proverb, "straws tell which way the wind is blowing."

I quote you some of their language: Miss Jennie Herrington read a paper—topic, "Ebenezer," and said, "During these years we have had trials and sufferings; we were pursued by the Philistines, who were, with open hands, standing ready and determined to capture us at any cost; but God delivered us out of their hands and we came out from among the wicked."

Another spoke these words: "At one time the altars of Baal stood exalted to the sky. Pastor and people worshiped at his shrine; all sought his popularity; finally, the pastor sounded the Gospel cry, 'Come out of her, my people, and be ye separate.' At this trumpet call, the kingdom of anti-Christ was enraged, and blood-thirsty men did conspire against the Lord's anointed, that they might hush the voice of truth and right. But God, who is wonderful in all his works and ways, suffered not one soldier to die in the fight, but sustained and brought them out victorious. The achievements of this battle are known very nearly all over this world, even to Africa, our farther land, for some of the missionaries that are now laboring among that people have stood here in this sacred stand and have vowed against the power of lodgeism."

Six or more papers were read along this line, showing that strong opposition to secret societies is taking deep root in the minds and hearts of our young people.

Consistency is said to be a jewel, and I believe God wants his people to be not only a peculiar people, but to be practically consistent. I have informed you, some time since, that our State of Tennessee is geographically divided into East, Middle and West Tennessee, and this physical division seems to carry its ramifications into our political and religious institutions. Our church is a member of a body known as the West Tennessee Baptist Association, and not a single pastor in this body belongs to a secret compact. When our fight began they were all Masons and Odd-fellows; only two churches, however, take the stand that we do, viz., that no person holding allegiance to a secret combine can be, or will be, accepted as a member of our body. Beside our Association we have a General State Convention. This body brings together all the ministers of the State (Baptist), and they of Middle and East Tennessee are nearly all of them affiliating Masons, Odd-fellows, or some other of the vast number of secret conclaves among our people. By retaining our membership in this State body, we, of course, had to fellowship its Masonic and Odd-fellow preachers. This body is now in session at Jackson, Tennessee; and I told my people, last Tuesday night, I was not going to have anything more to do with this general body of anti-Christian men.

I did not see the consistency of our refusing to allow secret society men and women to be members of our body, and then go to a State convention and fellowship the class of folks whom we refuse to fellowship at home; and they (our church), with one accord, said "Amen! Amen!"

We are looking for the light, and when it comes, my people are always ready to receive it with a hearty amen.

Another evil in our land, and one that is assuming prodigious proportions, is the evil of extravagant dressing among Christians. Our church houses, which are built for, and dedicated to the service of God, are being transformed into emporiums of style and fashion; professing Christians now attend God's house for the purpose of making a display of their laces, ribbons, feathers and other finery, thereby shutting up the kingdom of heaven against men. The poor of all classes are barred from attending our places of worship by this extravagant display of fashions, in and at our churches. They (the poor) have some degree of pride, and because they cannot keep pace with others they decline to attend the house of worship, and thereby are shut out from hearing the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I am now trying to reach the poor; we are all poor, but I mean the very poor, for to them did Jesus send word to John (when he was in prison) that the Gospel was being preached. Numbers of our sisters are divesting their hats of flowers and feathers, and wearing a plain piece of ribbon only upon them; and I hope, ere long to have a people wholly the Lord's; a consistent and peculiar people.

An original piece of poetry was read on anniversary day by one of our members, a blacksmith, who has had only a few advantages, and was at one time an official in a Masonic lodge, but who, with us, came out at the first sound of the Gospel to separate.

God bless you and all my fellows in this warfare for truth and righteousness. Yours in battle array, R. N. Countee.

THE "CYNOSURE" APPRECIATED.

Clinton, S. C., July 14, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—I received two issues of your paper, and I like it ever so much. It filled my heart with joy and gladness to think that there are some friends who think enough of me and my work to contribute to my necessities—friends who have never seen or known me. I appreciate the gift and your paper so much. I am trying to preach and live for God. In this land we have the great enemies, intemperance and immorality, to fight.

Through the power of God, I have added sixteen souls to the church this year. I want to see the time when intemperance and iniquity shall be banished, and the light of God's countenance shall shine in every heart. Dear brothers, will you pray for me and my people?

(Rev.) S. H. Alexander.

PITH AND POINT.

—If Masonry is good for a man (?) Christianity is tenfold better.

—Any religion founded on the ancient pagan mysteries is as bad as no religion. Jesus Christ is the only hope of man's future rewards.

—Should secret societies be opposed by discussion of their merits? Certainly, in the light of Christianity, whose glories will overshadow them and dispel their boasted values.

—The evils of secret societies, when exposed, should be sufficient excuses for renouncing and opposing them.

—The obligations of secret societies are great inducements to their members to exercise prevarication and falsehood; and this prevarication may be tacit or expressed. It is lying, anyhow.

—If Washington was a Mason, whatever his genius, talents, good works, and success in life, he was evidently not a "bright" member of the order.

—Compare the fol-de-rol of Odd-fellowship with the quiet, self-denying benevolence of the Good Samaritan, or with that of Peter and John (Acts 3: 1–11.) Who paid the "dues" of the wounded traveler and the lame man?

—"Friendship, Love and Truth"—the three links of Odd-fellowship—are great things in the lodge ritual; but compare them with the required "Faith, Hope and Charity" of the Gospel—the master links in the chain that binds men to Christ—and note the difference. See Hebrews 11, Colossians 1: 5 and 1 Cor. 13.

—"Why take all the trouble you do to fight the lodges?" persons sometimes ask of us. Certainly not for the pecuniary profit of the warfare; certainly not for the honor of it; but to keep young men from binding themselves by horrible oaths to do those things that all true Christians abhor; to keep them from entering into fellowship with the works of darkness; to lead them to a better destiny than the secret lodge can offer them.

—"What satisfaction can you find in such work?" does some one ask. Listen: "I certainly prize the reading of such a paper as the Christian Cynosure more highly than any other of which I have any knowledge. Long may it continue to battle against the wrongs of secrecy."—(Rev) J. J. Jones, Friendsville, Tenn.

—As patriotism has but one object when aroused by the signal of danger—the preservation of the country and the perpetuation of its civil, religious and educational institutions; so Christianity has but one purpose in its warfare against every form of evil, out of the lodge as well as in it; to advance every interest of the kingdom of heaven; to work for the suppression of vice and wickedness; to encourage and help the downcast and downtrodden by the hope and promises of the Gospel, and to do good continually.

—"Justice, honesty and honor must be proclaimed the great triumvirate to rule in every office in the Republic, and universal education must shine in every happy home like the sparkling dews of heaven in the heart of every flower."—(Ex-Gov.) Robert Taylor, of Tennessee.

—"With materialism comes a general disregard of all that is highest and best. The Bible is neglected, the Sabbath profaned, the pulpit tends to become an index of public opinion, rather than a former of it, wealth is squandered in mere sensual comforts or noisy display, and the solid, courageous, thoughtful manhood of our ancestors seems vanishing from among men. It is not strange that men of the world who do not believe in the presence of God, the immortality of the soul, or the authority of the Bible, should be thus deceived. Even when such men have read history they may still exalt the temporal above the eternal. We have a right, however, to expect better things of Christians, and our Protestant faith which sprang from schools for liberal training ought not to see its foundations destroyed and earthly gods set up without vigorous and effective protest."—President Blanchard, in the Wheaton College Record.

LITERATURE.

St. Nicholas for August (the "Midsummer number") is very rich in literary and pictorial attractions. The full-page frontispiece—"Puck and the Fairies"—illustrates "A Rhyme of Robin Puck," by Helen Gray Cone; J. T. Trowbridge's "Fortunes of Toby Trafford," illustrated, is continued, as is "Chan Ok," by J. O. Davidson. Other illustrated papers are: "Four Sides to a Triangle," by Chas. R. Talbot; "Prince Elecampane of the Golden Plume," by Margaret Johnson; "The Crowned Children of Europe" (with portraits of royal heirs), by Chas. K. Backus; "Plain Truths About Hunting," by Julian Ralph; "The Torpedo Station at Newport," by John Osborne; "The Merry Outlaw, Bob o' Lincoln," by L. E. Stoffel; "Vacation Days," by Laura E. Richards; "How the Maiden and the Bear Sailed Away," by Oscar Park; "A Hornet's Nest," by Walter S. Bigelow; "The Story of the 'Century' Cat," by Mary F. Honeyman; "A New Tale of a Tub," by N. P. Francis; "The Story of My Life," by Saleh Bin Osman; "The Frogs' Singing School," by E. T. Corbett; with other prose and poetic articles, jingles and pictures, the usual editorial departments, etc., sufficient, as a whole, to delight both the younger and older children for a month. Published by the Century Co., 33 East 17th street, New York.

Scribner's Magazine for August is mostly given up to fiction and poetry, copiously illustrated. The principal authors and articles are as follows: "She is Tall and Fair," a full-page frontispiece, introduces us to the heroine of T. R. Sullivan's "Anatomist of the Heart;" the third paper on the Great Streets of the World is devoted to "Piccadilly" (London), and forms the most important feature of this issue; "The Wrecker" is a new serial story, by Rob't Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourn, which promises an interesting sea-yarn; "Uneffectual Fire," by Annie Eliot, is an entertaining romance of the sea-coast; "At the Ranch of the Holy Cross," by A. A. Hayes, is a story of Colorado life, depicted with this writer's usual power of description; "Elsket," by Thomas Nelson Page, is a love-romance of Norway; in the next article, "Parliamentary Days in Japan," by John H. Wigmore, fiction gives place to a graphic sketch of political phases of Japanese life; and this is followed by a brief and tender tale—"The Song of the Comforter," by John J. a'Becket. There are poems, also, by Mrs. James T. Fields, Archibald Lampman, Louise Chandler Moulton, and Archibald Gordon. Published by Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York. Twenty-five cents.

The Arena for August is embellished with a portrait of fair Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who contributes a paper: "Where Must Lasting Progress Begin?" Other papers and writers are as follows: "The Unity of Germany," by Mme. Blaze de Bury; "Should the Nation Own the Railways?" by C. Wood Davis; "My Home Life," by Amelia B. Edwards (with a portrait); "The Tyranny of Nationalism," by M. J. Savage, a reply to Bellamy's "The Tyranny of all the People," printed in the July number; "Individuality in Education," by Mary L. Dickinson; "The Working-women of To-day," by Helen Campbell; "The Independent Party and Money at Cost," by R. B. Hassell; "Psychic Experiences," by Sara A. Underwood, with an introduction by B. F. Underwood; "A Decade of Retrogression," by Florence Kelley Wischnewetzky; "Old Hickory's Ball," by Will Allen Dromgoole; and "The Era of Woman" (editorial); "Books of the Day" (reviews); "Notes and Announcements," etc. It is worthy of note that eight prominent women of America, England, and France contribute to this number. Published at Copley Square, Boston, Mass.

The Missionary Review for August, edited by Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, assisted by Rev. A. J. Gordon and other divines, is "filled to the brim" with interesting articles by the editor and a corps of able contributors—thirteen papers in the "Missionary Literature" department; nine in the "International" department, edited by Rev. J. T. Gracey, D.D., with "Editorial Notes," "the Monthly Concert of Missions," and "General Missionary Intelligence." Those interested in the higher development of missions, as shown by their progress in all countries, will find very much to enlighten and entertain them in its pages. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 Astor Place, New York City. $2.00 per annum.

The Ladies' Home Journal for August comprises forty-eight different topics, by nearly as many different writers, each of which possesses special interest for lady readers and relate to summer travel, summer at home, household comfort, fiction, biography, poetry, etc. The popularity of this magazine is due as much to its great variety, purity and utility as to its cheapness. Published in Philadelphia, at $1.00 per annum.

OBITUARY.

G. J. M'HENRY, M. D.,

died at his residence in Marion Center, Indiana Co., Pa., July 10, 1891, aged 55 years, one month and eight days.

His death removes one of the most earnest Christian workers of the village, and his loss will be deeply felt in the Presbyterian church, in which he was a ruling elder for almost twenty years, and in the general work of the church where he labored with such untiring zeal and unfaltering courage.

For many years he was superintendent of the Sunday-school, and has long been known outside his own village for his devoted interest in Sunday-school work. He also taught a large class of young ladies, and gave to this work time which could with difficulty be spared from an active business life; but he felt that the opportunities of impressing a young life with the pattern of righteousness were the highest conceivable; and especially as a leader in the prayer-meeting will Dr. McHenry's place be hard to fill. He was a burning and a shining light, firm and decided in his opinions, denouncing every evil, and strongly upholding every worthy reform. But, while taking away so much, he leaves as much behind. He was an example and an inspiration to all who knew and loved him that will not be forgotten.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. Even so, saith the Spirit; for they rest from their labors." died at Birmingham, Ala., on the 18th of June, after an illness of four weeks. While residing in Ohio, he became an earnest supporter of the National Christian Association, in connection with the labors of Rev. J. P. Stoddard. He afterwards removed to Nashville, Tenn., where he resided for several years. He was an earnest Christian, and labored, while there, as a faithful exhorter in the Free Methodist church.

Marion Center, Pa.

BRO. A. F. SMITH

But it was as a Reform worker that he manifested the most self-denying spirit. He spent a good deal of time in distributing anti-secrecy tracts, and testifying against the lodge on the street. The Masons not infrequently threatened him; and he answered their bluffing by going on fearlessly with his Reform work. Just before he was taken sick, he was engaged in distributing Reform tracts in Birmingham for the N. C. A. His last words, shortly before his exit, were, "Living or dying, I am the Lord's." Then he shouted "Hallelujah! I am ready." And so he was translated and passed on to glory.

He leaves a devoted wife and a loving son and daughter, waiting to rejoin him at the coming of "the horses and chariot of fire." S. F. PORTER.

Wheaton College is beautifully located in Wheaton, county-seat of Du Page Co., Illinois, on the C. & N. W. Ry. There are no licensed liquor-shops in the city; there is a good public school; there are a number of evangelical churches and the population is intelligent and prosperous. It is a pleasant college town.

The expenses vary with the habits of the students. Two hundred dollars will pay all needful expenses for the year if persons take no extra work in the way of music, drawing or painting. Many of our best students earn their own living while in college and others can do so if they wish.

The College is intended for students, and all things which prevent good work in the class-room are discouraged or forbidden. Smoking or chewing tobacco, using intoxicating liquors, attending secret societies and similar methods of wasting time, strength and money are prohibited. Everything which will aid in producing men of strong convictions and courage to maintain them we desire to seek.

Cleanse the scalp from scurf and dandruff; keep the hair soft and of a natural color by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

First, We do not offer any man a premium to renew his own subscription. If a man has taken this paper a year and does not care enough about it to take it longer without being hired to, we do not offer him a premium.

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

☞Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, postpaid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

NEW PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

THE BEST OFFER YET MADE.

During June and July we offer to each NEW subscriber for the Christian Cynosure the following liberal premiums:

One copy of Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary, neatly printed and bound in half-seal covers, and one copy of "The Life and Words of Christ," by Cunningham Geikie, D. D., a larger volume, equally well printed and similarly bound.

Smith's Dictionary has long been a standard publication for Bible students, and is especially rich in trustworthy biography and geography, indicating a vast amount of study and research. It contains 468 pages of closely printed, double column pages, and, with its thousand references, will be found a useful help in studying the Scriptures.

Geikie's Life of Christ is also very rich in Biblical information, combining the history of our Lord and his disciples with reliable descriptions of the manners and customs of the times in which they lived, the worship of the Israelites, and other matters of interest for careful students. Its reputation as a literary work is excellent. It contains 826 pages.

For persons who have never taken our paper and desire to subscribe for one year, we consider this the most generous offer that has ever been made by this office. On receipt of two dollars, both books will be forwarded, with the paper, to the address of any actually new subscriber. For three dollars and the names of two new subscribers, the books will be sent free, during June and July.

We offer as a PREMIUM for subscribers to the Christian Cynosure the choice of nearly

100 BABY CARRIAGES,

from the Lowest to the Highest grades.

These carriages are manufactured by L. G. Spencer, who has carried on this business for years in the "Carpenter Building," where the Cynosure is published.

See Premium advertisement on 13th page.

SPECIAL.

New subscribers will be received during this month to whom the Cynosure will be sent from August 1 to January 1 for 50 cents. To the one sending in the new subscription, will be sent the great St. Louis Sermon and also Joseph Cook's address.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor. By a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25cts each.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 6, 1891.

THE ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE AND THE LODGE.

An old member of the Rock River M. E. Conference, Illinois, who has seen many years of honorable and honored service in California, remembers the time when that body was as heartily opposed to the secret lodge as it has since been subservient to that great evil and enemy of the church of Christ. The reminiscences he has given us are the more interesting and important because of the commanding influence of this Conference in the Methodist denomination.

It was the custom, thirty-five years ago, in this Conference to question candidates for admission to its membership and the ministry, whether they belonged to a secret society or not; and in that early and honorable day Methodist preachers had to clear themselves of this heathenish smirch. before they could have the mark of good standing

The father of Rev. Mr. Phelps, of Los Angeles, (who is one of the most popular pastors of the M. E. church in California, and grandson of old Father Catterlin of blessed memory,) was presiding elder in the Rock River Conference, and was very faithful to the young ministers in this respect. Old Peter Cartwright, the pioneer and hero of early Methodism in Illinois, was also a well-known opposer of the lodge. "Masonry came from the devil, and will end in the devil," was his sententious and emphatic answer to the secret order question in that day.

At one meeting of the Rock River Conference, at Galena, the questioning was sharp and the judgment against the lodge severe. There had been some lax discipline before this, for members of the Conference were present who objected, and were either inclined to defend the secret orders, or at least to palliate the sin of membership in them. Bishop Hamline was present; he was at that time the Nestor of the church, and wielded his great influence with moderation and meekness. The present generation no more venerates his name, than his saintly character was then esteemed. He was appealed to for a decision of the dispute. "No Methodist minister ought to belong to a Masonic lodge," was his reply.

At Aurora, either the next year, or some proximate session of the Conference, the discussion was renewed, and there was enough friendship for the lodge expressed to draw out some of the ablest members against it. The debate was long, and the interest profound. Among the champions for a pure and undefiled religion was Barton Cartwright, son of the pioneer Peter, and "a chip of the old block." He was a man of intense earnestness, and popular in the Conference, in spite of his homely features. He was speaking with great power against Freemasonry when the Conference adjourned and he was permitted to finish his argument next day.

During the night a dark scheme was hatched in the brain of a Freemason named Hardin, yet, we believe, a member of the Conference. He dreaded the effect of Cartwright's speech and knew of no reply. Masonry could not reply, in fact, to such a vindication of truth and righteousness. The eloquent speaker must be broken down by a trick. Hardin bustled around with a few sympathizers to whom he had entrusted his secret, and a fund was raised to purchase a silver set for Cartwright. They, moreover, persuaded Bishop Simpson, who was present, to aid them in their plot. It is a question whether he knew the whole of it; but he certainly became a willing and successful agent in making the presentation speech. When the discussion was resumed and Barton Cartwright took the floor for his closing argument, Bishop Simpson interrupted him and asked in an apologetic sentence that he wait a moment. He then began to expatiate on the virtues of the speaker, the renown of his father, the popularity of both, and the esteem of the ministerial brethren which ought justly to have some expression. These remarks were prolonged as much as possible, while the amazed Cartwright stood ready to explode his denunciation of the lodge iniquity, his great mouth agape, and his strong and homely face the playground of puzzled and conflicting emotions. At last the Bishop saw that the end was gained and that he had put off the dreaded and hated discussion long enough. He uncovered the silver set and presented it with a careful commendation of the grace of the givers. Cartwright was thunderstruck. His speech was knocked out of him. Only enough of it was left for him to exclaim with such a tone of disappointment and indignation, that it lingers yet in the memory of those that heard it—"Gagged again! Gagged again!!" It would be an interesting question, how the Rock River Conference became so grievously perverted on the lodge issue, so that fifteen years after this incident a large proportion of its members were Freemasons, denying Christ in the lodge while professing to preach in his name in the churches. But that day of Masonic influence and popularity is, thank God! also past. The young men are no longer going into the lodge. The older men are realizing their folly, and some of them repenting it. The day hastens, let us pray, when it shall again be the rule that members of this great Conference shall openly repudiate a system that has only antagonism for the Christian church, and shall lead the van in separating all who have taken the name of Christ from it.

THE MEN OF KEILAH.—1 SAM'L. 23: 10–14.

There is, perhaps, nowhere in history a more striking example of injustice and ingratitude than that of the men of Keilah in their treatment of David and his followers. They had been delivered from the robbing, murdering Philistines. David and his men had, without their solicitation, and with no hope of reward, risked their lives in their behalf; and every principle of honor bound them to stand by their deliverer in the exceedingly cruel persecution to which he was subjected. But Saul was enthroned in power. He had a large army at his command, while David was a fugitive, with but six hundred men. True, he was already a distinguished general and the anointed of the Lord. But the prophetic promise that he was to be the king seemed so far off, and so uncertain, that it appeared far safer, for the time at least, to open their gates to Saul and deliver up their protector, rather than provoke the wrath of the more powerful ruler who was coming against them.

There was nothing very strange in this. The spirit and methods of the men of Keilah are not peculiar to any period or nations. We have only to look around us, and we shall see abundant instances where intrinsic justice and the demands of humanity have far less respect than the behests of power. The man of Nazareth found many that believed in him, but they would not confess him, "lest they should be put out of the synagogue;" and when Pilate delivered him to be crucified, it was with the clear understanding that there was no fault in him, but simply to appease a popular clamor which he was too weak to resist.

What was true of our Divine Saviour is equally true of those Christian reforms that are the practical application of his teachings. In their first presentation they are, like our Lord, "despised and rejected of men." Like David, with his six hundred—strong only in God. It is quite as clear that Christ and his doctrines are to prevail, and that through them there will be "peace on earth and good will to men," as that David was to reign; and yet men are just as ready to choose peace rather than justice, and ease rather than righteousness, as were the men of Keilah.

Looking backward half a century, we see the great political parties not only repudiating but resisting the anti-slavery reform. They had profound respect for enthroned iniquity, but justice and mercy they were ready to surrender. Even their slave-holding had been shown to be man-stealing, and was characterized as "the sum of all villainies." But the slave-power was supreme, and not only political parties, but great church organizations so respected its authority that they openly repudiated abolitionism and cast out those who pleaded for the oppressed. To-day, the two most imminent of the reforms are the demand for the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and for the overthrow of the secret lodge system. The liquor interest controls political parties, and they yield to its demands just as truly as did the men of Keilah to Saul; while the great religious organizations are as fearful of any discussion of the secrecy question as they were of the system of slavery in the first half of our century.

To the unsophisticated Christian mind, a simple recital of the ceremonies, oaths and religious worship of Freemasonry, seems simply horrible—so monstrous, indeed, that it passes comprehension how a thinking Christian could ever stoop so low; and yet with all these facts within the reach of all persons of intelligence, and with the subject pressed on their attention for more than half a century, the great religious organizations seem as utterly unwilling to do justice to the men and women that have sought to deliver them from its unholy and malign influence, as the men of Keilah were to protect their best defender and rightful king. Nevertheless, the hour is coming when David, instead of Saul, shall be exalted, and when the moral cowardice that makes men ashamed of righteousness, and leads them to betray the innocent, shall meet with its merited rebuke.

MASONIC PENALTIES OF THIRTY-THREE DEGREES.

The penalties accepted by Masons in case they violate their lodge obligations are a study for the philanthropist, and sound strangely, emanating as they do from an institution that claims so much on the score of its greatness, grandeur and benevolence. In the order of the various degrees, they are as follows: (1) Throat cut across, tongue torn out by the roots, body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low-water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice a day. (2) Left breast torn open, heart plucked out, thrown over his left shoulder, and given a prey to the beasts of the fields and fowls of the air. (3) Body cut in two in the middle and divided, bowels taken out and burned up, and their ashes scattered to the four winds. (4) Right ear smote off, right hand chopped off, and himself classed as an imposter. (5) Tongue split from tip to root. (6) Breast torn open, heart and vitals taken out and left to rot on a dunghill. (7) Skull smote off, and brains exposed to the scorching rays of the sun. (8) House to be torn down, timbers of it set up to make a gallows on which he agrees to be hung, and at the last trump to be forever excluded from the society of all true and courteous knights of the red cross. (9) Head struck off and placed on the highest spire in Christendom. (10) "Let me be anathema marantha." (11) "Let me become inanimatus." (12) Have a spear, or other sharp instrument, thrust into left side. (13) "Of all the former degrees." (14) Dishonored, and penalties of all former degrees—followed by four "amens." (15) Body dissected, bowels taken out, heart cut in pieces, and the whole thrown to the wild beasts of the field. (16) Punished as an unjust judge, by having nose cut off—or else penalty of all former degrees. (17) Body severed in two, and bowels taken out. (18) Struck with the dreadful poinard of vengeance, head cut off and stuck on the highest pole or pinnacle in the eastern part of the world. (East of where?) (19) Body opened perpendicularly and horizontally and exposed to air for eight hours, that the flies may prey upon his entrails, his head cut off and placed on the highest pinnacle in the world, and to be ready (after all that?) to inflict the same penalty on all who disclose the secrets of this degree! (20) Hand to be cut in twain. (21) Penalties of all former obligations, and, in case of failure, body exposed to the beasts of the forest as a prey. (22) Body cut open, bowels torn out and given to the vultures for food. (23) Stripped naked, heart pierced with a poinard. (24) Not only dishonored, but to consider his life as an immediate forfeiture, to be taken with all the tortures and pains to be inflicted in manner consented to in preceding degrees. Also, "the severe wrath of the Almighty Creator of heaven and earth." (25) Forever deprived of the true word, to be perpetually in darkness, blood running continually from his body, to suffer, without intermission, most cruel remorse of soul, bitterest gall mixed with vinegar for constant drink, sharpest thorns for a pillow and the death of the cross. (26) To be forever despised and dishonored by the craft in general. (27) The earth to be opened before his eyes, and he engulfed even to his neck, and thus miserably perish. (28) All his brethren to seize him, thrust his tongue through with a red-hot iron, pluck out both eyes, deprive him of smelling and hearing, cut off both hands, then expose him in the field to be devoured by voracious animals; if none can be found "I wish the lightning of heaven might execute on me the same vengeance." (29) To be stoned to death, body left to rot above ground, deprived of burial. (30) To have heart eaten by the most venomous of serpents, and thus to perish most miserably. (31) All former penalties to be inflicted. (32) All the different penalties of the former obligations. (33) The same, and to have tongue torn out by the roots. What a sublime lime institution is Masonry!

The foregoing horrors have been condensed from the highest authorities, as found in Paine's "View of the Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry (thirty-three degrees), taken from the most authentic sources," published by Ezra A. Cook, Chicago, and for sale at this office. Price, 15 cents. It ought to be widely circulated.

"ON BUSINESS PRINCIPLES."

Christian people would hardly dare to class saloon-keepers among men of principle, and yet few persons are more firm in their principles, or more emphatic in their expression of them. Such candor is praiseworthy, however wrong their principles. A business that cannot be sustained on principle by those engaged in it is unprepared to withstand the force of public opinion, and has no ground for argument. The devil decided, in the case of Job, that a man would do anything to save his life. (Job 3:4.) But he did not then know the fortitude of Job; and Paul refuted the devil's argument when he wrote: "Neither do I count my life dear unto myself." (Acts 20:24.) With the devil love of life is very strong, and a powerful principle in his operations with mankind. With the men and women of God the earthly life is only secondary; they look for a better life hereafter, but the devil has no hope beyond the day of judgment, and for this reason he makes the most of that which is dearest to him. This is exactly the line of argument followed by the saloon-keeper: "What I do, I must do here; beyond this life there may be nothing. In this life money-getting is the principal object of all smart men, and I would be a fool to let any silly sentiment interfere with my business as long as it is lucrative. What do I care for other men? I hate a man who has no money; he is of no use to me. If he has money I want it, and if he wants whiskey, I will sell it to him. That is a fair trade, and brings in the cash. Do I keep my saloon open seven days in the week? Well, why not?—what's Sunday any more than Monday to me? Besides, Sunday has always been a good day for my business, and I would be a fool to shut up shop on that day. Wrong, is it? Well, you may think so, but money says I am right—and it's none of your business anyway."

These are the saloon-keeper's principles—rather at variance with God's Word and Christ's teachings, but exactly in harmony with the devil's ideas; and nothing but the Spirit of God can overthrow them in that man's mind. Moral suasion, with him, has no force—no more than the stroke of a baby's hand. What then? The iron hand of public opinion must be stretched out—to protect the saloon-keeper with a license, and so share in his guilt and his profits? No!—God forbid!—but to crush him out of his business; to shut up his shop seven days in the week; to cast his poisonous fluids to the moles and bats, and to brand him with infamy as the malevolent enemy of our race. To this end must the crisis be hastened, or our nation will go down to posterity covered with "shame and everlasting contempt."

ROMANISTS ORGANIZING SECRET SOCIETIES.

The following significant article we clip from the Western Catholic News. We do not say that the formation of Protestant secret societies is the reason for this movement on the part of the Roman Catholics, although it is so claimed in this clipping. The truth is that the Romanists have for a thousand years been notorious for the secret work performed in their cloisters, and the mischief these secret organizations have created has more than once led to intense persecution and bloodshed. If, however, the secret associations of the Protestants and the Romanists are to be the Gog and Magog of prophecy, the true Christian, free from all secret associations of men, will have nothing to do with this fight. It will, however require all his energies to keep himself clean and unspotted amid the strifes, social convulsions and horrors with which the future seems to be filled:

"In organization there is strength. At least so the enemies of the Christian religion believe, if we may judge from the number of secret societies organized in different parts of the world, which absorb the greater portion of civilized mankind outside the Catholic church. These secret societies are about as numerous as the semi-Christian denominations are. They aim at the destruction of religion and have already absorbed the vitality of the sects, which they will soon destroy by process of absorption.

"But the enemies of the true church are not augmented by this process, even though every member of the sects should enroll under the banner of some secret lodge, because the heretical sects were as bitter and vindictive in their opposition to the church as the lodges can possibly be. The shifting of the quicksands of Protestantism, which move from place to place by the action of the various currents of unstable thought, may be lashed against the rock of Peter, but with no greater effect than a mosquito kicking against the Rock of Gibraltar.

"But if there is strength in organizations of an unlawful and anti-Christian character, there must be strength in organizations for moral and Christian purposes. Therefore, the Catholic young men of this city should follow the example of their proclaimed enemies, and the enemies of religion and good government, and organize. Not as the enemies of religion or of good government, nor of any class or people, but in self-defense. The U. O. D.'s and several other proscriptive and disloyal organizations make no secret of their hostility to the church and to Catholics, and challenge counter-organization."

A TEMPERANCE CONGRESS AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

With the official recognition and approval of the United States Congress and by order of the World's Fair Directory, a World's Temperance Congress of women (to co-operate with that held by men, as well as to hold its own separate sessions) is hereby convened in Chicago, for June, 1893, to consider all branches of this greatest among reforms, under the general heads of Preventive, Educational, Evangelistic, Social and Legal measures for putting away the individual use of alcoholic and narcotic stimulants, and separating all governments from permissive relations with their manufacture, transportation and sale.

All temperance organizations of women in every nation are invited to send, as delegates, their general officers (or proxies, who shall represent them,) and besides these one delegate for each one thousand members duly accredited on the books of their respected treasurers. Well-known leaders, experts and specialists in the temperance reform, whose names will be published later, constituting the Advisory Council of the local (Chicago) Committee issuing this address, and charged with working up this Women's Temperance Congress, are hereby invited to attend as ex-officio members with full powers.

In addition, the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union has determined to have an exhibition of temperance literature, banners, mottoes, medals, photographs, documents, etc., to erect a fountain, establish a printing office, restaurant, cafe, temperance hospital, etc., at the World's Columbian Exposition.

The call for the World's Temperance Congress is signed by Frances E. Willard, Matilda B. Carse, and Helen L. Hood, Secretary of the Illinois W. C. T. U., 161 LaSalle street, Chicago, who will give all requisite information required.

MASONIC NONSENSE.

"Why is it that some craftsmen never discern the greatness and goodness of Freemasonry?"—Voice of Masonry.

How can you expect men who are hoodwinked to see what does not exist?

"Freemasonry is an institution possessing real dignity."—Voice of Masonry.

Dignified, very! Bro. Holman, of Boston, deems this a respectable parlor exhibition. Tastes differ.

"The (N. Y.) Dispatch has some concentrated nonsense concerning a Masonic exhibition at the World's Columbian Exposition."—Voice of Masonry.

By all means let us have it, and let Past-Master Edmond Ronayne be stage manager. It would be a "drawing card" in his hands.

"DID THE PRESIDENT DRINK."

President Harrison, during his visit on the Pacific coast, probably all the way round the circle, drank wine when it was offered. This we understand to be his custom. We write it with sorrow. A public officer who is a professing Christian, should set no such example as this. While he is firm enough on some political and official lines, he seems to have no very exalted notions as to some personal matters. We are sorry. But it must be written to the honor of Postmaster-General Wanamaker that he uniformly refused the wineglass. He would have none of it. He has convictions, and stands by them.—Christian Advocate.

The strictures of the Christian Advocate, if the facts are as stated, are none too severe.

—A soul-insurance company has been started in a town in northern Wisconsin, by a Roman Catholic priest, independently of his church. He calls it the "Deliverance Society," and announces himself as its manager. His fee for admission to the society is twenty-five cents; annual contributions, ten cents. The funds received are to "rescue from purgatory, and to celebrate masses for the repose of the souls of those who have died while belonging to the society." Will the Pope stand this perversion of "Peter's pence?"

—We are in receipt of "Bees and Honey." (73d edition), the illustrated catalogue of A. I. Root, Medina, Ohio, with a price list, describing a great variety of goods useful for parties engaged in the production of honey, the proper care of bees, the methods of securing the best results in the business, etc.; with price lists of other goods for common use, bargain counters, etc. The descriptions and advice given are a great help to buyers who know their needs, but do not know where they can be supplied. For catalogues and further information apply to the above address.

—The Faculty of Berea College, Berea, Ky., have recently offered two prizes for the best essays on the subject of Secret Societies—their characteristics, dangers, etc. Competition is open to students of the school year of 1890 and 1891. The essays are to be read at some period during the fall term of the college. Further particulars are to be furnished for publication, and the result will be anticipated with considerable interest. The fact that these societies are daily increasing, and that agitation of their merits and demerits is pervading the press, the pulpit and the platform, argues well for an ample understanding of this important feature of modern life. The colleges, especially, have an interest in its discussion.

—The noon prayer meeting at the Cynosure office, No. 221 West Madison street, is ably maintained, although the number who daily gather here is not as large as it should be. A good interest in the success of the special work of the N. C. A. and the conversion of sinners is manifested, and enters largely into the petitions offered to the throne of grace. Among the principal Christian workers participating in the meetings during the past week, were Rev. J. D. McCord, assistant pastor of the First Congregational church, Rev. Edgar Wylie, of Summerdale, Rev. W. I. Phillips, of the N. C. A., Rev. Mr. Irvine, of the Moody Institute, and Rev. Joseph X. Dillier, for twelve years a missionary in the South. All friends of the Cynosure are invited to unite in aiding this little work of grace by their presence, prayers, and contributions, and by bringing in persons whom they desire to have saved.

Rev. M. Bennett, long presiding elder of the M. E. church, says: "I am pleased to be counted in for the movement which is being inaugurated against tyrannical organizations and factitious distinctions in society."

The Home.

DUTY.

I held a flower in my hand:
'Twas night, I could not see;
And judging from the perfume, thought
The flower must ugly be.
But when the morning came, and light
With its transforming power,
I did forget all else, except
The beauty of the flower.

God placed a duty in my hand,
Before mine eyes could see
Its rightful form; that duty seemed
A bitter thing to me.
The Sun of Glory rose and shone;
Then duty I forgot,
And thought with what a privilege
The Lord had blessed my lot.

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

VIII.

"You know where I live?" asked Johnnie; "down there by the big park? Well, right this side of the park, near Holman's saloon, there is a candy stand."

"I know! a boy with only one arm keeps it," interrupted Robert Darling. "I've seen him."

"I know him, too, said Gussie. "I used to buy peanuts there last summer whenever we went to see the fishes. What's the matter with him?"

"He's learning to drink—I guess he's learnt too."

"Oh, I'm so sorry!"—this from Grace. We, too, knew whom Johnnie meant, for we had been to the park and noticed the one-armed boy who sold nuts and candies.

"He's a jolly good fellow," continued Johnnie. "Dad thought he was too nice, I spent so many pennies there. He's got a mother—I've seen her once or twice; queer old lady. His father's dead, and there's just the two of them. They're real poor, but they own their house, and live on what he makes at his stand. I guess he don't make so much now. Some of the men in the saloon treated him when the days were cold, and now he doesn't wait to be treated. Sometimes he's had so much he can't make right change, even. I don't know as you can help him. Thought I'd tell you, anyway."

"What's his name?" I asked.

"Pete Sinclair."

"How did he lose his arm? do you know?"

"Run over when he was a little chap."

"How are we to get at him?" asked Gussie.

"Give it up," answered Johnnie with a shrug. "He's awful proud and huffy. If he guessed what you were at, he'd show you the door mighty quick."

"Why don't you help him, John?" asked Robert Darling.

Johnnie colored up to the roots of his hair, but said bravely, "I've been mean to him since he got to drinking. He got so mad at me once he threw things at me. He won't sell me things now, and I don't blame him, either."

"That's bad," said Bob.

"I know better now," continued Johnnie, humbly. "Guess he'll make up some day. Couldn't you folks do something for him?"

We talked about it a while longer, but all the decision we could come to was to keep him in mind, go to his stand when we could, the boys especially, and get acquainted with him. When we found out anything we could do as a society we were to get together at once to see about it, in the meanwhile doing what we could apart. Gussie was instructed to make an entry of the matter. Then we handed in our addresses to the secretary, that we might easily be called together by mail. This brought us to the end of our time, so we joined hands, sang a verse of "Auld Lang Syne," and with many a lingering look, filed out of the old room and dispersed until the morrow, which would be Closing Day.

It dawned clear and beautiful. I was ready first, so called for Grace. She was dressed all in white. When she was ready her father called her to him and fastened into her dress a lovely rose with some dusky pansies. Then he took the little face between his hands and kissed it very tenderly. There were tears in his eyes, and I wanted to cry, too. Perhaps before the pansies had ceased to bloom, they would have been held in her hands for the last time on earth.

The hall where we assembled was a gloomy kind of a place, with its uneven floor, high, dingy windows, and time-stained walls. But for that occasion it was transformed. The floor was not noticeable, because of the rows and rows of chairs. The windows had been carried away bodily, the openings being gracefully draped with bunting, while flags, bunting, evergreens and mottoes covered the walls.

The girls fluttered about, trying to appear unconscious of their finery, and complimenting each other profusely.

The boys gathered in little groups, twitching uneasily at starchy collars, afraid lest their wonderfully smooth hair should be disturbed, and occasionally appealing to a girl friend to "come and pin this bothersome bouquet— it won't stay put!"

At last the big clock in the corridor rang out its warning, and to merry music we filed into our places, the observed of all observers.

There was the usual program of essays, orations, recitations and songs. Then the speeches by the "Big Wigs," as we disrespectfully termed the dignitaries on the platform. Those over, came the most exciting part of all.

"I take great pleasure in presenting to you a list of those who have distinguished themselves in the final examinations," said Principal Hight to the Honorable Big Wig in the chair. "Every prize has been fairly won by hard work," he went on, "and I trust they are but significant of future conquests our young friends will make."

The gentleman addressed adjusted his gold-rimmed glasses, took the list, glanced over it (as if he didn't know all about it before!) and began to read, first the names of those who had received only one prize, going on to those who had the greatest number:

"Prize in geometry, Thomas E. Dixon."

"Prize in elocution, Augusta Mills."

"Prizes in drawing and algebra, Robert H. Darling."

And so on, to the end, and Grace had not received one prize. I was too astonished to feel angry or sorry, at first. I could not make it out. We had been classmates for seven years, and the least number of rewards she had ever drawn had been three. One year she had drawn ten. I looked at her, but there was no surprise or disappointment on her face, though she avoided my look. Her eyes had that far-away expression I was learning to know and to dread, for then it seemed to me she was thinking yearningly of another future.

We were all waiting anxiously for the closing song and benediction, that we might examine into this state of affairs, when the white-haired gentleman again asked our attention.

"There is one more reward before me on the table," he said, lifting one end of a broad, blue ribbon, "which it gives me peculiar pleasure to bestow."

Every one was by this time on the qui vive, for we thought the last prize had been given.

"This has been won," he continued, "by a pupil who has been under our notice for many years. It is not our custom to bestow one special award of this nature, but here we felt called upon to make an exception, and are sure that you all, friends, teachers and pupils, will heartily indorse our action. During seven years, this pupil has never by careless conduct or neglect of any duty, merited a reproof from those in charge. The general class record of our young friend for those seven years averages higher than that of any other student in the same time, and more prizes have been awarded in this case than to any other that has come under notice." He lifted the ribbon, exhibiting to us a shining medal.

"It is with sincere pleasure that we give to Miss Grace Darling this gold medal, awarded to her by the Board of Education, for her exceptional faithfulness during the seven years she has been in our schools."

I never heard a wilder cheer than our boys set up, and the girls laughed, and clapped, and clapped, and laughed, as if beside themselves.

"Will Miss Grace Darling please step forward?"

Trembling from head to foot, she rose. As she moved into the aisle her father met her, and placing his strong hands about her, led her gravely, gently, proudly forward. The broad, blue ribbon was fastened to her white dress, and as she faced the audience to return to her seat, the applause broke out again. A sudden wild flush overspread her pale cheeks, and her eyes were glowing with excitement, even while they drooped bashfully before the demonstration. She had never, I thought, looked lovelier than she did that day.

We were dismissed somehow—I didn't pay much attention to anything but my friend, who was surrounded by a circle of enthusiastic classmates the minute we were released.

"Oh, isn't it just too lovely?"

"But what a shame you didn't get a prize!"

"What was the matter? It must have been a mistake!"

"Oh, what a lovely medal! Aren't you lucky, though?"

She bore it as long as she could, but soon turned gently from them all, saying only, "I am so tired, I must go home." They seemed to grow quiet very suddenly. One got her hat, another ran for her sunshade, and then they bade her good-by tenderly, as if it were to be for a long time. Robert and I walked home with her, helping her all the way, she was so weak. I was terribly frightened when I left her, she was so unlike herself. But the next morning I found her, bright-faced as usual, shelling peas in the sunny kitchen. Reassured about her, I began at once to talk over the affairs of the day before.

"How ever was it, Gay, you didn't get one prize?"

"Didn't deserve it, I suppose," she said, smiling.

"But why didn't you deserve it? You always did before."

"Why didn't you get any, you naughty Fanny?"

"I'm not one of the prize kind. Were you too sick to write?"

"No."

"Couldn't you answer the questions? They weren't so awful hard."

"Then why didn't you answer them?"

"Grace Darling, why didn't you? Couldn't you, or wouldn't you?"

"Oh, Fanny, what does it matter?"

"Answer me directly: Couldn't you, or wouldn't you?"

Perhaps I would not have been so persistent, but for a certain suspicion I had.

"I wouldn't," she said, flushing to the roots of her hair, yet too honest to do otherwise than speak the truth, since I held her to it.

"Did you mean not to have any prizes?"

"Yes."

"Why?"

Her eyes pleaded for me to let her alone, but I was inexorable, and she submitted.

"It was our last year at school, the last chance the rest would have to get the prizes. I thought—by and by, you know, it won't matter whether I got any or not. Tom wanted the prize in geometry, and—oh, don't let's talk any more about it!"

"Well," I said, "they had sense enough to give you that medal, anyhow."

"Fanny, you won't tell any one, will you?"

"What about? Of course I'll let them know what you did. They're not going to imagine you couldn't help it, if I know a thing or two. Oh, Grace Darling, you're too good. I couldn't have done such a thing. I wouldn't have thought of it."

"Stop talking nonsense. I want to go over to Mrs. Clarke's."

"This morning? Do you feel able?"

"I think so. I want to go while I can."

So arm-in-arm we sauntered out in the bright sunshine, though my heart was heavy to see how very lame she was, and how very slowly she had to walk.

In the frequent statements concerning the increased consumption of liquor in this country, it must be remembered that the increase is mainly on account of immigration. More liquor is also consumed by the colored people in the South than during the days of slavery. Under the control of his master, the slave had not the present opportunities for obtaining strong drink. Many of the colored people have become great drunkards. This, however, is a part of the price a race must pay for freedom. Leaving out the influence of immigration, and the Negro population, the amount of liquor consumed in proportion to the number of people is not increasing.—Journal and Messenger, Cincinnati, June 10.

CHANTICLEER.

Sleep lies on the village roofs,
  Dreams float in the dim air,
The daisy stars beside the bars
  Still fold their petals fair.
When loud and clear, old chanticleer
Calls from the farm field far and near.

"Awake!" he peals, "The morning's here!
  Unfold all drowsy eyes;
Come, milk-maids gay, the cattle stay,
  The sun climbs up the skies.
Come, farm-boys slow, the cool hours go,
The grass already is to mow.

"Creep off, O, silver-footed mists!
  Wake, butterflies and bees!
O, skylarks, sing! O, breezes, ring!
  Laugh, green leaves on the trees!
Sunbeams, behold, the marigold
Is weeping for you in the cold."

And so he rings from field to field
  'Till all the still world hears;
And bustling feet and singing sweet,
  Break gladly on the ears,
And cowbells ring, and breezes spring,
And cottage gates wide open swing.

And swallows stir beneath the eaves,
  And daisies spill their pearls,
And farm-boys chaff, and milk-maids laugh;
  Smoke from the chimneys curls,
"Old Chanticleer, pray hush, and hear
My song now!" sings the sky-lark clear.

"WHAT WE OWE TO ANIMALS."

Those who have read the story of Robinson Crusoe, the sailor who was shipwrecked on an island not inhabited by white men, will remember how he soon made companions of the various animals he found there, and with their aid sustained life until he was rescued. If one of us should be shipwrecked on a desert island where no animals lived—no horses to draw us, no ox to toil for us, no cow or goat to give us milk, no sheep to give us wool, no hens to give us eggs, no dog to be our companion and guard us in the night, no cat to lie on the hearth, no birds to sing their songs, no living creature to keep us company, no sound of any living thing by day or night, only solitude and silence everywhere, with nothing to eat but such roots as we could dig from the earth, and nothing to wear but such bark as we could pluck from the tree—we should then know how much we owe to these creatures, which God has mercifully provided for our use. And ever afterwards, if we escaped from such a life, how grateful we should be to God for giving them, and how grateful to them for the service they render us!

It has been said by those have who studied about it that if only the birds were all destroyed, we could not live on the earth; for the insects which the birds eat would destroy all vegetation, and all human life would perish.—Twelve Lessons on Kindness to Animals.

JUST AS I AM WITHOUT ONE PLEA.

A few weeks ago, a poor little boy came to one of our ward missionaries, and holding up a dirty and wornout bit of printed paper, said, "Please, sir, father sent me to get a clean paper like that." Taking it from his hand, the missionary unfolded it, and found it was a page containing that beautiful hymn of which the first stanza is as follows:

Just as I am—without one plea,
But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bidst me to come to Thee—
  Oh Lamb of God, I come!

The missionary looked down with interest into the face so earnestly upturned to him, and asked the little boy where he got it, and why he wanted a clean one. "We found it, sir," said he, "in sister's pocket after she died, and she used to sing it all the time while she was sick, and loved it so much that her father wanted to get a clean one, and put it in a frame to hang it up. Won't you give us a clean one, sir?"

This little page, with a single hymn on it, had been cast upon the air like a falling leaf, by Christian hands, humbly hoping to do some possible good. In some little mission Sabbath-school, probably, this poor girl had thoughtlessly received it, afterward to find in it, we may hope, the Gospel of salvation. Could she in any probability have gone down into death sweetly singing that hymn of patience and faith in Jesus to her latest breath, without the saving knowledge of Him which the Holy Spirit alone imparts?—Times of Refreshing.

TEMPERANCE.

HEREDITARY INEBRIETY.

Granting that certain persons may become inebriates as "a matter of choice," by voluntarily adopting certain habits and a certain course of life that can only end in confirmed inebriety, still we cannot account for the universal evil of inebriety on the mere hypothesis of "moral delinquency." We must go deeper than this, and in many instances back of the inebriate himself.

In a study made by me of 600 cases of inebriety, the family history being carefully recorded, 223 had inebriate fathers, mothers or grandparents.

It is a suggestive fact that of 752 cases treated in America and Britain, no fewer than 326 had a family history of previous inebriety.

Heredity is the one great predisposing cause of inebriety.

This fact, the heredity of alcohol inebriety, did not escape the notice of the older writers. Plutarch taught, "One drunkard begets another;" Aristotle, also, "Drunken women bring forth children like unto themselves."

Insanity and alcholic inebriety go hand in hand. Inebriate parents may have insane as well as inebriate children, and the reverse is equally true. A forcible illustration of the relation which inebriety bears to insanity is found in the history of Norway. When the spirit duty was removed in 1825, between that time and 1835 the increase of insanity was 50 per cent., on the previous proportion, and the increase of congenital idiocy was 150 per cent. Dr. Sykke, physician to the city hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, writes, "Bruhl Cramer, from a long examination of this subject, concludes that drunken parents are seldom prolific, and when so the children are stupid, malicious and full of mental defects."

Dr. Skae collected eighty-two cases of dipsomania. In thirty-two cases inheritance was clearly marked; in the collateral branches he found drunkenness, dipsomania, suicide, mental disease. Dr. Thompson, another observer quoted by Skae, reports twenty cases; in nineteen the inebriety was inherited; many of these families contained two, four or eight members, either inebriate, epileptic or insane. In three families reported by Sykke in which both parents were either drunken or insane, every member suffered from mental defects, epilepsy, dipsomania or suicide. Dr. Martin, while interne at Saltpetriere, obtained data of heredity in eighty-three insane epileptics out of 130 cases; of these eighty-three sixty had intemperate parents.

It will thus be seen that the heritage which alcohol hands down in the line of descent may be inebriety, insanity, epilepsy and kindred diseases of the nervous system. Let me quote briefly the British testimony on this point.

Dr. Arthur Mitchell, commissioner of lunacy for Scotland, testifies: "The children of habitual drunkards are in a larger proportion idiotic than other children, and a larger proportion themselves drunkards."

Dr. Forbes Winslow testifies: "A large proportion of the frightful mental and brain disturbances can be traced to the drunkenness of parents, confirming the great physiological saw that 'like begets like.' "

Dr. Alexander Peddie, physician to the Royal Edinburgh Asylum for Insanity, testifies that in the large majority of instances he believed that the habitual drunkard inherits the proclivity from drunken parents, or from a constitutional insanity in his family, of which the most marked manifestation is a tendency to drink; he "could cite scores of instances that had come to his notice, in proof of the transmission from drunken parents to their children of a proclivity to drink."

Dr. Robert Druitt testified: "In many cases the condition which gives rise to inebriation is heredity, as a drunken father or mother, or a half insane or eccentric father or mother would be likely to have drunken children."—Dr. L. D. Mason, Consulting Physician to the Fort Hamilton Asylum for Inebriates, in Voice.

THE LATE DR. CROSBY.

The recent death of Dr. Crosby lends interest to what was, perhaps, his latest utterance on the liquor question. Its significance is increased by the well known fact that he did not accept the testimony of science that alcohol is a poison, injurious in any amount, to the human system. Consequently he did not believe, theoretically, in total abstinence or prohibition. Yet here is his judgment, expressed in a recent article in the Forum: "This is the most important question now before the American public. Tariff, railroad, the Negro, the fisheries, Canadian reciprocity, Pan-American alliance, and the silver question, are all of secondary consequence when compared with this matter of the fundamental morals of legislation and society. It would be well if the attention of our citizens could be diverted from all other questions and concentrated on this, until it should be settled that rum is not to rule our land and spread its filth and corruption over the glorious potentialities of the heritage with which a generous Providence has endowed us."

SHE NEVER HAD A PAIR.

It is a fact, beyond dispute, that the drink habit is the chief cause of all the poverty, distress, and suffering around us. A pathetic little story is told by a leading merchant of a Pennsylvania town, as the result of closing the saloons.

A woman came into his store timidly. She was evidently unaccustomed to trading.

"What can I do for you?" inquired the merchant.

"I want a pair of shoes for a little girl," she answered.

"What number?"

"She is twelve years old."

"But what number does she wear?"

"I do not know."

"But what number did you buy when you bought the last pair for her?"

"She never had a pair in her life. You see, sir, her father used to drink when we had saloons; but now that they are closed he doesn't drink any more, and this morning he said to me, 'Mother, I want you to go to town to-day and get Sissy a pair of shoes, for she never had a pair in her life.' I thought, sir, if I told you how old she was you would know what size to give me."

Mr. D. Lloyd George, M. P. for Carnarvon, in contrasting temperance sentiment in the country forty or fifty years ago with the present day, noted the fact that Charles Dickens has not a single teetotaler among his male characters, whereas it would be impossible for a Charles Dickens of our days to ignore them. There were one hundred and sixty teetotalers in the House of Commons.

The military commission of the Austrian army has established a law that the offence of intoxication should be punished the first time by a public reprimand. The second offence by several days' imprisonment in the guard-house. The third offence is evidence that the victim is suffering from a chronic disease, and he is placed under constant surveillance. His pay is taken out of his hands, and every means used to prevent him from getting money to secure spirits.

The following little incident furnishes an eloquent comment on the vile trade that lives by putting temptation in weak men's way: Dr. John Hall, the eminent New York minister, stood recently on a boat in New York harbor. Beside him stood a plainly-dressed man. Not far away was a well-dressed young man who was tipsy. The people were making sport and laughing at the drunken man. Mr. Hall remarked to the stander-by: "They should hardly laugh at him." The plainly-dressed man replied: "It is a thing to cry over." The man then told Dr. Hall of his own troubles—how he fled from Scotland to get his wife away from drink; of her death from the effects of strong drink; of two of his children who inherited the love of liquor; and how he was then fleeing with them to a town in Ohio, where he was told liquor was not to be had. To him, truly, it was "a thing to cry over."

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. A needed rest interrupted.—vs. 1–4. "After these things;"—the calling of the twelve apostles, and the death of John the Baptist. Christ saw himself a forsaken and vanquished leader, rejected of his own people and forbidden by the terms of his commission and the shortness of the time now remaining to him from going to any other nation. But none the less did he divinely foresee the future triumphs of the Gospel, and the imperative necessity of making provision for its promulgation by the choice of his twelve disciples. In the latter event—the cruel beheading of his forerunner—he must have seen, as Dr. Pentecost observes, a forecast of his own death. What is more natural than his desire to escape the unsympathetic, misunderstanding crowd at such a time as this, and be alone with his Father? Yet even this was denied him. The great multitude, on their way to the Passover feast at Jerusalem, turned out of their way to seek him out. This was only one of many occasions when his sorely-needed rest was thus broken in upon; but we never read of his showing the least impatience. Surely here is a pattern for us who find our daily life so full of interruptions. The claims of humanity around us will invade, more of less, both our hours of business and of leisure; yet, as Christ's most wonderful miracle was wrought at such a time, it is then that we have opportunities for most blessed service.

2. Human calculations at fault.—vs. 5–9. Poverty and improvidence marked the general condition of this throng that followed Christ; but he only saw in this circumstance an added reason for his tender compassion. We shall always have with us those who lack the ability, in current phrase, "to get along,"—those who must be helped by their more thrifty and provident neighbors. If we have the spirit of Jesus, we shall compassionate such, instead of complaining when we have to supply their necessities. "And this he said to prove him." The hard questions so often set before us in our daily life are to "prove" us. If Philip had been of quick spiritual discernment, he would have said that he who could make water into wine could set a table for these fainting multitudes even there in the wilderness. Yet was he any more stupid than many a Christian who can look back on a thousand gracious providences by which he has been supported and helped in time of need, and yet suffers himself to be perplexed and troubled, as if he had not the same Lord to-day? And how very natural for us to do like Philip and Andrew, and fall to calculating our own human resources with which to meet the emergency. No wonder we are discouraged. Yet we must not make the opposite mistake, and because we are the children of a King, with unlimited resources at his command, fold our hands in idleness and make no effort ourselves. We all have at least the five barley loaves and the two small fishes, just as to every servant of God, however lowly, is committed at least the one talent. To have faith in God is no more positive a duty than it is to make the best of such resources as he may have given us. He always blesses rightly directed diligence and honest industry, whether it be in things temporal or spiritual. Only let us remember that without the touch of the Saviour's hand there would have been no multiplication of the loaves and fishes. Selfishly kept back, instead of being fully consecrated to him, we shall find the opposite result. Instead of multiplying, there will be a shrinking and contracting, even of what we have, until it is virtually taken away from us.

3. The multitudes fed.—vs. 10–14. Four things are noticeable about this miracle. (1.) In feeding this vast crowd he recognized the need of system and method. He made them sit down in ranks by hundreds and by fifties; an orderly company instead of a mere hungry mob, each one struggling to get his share. Here is an argument in favor of organized methods in doing charitable work. This may be carried so far as to take all life out of it, and make it a mere machine, but it is no less a fact that alms-giving in a haphazard way is sure to do more harm than good. (2.) "There was much grass in the place," refreshing alike to tired eyes and weary bodies. This seeming trifle no doubt made a great difference in their enjoyment of the feast so wonderfully provided. On what other herb of the field has God placed so much honor as on the humblest of all—the grass which springs up to-day and is cut down to-morrow! (3.) He took the loaves and fishes as they were, without waiting for them to be multiplied, and gave thanks. This is the essence of true thankfulness; the spirit which transforms the humblest viands into angels' food. (4.) In God's economy there is always enough and to spare, but none to waste. The fragments must be gathered up. If we are forbidden to waste food, much more must we be careful not to waste what is infinitely more precious,—our time, our talents, our opportunities, of whose proper use we must all render an account at last.

Religious News.

ADVENTISTS.

—The annual camp meeting under the auspices of the American Millennial Association, will be held at the camp-ground near Hebronville, Mass., commencing Thursday, August 6, 1891, and continuing over two Sabbaths.

—The Fourth Annual Meeting for Bible Study, will be held, the Lord willing, at Ocean Grove, N. J., August 8–12, 1891, under the direction of Dr. L. W. Munhall.

BAPTIST.

—The Baptist church and congregation at Morgan Park, near Chicago, find it one of the pleasant incidents of the vacation season that they may then enjoy the visits and sermons of graduates of the seminary who in leaving for their respective fields more or less years ago, left also in the minds of those who had come to know them many pleasant recollections.—The Standard.

—A note from Rev. E. G. Phillips, of the Assam mission, brings the intelligence that failure of his wife's health compels a return to this country. His home is to be at Bristol, N. Y.

—The address of Dr. A. P. Graves is, for the present, to be at 313 West Twenty-second street, New York City. After some weeks of stay, there, with his invalid wife, he expects to return South, and resume his work there as an evangelist.

—Rev. W. F. Slocum, of Orange, Mass., has offered himself as a foreign missionary. He has his mind on a field in Southern Japan. Before his present pastorate at Orange, he was settled at Wooster, Ohio, and Logansport, Ind. His heart has long been inclined to the foreign field, and Mrs. Slocum had the same inclination before her married life. They are happy in their work at Orange and are appreciated by their people.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Sixteen members have been received this year into the A. M. A. Indian school at Fort Berthold, N. D., by the missionary pastor, Rev. C. L. Hall, the whole number now being forty-six. There are three tribes on that Reservation: the Rees, the Manaons and the Gros Ventres, with their three languages, one thousand in all.

—Capt. George C. Garland of the missionary ship, Morning Star, is in Dedham, Mass., on a visit to his sister, Mrs. A. F. Daniells.

—In the vacation absence of Rev. J. C. Cromer, of the Millard Avenue church, Chicago, Rev. Norman A. Millerd has given a part of his series of evangelistic lectures to Christians as Sunday sermons. Any church desiring to hear these lectures can address Mr. Millerd at 1151 Lawndale Ave., Chicago.

—A good example for country churches is presented by Rev. John Avery, of Ledyard, Conn., who, assisted by several members of his church, is holding a series of meetings on Sunday afternoons in the outlying districts of the town. The attendance is large and many are reached who are seldom seen at any of the usual Sunday services.

FREE METHODIST.

—The Galva district camp meeting will be held in New Bedford, Ill., August 26–September 1.

—Spring Arbor Seminary.—Mrs. A. T. Brott will have charge of the primary department. The fall term opens September 1, 1891.

—The Galva district tabernacle is up at Geneseo, the Peoria district tabernacle is in the battle at El Paso, and the Joliet district tabernacle is in the field at Chatsworth.

—The Peoria district camp meeting will be held August 19–25, in El Paso.

—The Wabash conference will be held at Vincennes, Ind., Sept. 1–6.

LUTHERAN.

—Christ Lutheran church at York, Pa., is about 160 years old. It dates back to 1727. The first church was a log building erected in 1744. In 1762 the log house yielded to a fine large stone edifice, and in 1812 the corner-stone was laid for the present church, which was dedicated in May, 1814. In 1875 the church was remodeled and made two-storied. In 1882 Rev. Dr. Enders became pastor; the congregation and Sunday-school grew rapidly, and more room was needed. In August, 1890, the corner-stone of this new Christ church chapel was laid, and recently the completed building was dedicated.

—There are two small Lutheran congregations in Salt Lake City, Utah; one of these is German and the other is Scandinavian. But they have prospect of increase in the near future, as "strangers," or "Gentiles," as the Mormons call them, are constantly settling there.

—The Lutheraner announces that thirteen candidates are before the churches, from which to select a successor to the late Prof. A. Crœmer, of the Springfield, Ill., seminary.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Christian Workers will hold a camp meeting at Hebronville, Mass., ten days—August 22d to the 31st. Efficient preachers are expected from all parts of New England. Hebronville is on the Boston and Providence R. R., (Old Colony Line), thirty-five miles from Boston, and nine miles from Providence.

—The Christian Alliance camp meeting at Old Orchard, Mass., has been changed from the first week to the second week in August, from the 8th to the 17th. It will no doubt be a meeting of great spiritual blessing to those able to attend.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—We believe the brightest day our church has ever witnessed is now before us. It does seem that there was never so great activity in her bounds. The call for laborers is coming up from all over the field. New stations are being organized. The ingathering of souls is encouraging. Two evangelists are to be put in the field all the time. The liberality of the church is on the increase. At many points God is granting gracious revivals. The prospects for candidates to enter the ministry were never better. With united energy and sympathy let us move forward to the work that God is giving the church to do.—Due West (S. C.) Associate Reformed Presbyterian.

—Rev. Mason W. Pressly has been elected a Fellow in Theology in Harvard University, which, besides securing for him the patronage of Harvard, entitles him to $500. His pamphlet on "Metaphysics of Theology," together with study along some other lines of theology, secured him the title. Mr. Pressly designs prosecuting under this fellowship "the historical problems connected with the question of a supernatural Christianity."

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—Superintendent Porter, of the Census Bureau, has in preparation and will soon issue a bulletin upon the membership of the Catholic church in the United States, by States and counties. The bulletin will show that the membership numbers 6,250,000 communicants over fifteen years of age. This minimum limit of age to fifteen years will be adhered to in the statistics of other churches which are in course of preparation.

—During the last ten years there have been to the Shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre, Canada, 984 organized pilgrimages; 777,694 pilgrims; 67,445 communions, and 25,014 masses. The number of pilgrims during 1890 was 105,672, and of these 20,000 were from the United States. In the same year there were 108,575 communions and 3,696 masses. Most of the pilgrimages take place in June, July, August and September. Over 60,000 pilgrims visited the shrine in July and August of 1890. Quebec, 180 miles from Montreal, can be reached by boat or by rail. The village of St. Anne, which is twenty-one miles from Quebec, can also be reached by boat or rail.

UNITED BRETHREN.

—The next Ecumenical Methodist Conference is to be held in Washington, D. C., beginning October 21st next. Our church will be entitled to seven delegates. This representation is granted not because the United Brethren church is a Methodist body,—for it is not, and never has been,—but because it belongs to that class of churches known as kindred Methodist bodies. Ten years ago this Ecumenical Conference was held in London, and we were represented there by Bishop Hott and Dr. H. A. Thompson. The bishops of the church will have the appointment of delegates to the conference in Washington.—Dayton (Ohio) Religious Telescope.

—The Toledo (Ohio) Chronicle of the 23d July, says: "On Monday of this week the decision was rendered in the Circuit Court at Dayton, Ohio, in the United Brethren church case, involving the title to the Church Publishing House, valued at more than $300,000. The Dayton decision affirmed the decision of the Common Pleas Court, quieting the title of the property concerned in the trustees elected by the majority General Conference."

—Bishop Weaver has received information that he has been appointed a member of the Advisory Council of the World's Congress Auxiliary on Religious Congresses. He has accepted the position, and will represent our church in the capacity named.

—Florida has 1,973 Sunday-schools, 11,963 teachers, and 94,405 scholars, showing an increase over 1890 of 893 schools, 5,535 teachers and 35,901 scholars.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

HOME AND HEALTH.

TO PREVENT SMELL FROM OIL STOVES.

A correspondent of the English Mechanic, writes: "It is said that all oil stoves smell. I have no doubt they do—mine do—and in the nature of things they must, unless certain precautions are taken. Presuming that the stove is of good construction, and burns when turned up well, without smoke, and that it is perfectly clean (in the common-sense of the words), the maker will assert that it will produce no smell, and he is right—a new one will not smell; but lay it aside for a few days, and then light it, the usual offensive vapor will be given off copiously. The reason is not far to seek; the more volatile constituents of the oil have vaporized, and have partially condensed on the burner, and now are driven off in visible vapor. The remedy is simple, but troublesome; the burner must be removed (in those I use it is easily done by bending outwards one of the pieces which form the hinge) and placed on a clear fire, when copious fumes will be given off, which have the same smell as that complained of. It should not be allowed to get red hot, but moved about till it stops smoking; when cool it can be replaced, and the stove, on being lighted, will burn absolutely free from smell. I have used those stoves for the last ten years for cooking, and latterly for warming, and so completely free from smell are they, that a stranger would not know how the rooms are warmed. If they are unused for a long time, it is necessary to heat the stove itself in the same manner until it stops fuming."

JELLIES FROM FRUIT SKINS.

Many good housekeepers do not know that the most delicious jelly can be made of fruit skins and cores, such as are usually thrown away. There is more gelatinous matter around the core and skin of all fruit than in any other part. The skin of peaches, with a few pits added, boiled in as little water as possible, strained and made up with sugar, pint for pound, yields a most delicious red jelly. A delightful jelly may even be made of apple skins and cores, though it is improved in flavor, and jellys more easily, if a small quantity of the cores and skins of quinces are added to it. A very excellent jelly is made of grape skins and quince skins in about equal quantities. Pear skins contain less gelatinous matter than any other fruits, but if used in connection with quince skins will make a fair jelly.—Tribune.

THE BATH.

The following instructions of the secretary of the Royal Humane Society of England upon bathing, will be found of value:

Avoid bathing within two hours after a meal.

Avoid bathing when exhausted by fatigue or from any other cause.

Avoid bathing when the body is cooling after perspiration.

Avoid bathing altogether in the open air if, after having been a short time in the water, there is a sense of chilliness, with numbness of the hands and feet; but bathe when the body is warm, providing no time is lost in getting into the water.

Avoid chilling the body by sitting or standing undressed on the banks or in boats after having been in the water.

Avoid remaining too long in the water, but leave the water immediately there is the slightest feeling of chilliness. The vigorous and strong may bathe early in the morning on an empty stomach. The young and those who are weak had better bathe two or three hours after a meal; the best time for such is from two to three hours after breakfast. Those who are subject to attacks of giddiness or faintness, and those who suffer from palpitation or other sense of discomfort at the heart, should not bathe without first consulting their medical adviser.—Hall's Journal of Health.

SIMPLE CURATIVES.

One of my children was down with diphtheria, and was in a critical condition. An old man who heard of the case asked us if we had tried pineapple juice. We tried it, and the child got well. I have known it tried in hundreds of cases. I have told my friends about it whenever I heard of a case, and never knew it to fail. You get a ripe pineapple, squeeze out the juice, and let the patient swallow it. The juice is of so corrosive a nature that it will cut out the diphtheria mucus, and if you take the fruit before it is ripe, and give the juice to a person whose throat is well, it makes the mucus membranes of his throat sore.—Ex.

To relieve neuralgia: Take two large tablespoons of cologne, and two teaspoonfuls of fine salt; mix them together in a small bottle; every time you have any acute affection of the facial nerves or neuralgia, simply breathe the fumes through your nose from the bottle, and you will be immediately relieved.

Simple cough cure: Roast a medium-sized lemon; when heated through, cut and press the juice upon three ounces of pulverized sugar. Take a spoonful whenever the cough is troublesome.

Pure onion juice will cure croup in the first stage. Cut the onion fine, put on a cloth, pound with a hammer, and squeeze into a small dish; sweeten, and give until it produces vomiting.

"Oh, if I had only taken this medicine earlier in life, what years of suffering it would have saved me!" was the touching exclamation of one who had been cured of rheumatism by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Scores of such cases are on record.

VALUE OF MANURES.

The Experiment Station of Cornell University has made a series of investigations on the loss in stable manures in open barn-yards, the results of which are summarized in bulletin 27 of that station, published in May, 1891.

In the experiments of 1890 horse manure was saved from day to day until a pile of two tons had been accumulated. This was done from April 18th to 25th. Cut wheat straw was used plentifully as bedding, the relative amount of straw and manure being 3,319 pounds excrement and 681 pounds straw.

Chemical analysis showed that one ton of this fresh manure contained nearly ten pounds of nitrogen, seven and one-half pounds of phosphoric acid and eighteen pounds of potash, making its value about $2.80, if these constituents be valued at the same rate as in commercial fertilizers.

The pile of manure thus made was put in a place exposed to the weather and where the drainage was so good that all the water not absorbed by the manure ran through and off at once. It remained exposed from April 25th to September 22d, at which time it was carefully scraped up, weighed and a sample taken for analysis.

It was found that the 4,000 had shrunk to 1,730 pounds during the six months, and analysis showed that this 1,730 was less valuable, pound for pound, than the original lot of manure. It had not only lost by leaching, but by heating or "fire fanging" during periods of dry weather, and the value of the pile of 4,000 pounds had shrunk from $5.60 to $2.12—a loss of 62 per cent.

In summing up the results of this experiment, Director Robert says: "It seems safe to say that under the ordinary conditions of piling and exposure, the loss of fertilizing materials during the course of the summer is not likely to be much below fifty per cent of the original value of the manure."

KEEP UP WITH THE PROCESSION.

Farmers, like other people, must keep up with the procession or else get left. This seems somewhat harsh, but, nevertheless, it is true. The procession does not halt to permit the slow to keep up with or overtake it. And not to be in the procession means to be "out of the swim," with all that the words indicate.

It is no use trying to compete with your enterprising neighbors with "scrub" cattle. They cannot keep up with the procession of thoroughbreds. The old saying that "blood will tell" is true every day in the week.

The old-fashioned, mixed-up chickens were good enough in the days of the Revolution, for George and Martha Washington had never heard of the non-setters and almost perpetual layers that we who live in the year 1891 may possess.

Long-horned brindles, that gave from five to eight quarts of milk per day, in answer to the active calls of our dear, old grandmothers, might have satisfied them, but will not do for those who have a pail filled by a black-and-white Holstein.

There was a time when a razor-back hog filled the heart of an honest old-time farmer with delight, but the Berkshire and the White Cheshire have come to take its place. And if they are not good enough the Poland-China ought to answer.

Lean, lank horses once pulled the carts along our country roads; but what a change. The procession requires something faster and more reliable. The farmers' horses of to-day are the pride of the "horsy" man.

Years ago the sheep on the hillsides and in the valleys looked as if they were just recovering from a fit of sickness. Now-a-days they appear to have been fed on everything that is good, for what went into their mouths has stuck to their ribs. Sheep husbandry has also been climbing the ladder.

Even the mules have been improved. More body and less ears has increased their beauty; and if it was not for the hardness of their heels I would glory in owning a pair of mules that were raised since 1885.

Forward, march! Step along lively, as you are too nice a people, kind readers, to be left in the background. There is sunshine somewhere ahead, and it is no doubt among the improvements and not among the fossils of the past.—N. Y. Witness.

Banana Peel on the Sidewalk.

The street-car had passed, but to catch it he reckoned,
So he ran like a deer, and shouted and beckoned,
Till he planted his heel
On a smooth bit of peel—
Then he saw half a million of stars in a second.

He was in too great a hurry; better have waited for another car. There are cases, however, where haste is necessary. If you have night-sweats, feverishness, weak, sore lungs and a hacking cough, do not lose an hour in obtaining a supply of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Delay in such cases is dangerous; it may be fatal. Before the disease has made too great progress, the "Golden Medical Discovery" is a certain cure. We ask for a careful perusal of ex-President J. Blanchard's sermon—"Christ's Kingdom on Earth"—on the third and fourth pages of this issue.

"Horton's Image of the Beast," a book formerly sold at the Cynosure office, is about to be republished by an Eastern house. It is considered a very strong argument against the Christian character of the Romish church.

The Western Catholic News asks what the Head of our church (the Lord Jesus Christ) was doing "when 717 converts in one diocese (Salford, England,) went from Protestantism to the Catholic church in 1890?" Saving sinners, sanctifying saints, and making ready to fulfill all his prophecies recorded in Revelation 17.

Rev. Edward Hildreth, of Southern California, formerly treasurer of the N. C. A., who is now visiting Chicago, referring to the rumor printed last week in this paper, expresses his firm conviction, from a personal knowledge of President Harrison's habits while on his recent excursion in that State, that the Executive positively refrained from indulging in wine, even after it had been placed before him.

The Census Bureau at Washington, on Saturday last, shows that the Roman Catholic church owns cathedrals, churches and chapels valued at $118,381,516, and has a total of 6,250,045 communicants. The archdiocese of New York has property valued at $8,992,525; the archdiocese of Boston, property valued at $6,479,078, and that of Chicago, including Cook and seventeen other counties, is third, with 326,640 communicants and church property valued at $6,457,064. In the distribution of communicants the archdiocese of New York has 472,806; Boston, 419,668; Chicago, 326,640; Philadelphia, 251,162; Brooklyn, 228,785; St. Paul, 203,484, and Baltimore, 192,597. The average amount of money to each communicant in the church is about $19., and yet this, the richest church in the world, is always begging money for its poor from all denominations.

Several newspaper slips have been received at this office, calling attention to the reprehensible practice of various druggists in counterfeiting certain popular "patent" or proprietary medicines and palming them off either as genuine or "just as good" as the genuine. If existing laws will not punish the perpetrators of this fraudulent line of business, the public, as well as all honorable manufacturers of medicine and dealers, has sufficient interest in the matter to have new statutes enacted for the suppression of this system of substitution or criminal misrepresentation. In medicine or food there is no excuse for adulteration or unwholesome substitution.

A well-known officer in the army of the "Southern Confederacy" recently stated that it "was the only government in the world that really enforced prohibition." The manufacture of ardent spirits, first in Virginia, and subsequently in the other Southern States, was forbidden, because all the grain was required for food. The "fire-water" was consequently scarce, and dealt out only on physicians' prescriptions. Three barrels of liquor were forwarded for medicinal purposes to a prominent surgeon, under guard, through West Virginia, and when the barrels reached him they were empty, the soldiers to whom its transportation had been intrusted having surreptitiously drawn it by means of a gimlet and drank it. The affair created a sensation, and excited official indignation, but it was impossible to fix the blame upon the guilty parties. The Confederate army was temperate per force.

Incidentally, the Chicago Tribune revives the memory of the "American Knights," a treasonable society which flourished in Indiana and elsewhere during the rebellion. The author of this secret and murderous order was, according to the Tribune, a copperhead named Wright. His disloyalty, at one period, caused his arrest by the Union government, and his incarceration in Fort Lafayette for several months. For a time he was editor of the New York News, a very traitorous journal. It was during a visit to Indiana that he organized the dangerous society above-named, of which the notorious Vallandigham, of Ohio, was at one time the controlling spirit. After a pretty large growth of it had been secured, it appeared upon the scene as a military organization, designed to assist the campaign of the Confederates. The arrest of its leaders, Dodd, Bowels, Milligan and others, however, resulted in its being speedily squelched. With such examples as the "American Knights" and "Knights of the Golden Circle," during the war, and the "Anarchists" and the "Clan-na-Gael," and others of equally pernicious principles, in peace, the price of liberty is certainly eternal vigilance.

The visit of Chief Arthur, of the secret order of "Brotherhood of Engineers," to Chicago, last week, revives recollections of the long and unprofitable struggle between the C, B. & Q. R. R. Co. and its employes, two or three years ago. Referring to that event, Mr. Arthur is reported as saying that the order is growing rapidly. The engineers that took the places of the Q brotherhood men are still out of the order, although they had applied for a charter from the brotherhood. "We did not consider they were worthy to become a part of our order," said Mr. Arthur, "and hence we declined to let them come in. We do not bother them at all, however, and there is no friction between them and the engineers of other roads we come in contact with. We don't go on the assumption that other men must believe as we do, and they have their rights as well as we, and if they believe it is not to their interest to work in harmony with us, why, all right." The course pursued by the C, B. & Q. was undoubtedly the best, and the admissions of Chief Arthur would seem to confirm it.

WHEN THE KING SHALL CLAIM HIS OWN.

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

When the roar of earth's wild clamor
Is exchanged for bursts of song;
When God's right hand swings the hammer
Till is crushed the tide of wrong;
When his love so warm and tender,
Swiftly o'er our hearts has blown,
Then shall dawn that day of splendor,
And the King shall claim his own.

When the storm-clouds all are lifted
From above his fiery car;
When the mists are torn and rifted
From the wind-swept hills afar;
When his golden glory, dawning
On the paths we've trod alone,
Ushers in that glorious morning,
Then the King shall claim his own.

When our burdened hearts shall lighten
In the glory of that day;
When those pain-dimmed eyes shall brighten,
With their tears all wiped away;
When shall cease earth's roar and clamor,
And the last recall is blown,
God shall drop his flaming hammer
And the King shall claim his own.

(Chorus.)

Oh! the soul shall know no sadness;
Every heart shall thrill with gladness,
When the last recall is blown,
And the King shall claim his own.

INSIDE VIEW AND OUTLOOK OF REFORM

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

"I believe the quiet admission which we are all of us so ready to make, that because things have long been wrong, it is impossible they should ever be right, is one of the most fatal sources of misery and crime from which this world suffers. Whenever you hear a man dissuading you from attempting to do well, on the ground that perfection is Utopian, beware of that man. Cast the word out of your dictionary altogether. There is no need for it. Things are either possible or impossible; you can easily determine which in any given state of human science. If the thing is impossible, you need not trouble yourselves about it; if possible, try for it. It is very Utopian to hope for the doing away with drunkenness and misery out of the Canongate; but the Utopianism is not our business—the work is. It is Utopian to hope to give every child in this kingdom the knowledge of God from its youth, but the Utopianism is not our business—the work is."

Your correspondent prefixes this pithy passage from Ruskin, to a communication of facts and reasonings upon the all-important question of Moral Reform. A few months ago, just after the unpardonable lapse of Worcester into the arms of the harlot saloon, I addressed to the Christian Statesman an article entitled, "The National Lesson to be Learned from the Backsliding of Worcester into License." It was therein stated that it was proposed to memorialize the Board of Aldermen in Worcester, made up of six Republican and two Democratic members, together with a Republican mayor for chairman, to grant no licenses this year to hotels, victualing shops or saloons, and only to a select number of responsible apothecaries for selling as medicine. This measure was carried out in a strong and guarded memorial signed by 570 leading citizens, beginning with such names as the well-known heads of the great Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company, and the millionaire firm of the Norcross Brothers' Building Company, together with the moral support of the 5,200 solid men of property, standing, intelligence and morality, who had voted no-license.

Your correspondent, and others like-minded, defended the memorial at a public hearing before the aldermen in the City Hall. They proved its conformity to law and order, and to the solemn obligation of the city fathers by their oath of office. It was forcibly urged upon them, that as the constituted guardians of the persons, families and properties of citizens, by refusing license, high or low, and by looking well to the protective dykes and dams of society, they should keep back the flood of intoxicants that would otherwise devastate our fair city, and drown men in destruction and perdition. We remind you, it was said, that the consideration by which you are to be governed in your decision is, not what will please the rabble, or a party thereof, and purchase votes; or what will bring present income into the city treasury, the price of blood; but what will please God, be approved by the good, and be reviewed with satisfaction at the bar of conscience. The liquor traffic with which you have to deal is not unlike murderous Jack the Ripper of Whitechapel, lurking in the dives and dens of darkness. What could the London police do to catch the unknown wretch, if they should propose to go into a covenant together to license him for money? What can you do for the suppression of intemperance, the worthy end contemplated by the law of the State under which you act, if you make an agreement with the liquor traffic to legalize the local sale of liquor for the stipulated price of a license?

When, early in the civil war, the author of the famous dream entitled, "Eugenie at Deacon Giles' Distillery," was addressing a great assembly in Mechanics' Hall, presided over by Governor Bullock, and when, in the course of his dramatic address, he compared the well-known complication of public affairs to a jam of ice and logs in a freshet on one of our Maine rivers, needing but the swift strokes of a hardy lumberman to fall upon one of the wedged-in logs that held the grinding, quivering mass—suddenly all eyes at once beheld through the vivid imagination of the orator, the tall, gaunt form of Abraham Lincoln, wielding the war-power with the woodman's ax of Emancipation—"I TAKE THE RESPONSIBILITY," —and with that longed-for blow of liberty, relieving at once the mighty pressure. "She starts —she starts! Let her rip—let her rip!" shouted an unknown voice in a remote part of the house, and the furor of applause that nearly lifted the roof of the dear old hall showed with what outbreaking enthusiasm the decree of Emancipation, once issued, would be received throughout the North

So, now, from the responsible mayor and aldermen at the heart of this commonwealth, let there go forth the decree: "NO LICENSE FOR '91," and a jubilee of joy would at once begin, that would ring through the State and roll over the nation; and although there would be gnashing of teeth by the wolfish horde disappointed of their prey, there would be devout thanksgiving to Almighty God by rejoicing thousands; and an advance post would be gained in the temperance reform, never to be lost.

Let me say finally, not as a Daniel come to judgment, but as an authorized advocate of eternal righteousness standing on the changeless rock of God's Word, "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." The sin of not doing the good you might do is sure to find you out. It was the saying of an old Roman poet, 2,000 years ago, that sounds like inspiration itself, before the advent of Christ:

> "Vengeance divine to punish sin moves slow;
> The slower is its pace, the surer is its blow."

If you city fathers dare unchain the tiger that has been kept at bay among us for the last eleven months; if you now deliberately or by default let the label of license be hung on his savage neck; if you bid him prowl with impunity in Worcester as his licensed jungle, then we say it solemnly, "On your head be all the consequences dread."

Rev. Dr. Archibald McCullagh was not slow to say to the city fathers, at the same public hearing, that it was utterly incomprehensible to him, things being as they were, how they could think of giving licenses. But notwithstanding all, and despite the circulations among the people of a spirited cartoon representing the rum tiger collared and chained by prohibition, and tugging to get free; and one of the aldermen, with knife in hand, standing ready to cut him loose the moment license should pass,—as if to prove anew by an object lesson that corporations have no souls, and that Republican as well as Democratic aldermen have no conscience to be touched,—leave was given to eighty-four applicants to ply their hellish trade in this inland Queen City of dear New England; for what? For blinding blood-money to the amount of $120,000!

> "O Shame, where is thy blush?—
> O Judgment, thou has fled to brutish beasts,
> And men have lost their reason!"

They visited a saloon opening. There was a grand debauch; one barbarous murder was perpetrated; numerous arrests were made for successive days and weeks of drunkenness, till both jails of the county were more than full, and there was an increase of cases in court by 400 per cent. In the month of June, last year, under prohibition, there were but twenty arrests for drunkenness. This year, under license, there were ninety-eight in the same month, and that when it is estimated that but one in forty or fifty seen to be intoxicated are taken up. Offences have abounded; demoralization and crime, with untold waste and misery, have been the inevitable result; for all which a Republican city administration, having full power in the premises, are wholly responsible. Democratic admistration and policy are no better, rather worse; and it remains to be seen what will be the effect upon the fortunes of each of the two great parties in the pending State elections.

So many temperance Republicans are disaffected to such a degree (disgruntled is the partisan word) by the point-no-point or treacherous policy of that party toward the liquor traffic, that they are just ready to unite with a party of principle that will make the utter suppression of the alcoholic drink traffic in the United States one of its fundamental purposes. The governorship of the State being for the current year in the possession of the Democratic party, the sworn ally of the saloon, is almost certain to be kept there for another year, unless an out-and-out policy of reform and absolute prohibition be at once adopted by the Republican party, so as to retain the wavering loyalty of its best members. It must become the party of one or two great ideas, in order to keep its ascendancy with the majority of true patriots.

When the criticism was made upon the Duke of Wellington in the presence of Prince Albert, that he was a man of one idea, the Prince replied, "Yes, he is a fresh illustration of the truth, that to do great deeds and to achieve great results, a certain one-sidedness is necessary." Such are now the principles, intelligence, and spirit of the best of Massachusetts voters, saying nothing of the access of reform-voters yet to be by the adoption of woman suffrage, that a Wellingtonian one-sidedness is essential to true party success. A concentrated party enthusiasm upon one great practical idea and measure of reform, like prohibition, in the name of God and humanity, is essential to the next great victory on the field of American politics. The admission, as Ruskin says, that because things have long been wrong, it is impossible they should ever be right, is one of the most fatal sources of misery and crime from which the world is suffering. A radical, hopeful, wide-embracing party of reform is then an absolute necessity.

It is well-said, for substance, by a leading journal of the times, that "notwithstanding the fact that the liquor traffic is the gigantic evil of our day; that it prowls around every home, seeking with greater cunning than the implacable savage and greater persistence than the hungry wolf, to gain entrance; that it is the enemy of every honest industry, and every department of human labor,—still adequate reason for the formation of a new party to oppose it might not exist, did not the persons engaged in this traffic band themselves together to override all laws enacted for its refutation and restraint, and to compel the dominant party to do its bidding, or step down and out." The liquor traffic cares not for parties, but simply uses parties as tools to accomplish its ends, and then throws them aside without pity or remorse. Knowing its power, both the old parties sue for its favor, without regard to the terms on which such favors are granted, provided only that the liquor interest gives them votes. How, then, can either of those parties effectively oppose it, or compel the traffic to obey any restrictive laws, be those laws ever so mild? The need of the hour then is the ascendancy of a party primarily and unalterably hostile to the traffic in all alcoholic beverages.

Now, it is Christian and public opinion in this country, as maintained pre-eminently in the columns of the Christian Statesman, that constitutes the broad base, the great bed-plate, of expectation for the future. In the late profound and exhaustive work of the English author, Professor James Bryce, entitled "The American Commonwealth," he says of America: "Public opinion, that is the mind and conscience of the whole nation, is the opinion of persons who are included in the parties; and the great parties, each claiming to be its true exponent, seek to use it for their purpose; yet it stands above the parties. Being cooler and larger-minded than they are, it awes party leaders and holds in check party organizations. It determines the direction and the character of national policy. It is the product of a greater number of minds than in any other country, and it is more indisputably sovereign."

This last decade of the nineteenth century, I am persuaded, is to witness the establishment of a National Party of Reform, indisputably sovereign, because of the indisputable sovereignty of Christian and public opinion. It will be on such a firm basis of tried principles, as to attract and rally to its support the wisest and best of the nation from all parties. It will thus personate the power of Christian and public opinion, and will make good the sagacious judgment and prophecy of our early statesman and philosopher, Dr. Benjamin Franklin: "That he who shall introduce into public affairs the principles of primitive Christianity will change the face of the world." Thanks be unto God for the evidence that the rising of such a star of hope upon the horizon of our American civilization is close at hand.

> "Even as the sun,
> Ere it has risen, sometimes paints its image
> In the atmosphere, so often do the spirits
> Of great events stride on before the events,
> And in to-day already walks to-morrow!"

That bright to-morrow, when it comes in our American firmament, will be like "another moon risen on mid-noon," and its auspicious harbinger will prove to be the Christian reform of woman suffrage, the necessity of which I have lately argued in the Statesman as the national lesson to be learned from Worcester's most lamentable lapse into license.

Worcester, Mass., July 29, 1891.

TWO FALLACIES EXPLODED.

It is astonishing how a falschood will out-live exposure, if it appeal to prejudice. Here are two ancient bits of injustice neatly disproved—the stale idea that ministers' sons are usually scamps, and the belief that colleges are nests of unbelief.

On the first head our friend, the Presbyterian, says that of the 6,158 ministers of the Presbyterian church, at least 2,500 are ministers' sons or grandsons (citing instances where three, four, five, and even seven ministers have come from a single family), to say nothing of the many thousands who are known to have become upright and successful men in other callings.

As to the prejudice against colleges, President Thwing (who, by the way, was lately inaugurated as president of Adelbert University, the Western Reserve College) declares that it is a hideous blunder to believe that the prevailing religious mood of students is that of Mr. Ingersoll. More than half the men in American colleges are, he asserts, Christians, and he quotes from statistics of a dozen or more leading institutions to prove this. Thus: at Amherst at least two-thirds of the students are Christians; at Williams, about one-half; at Harvard, one man in every five or seven; at Dartmouth, not far from one-half; at Brown, also about one-half; at Yale the proportion is somewhat less than at Brown, but considerably more than at Harvard.—The Christian Union.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM ON EARTH.

BY EX-PRES. J. BLANCHARD.

[The Baccalaureate Sermon preached at Commencement, Wheaton College, June 21, 1891.]

"But as truly as I live all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the LORD."—Num. 14: 21.

The Hebrew, Greek Septuagint, and our modern English Revised Version give this text substantially as it now stands in our Bibles. And the obvious meaning is, that the people of this our globe shall yet all receive and honor Christ. This great truth runs through the whole Bible.

This text was spoken to Moses fourteen hundred years before Jesus was born in Bethlehem. Go down the ages seven centuries, and Isaiah (2: 11) repeats the substance of this text in the words, "The Lord alone shall be exalted in that day," while all men shall bow and be humbled before him. That this august being, so exalted by Moses and Isaiah, is the Lord Jesus Christ, is expressly taught in the New Testament. Thus John in his Gospel (12:41) says that Isaiah "saw Christ's glory and spake of him." And it is noticeable that Isaiah calls Christ by the name "Jehovah;" of which title, God said to Moses, Ex. 3:15: "This is my name forever, and this is my memorial unto all generations." And we have but to glance at the words in our reference Bibles to see that the Jehovah of the Old Testament is the Jesus Christ of the New. And when we come to the New Testament, the four Gospels, twenty-one Epistles, the Acts, and the Revelation unite, as in one voice, proclaiming that Christ is to reign over men, not over spirits, ghosts or angels, but over men on this earth. Christ, and his harbinger, John, preached "the kingdom of heaven at hand," of which the Apostles expected him to be king; and they importuned him to know when he would set his kingdom up; and the multitude were at one time ready to "take him by force and make him a king," (John 6:15). Paul declared "that in all things Christ must have the pre-eminence" (Col. 1: 18), which is equivalent to kingship; and the beloved apostle, in the Revelation, proclaims him, as he saw him through the opened heavens, "King of kings and Lord of lords!" Let us join this hallelujah chorus. Let us unite with the sainted poet Cowper, and sing to our Saviour, Jesus Christ:

> "Come, then, and added to thy many crowns, > Receive yet one, the crown of all the earth."

This discourse has one specific object. Since the ends of our earth are brought by art within speaking distance, let us look its inhabitants in the face, and question them concerning this coming kingdom of Christ. Let us take, in short, a practical view of this matter; and while our weather prophets are discerning for us "the face of the sky," let us, if we can, discern the religious "signs of our times."

Let us, then, glance at the nature of Christ's kingdom, its helps, hindrances, and some tokens of its near approach.

I. And, first, there are to be no Jews in the millennium. For Christ will be king there; and in him "there is neither Jew or Greek," Gal. 3: 28. And yet Jews are to be its ushers and bringers-in. The learned young Chicago Rabbi, Stoltz, says it was the political priests who were kept in office by the Romans, who saved Barabbas, crucified Christ, and procured his rejection by the Hebrew nation. And when repulsed by the Jews, Paul and Barnabas said, "Lo! we turn to the Gentiles," Acts 13: 46. But Paul insists that the Jews are yet to receive Christ. He reasons thus: "If the casting away of them (Israel) be the life of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?" Rom. 11: 15. But when the Jews are once brought to understand their own Scriptures, and see that their Messiah was and is Christ, they will be no longer Jews.

But, says one, "I thought the Jews were soon to possess Palestine, and Christ to set up his kingdom there." The answer is, doubtless the Jews may possess Palestine. Thousands are said to be now rallying there; and this has been said, at times, since ever I could read a paper. But a Palestine full of Jews will not make the kingdom of Christ. They must find Calvary there, and learn that all their bloody sacrifices ended on its cross; and, that by that one mighty sacrifice, which darkened the sun and shook the earth, Christ "hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." Not that old earthly Jerusalem, but the new "heavenly Jerusalem" is to be the capital of the kingdom of God for which Christ has taught us to pray. We pray, "Thy kingdom come," not in Palestine, but on "earth"! And though the thousands of the world's exiled Jews may fulfill some prophecies by their rallying in Palestine, they will divert the minds of thousands from "preparing the way of the Lord" by removing the sins and errors which obstruct and hinder his coming; as thousands of good men and women who had been Abolitionists, when they became Millerites, ceased to pray and look for the abolition of slavery, and took to looking for the second advent of Christ. They hindered Christ's coming while praying for it.

In Cincinnati, our press was three times broken with sledge-hammers and thrown into the Ohio river; and Abolitionists were mobbed and some were murdered. A huge comet stretched its pale length across the heavens; and the Millerites, in their tabernacle, grew frantic and screamed till the city rang with their echoes. The noisy meetings of the Millerites were not disturbed. because they were obstructing the kingdom of Christ. The quiet meetings of the Abolitionists were mobbed, because they were overturning the kingdom of Satan.

"Seeking first the kingdom of God" is seeking, by prayer and rational endeavor, to remove what prevents its coming. Both John and Christ did this. They assailed practical abuses. They might have preached new theories and been popular. They undertook to reform the public morals and cleanse the temple, and one of them was beheaded and the other crucified.

Satan, though destitute of wisdom, is not deficient in craft. At Sinai, God gave a law which nobody wishes to have altered. It is "holy, just and good;" simply right feeling and acting toward God and man. In the courts of that law, God was appealed to by an oath which is continued in our courts to-day.

Satan broke down that law by filling Palestine with false altars whose oaths appealed to devils, not to God. Those oaths swore away the life of Christ and the liberties of Israel, and Jews have since long been the outlaws of the nations.

God then poured out his "Spirit upon all flesh," and apostles and prophets set up churches as we have them, based on supreme love to God and equal love to man, and bid us celebrate Christ's death by a simple rite till he should come to reign. "The Jerusalem that now is gendereth to bondage," saith the apostle; and it is true. For that Jerusalem antagonizes the churches of Christ in which we are "come to the heavenly Jerusalem," of which the Jerusalem where Jews meet on Fridays to weep and wail and kiss the imagined stones of their temple, is but a dead type.

The pre-millennialists have learning and piety, and they teach much truth. They saw that mission boards whose missionaries held slaves in the United States could not abolish slavery and caste among heathen in Asia and Africa. And they could not but see that mission boards which are non-committal on false worships and the plainest, simplest questions of right, could not be bringing in "the kingdom of God," which is "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." The secretaries of one missionary society in the the United States have lately refused to send Joseph Cook's tract on Secret Lodge Oaths to their missionaries; though the tract already sent out by four other societies was offered them free of expense. Such non-committalism in the offices which appoint and sustain the missionaries, by its bad example, darkens their testimony and weakens their whole work. They "shun to declare" the needed counsel of God. If there is one spot on earth which should be explicit and outspoken on questions of fundamental morals which agitate and divide the public mind, that spot is the office which receives our money for promoting the kingdom of God. This the pre-millennialists saw. And they knew that the road to the millennium could not lie through organizations which "omit judgment, mercy and faith," that they may raise funds; that is, tithe, mint and cumin. But when they bid us hope that Christ will fill Palestine with wailing Jews and reign there;—above all, when they point to the desolations which are to precede Christ's reign over men, and tell us those desolations will prevent his reigning over men;—that his kingdom will destroy the wicked, and turn the good to angels and resurrected saints; they bring us a gospel of despair. It is true, present prospects for Christ's reign here are discouraging. But, "is anything too hard for the Lord?" True, the church of God is still a bush burning, but is not consumed, and never will be. One-half of the Jews in the United States already begin to honor Christ. They say, "He taught the law as did our Moses." And D'Israeli, the Jewish Prime Minister of England, said to his Hebrew brethren, "Jesus has done more for our nation than all the princes of Israel. He has made the ten precepts of Moses the moral standard of Christendom." A few more such movements of the Jewish mind and they will be prepared to say: "Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Then they will soon hail him as their king, and Jew and Gentile become one in him. This will be the kingdom of God.

II. Let us put earth's present population on the witness stand and question them concerning "this kingdom."

If there are fifteen hundred millions of human beings on earth who worship something, only some five hundred millions date times and events from Christ, and so are called Christians. These inhabit Europe, America and Australia, with a sprinkling in Asia and Africa.

Of the ten hundred millions, called heathen or Gentiles, who worship devils by the help of spirits, images, "four-footed beasts and creeping things," the best of them, as in China and India, sell women as beasts are sold. In their families girls are not counted as children, boys only being reckoned such. The birth of a daughter is considered a calamity, and killing female infants is not accounted murder!—while of the lower grades of heathens, several millions do not wear clothes; and Bible-rejecting scientists have learnedly striven to obliterate the distinction between those human beings and brute animals.

These can only give the negative testimony of their degradation. They have no Bible, New Testament or Old, and only prove the worth of Christ's kingdom by the want of it.

III. Let us now examine the other third of the human family and ascertain, if we can, their relation to this coming kingdom of God.

An Asiatic prince asked Queen Victoria the source of the greatness of her kingdom, on which the sun never sets. She handed him a Bible and said, "That book is the cause of our greatness." It had been better said, "What that book contains and reveals makes the greatness of men and of nations."

Abraham was a prince, Moses was a prophet, and Joshua was a captain. They believed and obeyed the God of the Bible, and rose to be founders of the world's civilization, more than a thousand years before Herodotus was the father of its history. And from their day to ours, the proportion of truth contained in the thirty-nine Old Testament books, and twenty-seven in the New, which is diffused among any people, is a good-enough barometer to measure the elevation of nations. And the darkest of all the dark signs of our times, is the treatment of these books by scholars and seminaries of sacred learning.

The universities of Europe were originally convents, of course Christian in name and profession. But these professedly Christian institutions, corrupted by wealth, and privilege and personal vices, began by declaring reason the test and judge of the Bible, while admitting it, in general, to be a revelation from God, They had not experienced miracles, and their reason rejected them. Consequently, they rejected Christ, who from manger to cross was and is a miracle. The German schools, wishing to retain the Bible and their funds, boldly attempted to explain Scripture by reason. They said, "When Korah, Dathan, and Abiram were swallowed up, Moses had, previously, 'secretly undermined the earth;' Jacob wrestled with the angel 'in a dream;' and when Christ seemed to feed the multitudes, the provisions were supplied by a passing caravan and carried to them by the apostles in baskets; and Christ, during his forty days' fast in the wilderness, lived on roots and berries no doubt. "These are but a few of the ultra ridiculous feats of rationalism, and "higher criticism," by which the universities, backed by politics and the press, brought the Bible into popular contempt; so that Fraucke tells us, in Leipzig, then the mart of German literature in 1690, "no Bible or Testament was to be found in a bookseller's shop."

Our Boston, New York, and Chicago are now following in the wake of European rationalism. Harvard, originally Christian, is well known to be practically deist; Christ is not worshiped there as Jehovah. Andover, once orthodox, teaches tenets of post-mortem probation, which the authors do not profess to find in the Bible, but which they hold to be dictates of reason. Union Theological Seminary, New York, sustains Prof. Briggs, an advocate of "higher criticism," whom the Presbyterian General Assembly declares heretical by a vote of 7 to 1. And Prof. Harper, who is called to Chicago to preside over their new university to be endowed by millions, and who is endorsed in advance by Chicago's preachers of "another gospel which is not another;"—this Professor Harper has already given his right hand of fellowship to the New York professor of "higher criticism." And both these gentlemen derive the strength of their popularity from the public impression that they do not hold the Bible to be wholly the inspired Word of God!

And while the poison of infidelity is thus being cast into the fountains of sacred learning in the leading cities of the United States; Romanism, which denies marriage to its priests, and sets them secretly to question women by auricular confession; Mormonism, which under the name of Mahometanism, has spread its harems on the two continents, and is now seeking to fasten them on ours; and spiritualism, which is devil-worship direct; these terrible exhalations from the bottomless pit, are now blending their accursed elements to produce the moral "lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and earthquake, and great hail," which John, in Patmos, saw and heard, ushering in the last day.

The terrible tempest which swept off American slavery filled eighty-two Southern graveyards with Northern dead, and hung crape on almost every door-knob in the North. This was the jarring caused by removal of a single social evil. Look at the evils yet to be removed, and see if the Apocalypse itself, with all its angels, can picture the horrors which must precede the overthrow of the abominations which remain, ere Christ can reign on earth; the sword become a ploughshare, and the spear a pruning-hook. Our own United States, the favored of all lands, supports its government, more than from any other two sources, by legalizing liquor and tobacco, which science, law and religion declare to be useless, unmitigated curses to mankind. And the portion of that taxed and licensed liquor shipped in United States bottoms, to Africa alone, causes more crime, sin and suffering there in a single year, than a thousand missionaries can do away in a century. Yet such prospects, though gloomy, are no reason for despair. The kingdom of God was once committed to twelve "unlearned, ignorant men, when the only house of God on earth had been turned into a den of thieves. But in thirty short years from that time the Gospel of Christ's kingdom had been preached throughout the Roman empire; and, in three centuries had subdued the empire itself. And to-day more than two-thirds of the earth's surface is governed by minds who profess the belief that Christ is the Son of God.

But how shall we meet and turn back this deluge of infidelity which the dragon is pouring out of his mouth, to drown the sun-clothed, star-crowned woman, by which the angel of the Apocalypse symbolizes the Christian religion?

Our answer is: We shall turn back this deluge "by the blood of the Lamb and the word of our testimony."

There are three arguments on which the truth of the Bible rests, viz: History, Experiment and Christ: And if true, it inspired, for it claims to be inspired.

1. The absence of anachronisms and the coincidence of customs with events, through four thousand years, alone prove the Bible true. Abram was a prince and Sarah a princess; and both had plenty of servants. Yet Abram ran and fetched a calf, and Sarah cooked supper for an angel in the guise of a traveler; which princes and queens in after ages would not have done. The histories of Tamerlane, Ghengis Kahn, Alexander, Cæsar, and Napoleon are read and believed without question; though neither of those great men gave their names to their posterity; while millions of Jews are still called children of Abraham, who died ages on ages before those conquerors were born. And down through all those ages, in the record of the Bible customs keeps pace with events. Thus history proves the Bible true; and if true, it is divine. For miracle runs through the whole of it.

2. Experiment also proves the Bible true. And experiment is the pivot on which philosophy turned from conjectures to facts. It was the Novum Organum by which Lord Bacon exhumed philosophy when buried under the hypotheses of the Monks of the Middle Ages.

Nitre, charcoal and sulphur have formed an explosive mixture ever since the Christian era. To doubt that gunpowder exploded will lift up heavy bodies, would be to doubt the experience of eighteen hundred years. But for more than twice that period, Bible truth has lifted up the prostrate characters of men. Alfred the Great translated portions of the Bible for the people of England, and her cross-emblazoned flag never sinks below the horizon.

Priests have set aside the Bible in South America, where England would, geographically, form but a petty province; and though peopled by a nation once the rival of England, that vast continent, with a soil and climate like an Eden, is peopled by serfs. To doubt whether the Bible, read and obeyed, elevates degraded men, is to doubt four thousand years' experience. Whenever it has touched a prostrate mind, that mind has arisen and stood erect. But religious falsehoods do not elevate humanity. They sink it to the condition of Stanley's pigmies and dwarfs in the African forests. Therefore the Bible is true.

3. But is it ALL true? And if so, how do we prove it? We answer, "by Christ."

In our national capital, at the close of our terrible war, I asked Thaddeus Stevens, the head of its "Ways and Means" committee: "Mr. Stevens, do you love and trust Christ?" That great man replied: "Well, when one looks at his truthfulness, for he was the truth, not to love him would be to be a wretch!" No honest man can read Christ's history and doubt him. And he sanctioned the books of the Old Testament, all of them, as the very Word of God. Hence to doubt that they are so, is to doubt or deny him!

The good Dr. Alexander, in his learned book on the Canon, tells us that "the Hebrew Bible of the Jews is also the Bible of the Christians. There is no difference." And if Alexander had not said this, we can any of us learn it by asking a Jewish Rabbi. And having established the fact that the Jews' Bible and our Old Testament are one and the same, Dr. Alexander says: "The whole of what were called the Scriptures received the explicit sanction of our Lord." This proves the Old Testament books, and all of them, divine; for they all were and are the Jewish "Scriptures" which Christ endorsed. And if Christ is not true, then nothing is true. And if the Old Testament books are true, they are inspired; for they claim inspiration, and they are miraculous. The Saviour says of these books, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life." Again, "The Scripture cannot be broken." He rebuked the Sadducees for their ignorance of these "Scriptures." He opened the disciples' "understandings that they might understand the Scriptures." And to the two disciples on the road to Emmaus, "Beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures, the things concerning himself." And Paul, to Timothy, calls these very books "the Holy Scriptures," and "the oracles of God." And he writes to Timothy, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." And Peter, speaking of these very books of the Old Testament, and of all of them, says, "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." So speak other apostles.

Thus, though historic and experimental proofs are good and abundant, we do not need them. We are "complete" in Christ. History is for scholars, and experiments for philosophers. But the Bible is for man; and Christ was "the Son of man." And the baptized worldlings who affect a criticism higher than Christ, belong to that same class of teachers whom the Saviour called "blind guides," and "hypocrites," and asks, "how they can escape the damnation of hell?"

I have spoken of the books of the Old Testament because they are the ones chiefly assailed. But what proves Christ to be the Son of God, proves the New Testament books to be the Word of God, identical with the books of the Old. They rest on the same basis, viz., the Ten Commandments, which Christ condensed into two. The Old Testament priests and sacrifices were but finger posts pointing to Christ, and pardon obtained by his blood. And we no more need proof that supreme love to God and equal love to man, if reduced to practice, would set up the kingdom of God on earth, than we need proof that "love worketh no ill to his neighbor," and that it conforms us to the Being beloved.

But this infidel craze called "higher criticism" is as hateful to men as it is hostile to God. They hide the resurrection of the dead by their post-mortem mists. When our loved ones die, we wish to KNOW something of where they are gone and what they are doing. Even the poor infidel Ingersoll sent his eloquent wail afterh is dead brother, and moaned that it brought no echo back. And Christ has supplied us the very information which we want. He told the ignorant Sadducees that their boasted law-giver, Moses, showed that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were alive; and that God was still their God. He took three of his disciples into the mount of transfiguration, and showed them Moses and Elias, both alive and well, and earnest for the kingdom of God as when they labored for it centuries before. He told the penitent thief, whom he pardoned on the cross, that he should that day be with him in Paradise. And he needed no "higher criticism" to interpret his words to the sorrowing sufferer by his side, and the common people who stood around the cross and heard him. He said what he meant in plain terms, and he meant what he said. And if he can meet at once in a thousand circles of prayer, wherever two or three are gathered together, though thousands of miles apart, there was no difficulty in his meeting that forgiven sinner in Paradise as soon as he ceased to breathe. Thousands of dying saints have met him in death, and greeted him with a smile! He said he would come again and receive us to himself, and he does.

Nor need we fear lest the august costume and drapery of the future resurrection and final judgment foretold by the prophets, will not be properly fulfilled. In death we pass out of time into eternity; and there is no before nor after there. And the beloved Dr. Pond said, "For aught I know the trumpet may be sounding all the time."

"God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

Le us hail these pitiful dreamers, and their misled multitudes, as signs of the times and predicted tokens of Christ's near approach; though "the sun and the air be darkened by the smoke" of their criticism. For Christ said these things must needs be. "But the end is not yet." Nor is it so material WHEN he comes, as that he is coming; and of this the tokens thicken. There are already the "false Christs and false prophets" foretold by our Saviour," showing great signs and wonders" to "deceive, if possible, the very elect."

One huudred years ago the poet Cowper expressed the belief, then common in Europe, that the seventh thou sand years of the world's history was to be the millenniium. That period begins 109 years from this present year. He sang:

"The groans of nature in this nether world,
Which heaven has heard for agés, have an end.
The time of rest, the promised Sabbath come;
Six thousand years of sorrow have well nigh
Fulfilled their tardy and disastrous course
Over a sinful world; and what remains
Of this tempestuous state of human things,
Is merely as the working of the sea
Before a calm, which rocks itself to rest."

But in Scripture, "the acceptable year of the Lord" is ever joined with "the day of vengeance of our God." And they are joined in history as well. That mighty millennial movement, the fall of American slavery, buried one-third as many people as were here when the war of our independence began. The single battle of Gettysburgh cost us 36,000 lives; more than the population of some whole counties. And our Saviour has told us that "there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken" (Luke 21: 25), and that then "the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."

The child of God has but one thing to do, that is, "to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." And the same divine authority tells us how we are to do it. We are to "confess our faults one to another, pray for one another, and exhort one another daily, while it is called to-day, lest any be hardened by the deceitfulness of sin." "Blessed is the servant who shall be found so doing."

Let us obey the injunction of our Saviour with which he classes this wonderful prophecy of the millennium: "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man," Luke 21: 36.

—During the past year the government has appropriated $360,000 in aid of Catholic Indian schools. It is done on the theory that otherwise certain Indians would have no schooling whatever. It would be better for the government to expend all the money in maintaining schools of its own, and allow the various religious denominations to do as much mission work as they are able from the benevolent contributions of their members.—Journal and Messenger.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5, 1891.

The twenty-first annual convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America met here this morning, with delegates from about 800 societies present. The convention was called to order by Bishop Colter, of Minnesota, the president of the union. Cardinal Gibbons addressed the convention, welcoming its members to this archdiocese; and Hon. John W. Ross, one of the District Commissioners, welcomed them to the District of Columbia in a few happily conceived remarks, recognizing the grand and good work in which the union is engaged. To-morrow evening a grand public mass meeting is to be held in the Academy of Music, and a cordial invitation has been extended to all friends of temperance to attend; Friday the delegates will be taken to Mount Vernon; Saturday, the last day of the convention, they will be shown all places of interest around the city, and will spend some time at the Georgetown College and the new Catholic University.

The Postoffice Department has notified all American terminal postoffices, designated as exchange postoffices with Canada, to refuse to certify money orders or to forward registered letters payable to and directed to the "Home Fascinator Company, Montreal, Canada," and to return the same to the offices of origin, marked "fraudulent." This action has been taken because the Inspectors of the Postoffice Department have ascertained that the parties named are conducting a fraudulent business in connection with the publication of a monthly magazine called the Home Fascinator, which claims to distribute valuable prizes among its subscribers.

The Secretary of the Treasury has asked the Attorney-General for an opinion upon the claim of Mrs. Cooke for salary as Secretary of the board of lady managers of the World's Fair, because he wishes to know whether Miss Phoebe Couzins has been legally deposed from that office, and whether he shall decline to pay either until the appeal recently taken by Miss Couzins shall have been judicially decided.

Some very interesting correspondence between the Chicago Congregational Club and Senator Chandler, relative to the failure of the Senate to ratify the treaty of the European powers regarding Congo State matters, at its last session, was made public here this week. The Senator, who had been reported as being one of the opponents of the ratification of the treaty by the Senate, was asked to give his views on the subject, and he did so at length. I quote from his letter: "It gives me pleasure to be able to state to you my own ideas on the treaty. An unwise attempt has been made to attribute to those opposing it in its present form an unwillingness to promote the suppression of the slave trade and the use of intoxicating liquors in Africa. There is not in my belief any just foundation for such an assertion.... The whole point is: Shall the United States, as a preliminary to such expression and request, enter into a formal treaty whereby we declare our approval of the seizure and partition of the continent of Africa by its European conquerors, and forever estop ourselves as a nation from objecting to such seizure and partition, or endeavoring to arouse against the subjugation of Africa the righteous indignation of all Christian people. President Harrison and Secretary Blaine were undoubtedly, in consenting to the treaty, actuated by the same worthy motives which control the Chicago Congregational Club; but they surely cannot have weighed with care certain declarations of the treaty which especially state that the United States is equally interested with the other sixteen powers, not merely in the suppression of the slave trade and of the rum traffic in Africa, but also in all the measures adopted by those other powers for increasing their possession, and strengthing their protectorates in that continent. ....It quite satisfactorily appears to my mind that the United States ought not to enter into a formal treaty which not only makes no protest against the recent partitioning of Africa, but expressly approves the partitioning, by declaring the United States to be equally interested therein. The possessions acquired by European powers in Africa, almost without exception, have been obtained by shedding the blood of innocent natives. ....I am confident that the treaty will be withdrawn from the Senate, and either not submitted again, or presented with an amendment guarding against such inference as would surely be drawn from its adoption in its present form."

The first season of the Glen Echo Chautauqua very fittingly closed with "Peace Day," its program being in charge of Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood. In the evening Miss Clara Barton held a reception to the speakers from abroad at the Red Cross quarters. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 1, 1891.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Discussions at and following the meetings in Tremont Temple, last June, have set brains and pens in motion, revealing the claims of the lodge and its attitude towards the church of Christ. The "blood-boiling, moist-eyed" Mason of "nearly fifty years," standing opened the ball, from the American Monitor of June 27. One of kindred spirit takes up the roll in Loomis' Musical and Masonical Journal, New Haven, Conn., for July, and sends the watchword along the line of conflict. A single paragraph will give the animus of the whole article: "Furthermore, Masonry has done more good works in raising the fallen, helping the weak, and shielding the orphan than any, or (we might say) all, of the evangelical denominations in the world; and not only does it do this, but in a manner so quiet and unostentatious, that few outside the craft have any idea of the good work that is being done by the body of men who, he says, 'swears allegience to a code antagonistic to God.'" In closing, the writer says: "We trust that the reverend gentleman will refrain in the future from giving his 'address' until he has a personal and definite knowledge of what he is talking about."

This may be news to some of our pastors, who, not having been initiated, are classed with the "profane" by the writer. That the "Secret Empire," and not the church, "Jah-Bel-On," the lodge god, and not Christ, are chief in "raising the fallen, strengthening the weak," etc., will certainly be a surprise to many who will hesitate to accept the averment without proof. It is pretty near the "bare hook without bait," and I doubt if all the Masonic preachers and saints will swallow it with avidity. Let us remember that all who were worshiping at the foot of the mountain were not ready to go into blank apostasy when Moses put the test, "who is on the Lord's side?" and not every one that has drunk of the stolen waters and eaten the secret bread of the lodge will deny Christ and cast contempt upon his church when the sifting time comes; and let us labor and pray that it may come speedily.

As to personal strictures, they are of little moment. I neither expect or covet approbation from those who are more enamored with Baal-peor of Moab, than with Jehovah of Israel, and who extol revelry and secret pagan altars above Christ and his Bride, the church; for I remember "that the friendship of the world is enmity with God;" but I wish to assure the seemingly irate writer that the "reverend gentleman," against whom he inveighs, already "has a personal and definite knowledge of what he is talking about," and that he is ready to meet any indorsed member of the Masonic fraternity, on any platform in New England, or any journal of respectable character, and make good the assertion that Masonry "swears allegience to a code antagonistic to God," if that means the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I had anticipated a report of Bro. Wm. F. Davis eight days' tent meeting on Mt. Washington, Chelsea, from another source. It opened auspiciously, and continued with increased interest to the close. I have never attended a meeting where a wider range was given, or a greater variety of topics was introduced for consideration, without the slightest apparent friction. There was liberty to speak on any topic of religious interest, and anything presented received merited consideration. Bro. Davis has conducted a school of instruction during the year past, giving instruction in primary branches as well as in Greek and Hebrew, of which languages he is said by competent judges to be a master. He proposes, I understand, to continue his labors (D. V.) another year; and parents wishing to place their sons or daughters where they will be surrounded by the purest home, social and Christian influences, with exceptionally good opportunities for study, would do well to communicate with Wm. F. Davis, Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass.

The "benefit orders" seem, many of them, to have come to their judgment day, and being weighed are found wanting. Plenty of promises, but no cash for bond or certificate holders, does not satisfy the beleaguering crowds.

It is one of the mysteries why people hold on and keep paying into these bottomless bags, after every reasonable hope of ever getting a dollar back is at an end. A gas collector is responsible for the statement that it is almost impossible to make collections, for the earnings of the poor are going into these insatiable "benevolent orders." Poor families are actually going without proper food, to save enough to pay assessments to prevent their policies from lapsing. Boston has had her "Golden Opportunity," which failed to respond to calls from holders of matured certificates, and found it very unpleasant to be harassed by hungry applicants. It one night migrated, bag and baggage, from Tremont street, Boston, to 415 Dearborn steet, room 46, Chicago, Ill., and is now, of course, Chicago's "Golden Opportunity."

A circular of explanation for this sudden move says: "We are obliged to do something to continue our busines and meet our maturing obligations. We have decided to move our principal office from Boston to Chicago and continue the work of securing members and organizing lodges in a new field." Like all fraudulent business, it must seek new fields where its tricks are not known, to feather its nest from the fat or lean geese who are silly enough to pay good money for worthless promises.

The Cynosure readers need no introduction to Chambers Street Reformed Presbyterian Church. During the life of its founder and faithful pastor, Rev. David McFall, it was the champion of all reforms in the city. It has been passing through the trial stages of selecting a new pastor, and now, after more than a year with supplies, it seems to be near the settlement of Bro. J. M. Foster, whose communications have been frequent in the Cynosure. Following one so brilliant, and who had gathered about him so closely the affections of his flock, Bro. Foster will find scope for all the skill he possesses and may receive, but his brief stay here has endeared him already to the hearts of many, and I am confident that not only among his own flock, but outside, he will receive a cordial welcome from the evangelical ministers and churches of Boston. J. P. STODDARD.

FROM THE WASHINGTON AGENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 7, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—At Binghamton, N. Y., I found a "Quaker Evangelist," by the name of Dean, giving Bible readings in the Y. M. C. A., to good audiences for this season of the year. At one reading which I attended he called for the passage which reads, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," and remarked in regard to it, "That means sin." I had a conference with friend Dean and found that he was familiar with the work of our association and in full accord with it. He most heartily endorsed the anti-lodge expressions of Moody, Pentecost, and other evangelists. Yet he did not deem it expedient for him to speak against the lodge as he did other popular sins.

As he was to give his last Bible reading on last Saturday, I thought it might be expedient for me to follow, on Monday and Tuesday evenings, with lectures. I was assured by the young man in charge of the Y. M. C. A. that there would be no doubt but I could have the hall for those two evenings by paying for it. A friend offered the money necessary. I returned, after consultation with friend Dean and others interested, and told the young man I would take the hall for the two evenings. He replied that he had consulted with the President of the association since seeing me, and the President thought it would not be best to rent the hall for my lectures. I went to the President, a Mr. Brown, keeping a furniture store, stated that the young man had assured me there would be no doubt but I could have the hall, and supposing him to have authority I had arranged to use the same. He replied that while he should not personally object, there were persons belonging to the association who also belonged to the lodge. One man, who paid twenty dollars a year, he said belonged. If the lectures were allowed, it would cut off their revenue from lodge men, he thought, and that they could not afford to do.

I need not give more of the details. Those who are not familiar with the obstacles which the agent meets in getting the truth before the people will here get a glimpse. Instead of asking, "What is right?" "What will please God?" the question is, "What will please the people?" We must have the golden calf if men want to be converted that way.

I had thought to have given some lectures in or about Thompson, Pa., before returning home, but, finding no preacher in town, and a singing school in the church, I concluded it unwise to attempt lectures at this time. A very pleasant visit was had at the home of Bro. Wm. Witter, an aged reformer, who is waiting his call to a better home. He has read the Cynosure and supported its work for many years. My plan now is to spend the rest of this month assisting the New England agent; September, in either Philadelphia or western Pennsylvania, and October, Central New York. Any friends in these sections desiring lectures, writing me, I will try and arrange time to suit. Our baby manifests an enterprising spirit in acquiring four teeth in less than a month.

OUR ANTI-LODGE WORK IN NORTHEASTERN PENNSYLVANIA.

MONTDALE, Penn., July 27, 1891.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—After twenty years of comparative quiet in this anti-secret Regular Baptist church of Scott Valley, we were again grieved by the union of one of our prominent members with the I. O. of O. F. Having of late received some forty new members, it was presumed that the old anti-secret rule could not now be enforced, without much friction and danger to the church. So the subtle foe ropes one of the members into the lodge, as an entering wedge to test the rule against the orders. The church took measures to reclaim this dear brother, or to accept the, to us, painful alternative, his exclusion. Our action proved unanimous in withdrawing from him the hand of fellowship. His fellowship is now Odd-fellowship, "by his own free will and accord." Few can comprehend the great difficulties attending the maintenance of a righteous and unpopular rule in such an environment as ours. On all hands, croakers, shedding croco-

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN INCONSISTENT PREACHER.

WORCESTER, Mass., July 30, 1891.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It was my fortune, some years since, to have Rev. S. L. Holman, of Boston fame, for my pastor. I well remember that one evening, in opening our weekly prayer-meeting, he chose 2 Corinthians, 6, for the Scripture lesson; and when he reached the 14th verse, which reads: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," etc., he said: "Now, while I belong to some of the so-called secret societies, if there are any of you that do not belong, I advise you to keep out, for you are taking an unequal yoke upon yourselves if you join them." Verily, I thought, "consistency thou art a jewel." Doubtless he spoke honestly then, as I fear he did not altogether in his recent defence of Masonry before the Boston Baptist Ministers' Conference.

Yours for the truth's sake, C. B. KNIGHT.

MASONIC OATHS AND PERJURY.

MONTDALE, Pa., Aug., 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Would not a better understanding of terms, as of oaths and perjury, aid us on all sides? According to Webster, a perjurer is "one who willfully takes a false oath lawfully administered." Can perjury be committed only in the case of oaths lawfully administered?

Masonic oaths are no oaths, not being legally administered. If in any sense they are oaths, they are profane oaths, being extra-judicial, rash, and un-called for. Should we not carefully discriminate between real and illegal oaths?

If there is perjury in, or growing out of the Masonic obligation or covenant, it must be in the intention, when taken, to make the Masonic oath paramount to all and to every other obligation.

This, in many cases, would be threefold perjury—perjury to the family, state, and to the church.

Let this matter be well pondered. Thousands verily think it would be perjury to break the Masonic covenant of secrecy and fidelity to the order. But, instead of this being true, the only possible way out of a state of perjury, is by revocation and confession of the awful sin of perjury to the family, state, and church, in the intention to be recreant to all three, in the act of taking the Masonic obligation. Let us all get right on this question and not imply in any way that the oath-bound orders, so-called, are oath-bound at all, only as the members are bound by fundamental laws of family, state and church. I have more to say but will not say it now. Truly yours for pure truth, Nathan Callender.

PARTIALITY AND INCONSISTENCY IN THE CHURCH.

Hot Springs, Ark., July, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—In this section of country where I live, some very peculiar customs prevail. Most of those which attract my attention are practiced in the churches. The church of which I am pastor, at its last business meeting, excluded two of its members, and withdrew the hand of fellowship from them, because they danced at a ball given by the Masonic lodge. The very persons who projected and managed the anniversary ball where these young people danced, (and old ones, too, if you please,) were the ones to vote for their exclusion. Of course, the good leaders of the church, and members and officers of the lodges, are not to be meddled with by the church for their being at the lodge balls, even if they are the door-keepers and collect the admittance fees.

The "big folks" are the great leaders in the lodges, which compel the church members to attend the festivities, anniversaries, etc., of their lodges, and they themselves are there to treat to the wine, beer, refreshments, pay the musicians, etc. It is they who dictate the fitness of others to stay in the church as members, or go out. These lodge leaders can say who are worthy to have their names on the church book, who shall be the pastor, how long, what he must do and say, etc. They command, and it is obeyed; they order, and it is done. Their words, ways and purposes must be understood without explanation. God commands, "Come out from among the world;" they pay no attention. God says: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers;" these lodge leaders interpret that this means Christian men and women should not marry sinner wives or husbands. God says: "Ye can not serve two masters," etc.; the lodge says they can and will; hence on they go in their own way, against God's way, and have the "cheek" to say God must take them to heaven when they die.

Often, judging from the way in which they express themselves, one would feel that if the Lord Jesus were again here on earth, and spake in his open way against their evils, they would rush upon him to kill him, as did the wicked Jews.

Almost any of the pastors of our churches can commit suicide without the use of laudanum, "rough on rats," or any other drug poison, if they will just stand up and contend for Christian, impartial consistency in God's church.

"Oh! what a wretched land is ours"!

(Rev.) J. R. Bennett,
Pastor Roanoke Baptist church.

TEMPERANCE ORDERS.

Vernon, Wis., Aug., 1891.

Editor Cynosure:—An order, according to Webster, is "a class of men so closely linked together that they form a separate class in the community." Such divisions of society are unmitigated evils, especially when they are founded upon the ground of secrecy. We believe in no orders, either in church or State, except those founded by God himself.

Secret orders were not founded by the God of heaven, but by the god of this world. They are the devil's method of destroying the influence and power of every righteous reform. As to the social order of things, they are the tares among the wheat. They are as vampires to the temperance movement, to the family, the church, and the State. The devil arrays himself, but often with a hidden hand, against everything that is divine. Upon these three pillars rests the social fabric; and it is their province to resist and destroy every enemy, in the exercise of their legitimate functions. The liquor traffic is a most malicious enemy, and men who seem to have no faith in divine methods would, forsooth, assail it with the weapon of secrecy. Our Davids will put on the armor of Saul, with which they can never prevail. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." He will do this through his church and by his mighty judgments. When will men learn that a right thing must not be done in a wrong way?

Our political system provides for party organization for legitimate ends; but a secret party would be a monster, not to be tolerated. How much better is a secret temperance society? These societies are, perhaps, the greatest barrier now in the way of the temperance movement. As a matter of fact, they divide the host of workers,—and to divide is to destroy. "An enemy hath done this." J. B. Galloway.

SECRECY IN TEXAS.

Muenster, Tex., July, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—Everything (so to speak) is secrecy. All of the different lodges are well represented here—Masons and Alliances being apparently the most numerous. We have but very few ministers who do not belong to one or more of these secret orders, and many of them glory more in their lodge associations than in their church fellowship—more in the light of Masonry than in the light of the Son of God.

Some of them will even tell you that Masonry is better than Christianity, and extol the lodge above the church for benevolence. Some, perhaps, draw a salary from the church and then take the same money to pay their lodge-fees, thus robbing the church and God, to aid the lodge and the devil. We attend their meetings at times, and are often disgusted at seeing the lodge badge of secrecy on the vest or chain, dangling in full view, while they preach to the people on nonconformity, consecration, holiness, etc.

I was called upon to preach to the young people, one Sabbath. I compared lights—the difference between the light of Him who came as the light of the world, and the light of Masonry, which only shines on the able-bodied men. I created a "buzz," and all wanted to know who I was.

You can tell them, through the Cynosure, that I was converted from all selfish institutions and led to walk after the Spirit—not the flesh; to follow Him who "said nothing in secret." And so I became an ex-Mason, ex-comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic, and ex-Good Templar.

Jesus Christ is all in all—everything to the true child of God; this is consecration, and nothing else can be. (Rev.) A. W. Austin.

A CURSE TO THE PEOPLE.

Little Rock, Ark., July 29, 1891.

Editor Cynosure:—I have received three copies of your valuable paper, and approve of the stand you take against the lodges. I do not think a worse curse could have befallen our people. I have been preaching in opposition to them for three years, and have been traveling the mission field, where I could see the danger of them. I want to say that you have my heart and hand. Yours in Christ, (Rev.) P. A. Knowles.

LITERATURE.

The Century for August, "the mid-summer holiday number," presents its usual fine variety of topics, carefully treated and copiously illustrated. Portraits of the present German Emperor and Empress, in connection with a graphic sketch by Poultney Bigelow, will impress the reader favorably. The two other important papers, the first finely illustrated, are "Life on the South Shoal Lightship," by Gustav Kobbe, and "The Press as a News-Gatherer," by Wm. Henry Smith, manager of the Associated Press. Pleasant reading will also be found in continuations of "The Squirrel Inn," by Frank R. Stockton, and "The Faith Doctor," by Rev. Edward Eggleston; in "Cape Horn and Co-operative Mining in '49," by Willard B. Farwell; "On the Study of Tennyson," by Henry Van Dyke; "A Common Story," by Wolcott Balestier; "Play in Provence," by Joseph Pennell, and in "Our Summer Migration—a Social Study," by Edward Hungerford. Several poems by Louise Chandler Moulton and other contributors, "Thumb-nail Sketches," topics of the times, open letters, "bric-a-brac," etc., will also attract attention. New York: The Century Co., 33 E. 17th St.

The Cosmopolitan for August (New York) offers a varied and satisfactory collection of summer articles. Amelie Rives (whose portrait forms the frontispiece) contributes an illustrated story, "According to St. John;" Murat Halstead has a pictorial sketch of Bismarck, past and present; Valerian Gribayedoff's paper on "Pictorial Journalism" reveals the source of the common zinc etchings that enliven the daily papers; Adam Badeau comments on "Gambling in High Life;" Daniel C. Gilman describes, with illustrations, "The Johns Hopkins University; "Fannie A. Mathews introduces "The Woman's Press Club of New York," with portraits of its members; "The Court Jesters of England," with reproductions of rare engravings, by Esther Singleton, will be read with interest; "Placer Mining," illustrated, by Joseph P. Reed, presents some important facts and figures relating to this industry; "Dissected Emotions" exhibits several actors and actresses in their rendition of great characters; and there are other entertaining papers, poems, book notices and "Social Problems," all of which add to the attractions of this very acceptable monthly.

The American Garden for August (Rural Publishing Co., New York,) is a happy combination of useful papers and fine engravings. Among the former are new installments of "The Gardens of Newport," "The Economic Plants of Japan," and "Notes from a Garden Herbarium"—all illustrated; the first of a series on "Southern Horticulture," and the following monographs: "The Farms Must Become Gardens;" "Roadside Gardens;" "Jefferson as a Horticulturist;" "A Semi-Tropic Garden;" "My Experience in Building a Garden Home;" "Causes of Depreciation in Grapes;" "Hints on Bulbs for Early Blooming;" "Orchids at Home;" "Some Good Flowers in My Garden;" "Strawberry Farming;" "Fruit Evaporation," etc. Altogether a pleasant and profitable publication. Twenty cents.

The Evangelical Repository for August (T. J. McKalip & Co., Pittsburg,) contains "The Revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith," by James Harper, D. D; "The Mystery of Suffering," by Rev. W. H. McMaster; "A Meditation," by Edward A. Thompson, D. D.; "Pre-Abrahamic Chronology," by Prof William H. Green, D. D.; "Woman's Place and Work," by Blanche Macdonell; "Palestine and the Jewish Question," by Rev. John P. Peters, Ph. D.; "Buddhism and Christianity," by Prof. Monier Williams; "Losses in Battle in the War for the Union," by Col. Wm. F. Fox; "Mr. Darwin's Religion," by Prof. Geo. F. Wright; "Illustrations;" "The Sabbath School Lessons," and "Our Young People." A number of much excellence. Twenty cents.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine for August is seasonable and beautiful in its illuminated frontispiece and characteristic contents and illustrations. The ethereal colored plate shows a delightful form of aquilegia, supposed to be an accidental hybrid of the cærulea and chrysanthymum species. Artificial hybridizing of this class of flowers will produce equally fine specimens. There is a third paper on "Our Native Plants;" "The New Industry"—nut culture; a description of "Arlington Park, Salt Lake City;" "Some Desirable Climbing Plants;" The Dwarf Yew;" "The Flora of Provincetown;" "Roses in Spain," and some valuable notes by the editor. Published by James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

It is surprising how little literature has been issued bearing on the evil of gambling. Intemperance, a more open but no greater curse, has called forth endless volumes. A prize, equal to five hundred dollars, was recently offered by an English society for the best story on the evils of gambling, and resulted in the issue of "The Fall of the Staincliffes," by A. Colbeck, a very effective portrayal of the pernicious results of this wide-spread mania. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York and Chicago, publish the American copyrighted edition. Young men who have been tempted to gamble, parents who have sons whom they wish to warn, will do well to read this work.

Have we any truly great men at the present day? Some doubt it, and ask to be shown the modern Washington, Franklin, or Webster. However this may be, of one thing we are sure, there never was a greater blood-purifier than Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

SPECIAL.

New subscribers will be received during this month to whom the Cynosure will be sent from August 1 to January 1 for 50 cents. To the one sending in the new subscription, will be sent the great St. Louis Sermon and also Joseph Cook's address.

Any two of the following named books, and the Cynosure one year, sent to new subscribers only, upon the receipt of $2.00. These books will be sent to any address upon receipt of price.

The type of these books is always good, and nearly always large (Long Primer, or larger); the paper is always of good quality and good weight, not so thin as to be transparent, nor so thick as to be clumsy; the printing is always good; the binding is extremely neat, strong, and durable, just the thing for choice library editions which one wants to preserve a lifetime—it is either what is known as "half-seal," cloth sides, marbled edges, or half-Morocco, marbled edges; the books are 12mo in size, 7 3–4 inches high, and of corresponding width:

TEMPERANCE AND SECRECY.

The obligation of the initiate when joining the now defunct order of Sons of Temperance was as follows, as administered by the "Worthy Patriarch:"

"Place your right hand on the heart, and each member will do the same, as a token of fidelity. You will now repeat after me our pledge: I, without reserve, solemnly pledge my honor, in the presence of these witnesses, that I will neither make, buy, sell, nor use, as a beverage, any spirituous or malt liquors, wine or cider. I also pledge myself to promote the harmony, advance the interest, and preserve unsullied, on my part, the reputation of the Sons of Temperence. I furthermore pledge myself faithfully to observe the constitution and by-laws of this Division and the rules and usages of this order; and never to divulge any password, ceremony, or other private matter of the order, except to those legally authorized to receive them; and whether my connection with the order shall continue or not, to consider my obligation, in this respect, binding to the end of life."

It has been suggested that the Sons of Temperance wasn't much of a secret society—very little more than the temperance pledge being required from the initiate; but the reader will notice that, like Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Jesuitism, or any of the older and larger orders, it required a servile observation of, or obedience to, the mandates of its "division," or lodge, and demanded also, a continuance of that obedience "to the end of life," in or out of the order. That obligation, in the hands of unscrupulous men, might bind a man to treason or any other crime ordered by the "division" or lodge, and upon his "sacred honor," he would have had to heed the command, or renounce the order altogether. This last resort would, of course, amount to Masonic "perjury."

The foregoing obligation, it will also be noticed, is, like Pope's "Universal Prayer," designed for "saint, for savage, or for sage," a Druid, a Mohammedan, a pagan, a Christian, or an infidel; and "all sorts and conditions of men" might have taken it without a religious allusion to disturb their respective consciences. Where is the meek and lowly trust in God, in Christ, in the power of the Holy Spirit, to restrain the initiate in the hour of trial? The newly made "son" is left to grope and fight for "love, purity and fidelity," without a ray from the "Sun of righteousness" to light him on his way—left to his own weakness.

While there can be no doubt that the order prospered beyond the expectations of its founders, its growth and longevity were ephemeral. We have no record of the immediate cause of its decline; but that it shrunk within a few short years, after accumulating in North America a total membership of 221,000, is matter of history. If we were to hazard a guess as to the reasons of its decadence, it would be founded upon the revealed records in our possession. There were two elements in its growth—the mystery of secrecy, and the promotion of social intercourse in the lodge, under the guise of "benevolence." It had attractions for young persons of both sexes, and its ostensible objects served to allure the friends of temperance in the churches and Sunday-schools to unite with it. But had it really any principle to keep it alive for any great length of time? Its beneficial system was weak, and General Cary (the temperance reformer of Ohio) recommended its abolition at the session of the National Division in 1849. Its national relief fund expired after a lingering inanition, with hardly a regret for its demise. Degrees were voted down in 1845. In 1843 the laws establishing signs in the order were repealed. The element of mystery was reduced. The social element became a paramount feature of the organization. The temperance methods of the order were no better than those of the American Temperance Society, or of the Washingtonians, both of which preceded it. All had similar pledges, and all had the same obstacles to contend with—the weakness of human nature, and the fierceness of the drink-habit—the distillery and the bar-room. All beyond the personal efforts of honest temperance workers to snatch drunkards as "brands from the burning"—the machinery of the lodge and its allurements—could do no more than the Washingtonians had done. Apostate Sons of Temperance were not different from backsliding Washingtonians. Defections from both were not unusual. And they were to be expected under any system of reformation that had no principle deeper than a common humanity.

The true temperance methods are those which actuated the noble women of Ohio in February, 1874. The history of those Christian "crusades" is as worthy of perpetuation as the older "Crusades" to the Holy Land. Openly praying, in bands, before and within saloons, holding religious meetings in the bar-rooms and on the sidewalks, the enthusiasm spread until churches became scenes of crowded, earnest prayer-meetings, where these devoted missionaries of temperance called fervently on God to help them in their work. The result was magical. Towns were almost, or entirely, cleared of saloons, and, in certain cases, saloon-keepers became changed men, abandoned the liquor traffic, and engaged in more reputable business. The work spread, and, in its peculiar methods, flourished for a season, and then ceased; but it left behind it, to fulfill a healthful and blessed mission, the Women's Christian Temperance Union. From this, again, sprang the Prohibition movement, which may, under heaven, be the true way of banishing the liquor traffic from every State where the people have sufficient determination and power to enforce it.

One thing is certain: the temperance cause does not need lodgery for its helpmate, whatever garb it wears.

THE COLOR LINE IN THE G. A. R.

The efforts of Grand Army men, in the recent National Encampment of the order at Detroit, to draw the color line between white and Negro comrades, posts and encampments, proved entirely futile; and until further action is taken, the Negro departments, in the South, will continue to affiliate with those of a lighter complexion. Referring to the present condition of these State departments, the Judge Advocate-General of the order, in his annual report, said:

"The question proposed is 'whether there can lawfully be two departments covering the same territory at the same time; for instance, a department made up of white posts and another of black posts; or one of foreign born, and another of native born.'

"I think the question must be answered in the negative. First, the idea is contrary to the usage and universal understanding of the order hitherto. Second—The rules and regulations, chapter 1, article 3, section 1, provide for precinct organizations to be designated by names and numbers, indicating that there may be several posts in the same place. But section 2 of the same article provides for State organizations, to be known as 'department of (name or State or Territory) Grand Army of the Republic.' No other name or designation is contemplated or provided for. If a second State organization be formed in any State, it would have the same name precisely, without addition or diminution, as the first, if the regulation is followed. If additional departments in States may be formed on lines of color or of birth, they may on lines of personal followings or personal antipathies, or upon disagreements of any kind. But without adverting further to the obvious evils likely to follow from establishing rival departments in any State, it is enough that it is very clear that the rules and regulations do not provide for nor warrant the establishment of but one department in any State or Territory."

In the National Encampment, the question of dividing the white and colored posts into separate departments was referred to a committee, and fully discussed. At the closing session a majority and a minority report were presented, the former discountenancing any change in the existing relative situation, with cogent reasons for its continuance, and the other showing that for the benefit of the order the Negro department should be separated from the white one. The first document was a manly tribute to the heroism of the Negro soldiers of the Union in its defence, and their natural and equal right to be recognized as members of the order for their patriotism and bravery. It is sufficient comment on the two documents to say that the majority report was adopted with a great deal of enthusiasm.

It was said, when the encampment gathered, that if the decision now reached should prevail, the white posts of Louisiana and Mississippi would withdraw from the order. It is possible, but hardly probable, that they will do so. Better counsels will undoubtedly be heeded, and no radical movement follow, although it is likely that this vexed question will again be raised in the deliberations of future encampments.

THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF OWLS.

We excerpt from the Masonic Chronicle: "The Independent International Order of Owls, the modern mystic society has a Nest in Columbus. It was instituted July 4th by representatives from a dozen different cities with great eclat. Nearly 200 Owls from St. Louis Nests joined in the exercises which give the order a second home in the Buckeye State. The new order is a unique one, composed of Master Masons, although entirely distinct from the Masonic organization."

The names of officers, in part, are "Sapient Screecher," "First Vice Screecher," "Second Vice Screecher," "Sapient Scratcher," "Lord High Executioner," "Property Owl," "Blinker," etc., etc.

About two hundred men are said to have been initiated into this new lodge on the occasion above referred to. It is, of course, needless to say that the Master Masons composing this order are "leading citizens," "fine looking men," etc., etc. Nearly an entire page in the Masonic Chronicle is given to these "Owls." It is not strange that dementia increases, when such proceedings as are here reported become common. The fact is that the soul of man hungers for God, and when it fails to apprehend him, it is prepared for all depths of folly or sin. Here are able-bodied men, supposed to have business interests and homes, making "Owls' Nests" and aspiring to be called "Sapient Screecher;" and yet every one of them on the way to death and judgment and the long eternity.

It would be impossible, probably, to induce even irreligious men to engage in such silly performances without the preliminary training of Masonry. But when men have become used to the blasphemous nonsense of Blue Lodge Masonry there is nothing in such an order as is above described which should be difficult to them. A man who can learn charity by being asked for a button or a coin when stripped for initiation, could probably find something wonderful and interesting in the "Owls."

THE G. A. R. AS A POLITICAL FACTOR.

The charge has been made, and as often denied, that the G. A. R. is an important factor in the politics of the day, either through its organized efforts, or as the tool of designing outside politicians. The Daily News of this city expresses its opinion that the order has grown tired of posing in this latter role, judging from "the absence from the late encampment of many leading politicians who have hitherto had considerable prominence in Grand Army councils." But when the News, in the same article, says: "The creation of a political machine to help the fortunes of individual candidates for national office is so foreign to the principles which underlie the Grand Army's existence that its leaders will, it is to be hoped, keep the order henceforth free from even the suspicion of such motives."

The hope is a salutary one—one that should be general; but, in the order of things—even supposing the G. A. R. to be only what it claims that it is: A social and military organization—its past history shows what has been its influence upon the political character of the nation since it was formed, just after the close of the rebellion. First, Grant was elected and re-elected President. We know that every soldier must have voted for him, for he belonged to the real army and the G. A. R. Rutherford B. Hayes was so nearly defeated that one vote of the adjusting board saved his election; the inference is that as he was not a member of the G. A. R., the order was not active in promoting his election. Garfield, a member of the G. A. R., succeeded him by a good majority; probably every "comrade" cast his vote for him. The next Presidential contest was between Blaine and Cleveland. The former was not a G.

A. R. man and was defeated. At the next election, Harrison, another G. A. R. man, was chosen to succeed Cleveland. Perhaps there are other reasons why Hayes and Blaine were not elected, but the G. A. R. seems to have held the balance of power in every election since it came into existence. And it is equally evident that whoever is nominated for President, having the approval of the G. A. R., will also be elected.

"THINK ON THESE THINGS."

Elsewhere we print a few brief "Labor Notes," the burden whereof is the policy of organized and secret labor towards the general political situation and prospects.

While there can be no serious objection raised to the formation, if needs be, of half a dozen distinct political parties in the United States which shall be open in their denunciation of real and existing errors that afflict and threaten the welfare of the nation and its people, with an earnest desire to abolish these evils and to give a new and proper impetus to whatever measures will tend to increase the prosperity of the whole country, there should be a strong, deep-rooted, dignified and intelligent opposition to the efforts of secret, oath-bound and ambitious organizations, like the several labor unions, to influence the votes of freemen and so perpetuate their selfish lodge principles and tyrannical institutions.

"There is an opinion," said the great and good Washington, in his Farewell Address, "that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This, within certain limits, is probably true; and in governments of a monarchical cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party; but in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose,—and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest (instead of warming) it should consume."

Could Washington have foreseen, as we experience to-day, the tendency of secret societies to circumscribe the liberty of individuals by arbitrary lodge laws and to persecute capital and free labor as if they were the enemies of the country, he would say that the very danger against which he forewarned the citizens of the Republic now seriously threatens us. "All obstructions to the executionof the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities,"—also said Washington—"are destructive of the fundamental principle that the power and right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government." The inference is that all such combinations and associations are treasonable and criminal, and therefore to be dreaded and opposed.

PIETY—PURITAN AND PRIMITIVE—DEFENDED.

Dr. E. P. Goodwin's sermon before the recent International Congregational Council, in London, has been published in full, and has also received a great deal of comment for its bold defence of the religion of the Puritans. The following is said to be the key to the whole sermon:

"Dr. Goodwin called his hearers to imitate their Puritan ancestors in another of the characteristics of their faith, namely, they were men with a creed. He dwelt on this point at considerable length, and in urging the necessity for a definite statement of belief, said that every man, no matter what his calling, must have a creed, though it may never be put into words. The multiplication table was a good creed to do banking by, and nobody seemed to think it too old to work well or to need amending. The third characteristic of the Puritans, and of still more significance, was that they were not only men of a creed, but men of a Calvinistic creed. He made bold to summon his hearers to follow herein, believing that no factor of their influence and power for good was more potent, more beneficent than this. The word Calvinism was of all theological words the one just now in worst oder, but if anything stood proved in Congregational history it was that the fathers were Calvinists. He did not say that they were bound to commit themselves to the formal statements of those old confessions, or to endorse the philosophy so plentifully interwoven with those symbols; nevertheless they should hold fast to the truths behind the speculations, stripping the Calvinism of those old confessions of its rigorous logic, harsh and sometimes false philosophy. If Congregational polity was either to be loyal to its history or helpful to the world, it would not only stand by, but magnify the old faith; further, it must do thus or be unworthy of its name, and false in the highest degree to both the call of God and humanity."

--Our readers will miss the genial letters of Miss Flagg, our New England co-worker, for two or three weeks. A vacation for needed rest, we trust, will re-invigorate her pen when she resumes her correspondence.

—The last issue of Messiah's Herald, of Boston, referring to Rev. Mr. Cleveland's defense of Masonry against the accusations made by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, before the Baptist Ministers' Meeting in that city, several weeks ago, makes this forcible comment: "We question very much whether one whose mission it is to denounce sin should be found catering to the desires of a class of people, or to an organization which is calculated and really is making his own preaching null and void. Bro. Cleveland, is this coming out from the world and being separate? For ourselves we desire no endorsement from the devil or any of his agents."

—The letter of Rev. J. P. Stoddard, printed this week, contains matters of interest, especially the hegira of the "Golden Opportunity," a pseudo-benevolent institution, from Boston to Chicago. Whether it retains that name or not, the public should beware of any society or individual that promises to give much for little. In this connection, a report from Waterbury, Conn., announces that "the members of the Royal Ark (Inez Lodge) have voted to disband. The lodge was formed eight months ago, the committee giving out, in large advertisements, that by paying $40 each person could draw out $100 at the end of a year. They had already paid in nearly $50, and seemed as far from the $100 as when the lodge was organized." Enough said.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Nebraska's university faculty has been increased by the election to the chair of European history, of Dr. Fred M. Fling, of Biddeford, Me.

—W. B. Stoddard, our Washington agent, is shortly to go to Boston and aid in the Reform work so ably carried on by his father, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, in New England.

—Confirmed by a majority of the Episcopal dioceses to the office of Bishop of Milwaukee, the Rev. Isaac Leo Nicholson will probably be consecrated in Philadelphia, Oct. 28.

—Captain John Palmer, the new Commander-in-chief of the G. A. R., was born on Staten Island, March 22, 1842, and has a splendid war record. He is a painter and decorator of buildings.

—Alfred (Lord) Tennyson, the English poet, recently celebrated his eighty-second birthday, and is represented as quite vigorous. John G. Whittier, we regret to announce, is aging and failing quite fast. He and Tennyson are nearly of the same age.

—We had a pleasant call, recently, from the venerable N. A. Hitchcock, of Ridgeland, this county, who has been staying in the city while undergoing treatment for a local throat disorder. Mr. Hitchcock is one of the N. C. A.'s warm adherents in its Reform work.

—We call attention to the stirring poem on our first page—"When the King Shall Claim His Own," by Mrs. Victoria Alexandra Stone, of Steamburgh, N. Y., who has frequently written other poems for the Cynosure, under her maiden name of Victoria Alexandra Buck. We are sure that all our readers will join us in hearty congratulations to her on the important step that she has taken, and will bid her and her husband a pious God-speed upon their future career.

—General Booth, of the Salvation Army, has purchased farms worth about $50,000 in England, on which to found his proposed evangelical refuge for the homeless and houseless of darkest London. He proposes to have them fed, clothed and converted.

—Rev. A. F. Dempsey, pastor of the Wesleyan church at Westville, Mich., returning home from a business journey, was with us on Thursday of last week, and his presence at our noon prayer-meeting on that day added to the genial Christian spirit of the occasion.

—Friends of Reform will regret to learn of the death, some days ago, at San Francisco, Cal., of Mrs. Clarissa Armstrong, the venerable mother of General Armstrong, founder of the Hampton (Va.) Indian school. For fifty years, and more, she served continuously as a missionary in the Sandwich Islands—"and her works do follow her."

—Our New England agent, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, is about entering upon the fall work of the N. C. A. Reform under increased advantages and gratifying prospects, having associated with him a converted high-degree Mason, who is familiar with the workings of the order and the great Masonic Temple lodges in Boston; and some important developments and hard blows to secrecy may be expected soon.

—"Father" Chiniquy, the reformed Catholic lecturer, had a rough experience at Escanaba, Mich., last week. Under the auspices of the A. P. A., he inveighed publicly against the Romish system of worship, exciting great indignation among the adherents of that church, and narrowly escaping the vengeance of a crowd of about 500 angry men. Chiniquy received a blow in the face, when one of his friends fired a pistol into the crowd, without hitting any one. Afterwards, a stone was thrown through a window of the hall where Chiniquy had been lecturing, and revolvers were freely used on both sides, one man being seriously wounded. Chiniquy escaped unhurt, and then some one set the hall on fire. The fire department, however, saved it from destruction. The mayor refused to furnish Chiniquy and his friends with adequate police protection. It was a narrow escape.

LABOR NOTES.

—A grand rally of farmers and laborers is in session at Springfield, Ill., as we go to press. The Federation of Labor is represented, and, it is understood, will frown upon all attempts to entice it into a discussion of State politics.

—About the first of September, it is anticipated, an effort will be made in Chicago to organize a new Barbers' Union. The first work of the new organization will be to enforce the State law against Sunday labor. The Federation of Labor will be called upon to assist in the movement, and the result may be a general shaking up and reorganization of the barbers' time schedule.

—A new trouble threatens to spring up between the Trades and Labor Assembly and the Building Trades Council of Chicago. On Labor Day the council will picnic in the Northwestern Park. The assembly claims that the Northwestern Road is a non-union road, and that when the council patronizes it the principles of union labor are being trampled under foot. The switchmen have been appealed to and have rendered a decision against the council and the Northwestern.

—Forty assemblies were represented at the Michigan State Assembly of Knights of Labor, at Lansing, Mich., on Wednesday. During the proceedings, a resolution was adopted, indorsing the action of all industrial councils or conventions that have begun work looking towards a consolidation of industrial people at the ballot box, and trusting that the movement would culminate in the full emancipation of the masses from industrial slavery. Greetings were extended to the Farmers' Alliance, the Patrons of Husbandry, the Patrons of Industry, the Citizens' Alliance, and the National Citizens' Industrial Alliance, promising support in all well-directed efforts for the advancement of the cause of industrial reform. Henry J. Allen, of Schoolcraft, was elected State Master Workman. Port Huron was chosen as the next place of meeting.

The Home.

THE CELESTIAL CITY.

I know not where resplendent rise
The glowing gates of Paradise,
Upon what far-off blissful shore
The blessed dead dwell evermore;
But oft it to my fancy seems
The sunset's glories are the gleams
Out-flashing from the portals bright
Of that fair land that has no night.

'Tis but an idle thought, I know,
But can the gates celestial glow
With more refulgent radiance
Than those through which with glittering lance,
With banners barred with blue and gold,
And pennons streaming gay and bold,
The cohorts of triumphant day
March, flushed with victory, away?

Ah! who can tell? Beyond the ken
Of the cramped intellects of men,
The infinite solution lies
Of the vast problems of the skies.
But should I, in my life's last night,
March with those victor-legions bright,
Skies lovelier I could not ask
Than yon bright arch 'neath which to bask.

And yet, less lovely, ah! how far,
The evening's glories must be, are,
Than those which for immortals wait
Beyond the New Jerusalem gate!
That city of eternal noon,
That needs not sun, nor stars, nor moon,
But thrills with the supernal light
That shines from God's own presence bright.

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

[Copyrighted by "The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association," 161 LaSalle St., Chicago. Printed by permission.]

IX.

We found Mrs. Clarke sitting sewing in the yard, where there was a little grass plot, the children playing near. She hurried into the house to bring chairs for us, gently pushing Grace into her own cosy rocker. Then she began to question us about Closing Day. I did most of the talking, for I was so eager every one should know of my friend's generous deed. I thought Mrs. Clarke took very little notice of it, but I see now it was because she was so deeply touched that she said but little. We chatted away for some time, until Mrs. Clarke went into the house on an errand.

"What a lovely day this would be for a picnic!" exclaimed Grace, looking yearningly up into the blue sky.

"Why can't we have one some day soon?" I said. "I wish we could all go—all the boys and girls of our class. Why didn't we think of it before school closed?"

"We could have one yet, I suppose, if we wanted to. Oh, Fanny," she said, jumping up like a delighted child, "let's have our next meeting and a picnic together! We could have such a good time out in the woods."

"How could we go? It's too far for you to walk to the mountain, and I don't believe the rest would want to go in a 'bus."

"Couldn't we go across the river to St. Helen's Island?"

"Do you think that would be nice? There are always so many people there."

"Come inside, girls," called Mrs. Clarke.

We went in and found spread a dainty feast of fruit and cream."

"Mother sent them in from the farm this morning; one of our men came in to do some trading. I thought this medal girl ought to have some of my good things."

The "medal girl" blushed rosy red as we sat down to enjoy the ripe fruit.

"What did I hear you saying about a p'cnic?" asked Mrs. Clarke.

"We were wishing all our class could go together somewhere, and we didn't know how to manage it."

"How many are there of you?"

"Twenty-five."

"I've a plan," said Mrs. Clarke. "It popped into my head while you were talking out there. Mother wants me to go out to visit her, if it's only to spend the day. Now, if they're not too busy, and can spare the horses, you can have your wish. It's a lovely place where our farm is."

Neither Grace nor I fully understood. We thought she meant to take us two, and yet she had asked how many there were in our class. At the risk of making a blunder, I said, "Where would you put the whole twenty-five, Mrs. Clarke?"

"You just leave all that to me," she said, laughing happily.

"But, I don't understand," said Grace. "We were all going, and it would cost ——"

"You blessed child," answered our friend, taking Grace's face fondly between her hands, "I understand. There are twenty-five young folks who would just love a whole day in the country, and I know how to give it to them. Now, do you understand? When would you like to go?"

Grace seemed uneasy. "Oh, but ——" she said.

"No buts. Shall it be next week?"

"Next week is University examinations."

"Then week after next," continued Mrs. Clarke. "I'll send a note to mother, and don't you trouble your head but that you'll have the nicest picnic you ever had in your life."

We went home in a whirl of delight, though we thought it was a pretty big undertaking for Mrs. Clarke.

"She'll find out all about our Society; some one will let it out," I said.

"Well, that will not matter," answered Grace. "Mr. Clarke, if he goes, will be sure to recognize the boys, Bob and Tom. That would be dreadful."

"Dreadful? Of course he'll be ashamed when he remembers how they saw him, but maybe it will do him good."

The next Monday morning, bright and early, we started off for the University, and found the others who were to take the examinations waiting for us outside the grounds. We were met by an usher, who showed us where we would assemble, and as it lacked half an hour to the appointed time, told us we were at liberty to go where we would. We soon found our way outside.

"Oh, girls, what a perfectly lovely place! Isn't it a shame to keep it shut up the way they do, so no one but the students can enjoy it?"

"I guess this is about the first time girls ever profaned its sacred precincts." This from a boy.

"Profaned? Oh, you horrid fellow! Honored, you mean."

"Hush a minute, please," said Grace, holding up her hand. "I thought I heard a sound of running water."

"You're right, sis," said Robert. "There's a spring runs down from the mountain. It must be over ——"

"There's the bell!"

We turned our faces toward the building, outwardly dauntless, inwardly trembling.

It was not so dreadful after all. The examiners, though becapped and begowned, were about like other teachers.

I wrote very full answers to all the easy questions, dispatching the knotty ones with brief treatment. When I had finished the morning's portion of work, and was at liberty to go, I wandered out into the grounds to wait for Grace. There I was joined by Gussie Mills. It was the first time I had seen her alone since Closing Day, so I hastened to tell her why Grace had had no prizes.

"Do you mean to say she did it on purpose?" asked Gussie in amaze.

"Yes, I mean to say just that."

"But why? She took them every other year."

"I know. But this was our last year."

"I should have wanted all the prizes I could get, more than ever. I couldn't have done such a thing—could you?"

"No, but then she ——"

I wanted to tell her the deepest reason for Grace's doing what she did, but I could not.

"But then, what?" asked Gussie, impatiently.

"Oh, I can't tell you!"

"Then I'll tell you something. I know why it was."

She spoke in a quick, hard tone, but her face was sad, her lips trembling, and her eyes moist.

"Next summer we won't have any Little Captain—she didn't care about the prizes—it's just dreadful!"

She had guessed the truth I had known so long.

"Did you know it?" she asked me.

"Yes."

"Did she tell you? Does she think so herself?"

"Yes."

"That was why she spoke to us the way she did, and wanted us all to help and to be good. Oh, I will be good! Just as good as I know how!"

She dropped down in a little heap on the grass and cried hard. We neither of us heard soft steps coming over the lawn, nor knew any one was near, until Grace spoke, close beside us.

"What's the matter, Gussie?"

She sprang to her feet, dashed away the tears, and threw her arms about Grace's neck. She held her so for a moment, and then turned abruptly away, saying, "I am going to look for the brook."

Grace looked at me inquiringly, but I tried to avoid her look, and she asked me no questions. Of course what I had told Gussie, together with the sad truth about our friend's failing strength, spread like wildfire among our companions. But they tried to appear easy and natural before her, though it was hard, sometimes.

The examinations were over in due time, and then came an indefinite period of waiting before we should hear the results.

One morning, shortly after that week, I was sitting with mother reading aloud, when I heard my name called through the window. Looking out, I saw about half of our class.

"Come down, Fanny! Get your hat and come over to the tank. We've something to tell you."

The tank was a body of water, which had been used in earlier days as the city's reservoir, but was replaced by a larger one. It made a beautiful artificial pond. The ground about it had been turned into a pretty pleasure park, and it was a favorite resort for the young people of the neighborhood. The busy tongues did not wait till we reached the quiet of the tank, however.

"It's about Pete Sinclair. He has ——"

"John went to see his mother, and oh, Fanny ——"

"They're awful poor, and Pete ——"

"Those hateful men! It's all their fault!"

"We're going to get Grace; she will know what to do."

"I could not make any sense out of the broken, excited sentences, beyond that something was wrong with Pete, the one-armed boy who kept the candy stand down town.

After we reached the tank we went straight to an immense oak tree we called "ours," and were soon seated about it. Then every one began to talk again. Grace put her fingers into her ears and laughingly shook her head.

"I can't hear!" she cried.

"Unplug your ears, then," said her brother, pulling down her hands.

"Then I hear too much!"

There was a laugh at this, out of which Gussie's voice rang authoritatively.

"Johnnie, you know the most about it. You tell, and every one else keep still."

So Johnnie told the story.

A LIFE WASTED.

About thirty years ago a gentleman from New York, who was traveling in the South, met a young girl of great beauty and wealth and married her. They returned to New York, and plunged into a mad whirl of gayety. The young wife had been a gentle, thoughtful girl, anxious to help all suffering and want, and to serve God faithfully; but as Mrs. L——, she had troops of flatterers. Her beauty and her dresses were described in the society journals; her bon mots flew from mouth to mouth; her equipage was one of the most attractive in the park. In a few months she was intoxicated with admiration. She and her husband flitted from New York to Newport, from London to Paris, with no object but enjoyment. There were other men and women of their class who had some other worthier pursuits—literature, or art, or the elevation of the poorer classes—but L—— and his wife lived solely for amusements. They dressed, danced, flirted, hurried from ball to reception and from dinner to opera. Young girls looked at Mrs. L—— with fervent admiration, perhaps with envy, as the foremost leader of society. About ten years ago she was returning from California, when an accident occurred on the railroad train on which she was a passenger, and she received a fatal internal injury. She was carried into a wayside station, and there, attended only by a physician from a neighboring village, she died.

Dr. Blank said that it was one of the most painful experiences of his life.

He had to tell her that she had but an hour to live. She was not suffering any pain; her only consciousness of hurt was that she was unable to move, so that it was no wonder she could not believe him.

"I must go home," she said imperatively, "to New York."

"Madam, it is impossible. If you are moved it will shorten the time you have to live."

She was lying on the floor. The brakemen had rolled their coats to make her a pillow. She looked about her at the little dingy station, with a stove, stained with tobacco, in the midst.

"I have but an hour, you tell me?"

"Not more."

"And this is all that is left me of the world? It is not much, doctor," with a half smile.

The men left the room, and he locked the door that she might not be disturbed. She threw her arms over her face and lay quiet a long time; then she turned on the doctor in a frenzy:

"To think of all that I might have done with my money and my time! God wanted me to help the poor and the sick; it's too late now. I've only an hour!" She struggled up wildly. "Why, doctor, I did nothing—nothing but lead the fashion! Great God! the fashion! Now I've only an hour! An hour!"

But she had not even that, for the exertion had proved fatal, and in a moment she lay dead at his feet.

"No sermon that I ever heard," said the doctor, "was like the woman's despairing cry, 'It's too late!' "—Selected.

GIRLS, LEARN TO BE HOUSEKEEPERS.

Here is a capital little sermon on housekeeping. St. Nicholas preaches it: Begin with your own possessions. Reform your upper bureau drawer; relieve your closet pegs of their accumulation of garments out of use a month or two ago. Institute a clear and cheerful order in the midst of which you can daily move, and learn to keep it so that it will be part of your toilet to dress yourself, leaving the draperies you take off as lightly and artistically hung, or as delicately folded and placed, the skirts you loop to wear or the ribbon and lace you put with a soft neatness about your throat. Cherish your instincts of taste and fitness in every little thing you have about you. This will not make you "fussy"; it is the one thing that does that—the not knowing, except by fidgety experiment, what is harmony and the intangible grace of relation.

Take upon yourself gradually—for the sake of getting them in like manner, if for no other need—all the cares that belong to your own small territory of home. Get together things for use in these cares. Have your little wash-cloths and your sponges for bits of cleaning; your furniture brush, and your whisk and pan, your bottle of sweet oil and spirits of turpentine and piece of flannel, to preserve polish and restore the gloss where dark wood grows dim or gets spotted. Find out, by following your surely-growing sense of thoroughness and niceness, the best and readiest ways of keeping all fresh about you. Invent your own processes; they will come to you. When you have made yourself wholly mistress of what you can learn and do in your own apartment, so that it is easier and more natural for you to do it than to let it alone, then you have learned enough to keep a whole house so far as his cleanly ordering is concerned.

HOPE FOR HIM.

How often do we hear a parent say of a mischievous boy: "I would not mind so much if I could only believe him." Whatever his other traits, truth is essentially the touchstone of a boy's character. The following is a case in point:

"I don't know that you will be able to do much with him," said a father to the principal of a school, to whom he had brought his son as a pupil, "he is so full of mischief."

"Does he tell the truth?" asked the principal. "Can I always depend upon his word?"

"O, yes," said the father, "he is honest; he will tell the truth, even when it is against himself; you may depend upon that."

"Then we can manage him," said the principal. "He will make a reliable, manly man."—Selected.

THE REAL MOTHER-IN-LAW.

Who was it taught my wife to bake
A loaf of bread or fancy cake,
And appetizing dishes make?
My mother-in-law.

Who was it, when my wife was ill,
Bestowed upon her care and skill,
And saved to me a nurse's bill?
My mother-in-law.

Who then my little ones prepared
Each morn for school, who for them cared,
And all their little sorrows shared?
My mother-in-law.

Who was it, when their prayers were said,
So snugly tucked them into bed,
And, till they slept, beside them stayed?
My mother-in-law.

Who of my clothing then took care,
Who overlooked my underwear,
And kept each garment in repair?
My mother-in-law.

Who oft to me her aid has lent
To buy the coal and pay the rent?
Who'd gladly see me President?
My mother-in-law.

A loving grandmother is she,
A generous friend she's been to me,
Forever honored let her be,
My mother-in-law.

TEMPERANCE.

THE CHICAGO W. C. T. U. TEMPLE.

One of the beautiful features of the Temple will be the entrance on Monroe street to the Willard Auditorium. It has a broad, low, Gothic, arched doorway—the stone in the center running up several feet into a point which is finished with a Gothic pediment resembling a cross; in the widest part of this pointed stone, just over the arch of the door, is a large, circular piece cut in the granite, where is to be inserted the seal of the National W. C. T. U., in bronze, representing the Madonna and child, the national flag in the background, with the palmetto of the South intermingling with the pine of the North. It will bear the legend, "For God and Home and Every Land." Underneath this, the stone is cut to represent a broad, white ribbon, on which is carved in large letters, "Willard Hall." Circling around the arch of the door, the following quotation will be cut in the stone, "Not willing that any should perish." On the sides of the door at the entrance will be carved shields of States. (We will have more to say about the shields at another time.) This doorway leads into the beautiful entrance hall, which is about 125 feet long, by fourteen feet wide; as it nears the entrance to the auditorium there is an offset, and the hall narrows to twelve feet in width; in the corner thus formed there has been prepared an exquisite design for a marble and bronze fountain. This fountain will cost $1,000. It is hoped that some union or person will undertake to erect the fountain; they can have whatever inscription they please upon it. The floor of this entrance hall will be of marble mosaic, and the entire sides and ceiling will be finished in white marble. Its gleaming walls will speak to all who pass through this beautiful corridor of the generosity of our unions, for the tablets along the sides will give the names, by States, of each union that has contributed $100 to the building fund.—Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, in Union Signal.

ETHER DRINKING.

A curious habit now attracting attention in Ireland is that of ether drinking. According to statistics recently commented upon by Dr. Henry Conkling in the Brooklyn Medical Journal, the habit is of late years on the increase. The ether is sold to the consumers in groceries, taverns and public houses, selling for two cents (United States money) for two drams. Its very small cost enables the dose to be frequently repeated. From two drams to half an ounce is the amount usually drunk; and this is repeated from two to six times during the day, depending on the personal habits. One or two cases of confirmed drinkers are mentioned where one pint of ether was generally used, when on a debauch, in divided doses.

The amount that produces intoxication depends on the individual. The ether is drunk in a single swallow, sometimes diluted, and again taken pure. The intoxicating effects are quickly produced, and quickly pass away. It is possible, therefore, for an habitue to become intoxicated many times in a short period.

A small dose causes a feeling of exhilaration, the drinker laughing, dancing and being quite wild in his movements. If the small dose be not exceeded, there is no period of marked depression following the stimulation, but in larger quantities a state of stupor is frequently present, and as the effect passes away a feeling of weakness is left. Mania is a marked feature very commonly presented, the drinkers often becoming very violent.

In ether drinkers who have continuously consumed large quantities, a train of nervous and circulatory disturbances is generally present. Emaciation has been observed in certain cases, and occasionally the skin is of a cyanotic hue. The more moderate drinkers generally suffer from various forms of stomach troubles. In all cases there has been observed a marked change in the way of deterioration in the moral character. It is interesting to observe how common the use of ether as an intoxicant must be in the districts investigated, when the public conveyances are frequently impregnated with its odor.

TWO MILLION YOUNG ABSTAINERS.

The London Band of Hope Chronicle prints in its issue for June a detailed estimate of the number and strength of the juvenile temperance organizations in the United Kingdom. It shows 17,449 organizations of all kinds, with a total membership of 2,112,079. The societies known as the Bands of Hope are in the lead. There are 10,387, with 1,402,265 members. The junior division of the Church of England Temperance Society (after deducting one-fourth for organizations and members affiliated with the Bands of Hope) has 2,002 branches and 312,210 members. The other organizations represented are the Wesleyan Methodist Bands of Hope (185,341 members), United Methodist Free Church Bands of Hope (31,639 members), Juvenile Temples (63,325 members), Young Abstainers' Union (7,938 members), Bible Christian Bands of Hope (12,862 members), League of the Cross (20,000 members), Juvenile Rechabites (53,000 members), Cadets of Temperance (8,071 members), and Sons of the Phœnix (12,428 members).

TEMPERANCE NUGGETS.

A correspondent writes that he has in his possession a copy of the first Prohibition paper ever published in the United States, thirty-six years ago. Its title is a clear one, The Prohibitionist, and it was published at Albany, N. Y.

The society for the abolition of strong drink in Holland certifies that in a population of 3,500,000, there are 35,000 licenses for the sale of liquor annually granted. Computing two-thirds of the total population to be women and children, there is a saloon to every thirty-three men; a woful condition.

All Victorians in Australia point with pride to Mildura, the beauty spot, where the devolopment of the irrigation scheme of the Chaffey Brothers from San Francisco, is making the wilderness blossom as the rose. No public houses (saloons) have ever been licensed. After prosperity came, a club license was sought and granted, but wrought such disaster that it was soon revoked. The district policeman testifies that he has never had to arrest a drunken man.

Miss Ackerman sends this pleasant incident concerning the recent Australasian W. C. T. U. convention: "In the midst of all the enthusiam, four little street urchins put their heads in at the door and asked to sign the pledge. These dirty-faced, unkempt little Arabs came to the platform, and when the pledge was read they all signed. Prayer was offered, and the audience cheered the poor little boys as they went out again to a street life, so filled with dangers and temptations for the young."—Union Signal.

dile tears, over a church whose rules exclude any who would come in, only for the obnoxious laws against false and heathen altars, saloonism, and legitimate (?) and necessary (?) amusements. The churches are few, perhaps, which contain no weak men and women, who cannot be manipulated by designing men and made dissatisfied with wholesome and righteous laws. We are, as a city, under siege for over twenty years, and we are a standing miracle of grace and of Providence.

We are often reminded that the Abington Association harbors secret orders, and nearly all the ministers indorse them in many ways; and how arrogant is it for this one little church to stand out alone against "the orders!"

We have just enjoyed a treat of good things from our brother, W. B. Stoddard, of Washington, D. C., who preached us a good Reform sermon yesterday, in our church edifice. He has lectured at several points in this section, and is, tonight, to lecture at Clark's Green, in the Baptist church. This has lately become the hot-bed of lodgery. With certain classes of men, Satan is moderate—almost modest. Of the ministry a "silent tongue" is about all he requires, on the lodge question, save only, on certain occasions, when lodgery is to air itself in the churches. Then the minister of such a lodge-ridden parish may—yea, must, open his mouth in laudation of the "noble order," or soon resign and move out.

Brother Stoddard is to speak on the 28th inst., in Factoryville, Wyoming, Co., where stands the Keystone Academy, with "A. L. & C." cut on the corner-stone, on which was poured, some years since, corn, wine, and oil by the agents of his Satanic majesty. Bro. S. is a gentleman and Christian, and an able defender of the living questions of the day. God bless him!

In conclusion, allow me to say that it is the bottom conviction of my soul, that the N. C. A. is the most important mission of the age. Without the knowledge and influence of this body shed abroad, all other missions and missionaries will be corrupted at the very fountain. Missions to the heathen by heathens who worship from once to five times a week at the altars of Baal-peor! Missions to a heathen land from a land that sustains four heathen altars to one Christian altar! And no protest by any agency but by the agencies of the God-sent N. C. A. Her twenty-three years' work covers the ages to come. This 1891, but for this checkmate on lodgery, would have been in Egyptian darkness, condensed by all the pressure of which earth and hell are capable.

Truly yours for the light,

Nathan Callender.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

LESSON VIII.—Third Quarter.—August 23.

SUBJECT.—Christ the Bread of Life.—John 6: 26-40.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Lord, evermore give us this bread.—John 6: 34.

| Open the Bible and read the lesson. |

Daily Readings.—M.—John 6: 26-34. T.—John 6: 35-40. W.—John 6: 41-51. T.—John 6: 52-58. F.—Ex. 16: 11-17. S.—Eph. 2: 11-18. S.—John 8: 20-30.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Seeking Christ from an earthly motive.—vs. 26, 27. The fickle multitude had but little idea of the spiritual nature of Christ's kingdom, or they would not have made his feeding their bodies the sign of his Messiahship above all the other miracles he had wrought. They seemed capable of understanding only what appealed directly to their senses. The pains they took to find Christ would seem hopeful had we not Jesus' words that they sought him, not to be taught the way of life, but because they did eat of the loaves and were filled. It was not for his miracles they sought him; that is, not for the higher truth they stood for, but for the mere temporal benefits which flowed from them. How many to-day are favorable to religion, and even give liberally to its support for no better reason. "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, ' even though it comes through the very hands of the church herself, for she has hireling servants as well as true sons; "but for the meat which endures unto everlasting life." Doing the will of his Father, Christ called his meat and drink, and none who are his followers can live by bread alone. Their souls will be hungry for spiritual meat that the world knows not of.

2. The questioning of unbelief.—vs. 28–33. "What shall we do that we might work the works of God?" Whether sincerely uttered or not, this was a most important question, which we all need to ask. The answer goes to the root of all holy living:—"that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." Faith in Christ is a divine seed, which, when implanted in the heart, is sure to bring forth the fruits of faith. Their asking for a sign shows at once their insincerity. One can hardly imagine that any of the five thousand so miraculously fed could have put this taunting question; yet, if they did, it shows how little power there is in a mere miracle, however wonderful, to convert unbelievers. "Our fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead." Possibly, in their gross way of interpreting his words, they may have fancied that he claimed the power to provide literal bread that would make those who eat of it immortal, and resented the idea both as absurd and as making him greater than Moses. Christ proceeds to show them their mistake, in the first place, in attributing the gift of the manna to Moses, instead of honoring God as the real author of the miracle. He gave them that bread from heaven, and was now giving them his Son to be the bread of life to all who should believe on him; that celestial food of which the manna was only a dim type and shadow.

3. Encouragements to come to Christ.—vs. 34–40. Like the Samaritan woman who said, "Give me this water that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw," there were some hearts touched sufficiently by his discourse to say, "Lord, evermore give us this bread," without any very clear idea of what they were asking for. They vaguely felt that it was a good thing to have, just as so many to-day feel that it would be a good thing to have religion, without any distinct understanding of what it really consists in, or any settled purpose to give up all things if need be in order to obtain it. Christ replies by trying to clear away the mist from their minds with the assertion, in still plainer terms, that he himself was the bread of life;—so abundantly satisfying that he who cometh to him will be like one living where a feast is constantly spread. It would be impossible for him to hunger any more. But how could he answer the prayer of those who persistently refused to fulfill the first condition? How can a starving man be filled if he will not come where the food is and take it? But as Christ knows no will but that of the Father, we have here, as it were, a double cord of promise to sustain the hopes of every sinner who seeks him. "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." The fact that a soul is hungry for Christ and feels its need of him, is the seal of God's will in relation to that soul. "And him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." Christ accepts every such soul as the gift of his Father, and there is, therefore, a two-fold bond between them. As he came down from heaven to do the will of his Father in all things, it is impossible for him to lose one soul, however weak or ignorant, out of the many who then and in succeeding ages should flock to him for salvation. "And I will raise him up at the last day." This is the blessed promise made to every believer,—eternal life; but that life can only come through Christ by receiving from him a spiritual nature which cannot die. It is thus he becomes the true bread from heaven to all his disciples. To make his will our own; to have constant communion with him as an ever-loving, ever-present Saviour, to whom we can go with every joy or trial; this is to feed on him as the bread of life.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—"Tad" Lincoln, the youngest son of ex-President Lincoln, who died after the assassination of his father, is to have a memorial in the First Baptist church, Chicago. He at one time belonged to its Sunday-school. The church will establish a library, costing not less than $500, to be kept perpetually as Tad Lincoln's memorial.

—Rev. George B. Foster feels constrained to accept the professorship of philosophy in McMaster University, and has therefore resigned his pastorate of the First church, Saratoga Springs. He is a man of great intellectuality and power, and Saratoga will lose a valued member of the community.

—Rev. Aaron Parker died in Greene, Chenango county, N. Y., July 17, in the ninetieth year of his age. He was one of the pioneer preachers of the Baptist denomination in Central New York, and in his every work was cotemporary with Jabez Swan, Father E. T. Jacobs and Elder J. H. Chamberlain, whose memories are cherished by the Baptists.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Dr. Chas. L. Morgan, of Moline, Ill., has been called to the pastorate of the Congregational Church of the Redeemer, Lake View (Chicago). He has also accepted, and will begin his ministrations on the first Sunday in September.

—A handsome tablet, suitably engraved, a memorial to Rev. John Robinson, pastor in Holland of the Pilgrim Fathers, was unveiled with interesting and appropriate ceremony in St. Peter's church, Leyden, July 24th. The unveiling was witnessed by a great many Americans, many of whom went to Europe for the double purpose of attending the Congregational Council in London, and this ceremony in Leyden.

FREE METHODISTS.

—A circuit camp meeting will be held at Verona, Ont., August, 25–31. Camp ground one-half mile from depot.

—The annual camp meeting for Spring Arbor district will be held on the old camp ground at Spring Arbor, Michigan, August 12–19, one-fourth of a mile north of the depot.

—The North Michigan annual conference will convene at Lake View, Aug. 19, at 2 p. m., Rev. E. P. Hart presiding.

—The next session of the Missouri conference will be held half a mile west of Albany, Gentry county, Mo , in connection with a camp meeting. The camp meeting commences Aug. 13, and will be held over the second Sabbath. The conference commences Aug. 19.

—The Cedar Rapids district camp meeting will be held in a grove one half mile south of Lafayette, Linn county, Iowa, and about nine miles northwest of Marion, Aug. 20–30.

—The annual camp meeting for the Wilkes Barre and Windsor districts is to be held at Ararat Summit, Pa., Aug. 19–26.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The annual camp meeting began at Des Plaines, Ill., on Thursday last. The attendance was very large. At the opening services, Rev. Dr. C. G. Truesdell, presiding elder of the district, conducted the services and preached the sermon. Over a thousand people were in attendance. The singing was led by the Rev. O. E. Murray, of the Wabash Avenue Methodist church. He will continue to lead throughout the camp meeting and will be assisted by a large chorus choir. No leading evangelist has been engaged this year, as has been the custom heretofore, to lead the services, and home talent will be used. The camp ground is under the charge of the Chicago District Camp Ground Association, of which F. C. Hoag, of Evanston, is president.

—Rev. Dr. Daniel P. Kidder, who died last week in Evanston, was the first formally appointed professor in the Garrett M. E. Biblical Institute, having been chosen to fill the chair of theology in 1856. Fifteen years later he was called to a similar position in Drew Theological Seminary. He was born in 1815.

LAKE BLUFF.

—The class work of the Sunday-school Assembly has begun at Lake Bluff. The classes are fairly well attended. The exercises were opened by a devotional meeting led by the Rev. Dr. H. G. Jackson. The Bible section then met and were instructed by the Rev Watson Tranter. The subject for the first meeting was "The Geography of the Bible World." The teachers were addressed by Dr. Jackson, who spoke on the "Qualifications of Bible Teachers." Heretofore the post graduate class has used a text book in its work. This year Dr. N. H. Axtell will deliver a course of lectures before it on the "Evidences of Christianity." His opening lecture was on "The Existence of a Personal God."

PRESBYTERIAN.

—For several weeks the better class of the people of Racine, Wis., have held meetings in the interest of law and order, and have taken measures to inforce the existing laws against Sabbath desecration and other evils. The city clergy are in the lead. Rev. T. E. Barr, the Presbyterian pastor, takes an active part in the struggle.

—The Middle Creek Presbyterian church of Freeport, Ill., Dr. J. S. Braddock, pastor, received at its July communion thirty-two new members, all save three upon profession of their faith. Four of the number received the ordinance of baptism.

—At Wichita, Kan., in the month or July, twenty-three persons were admitted to the First Presbyterian church, making, in all, 269 accessions to membership in the two years and three months since the Rev. David Winters became pastor of the church.

—Quite recently a wagon containing seven persons was struck by a train at a crossing near Elmira New York, and six of them were killed. The victims were Rev. Wellington J. White, wife, two daughters and two other young girls. Mr. White was a member of the Presbytery of Canton, a missionary of the Presbyterian church, and had spent some time in this country, expecting soon to return to his field of labor. He was visiting his parents at Elmira when the accident occurred.

Home and Health.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

Save your cold tea; it is excellent for cleaning grained wood.

Wild mint scattered about the house will rid it of rats and mice.

Hot solution of salt and vinegar brightens copper and tinware, also bathtubs.

Mirrors should not be hung where the light shines directly upon them.

Warm soap-suds will keep the bugs from house-plants and make them grow very fast.

To remove finger-marks, putty-stains, etc., from glass, put a little soda in the water with which you wash it.

New tins should be set over the fire with boiling water in them for several hours before food is put into them.

If kid gloves are laid upon a damp towel for two or three minutes, they will go on with less chance of tearing.

To remove rust from knives cover the blades with sweet oil for a day or two and then rub with a lump of fresh lime.

To keep linen from turning yellow put it away rough dry after washing and bleaching well and rinsing in blue water.

Dish-towels and dish-cloths should be washed, scalded, and thoroughly dried every day, or they soon become musty.

A broom may be kept in good condition for a long time if it is washed once a week in clean hot suds, and then hung to dry.

Good flour is not tested by its color. White flour may not be the best. The test of good flour is by the amount of water it absorbs.

Never sun feather beds. Air them thoroughly on a windy day in a cool place. The sun draws the oil and gives the feathers a rancid smell.

If troubled with headache, try the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and back of the neck.

If a poison has been accidentally swallowed, instantly drink a pint of warm water in which has been stirred a teaspoonful of salt and one or two of mustard. A half glass of sweet oil will render many poisons harmless.

Numerous remedies have been prescribed for mosquito bites, but a German writer says that ordinary soap is as good as any of them. He always carries a small piece with him on his country excursions, and in case of a bite makes a lather over the affected part and allows it to dry on. The burning is at once relieved, and all pain soon disappears. Should it return, as sometimes happens, it is only necessary to repeat the application.

Fried fish is very good turned in salted flour, or salted egg and bread crumbs, and then put into boiling hot fat to get brown.

Zinc is best cleaned with hot, soapy water, then polished with kerosene.

If the hands are rubbed on a stick of celery after peeling onions, the smell will be entirely removed. Or onions may be peeled under water without offence to eyes or hands.

Rain water, it is well known, is the best cosmetic. A good substitute is to let some orange, lemon, or cucumber peel soak in water used to wash the face. This need not be especially prepared for every ablution. Keep a wide-mouthed bottle or jar of it on your toilet stand and use daily for the face. It softens the skin and gives a beeoming glow, while healthfully stimulating the action of the skin.

EASY WAYS TO MAKE SOUP.

Why is it that so many people think it a hard matter to have soup for dinner, and why is it that those who have the most available material for this purpose often use it the least?

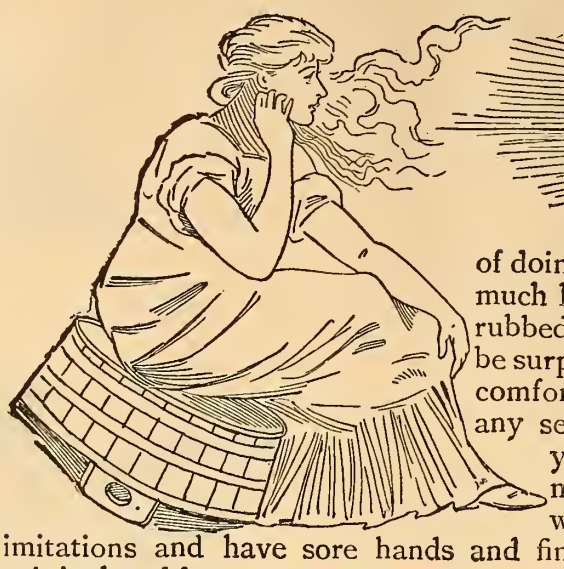
You do not necessarily need meat. Bran makes an excellent stock, and ought to be used by housekeepers, especially during the summer months, as it is inexpensive and contains much of the nutritive property of meat.

It is made in the proportion of one cup of bran, six cups of water, one-half teaspoonful salt; this should boil slowly two or three hours, should then be strained and set aside to cool, forming a stock from which many varieties of soup may be made, such as rice, puree, vegetable soup, potato soup, etc. It all depends upon what you put with it.

Have in the house always a bottle of celery salt, some bay leaves, and whole cloves. Five cents' worth of bay leaves, to be bought at the druggist's, will last a dozen years.

Into perhaps a quart or more of the stock, put one hour before dinner half an onion sliced, and three tablespoonfuls of well-washed rice. Let this boil gently. A few minutes before dinner add a saltspoonful of celery-salt, pepper and salt to taste. Chop a little fresh parsley fine, and put into the tureen. It will not flavor much, but will look pretty. A little here means a teaspoonful when chopped. The rice meantime has boiled itself into a thickish substance, forming what is called a puree. Try it. —Selected.

Unless more care is given to the hair, the coming man is liable to be a hairless animal; hence to prevent the hair from falling use Hall's Hair Renewer.



Hot Weather is the very best time to try Pyle's Pearline. Then the wash is largest, and a saving of time and toil is best appreciated. Think of doing a large wash with little or no rubbing. Consider how much longer your delicate summer clothing will last if not rubbed to pieces on a washboard. A saving is a gain. You'll be surprised and pleased with the cleanliness, satisfaction and comfort which comes of the use of PEARLINE. Simple—any servant can use it. Perfectly harmless—you can soak your finest linen and laces in Pearline and water for a month, with safety. Delightful in the bath—makes the water soft. Perhaps you have been using some of the imitations and have sore hands and find your clothing going to pieces. Moral—use the original and best. Sold everywhere.

Pearline is manufactured only by JAMES PYLE, New York

Farm Notes.

MULTUM IN PARVO.

Red combs are a sign of vigor.

Early broods are the most profitable.

Good roads are the highways of wealth.

Whenever you see a weed cut it below the surface.

The hop crop of Washington for 1890 netted $2,500,000 to that State.

Plan your work. Know just what is to be done, and when and how it is to be done.

Chopped onions are recommended as a good food for chickens if fed only once or twice a week.

Remember that the demand for eggs in this country is, on the average, much greater than the supply.

Celery and asparagus are both healthful vegetables; and we can all grow enough for home use if we will.

Cross-bred sheep are good practical sheep. There is no absolute need of throwing away a flock because it is composed of inferior sheep. Breed it up.

Clover, remember, is the best balanced food of any of the "hays." Good corn fodder and good clover hay, fed together, are first-class for the production of butter.

Carrots make a very palatable and valuable food, especially for colts, and with ground adapted to them, it pays to grow a few bushels as an appetizer for the horses and colts, or as butter-color for the cows.

If the grape vines were not properly pruned last fall, do it this fall. Cut away all superfluous wood, get the vine down to a size and shape that will enable you to handle it, and remember that by not allowing it to overbear you will get the finest product.

Many a farmer makes war on the bumble bees that build their nests in his hay fields, not knowing that they are his servants to pollenize his clover crop. The clover raised in Australia bore no seed till bumble bees were introduced into that country.

If people engaging in the poultry business would apply strict poultry measures to the business, there would be better success. A business with system about it generally stands upon its own bottom. We know an instance where care and forethought succeeded above everything else, and a young, industrious man was at the bottom of it. He was careful of his stock, their house and their feed. He marketed always in the nick of time, and he has made money while others were losing. Just the other day we heard that the commission man pays him ten per cent more money than any one else, as he always sends his goods to market in a prime and attractive style. Appearances are everything, and when a man shows taste he is generally paid for it.—Selected.

SHEEP ON THE FARM.

The importance of sheep to successful farming cannot be estimated. They will eradicate briars and weeds from the land. Besides, there are many profits from a flock when properly managed. There is a profit from wool, from increase of flock, and from the rich manure. They are also valuable to the farmer in destroying the noxious weeds and as enrichers of the soil. In England, the home of the mutton breeds, he is considered an unthrifty farmer who does not keep a flock of sheep. Were the same views held in America there would be more sheep and better farmers. Much of the profit depends on the care and management of the flock. Sheep should be kept tame and quiet. Wild sheep are unprofitable. They should have a pasture by themselves not far from the house. No other farm stock should be allowed with them. They should not be worried by frisky colts, unruly cattle or worthless dogs. Large flocks are seldom profitable. Small flocks of choice, thrifty sheep, when well cared for, are more profitable than any stock of the same value. The soil and climate of New England is well adapted to sheep husbandry. There are also good markets in every city and large town. Choice mutton finds a ready sale at very remunerative prices. Mutton and lambs are more profitable than wool. Farmers, why not try a few sheep—from ten to twenty-five? You will find it a paying investment if properly managed.—Mass. Ploughman.

LARGE AND SMALL FARMS.

Many arguments have been adduced in favor of small as against large farms, and here is one which is very suggestive; Those who loosely calculate that it costs no more to run a large farm than a small one, make a serious mistake. Extra teams, tools and farm implements are needed for increased acreage, if it is to be run the same as a small farm. Not many owners of large farms have either money or the executive ability to run them on the high-pressure principle. Hence much of the land lies unused and all the profit is made on a comparatively small part of the farmstead.

SWAMP AND MARSH LANDS.

This country is prospectively rich in these now "waste places." According to one writer it is estimated that the area of unreclaimed swamp and marsh land in the United States that can be drained and brought under cultivation is equal to that of all the cultivated lands, or nearly three hundred million acres. Much of this land, it is pertinently added, could be reclaimed without much difficulty or expense and would make farmsteads of great value.

FOR THE TOILET

There is no more useful or elegant article than Ayer's Hair Vigor—the most popular and economical hair-dressing in the market. It causes the hair to grow abundantly and retain the beauty and texture of youth; prevents baldness, heals troublesome humors of the scalp and keeps it clean, cool, and healthy. Both ladies and gentlemen everywhere prefer Ayer's Hair Vigor to any other dressing for the hair. Mrs. Lydia O. E. Pitts-Moody, writes: "I Ask For Ayer's Hair Vigor have used ton, Me., of for some time, and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and falling hair, so that I was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor, my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor to any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair." *

Between Two Opinions: OR THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR. By Miss E. E. Flagg, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc., etc. Everyone who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, interesting in narrative, should read this book upon the power of secret societies in politics, and the remedy. 389 pages; cloth, postpaid, $1.00.

What Your Great Grandmother Did.

She hetcheled the flax and carded the wool, and wove the linen, and spun the tow, and made the clothes for her husband and ten children. She made butter and cheese, she dipped tallow candles, to light the house at night, and she cooked all the food for her household by an open fire-place and a brick oven. Yes; and when she was forty years of age, she was already an old lady whose best days were over. Her shoulders were bent and her joints enlarged by hard work, and she wore spectacles and a cap. Her great granddaughter, with all the modern conveniences for comfort, refinement and luxury, may be as charming and attractive at forty-five as at twenty. Especially is this true if she preserves her health and beauty by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which wards off all female ailments and irregularities, cures them if they already exist, keeps the life current healthful and vigorous, and enables the woman of middle age to retain the freshness of girlhood upon brow and cheek, the light of youth in her eyes, and its elasticity in her step. Sold by all druggists.

Early Friday morning in the Whitechapel district of London an old woman was stabbed so badly, presumably by "Jack the Ripper," that she will die.

The imperial and official circles of Germany have taken the World's Fair enterprise into favor, and the whole of industrial Germany will follow. The German commissioner for the fair, Herr Wermuth, says Emperor William shows such interest in inquiring into arrangements for German representation at the fair as suggests that it is his intention personally to grace the fair with his presence. It is more likely that the Emperor will go to Chicago than Chancellor von Caprivi.

The German government has instructed all Chambers of Commerce in Prussia to send the best possible representation to the Chicago Fair.

At the State Assembly of the Knights of Labor, held at Springfield, Ill., last week, a member of the national executive committee, in a speech, "suggested as a means of increasing the membership that men be allowed to become members in secret to avoid incurring the displeasure of their employers. This could be done by their taking the obligation outside the lodge, and thus they would be shielded until such time as the order should become strong enough in their vicinity for them to feel safe in belonging to it." Whether this suggestion received support in the assembly or not, it is so plausible that its tacit adoption may result in enlarging the membership of the order and swelling its receipts.

The New York Voice prints a number of extracts from letters and exchanges received by it from various sources, and gathers "some hopeful indications" that members of the Farmers' Alliance and kindred organizations are becoming more and more in favor of prohibition as a political doctrine. Some of the printed expressions are deemed quite "emphatic" in that direction. But it is equally injudicious to put one's trust in politicians or princes, especially where secret lodge rule is paramount to every other consideration. Of course every accession to the ranks of the prohibitionists is to be hailed with pleasure; but it is not every so-called prohibitionist who is one, or who would dare to vote for one if his lodge demurred.

The American Legion of Honor Journal for August (a Boston secret society paper), referring to Bro. J. P. Stoddard's triumphant attack upon Freemasonry before the Boston Baptist Ministers' Meeting, in June last, makes a serious mistake when it says: "Mr. Stoddard, by his own confession, is false to the vows he took upon himself when he joined the order" (Freemasonry), "which he now so bitterly opposes, apparently 'for revenue only.' Bro. Stoddard was never a Mason, and never claimed to be one; but he probably knows more about Masonry than one-half of its members know of it themselves. The diatribe of the above-named journal is therefore lost upon its readers. It is strange how wilfully ignorant secret society organs can be when ignorance best serves their purpose.

At the session of the Iowa Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, at Sioux City, on Wednesday of last week, Grand Chancellor Norris reported his decision to the effect that a saloon-keeper cannot be a member of the order, as under the law he is not a person of good moral character: also that a man cannot run a saloon in Nebraska and hold membership in Iowa. Prohibition has done much good to the lodge in Iowa, and to that State in many other ways, and is gaining friends, on this account, wherever a free ballot is respected.

The death of James Russell Lowell at his home in Massachusetts, last week, removes a poet of international celebrity and an anti-slavery advocate of the days before the Southern rebellion, when the friend of the slave was deemed little better than a thief and a robber. Mr. Lowell wrote much and well in that stirring period. Of him, his venerable contemporary, John G. Whittier, said on Mr. Lowell's seventieth birthday, Feb. 22, 1889: "The droll quaintness of dialect and the rollicking humor and sarcasm of his verses were a power in the anti-slavery conflict. The boomerang of denunciation sometimes came back on the heads of those who hurled it, but Lowell's arrows hit their mark and stayed there. Among those who did good service in the cause of human freedom he deserves to be reckoned." Mr. Lowell also filled one or more places of national trust with fidelity, and, on the whole, was a very fair representative of the talented, intelligent American citizen.

About 400 members of the Illinois Granges and Labor Associations met at Springfield, Ill., last week. Judge J. M. Thompson of Joliet, Master of the State Grange, made an address, in which he said: "We want in justice what belongs to us. It is useless to say that farmers are not organized. One hundred and fifty thousand are organized, and with the labor men we have an army of over 2,000,000. Our influence is now being felt. We are keeping three good men at Washington to watch Congress and the United States Senate. It has been complained in the national capital that one farmer has more influence than six Congressmen. This is because our men there represent 1,750 organized lodges in Illinois alone, and this power is beginning to be felt." "The Grange," he said, "is a non-partisan organization, but as the farmers furnish 60 per cent of the voters, they ought to have something to say in politics and pay some attention to the legislative ticket. In Democratic districts let the farmer-Democrat candidate be elected, and in Republican districts let the Republican-farmer candidate be elected, in order to secure proper legislation."

A Chicago Knight of Pythias, having been treated by the order in what he deemed rather an unknightly manner, wrote out its ritual and offered it for publication to the New York World. The editor of that journal, ignoring an important and honorable courtesy in most newspaper offices, to refrain from publishing confidential communications with the names of their writers, gave the ex-knight's letter to the world through its columns, and brought upon him the contumely of that and other orders; one secret organ has expended considerable fustian in denouncing the man whom they had duped into the order and scorned for exposing it. They might have saved themselves the trouble. Before us lies a printed book, which anyone can buy for a quarter-dollar, entitled: "Knights of Pythias. Illustrated. The Full Illustrated Ritual of the Three Ranks of the Order, with the Addition of the Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank; by a Past-Chancellor. Tenth Edition." It is for sale at this office.

Certain benevolent citizens of Toronto, Can., a few years ago, organized a society and built a home and hospital for the care and healing of destitute or orphan children. The capital of this organization, in money and property, appropriate buildings, etc., is estimated at about $50,000, so that a permanent and satisfactory work of charity, it is understood, untrammeled by lodge affiliations, was established. Early in the present season this creditable institution projected the building, on an adjacent island in Lake Ontario, of a temporary hospital and fresh-air resort for its invalid children, and for that laudable purpose solicited contributions from the citizens. Contributions were liberally made, and, among others, the Masons donated $2,000 to the fund. On the strength of this contribution, the lodge men ignored the rights of the original projectors, elected seven officers of the new hospital, assuming entire control of it and its income, and adopted a rule that the children of Masons should at all times have the preference in benefits to be derived from the enterprise. "Hence, ye profane!" sings the Mason when the lodge gets its "benevolent" claws upon other people's ideas or property. "Why," asks the Voice of Masonry, "why is it that some craftsmen never discern the greatness and goodness of Freemasonry?" The reason is obvious.

THE G. A. R. AND PENSIONS.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The last concourse of ex-soldiers, recently assembled at Detroit, Michigan, is directing public attention to the G. A. R., and leads to the inquiry whether an organization, evidently commenced for patriotic and humane purposes, has not, during the twenty-five years of its existence, so degenerated in its morals and methods, as to become a national incubus to be abated and removed.

Believing, as I do, that all wars are intrinsically wrong, and that all ceremonies and organizations that tend to glorify war are injurious to Christianity and inimical to the public welfare, I cannot but regret that the many excellent citizens connected with the G. A. R. should continue in that relation, and that through their influence the Sons of Veterans, and other kindred organizations, should be raised up to promote the war spirit and to add to the vast network of secret societies that honey-comb every department of civil society. Wars and war preparations have for their ostensible object the preservation of peace; but experience shows the effect to be the reverse. War promotes war. Public executions were designed to diminish crime, and especially to prevent murders. But the experiences of centuries show that they have tended powerfully to increase crime and promote murder; so that most of the States have found it necessary to have the death penalty carefully hidden from public view. The same principle applies, in a still greater degree, to all wars and all military parades.

But the question which is now arresting public attention is the relation of the G. A. R. to the pension list and public taxation. No one questions the propriety of giving pensions to disabled soldiers; but that more than one-half of our vast national revenue should be appropriated to the payment of claims, many of which have not the slightest semblance to justice, is exciting astonishment and indignation. I am glad, too, to hear that a good many of the old soldiers not only wash their hands of the whole conspiracy, but are openly protesting against it.

Mr. M. W. Sloane, in the Century for June says: "Gen. Grant thought that $27,000,000 annually was not only an ample, but a lavish provision for those who had suffered in the last war, barring all schemes of back pay, service and dependent pensions, which he denounced as highway robbery. Garfield, in 1872, said that nothing but unwarrantable extravagance would increase the pension list above $29,000,000 a year."

But under the present pension act, we are paying out of our depleted national treasury at the rate of nearly five times the very highest estimate, while there are now pending 600,000 applications, which, if they should generally be allowed, would make the entire cost not less than $200,000,000 per year. When we consider the entire amount of all our State taxes was (by the census of 1890) only $70,000,000, and that this seems often oppressive, we can get some idea of the vast burden that somebody must bear by paying more than twice that amount into the national treasury. Is it strange that there should be disaffection and discontent among the farmers and laboring men, out of whose hard-earned money these vast sums are being drawn? Nor is this the end of the demands of the G. A. R. There is the "Senne Pension bill," "the Per diem bill," "the Equalization bill," and the bill to pay the difference between gold and greenbacks; and should all these be passed, it would be easy to find other pretexts; so that, by-and-by, about the sole object of the government will be to glorify a war that ceased twenty-six years ago, and ought, by this time, to be treated as we treat other historical conflicts.

But the sad and terrible part is, that this vast sum buys the G. A. R. vote for those members of Congress who consent to their demands, and takes all freedom of choice from the aspirant to any national office. A secret society of one-half a million, aided by other subordinate societies, and drawing from the national treasury an amount at least equal to ten dollars per year for each voter, constitutes an oligarchy whose influence is to be dreaded and deplored.

AN ILL BIRD, BUT A BEAUTIFUL LESSON.

Our dear missionary friend, Bro. Gladwin, of Bombay, India, tells a pleasant story of the crows of that country in a private letter, which the Bible-loving children who read the Cynosure will surely remember when they have read it; and when, in later life, they have had experience of God's providences, they will be thankful for this crow's-nest lesson to help them understand God's ways and bear with meekness and patience the trials of life. The letter reads:

Here, in Bombay, we have an abundance of large crows. They are said to be the same bird as the raven of the Scripture. They are comparatively tame, and are all living about on the trees and house-tops. I was once quite entertained with the way in which the parent crows tore up their nest, near my window, in order to compel the young ones to fly away. It was rather amusing to me, but I suppose not at all funny to the poor young crows. They must have wondered why their dear parents had turned so rough and unkind. But the old crows knew a great deal more than the fledglings in the nest.

Now this is exactly the illustration which God uses in his Word, as describing his dealings with his people. (Deut. 32: 11.) Read that verse in your family circle, and see what a peculiarly instructive one it is regarding God's providence. "The eagle stirreth up her nest," shows you the bird destroying her nest in order to compel the little ones to learn to fly. So God destroys some of our earthly hopes, to compel us to launch out more fully by faith.

Then, in the latter part of the verse we read how the eagle comes to her troubled and frightened offspring, and "taketh them and beareth them on her wings." So, as we are tempted to mourn over the destruction of our earthly comforts, we find God's wonderful compensation. He gives us that which is far better, for we find that, instead of those human props, "underneath us are the everlasting arms."

The annual report of the British Women's Temperance Association, recently issued, states that the past year has been the most progressive one in its history. There are in all 425 societies, extending throughout twenty counties, the Isle of Man, and the Isle of Jersey.

SECRET SOCIETIES AS THEY ARE.

BY REV. C. G. FAIT.

[An address delivered at the Scandinavian Church in Monongo, North Dakota, a few weeks ago.]

Jesus answered him, "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogues and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing." John 18: 20.

These words of Jesus are important; important because of being written by him who spake as never man spake; important also to this age, especially because of this age being an age of lodges and because the declaration in the text disclaims any association with the secret lodge system. This text refutes the charge made by Masonic authors, that Jesus Christ belonged to a secret society and propagated his doctrine therein. The Saviour was no respecter of class or person as is shown in all his teachings. He came to bring peace and good will to men. He came to bestow his blessings, not upon a selected few, as do the lodges, but upon all; even the women and children are particularly noticed by him.

The Saviour would say to the secret order men of our day as to those of his own day: "Ye love darkness rather than light because your deeds are evil. He that doeth good cometh to that light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." Men who go into the lodges go into darkness and sin; they are putting their light under a bushel, a figure alluded to by the Saviour to show the absurdity of the secret lodge principle. The Scripture recognizes all secret lodge worship of the ancients as idolatry; and those who are recognized as the great lights of the modern secret lodge system claim identity to these ancient lodges.

The most celebrated authors of the present and of the past generations, such as McCoy, Emanuel, Rebold, Albert G. Mackey and others claim that the ancient mysteries as practiced by the various heathen nations of the earth was Freemasonry, making especial mention of the Eleusinian mysteries as exhibiting the highest type of ancient Freemasonry. These mysteries were invented and practiced by the idolatrous nations.

The Word of God everywhere denounces as idolaters, those who participate in such rites and ceremonies.

In Eph. 5: 11, 12 Paul warns us to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them; for it is a shame to speak of those things done by them in secret. The distinguished commentators, Rev. Ingram Corbin and Dr. Adam Clarke both say that St. Paul in this text referred to secret societies called the Eleusinian and Bacchanalian mysteries, which societies had penalties of death to be inflicted on those who attempted to reveal their secrets.

Here we have on one hand the apostle Paul condemning these societies, and Freemasons of the highest authority on the other side praising them; especially do they praise the Eleusinian society as being the highest type of ancient Freemasonry. Freemasons boast that their institution is the most ancient and most honorable institution in the world, not even excepting the church of Christ, notwithstanding a man might violate every one of the Ten Commandments, knowingly to the lodge, without expulsion from the lodge or without violating any of his Masonic obligations. Men are frequently led to believe Masonry a good thing because good men go into it. In proof we are assured that even King Solomon was a Freemason. We admit that according to Masonic legends and interpretation, he was a Freemason, but we affirm that on his becoming a Freemason he ceased to be a good man and became an idolater. Becoming an ancient Freemason, and becoming an ancient idolater, was one and the same thing. And as the laws of Masonry are as unchangeable as the laws of the Medes and Persians, it is the same to-day; to become a Freemason is to become an idolater. The Bible deplores Solomon's apostasy and idolatry; while Masonry exultingly exclaims the world is advancing. The good and wise king has joined us. There is no essential difference in the lodge worship of to-day and that of the days of King Solomon. When Solomon's heart became corrupt he adopted the worship of all the nations around him, each nation having a different figure or figures representing their deities, but the worship of them all was alike idolatrous. See 1 Kings 11: 5–10. We are also informed in the Scripture just quoted that Solomon built high places (we would call them temples or lodges). places for the various deities of the heathen nations around him and for the celebration of the rites, ceremonies and worship of the same.

The Bible account of idolatrous worship shows that it was customary to worship in groves and on high hills, the most secluded and secret places. Masons, in imitation, they say, of the custom of their ancient brethren, always prefer a high place, so they usually are in the highest room to be obtained. We often hear it said that Freemasonry is founded on the Bible, and therefore must be good. In one sense it is founded on the Bible. It is founded on the Bible just as a counterfeit bill is founded on a genuine bank. To illustrate, there are two parties in Dakota, the Prohibition party and the License party. These parties are both founded on the saloon. The Prohibition party wishes, in short, to banish the saloon from the State. The License party, for a money consideration, wishes to legalize the saloon, regulate it, make it honorable, protect it by the strong arm of the law. How different the principles, yet both founded on the saloon. Again there are two parties founded on the Bible. The church of Christ is one party, and the Masonic fraternity the other. The church of course believes in the prohibition principle, and would prohibit all wrong doings; would not willingly license anything forbidden in the Word of God. The Masonic fraternity is the license party, the indulgence party, who for certain considerations, will give license to commit any or all sins mentioned in the Bible. The central figure in every Freemason lodge, for about the last 175 years, is Hiram Abiff. The legends of Masonry are in direct conflict with the Word of God in narrating the tragic death of Hiram before completing the work on the temple assigned him by King Solomon. It was a wonderful Satanic scheme, when in a London grogshop, at Appletree tavern, in the year 1717, various lodges of workmen are said to have met to open the door of the lodges to speculative Freemasonry. The institution was remodeled from an operative institution to a speculative one. The most important transaction occurring at this time was the uniting on a specific religious system. Before this date the worship in the lodges was likely to be as varied as the worship of the different idolatrous nations of the ancients. In order to unite, it became necessary to introduce a new representation of deity. The fictitious Hiram Abiff was manufactured for the occasion, and he has been the center of attraction in every Masonic lodge since that date. Since that date Hiram Abiff has been to the speculative Freemasonry what Christ is to the church, or Osiris to the Egyptians, or the Mythras to the Persians, or the Bacchus to the Greeks. See Rebold, page 392. A religion was offered at that time. It was said then, and is said now, to be a religion in which all men can agree. A religion, nevertheless, as objectionable as any other false worship.

Rebold on page 412 defines the religion of Masonry to be a summary of human wisdom—of all those perfections, the practice of which renders man almost divine; and it is, in a word, that universal morality which attaches to the inhabitants of every country, to the man of every worship. What is such a religion worth? What is such a morality worth? Simply nothing at all. But, he continues, this morality is more extended, and more universal than that of any national religion, for these, always exclusive, class those who differ with them as unbelievers, as idolaters, sectarians and infidels, while Masonry sees nothing in religionists of every kind but brethren, to whom she opens her temple and admits them. He goes on to say, this being the true Masonic doctrine, it becomes necessary that Masonry should open its temples to all men—to the Jew as to the Mohammedan, to the adorer of Buddha or Fot as to the adorer of God in Christ. Albert G. Mackey, in his Lexicon of Freemasonry, article Religion, says, Freemasonry does not prefer to interfere with the religious opinion of its members. It asks only for a declaration of that simple and universal faith, in which men of all nations and all sects agree—the belief in a god and in his superintending providence. Not in the only and true God, mark you, but in a god. The religion of Masonry, he continues, is pure theism, on which its different members engraft their own peculiar opinions; but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge, or to connect their truth or falsehood with the truth of Masonry. By the definition of the religion and of the morality which constitute that religion, as set forth by these and other standard lights on Masonry, we see there is (from a Christian standpoint) no morality whatever required. The morality of the Mormons, Mohammedan and all idolatrous nations is put on a level with the morality of a Christian.

Men can go into the lodge and talk Hiram Abiff, and exalt him as Christ is exalted by the Christian church, but Christ must not be introduced into the lodge, nor his doctrine connected with the truth of Masonry. This explains why Christ's name is expunged from all Scripture texts quoted, or used in lodge worship. Men are assured before entering the lodge that Masonry will not interfere with their religion. It must be a very poor religion if true. It cannot be true of the Christian religion. This declaration is received with very poor grace to the enlightened Christian, who knows that on entering the lodge he must subscribe to the religion of the lodge, a religion distinctively its own. Masonry cares not how many other kinds of religion you may prefer or hold to, it will not interfere with your opinion; but it emphatically demands your practical endorsement of its own. Rebold boasts that the god of the Freemasons is not the God of the Christian, and that it is destined finally to become the religion of all the nations of the earth. Does the Pope of Rome make any greater boast than this? If it were true, would we be any better off than if we adopted Romanism?

We have shown by the authority of men, whose sayings and edicts are as the edicts of the Pope of Rome: that the Masonic institution is peculiarly a religious institution, and that the religion of the lodge is not the Christian religion, and that it plainly merits the denunciation of the Scriptures as being anti-Christian and anti-Christ. That it is anti-Christian, is very evident from the fact that Christ is excluded from all texts of Scripture quoted or used in the lodge worship.

John the Divine says every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; and whosoever denieth the Son, denieth the Father also. Therefore, Masonry denying Christ denies the Father also; and like all other false worshipers can only be recognized as idolaters. Some may resent the charge of idolatry to the false worshipers of our day, on the plea that the images are lacking. I would remark that images are not now, neither have they ever been, essential to idol worship; although in the heathen lands images were usually set up in temples or lodges of false worship. It is not probable that Solomon bowed before images, or even any considerable number of the Israelites who became idolaters. Idol worship consisted very generally in the worship of the sun, stars, moon, etc. The worship of the sun ranks the highest in ancient idolatry. Rebold says, thus we find the worship of the sun to be the primordial basis of all the worship of antiquity. The legends upon which repose the worships of the ancients, like that of Hiram among the Freemasons, are founded upon the apparent progress of the sun. Freemasons, like the ancients, have a plurality of figures to represent the deity. Mackey says the ancient (idolaters of course they were) used a figure called the triangle equilateral to represent the deity, and that this use is still preserved in the Masonic ritual. But the sun is the more generally acknowledged representation of the deity, unless we except Hiram Abiff. But the rites and ceremonies constitute the worship, and if the thing worshiped is not the only true God it is idol worship.

The people of our day should take warning by the judgment of God upon the idolaters of his chosen people, the children of Israel. Were they more guilty than the church members of our time, who give their time and influence and means to uphold the lodge? I tell "ye nay; and except ye repent ye shall likewise suffer the judgment of God."

Ye who profess to believe in the Scripture, why do ye hanker after the world, or listen to the sophistry of the lodges. If ye love God with all your heart, you would have no desire for the favors offered by the lodges. If ye want to obey the Golden Rule, and do to your neighbors as you would have them do to you, you would have no use for lodge work. Why can ye not heed so plain a Scripture as Paul's warnings against so intimate association with ungodly men? "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." No business association or marriage relation rivets the yoke around your neck so tight as your lodge obligations. Throw off the shackles and come out and be free men—free to do right, free to thy God, and free in private judgment.

RELIGION IN EUROPE.

In Macaulay's "History of England," Vol. I., pp. 53 and 54, we find the following striking paragraphs:

"From the time when the barbarians overran the Western Empire to the time of the revival of letters, the influence of the Church of Rome had been generally favorable to science, to civilization and to good government. But during the last three centuries to stunt the growth of the human mind has been her chief object. Throughout Christendom, whatever advance has been made in knowledge, in freedom, in wealth and in the arts of life, has been made in spite of her and has everywhere been in inverse proportion to her power. The loveliest and most fertile provinces of Europe have, under her rule, been sunk in poverty, political servitude and intellectual torpor, while Protestant countries, once proverbial for sterility and barbarism, have been turned by skill and industry into gardens and can boast of a long list of heroes and statesmen, philosophers and poets. Whoever, knowing what Italy and Scotland naturally are, and what four hundred years ago they actually were, shall now compare the country round Rome with the country round Edinburgh will be able to form some judgment as to the tendency of papal dominnation.

"The descent of Spain, once the first among monarchies, to the lowest depths of degradation; the elevation of Holland, in spite of many natural disadvantages, to a position such as no commonwealth so small has ever reached—teach the same lesson. Whoever passes in Germany from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant principality, in Switzerland from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant canton, in Ireland from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant county, finds that he has passed from a lower to a higher grade of civilization. On the other side of the Atlantic the same law prevails. The Protestants of the United States have left far behind them the Roman Catholics of Mexico, Peru and Brazil. The Roman Catholics of Lower Canada remain inert, while the whole continent round them is in a ferment with Protestant activity and enterprise.

"The French have doubtless shown an energy and intelligence which, even when misdirected, have justly entitled them to be called a great people. But this apparent exception, when examined, will be found to confirm the rule: for in no country that is called Roman Catholic, has the Roman Catholic church during several generations possessed so little authority as in France. The literature of France is justly held in high esteem throughout the world. But, if we deduct from that literature all that belongs to four parties which have been, on different grounds, in rebellion against the papal domination, all that belongs to the Protestants, all that belongs to the asserters of the Gallican liberties, all that belongs to the Jansenists, and all that belongs to the philosophers, how much will be left?"

The great historian painted this picture nearly fifty years ago, and how true it remains to life today everyone can determine for himself.

AFRICAN FETISHISM.

Another valuable chapter of first-hand testimony is an article on "Fetishism in Congo Land," by E. J. Glave, who was one of Stanley's pioneer officers, who has many strange and interesting facts to relate, and who renders the paper more interesting by illustrations of his own drawing. "The imagination of the savage," says Mr. Glave, "surrounds life with an atmosphere of awe and mystery. He walks continually in fear. Evil in countless, undefined shapes is lurking everywhere. Influences obnoxious to him lie concealed in every object. Trees, stones, herbs, all contain imprisoned spirits, which, if released by any heedless action on his part, may rend and destroy him. He must be ever watchful to propitiate or control the malevolent powers that menace him at every turn. Ill luck may be transmitted to him from objects animate or inanimate when he is least aware." Herein lies the key to the fetish practices of the African savage. The reader will be astonished at the elaborateness of the religious rites of these heathen, and at the remarkable training which the fetish-men undergo. In many respects, however, the African fetish-men suggest the medicine-men of our American Indian tribes. Mr. Glave does not believe that the superstitions of the Congo races will be difficult to overcome, for he remarks that "the African knows of no past, and he is bound by no great memories. He lives entirely in the present and his beliefs are made to fit the needs of the moment." Mr. Glave thinks, therefore, that Africa is a hopeful field for Christian missionary endeavor, and that the fetishism of the tribes may be regarded as the vagaries of child-like ignorance, and that they have none of the essential power of resistance that belongs to creeds that have outlived centuries of progress.—Ex.

PREACHERS IN THE LODGE.

Lately when walking along the big road a ways out of Mansfield I picked up a used envelope, on which was printed, in addition to the name of a preacher, the words "Supreme Treasurer, I. P. A."

This man is known as a D. D.; but the lodge shears him of this un-Scriptural, inflated, man-worship appendage, and tacks on its own equally heathen, frothy "pomposity." The word "supreme" is in line with bombastic lodge effrontery and ostentatious lodge nomenclature—"most worthy," "most worshipful," "most excellent," "right worthy," "royal," "grand," "grand worthy," "grand high priest," etc., etc. This man was lately, and for a couple of years, president of the Synod (Witt. Syn. Luth.) Such are the kind of preachers the world is full of to-day. And the "people love to have it so."

But why attach surprise to the fact? and why carry about with a whisper that this preacher is also into several other lodges, as he is known to be? why shudder at the hundreds and thousands of the preachers that are falling into these traps of the devil? Discovery of this fact a few years ago was among the leading things to reveal to my mind the actual and dreadfully apostate condition of very much of the professed Christian church.—The Lighthouse, Mansfield, Ohio.

RESTORATION OF THE TEMPORAL POWER OF THE POPE.

A former ambassador from Austria to France, Count de Hubner, has recently written a book in which he confesses he cannot see (says the New York Catholic Review,) "how Italy can hope to overcome the overwhelming sentiment of the Catholic millions in favor of temporal sovereignty for the pope. The grand majority of those who profess the Catholic faith, says the count, are unanimous to undo the blunder of the 20th of September, 1870, and on the three following points are simply immovable: The pope needs political independence for the free exercise of his spiritual sovereignty; its free exercise is possible only when he is a temporal sovereign; the pope's place is at Rome. This is the Catholic policy as outsiders see it, and the only one certain to end the miserable difficulties of the present moment."

"We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. God demands, and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion."—From Pres. Finney's book, "Character, Claims and Practical Workings of Freemasonry," pp. 260, 263.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Vacation weather.—Phonetic spelling.—A Wellesley joke. The death of James Russell Lowell.—A good suggestion. —The champion lodgeman.

This is good vacation weather,—good for the summer resorts and good for the stay-at-homes, in which list the writer is very content to be included. People with whom so much work per day is a fixed habit do not always find it easy to unbend when the harness is for a while taken off, and for all such the weather for the past fortnight, with its almost tropical heat and languor, has been the ideal kind. One can lie in a hammock and do nothing with an easy conscience, when even nature herself in her gorgeous, ripe maturity seems to second the call to rest by her own example; when the very clouds float lazily along, and the leaves scarcely stir on the trees, and only the chirp of "the August cricket" breaks the silence. One would not willingly miss its shrill pipe, and yet there is a minor chord in its noisy mirth. One never hears it without a chilly sense that glorious summer is indeed departing, and in a few days will join the long train of her sisters gone before.

I notice that some of the professors and presidents in our leading colleges are holding a symposium in favor of phonetic spelling, every article being written with all useless or silent letters left out, and looking "dreadfully like" an article from the pen of the late "Artemus Ward." Perhaps phonetic spelling will yet come in vogue, but at present it is a decided shock to an artistic and scholarly eye. Chaucer's spelling had at least an antique dignity of its own; but think of printing the Bible and Shakespeare in this Josh Billings style! I am inclined to think, however, that our young people spell much better than they enunciate. Many a college graduate have I seen—even from Wellesley—who ought to have been possessed of a clear, cultured utterance, and doubtless would have been if this branch of education could be given the prominent place in our schools and colleges that it deserves.

Speaking of Wellesley, a small joke is sometimes perpetrated within its walls, and the following will do to amuse the readers of the Cynosure, especially those who may be of the clerical profession. A certain good bishop, whose name and fame is in all the churches, preached in the college chapel one Sunday morning, and gave a very good discourse, but one which cut entirely loose from the leading string of the text with which he introduced it. Prof. Y——, on being asked at dinner her opinion of the sermon, promptly replied: "Dear old man! It was truly apostolic. He took a text and then he 'went everywhere preaching the word.'"

The death of James Russell Lowell removes from New England the last (with the exception of Whittier) of that famous galaxy of poets which was so long her chief glory. Even the ringing anti-slavery ballads of the Quaker poet did no better work for freedom than Lowell with his racy use of the Yankee dialect in his Bigelow papers. As Mrs. Stowe has very brightly and pertinently said: "Longfellow and Emerson made valiant music of the solemn sort, but Lowell evangelized wit." Will New England ever see their like again, or is she to be given over to the alien spirit which socially, politically and religiously is seeking to control her? Poetry will not thrive in a degenerate age, and perhaps it forms as good a test-guage as anything of the real condition of a people. Speaking of the Yankee dialect, it will soon become as obsolete as Gaelic or Irish, but one sometimes hears it, though on rare occasions, spoken in its full purity; and as a field for philological study, many of its quaint idioms are not to be despised. For instance, "to make a catowse over anything," that is a great fuss over a trifle, is an expression that may even yet be heard, and was indeed quite common in my childish days from the lips of old or middle-aged people. I have often wondered whence the word was derived. It certainly has a peculiarly nautical flavor, as if it might have been originally a sailor's phrase. Perhaps the hardy tars who sailed under Blake, or some other of the old Elizabethan captains, used it, and so it finally came across the water, an unrecognized part of our English inheritance. It would surprise any one who had not before given the subject any study, to know how many so-called Yankee words were used by our English ancestors long before America was dreamed of. And, apropos to our antiquarian subject, everybody has heard of Mary Chilton, the first to step on Plymouth Rock. An old cemetery, situated on a point of land which runs out into Narragansett Bay, contains the grave of her grand-daughter, Desire Kent. I wonder if she was as sweet as her sweet English name, which falls on the ear as melodiously as a line out of L'Allegro or Comus.

The Citizen makes, in its last issue, a most excellent suggestion, which I hope will be taken up and not suffered to fall to the ground. It is that a commission of ladies, of high character, be appointed as inspectors of labor in all stores employing young women, with authority to inquire into all details and make public reports on the wages paid, and the moral influence surrounding employees. The immoral character of many of the proprietors of these large dry-goods and variety stores is such as to make some action of the kind imperatively necessary. It is a measure which our public spirited women who have the interests of their sex at heart should champion by all the means in their power.

Winsted, Conn., it is said, has among its citizens a man who belongs to twenty-four secret societies. We are not told whether he has a wife and family; and if so how large a portion they get of his time and attention. Probably as much as the church or any benevolent cause gets of his money. But think of remembering all the signs and grips and tokens of twenty-four different societies! What place could be found in his head for anything else after he had learned them all?

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, Aug. 12, 1891.

Undismayed by previous failures to influence the license-granting authorities of Washington, the temperance people have already begun the work of gathering information which they hope may lessen the number of saloons in the national capital during the next license year, which begins the first of next November. The Good Templars have gathered a mass of valuable testimony from the business men of Philadelphia, showing the deleterious effect of liquor saloons upon all adjacent property, which they propose making public as soon as it is in proper shape.

Other temperance organizations and individuals are engaged upon various lines of action, all with the same end in view; but the liquor interest is also active—it always is—and, unfortunately, judging from past experience, it can command sufficient influence to nullify to a great extent the work of the temperance advocates in this direction. For instance, Congress enacted a law at the last session that no intoxicating liquor should be sold or licenses be granted to saloons within one mile of the grounds of the Soldiers' Home, just north of the city limits, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia made a great pretense of carrying out this law, by refusing to grant licenses that had been applied for in the prescribed district, which includes a considerable section in the north end of Washington, and giving notice to those whose licenses had already been granted that they must close, as their licenses had been cancelled. There was great thankfulness among the good people of Washington to know that even a small part of their beautiful city had been officially rescued from the poisonous and death-dealing claws of the rum fiend.

But the rejoicing was premature. Those liquor dealers who had secured their licenses, acting upon the advice of lawyers employed by the Liquor Dealers' Association, which exists for the special purpose of standing by every liquor dealer, no matter how many times he may violate the law, and furnishing him with money to employ the best legal talent to defeat the efforts of the law-abiding people to close up his groggery, refused to close, and announced their intention to test in the courts the right of the Commissioners to revoke their licenses, and there the matter stands; but as no test case has been decided in court, and as there seems no disposition to push one to trial, the belief is general that the Commissioners have, under pressure of the influence, political and otherwise, which the lawyers of the Liquor Dealers' Association brought to bear upon them, agreed to allow the saloons which got their licenses to continue doing business until the end of the present license year. At any rate, I know from personal observation that these saloons are open and doing business right along, and it is said that the members of the Liquor Dealers' Association have publicly boasted of their intention to have Congress amend the law so as not to include those saloons inside the city proper. If they can do that, in the face of the opposition of not only Christian and temperance people, but of every sincere well-wisher of the city in the land, they will present to the country an object-lesson of the power of the liquor interest, that would be as disgraceful as it would be sad. Should this attempt be made, Washington will make a loud call for the assistance of all friends of moral reform, in its efforts to defeat it.

The weather in Washington for the past few days has been unusually warm, but there is no diminution in the interest or attendance at the meetings held in the Temperance tent, which is now located in the northwest section of the city. The Sunday afternoon children's meetings are specially interesting, and there is never a lack of prominent people to talk to the little ones. Mrs. Belva Lockwood, Col. Snowden and Maj. Brock were among the speakers last Sunday.

Washington will send a big crowd to the Sixth Annual reunion of the Lutheran church, that is to be held at Pen-Mar, Maryland, on the 21st instant.

The Treasury Department has issued an order prohibiting the landing of immigrants at New York on Sunday.

Rev. Dr. D. D. MacLaunn, of New York City, who is temporarily filling a Washington pulpit, delivered the last Sunday afternoon address to the Y. M. C. A., his subject being "A Good Man." *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

Boston, Aug. 7, 1891.

Editor Cynosure:—I recently applied to the senior editor of a leading religious journal for the insertion of an article on secret societies in Boston. I was met with the statement, "That's a controverted question, and I am not in the fight." That is, the paper of which he is editor-in-chief, employed and paid by the denomination, will not express an opinion pro or con, with reasons, as to the merits or demerits of the secret lodges. Of course I expressed surprise that a D. D., selected by one of the leading Christian bodies in the nineteenth century, and stationed at the "Hub" to teach and preach, in the press and in the pulpit, "all things whatsoever I (Christ) have commanded you," should assume, deliberately, to ignore so grave a question. I remarked that slavery was once a "controverted question;" and the Boston press and pulpits, while trying to ignore or bury it out of sight, drove many excellent men from the church, but utterly failed to stifle discussion until the question was solved on the battlefield; and that there is no question worthy the attention of an intelligent man that is not really a sharply "controverted question" to-day. The temperance question, the Sabbath question, the free school question, a future probation, the subjects and mode of baptism, the divinity of Christ, and the inspiration of the Scriptures, are "controverted questions." Discussion is rife, and in the wide prevalence of independent thought and "liberalism," it is difficult to locate the arena in which a Gospel minister or Christian journalist may "contend earnestly for the faith delivered unto the saints" without encountering opposition. If such vantage ground could be gained, how would it comport with the disciples' commission from the Master, "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves;" "If they have persecuted me they will also persecute you;" or, "Think not that I am come to send peace on the earth, but a sword." How shall we interpret Peter's words (Acts 5: 29): "We ought to obey God rather than men," if we are to beat a hasty retreat when confronted by "sabered foes?" What does Paul mean when he exhorts the brethren at Ephesus to "put on the whole armor of God," if we are not "to stand against the wiles of the devil?" What minister or editor is exempt from the oft unpleasant and sometimes, even, his arduous injunction of reproof (Eph. 5: 11)? What mean the eight consecutive woes that Christ thundered in the ears of "Ye hypocrites, ye generation of vipers," in the twenty-third of Matthew? What did the "Perfect Example" mean to teach His ministers (Matt. 21:13), if not to drive thieves and robbers from his sanctuary and his altar of worship? Even Moses, in his day, faced the popular clamor and ground their god to powder and caused the execution of 3,000 calf-worshipers at the foot of Sinai. Elijah gave the challenge, and settled the question of Baal's or Jehovah's supremacy at Mt Carmel.

When the question is between the supremacy of Moabitish gods and Jehovah, is any Christian minister who shirks the responsibility or shrinks from the issue because it is a "controverted question," giving proof of true discipleship by not taking up his cross and following our Perfect Example? Let God be Judge, since to his own master each one shall stand or fall in the accounting day.

The 684 lodges of this city are places of worship. Every one has a covenant, an altar and a ritualistic religion, more or less imposing. As President Blanchard has repeatedly shown, and as Masonry, at least, declares, these are neither Christian covenants, Christian altars, or Christian rites. They are, in fact, simply and solely the galvanized imagery of effete systems of paganism; such as Moses met in Moab and discussed with the sword, by direct command of God, as mentioned in the 25th of Numbers.

There are but two kinds of worship, and but two classes of worshipers; and every covenant that Christ has not authorized, every altar that he has not set up, and every religious service which he has not sanctioned, is in the direct line of Cain, through Baal-peor, down to the bewildering drama of a modern Masonic, Odd-fellow or other secret society initiation. They are parts of one stupendous whole, which made God to abhor Israel, and which, but for the importunate intercession of Moses, would have procured the extirpation of the entire nation.

The question of Sinai was worship. The question in Boston to-day is worship. Christ seeks it. The devil seeks it. Both know that heart worship leads the van; affections, actions, everything follow where the heart's adoration leads, upward to heaven and its King, or downward to hell and its apostate prince. Temperance, slavery, free schools, Sabbath observance, civil rights, and every good and worthy attainment are but the overflow of true worship; while false worship is the prolific source of every evil that has cursed the earth. It occasioned the first act of disobedience and the first lie in Eden, and procured the first murder outside of Paradise; and there has not been any act of disobedience to righteous authority, a falsehood uttered, a brothel maintained, or a murder committed, in Boston or outside of it. that has not received its inspiration from the same source.

Unitarians, second probationists, and the motley crew that make up the board of apostate religionists in "these perilous times," may deny it, but the evangelical teacher who should deny that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," or aver that "a fountain can send forth sweet water and bitter at the same time," would certainly be an object of suspicion or pity by those who "have the mind of Christ." Since, then, we are confronted with the same issue between true and false worship which Moses and Elijah met, and which was the point of controversy between Christ and the devil in the wilderness of temptation, is it manly, is it loyalty to Christ and his bride, to stand aloof from an honorable discussion? Is not such a withholding of testimony giving aid and comfort to the enemies of Him who says: "He that is not with me is against me?" Let us take warning from the church at Laodicea and escape the terrible fate of being spewed out, as neither cold or hot.

East Providence, R. I., Aug. 10, 1891.—Mrs. Stoddard came with me to this city on Saturday. We were assigned to quarters with one who had been bound with Satan's cabletow, but whom the Son hath made "free indeed." Our colored brethren were holding camp meeting near by, and as I had no engagement for the morning I accepted an invitation to preach for them. In the afternoon and evening I met and addressed attentive audiences in Music Hall. We met a number of new faces and made acquaintances that will long be gratefully remembered. From here we go to the Millennial Advent camp meeting for a few hours, expecting to reach Boston in time for the 38th Monday evening meeting in our regular service. J. P. Stoddard.

OUR WESTERN AGENT IN IOWA.

Richland, Iowa, August 12, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—From West Branch I came to Morning Sun and called on Rev. C. D. Trumbull, the former Secretary of the Illinois Iowa C. A., who was at the May convention of the N. C. A. in Chicago and delivered an address that was remarkably clear in its statements and forcible in its conclusions.

I also visited Rev. T. P. Robb, the pastor of the Sharon Covenanter church, who is the present Secretary of the Iowa C. A. These brethren are among the tried and true Christian reformers of this age. I also visited Rev. Mr. Littlejohn, the young pastor of the Linn Grove Covenanter church, who, though he has been but a short time in this country, is in hearty sympathy with the N. C. A. work. I canvassed for the Cynosure and for the N. C. A., and found, as usual, staunch friends of the cause and cheerful supporters.

I visited Burlington, and attended a quarterly meeting of the F. M. church, held by their District Chairman, Rev. C. E. Harroun, who is an able minister and an earnest worker in the anti-secrecy reform. He insisted on my taking his place and preaching the Sabbath morning sermon.

From Burlington I returned to Linton, and continued my canvass for the Cynosure and the N. C. A., and then went to Winfield and to the Cooper neighborhood, where Mr. Van Syack and the Cooper brothers cheerfully aided the work.

Leaving there, I came to Wayne and called upon Rev. Mr. Wilson, the pastor, and others. While here I preached at Wayne, and also at Crawfordsville. It was in the Crawfordsville lodge that Rev. Mr. Kendig, a minister of the M. E. church, was made a Mason. After he had taken thirty-three degrees of Masonry, he gave it as his deliberate opinion that Freemasonry, more than anything else in the world, stands in the way of the coming of the kingdom of our Lord.

From Wayne I went to Wyman, where I was welcomed by the staunch Covenanters, who cheerfully aided the cause. Rev. Mr. Black, the pastor, and Messrs. Dodd and Sampson, and others, manifested a deep interest in the work.

I made a short visit to Washington. I saw a few of the old line friends of reform, among whom were brethren Amspoker, Knox, and Doctors Crawford and McClelland, who each gave substantial aid.

I then came to Richland, in the edge of Keokuk county. I called at the store of Jacob Jones, a member of the Friends' church, and arranged to preach in their meeting-house on Sabbath night. I then went into the country and stopped with Aaron Stalker, a member of the Hopewell Friends' church. On First-Day morning I preached in the Friends' meeting-house at Hopewell, and at night, filled my appointment at Richland. As some who are members of the Richland churches are also members of the Masonic and Odd-fellow lodges, I endeavored to convince these erring brethren that it is impossible to be an intelligent adherent of the lodge, and also loyal to Jesus Christ. It was a live question that I discussed, as a number of lodge men, who were also members of the churches of Richland, were in the audience.

It is a matter of astonishment that men can take such oaths as are administered in Masonic lodges, and unite with unbelievers in their Christless worships, and fancy that they are accepted of God as his servants, and owned as his children. God has commanded us not to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers, because there can be no agreement, and hence no concord, no communion, no fellowship, between the followers of Christ and those who are being led by Satan. What a strange position does that man occupy who is yoked with unbelievers, as he must be in the lodge, and yet knows that God has forbidden him to be thus yoked. He knows that he is commanded to come out from among them and be so entirely separate as not to touch the unclean thing. He knows that God has graciously promised to receive him and be a Father to him, if he will cut loose from the world and give himself fully to Christ.

And yet, while he refuses to obey the divine injunction to separate himself from the world to Christ, he affects to believe that notwithstanding his rebellion, "which is as the sin of witchcraft," he is accepted of God.

Surely we ought to understand that only those who honestly take the yoke of Christ upon them, can claim a saving interest in his atoning blood. To affect to believe that he receives us, while we refuse to do what we know he commands, is to be guilty of self-deception, or willful hypocrisy.

Meekly, humbly, lovingly, and yet faithfully, would I testify against the abominable idolatries that are practiced in the lodges, and affectionately intreat and faithfully warn those who would be Christians to come out from the lodges and have no fellowship with these unfruitful works of darkness.

Yours for Christ and reconciliation to God in him, C. F. Hawley.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM DR. AND MRS. ZARAPHONITHES.

101 Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., August 4, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—We are still here in America, for we cannot go to Greece any sooner than God wants to have us go. God has continued to bless us ever since we left Wheaton with Greece in view.

One great blessing is, that a dear friend has given us the use of as much as we need of her large, nice house on this beautiful Lafayette Avenue, and close to a nice park. She, herself, is spending the summer in the country. Dr. Zaraphonithes made a trip, more than a month ago, to Great Barrington, Mass., where his dear friends, Mrs. H. J. Van Lennep and her son Edward, who has a very successful boys' school, live, and they helped him, and he spoke in a number of places with very good success. The first Sabbath that he spoke in Great Barrington there was a Roman Catholic woman present,—there might have been others,—and Dr. Z. spoke of the Greek church and that they worship the bones and pictures of saints, so that they might almost be called idolaters. After church, this particular Catholic woman came to Mrs. Van Lennep and wanted to know what she could do for our school. Mrs. V. explained to her, and the next day she sent in a little money for our school and requested of Mrs. V. that Dr. Z. call on her. He did so, and she again asked what she could do, and Dr. Z. told her that anything which she had to give would be acceptable, and she gave him a little more money and said that she would make up a box of things for us to take with us. So you see that even the Catholics are becoming interested in our school. A merchant, there, will make up a box of shoes for Greece.

From Pittsburgh we have received the promised box of carpenter-tools. And from Philadelphia, on his last visit there, he had given him one of the best encyclopedias on surgery, in six large volumes, and two dozen hymn-books of two different kinds. Dr. William Van Lennep, who practices in Philadelphia with marked success as a surgeon, gave Dr. Z. quite an assortment of very useful surgical instruments.

We cannot do anything in the city churches in the summer, and so we are obliged to wait till fall, when some have already promised us a hearing, and some help. Our friends also advise us to stay here all winter, for if we do not get now all the money and things necessary for our school, we will have to come back to America soon again, and that will make an extra expense; so that unless the Lord pours out some great blessing for us, we shall be here for some months yet.

Dr. Z. came home about the 4th of July, and saw us comfortably established here, and he is again in Great Barrington, for Mr. Edward Van Lennep will continue to assist him in opening up places where he can lecture or present our work.

He has also taken our elder daughter there for a change of air, for her health has been quite poor ever since she had the grippe fever, just before we left Wheaton.

A little missionary society in Princeton, Ill., has just sent us $6.40; so our Western friends are not forgetting us, and we ask again that you remember this Greek work in your prayers, for God hears the prayers of such as love and serve him. Your friend and sister in Christ,

Mrs. Frances W. Zaraphonithes.

PITH AND POINT.

Should Church Associations Discuss Lodge Secrecy?

Nearly a year ago, among other questions addressed, through the Cynosure, to the pastors of Congregational ministers in various parts of the United States, was the following:

"Do you believe that this subject (secret societies) should be discussed at our associational meetings?"

Answers were received from numerous pastors, as follows. We are not at liberty to give their names or addresses. It would be a breach of confidence to do so; but the expressions well represent the present trend of the Congregational church on this subject:

"As Christians, it might do good; as iconoclasts, it would do incalculable harm."

"Yes, if not already well discussed."

"There are other subjects more vital."

"I think it should be."

"Yes, when there is a good show for securing the de sired result, but not otherwise."

"I see no reason for the discussion of this question in associations, unless it comes naturally to the front. If it does thus come, I would not put myself in the position of a slanderer or disparager of the churches and their ministers by saying, Do not let it come."

"If there are members in the association already connected with such societies, it may not be best to press such discussion, unless desired by the brethren so involved."

"I see no reason why not, but a mean, dastardly spirit that succumbs to evil. Every Mason will indeed cry out, You know nothing about it; but they knowingly lie."

'Am afraid it would take up too much time, to the prejudice of other matters."

"I should enjoy any such associational discussion."

"I believe that the subject should be discussed at associational meetings, and at all suitable places; always being careful to avoid giving occasion of stumbling. Many are far astray on this subject, I believe, who are good men. Such should be persuaded with all gentleness and forbearance, and in Christian love."

"I do."

"Decidedly no. Let our answer be to all such suggestions, 'I am doing a great work, and cannot come down.' "

"Yes; especially in the South, where the tendency to to secret societies is so strong."

"Yes." (This from a Good Templar Grand Chaplain.) "Let us have all the light possible; let us gain all we can from the experience of any and all."

"I think it would be a good plan to bring the matter up sometimes at our associational meetings."

"Yes."

'I do, unflinchingly."

"The subject should be discussed at every available opportunity."

"Yes."

"That might depend upon things that I cannot answer."

"Yes, I would be in favor of such discussion. From my acquaintance with Congregational ministers, I do not think many of them are members of Masonic lodges; in fact, I do not know of one among, perhaps, 100 ministers that I have known. I am opposed to Masonry; it has a bad history."

"Yes, I should say so theoretically, and perhaps practically, as well. The colored minister, when asked why he did not preach against stealing chickens, replied that 'that would bring a coldness on the meeting.' If we handle these things as we ought, we shall find that our associational meetings will be afflicted the same way. But, coldness, or no coldness, the truth should be made known, and the deeds of darkness unmasked."

"Much good would undoubtedly result from a discussion of this question in our district and State associations."

"Yes. I have formerly been a member of several of these organizations" (secret societies); "but I have left them forever."

"I would see no objection, but much value in discussion of the subject in our associational meetings, if the brethren who oppose would not take such radical grounds. You will probably find the majority of——Congregational ministers personally opposed to secret orders, but not willing to have the matter discussed on the extreme radical grounds, because of the bitterness and strife sure to be created."

"I believe it is a most proper place to discuss this subject."

"Yes, sir, it should be discussed."

"I most heartily recommend that the subject be discussed at our associational meetings."

"I do."

"Yes."

"The question ought to be discussed in our associational meetings. The attitude of our churches ought to be thoroughly understood. I would not have them refuse permission to a Mason or Odd-fellow who is evidently a Christian, but I would have the whole system of secrecy unpopular in the church."

"Not everywhere. I believe in caution, tact, skill, and (above all) charity. I find many ministers of our denomination belonging to the lodge, and speaking in its favor. This is the strangest thing of all to me."

LITERATURE.

The August Review of Reviews is a number to awaken a quick interest in every American breast. The opening pages are given to a discussion of Chicago and the World's Fair, from the pen of Dr. Albert Shaw, the American editor of the Review. Dr. Shaw is well known as a student and observer of city making and municipal government the world over, and therefore his very high tribute to Chicago will doubtless be appreciated in our great city. The article is accompanied with portraits of a number of the leading people connected with the management of the Columbian World's Fair. We regret that the artist has so misrepresented the genial face of Mr. T. B. Bryan, the First Vice-president. The character sketch deals with "His Royal Highness" the Prince of Wales, in a very direct manner. Mr. W. T. Stead, the writer of the sketch, has unquestionably earned his reputation for being the most out-spoken and fearless journalist in England, while editor of the Pall Mall Gazette. Brief advance extracts from this latest article were given to the news associations and have appeared in the newspapers of both England and America. It is unnecessary to say that it is full of lively interest. The article is prefaced with a remarkable collection of cartoons from the comic papers of the whole world, dealing with the Prince of Wales and the recent scandals in which he has been involved. Among other timely articles is one entitled "Cromwell and the Independents." It appears apropos of the great international gathering of the Independents, or Congregationalists, in London, in the current month of July. It is both historical and descriptive, eulogizing the character of Cromwell, describing most graphically the battle of Naseby, which led to the ascendency of the great Protector, analyzing the political and religious ideals and methods of the English Independents, describing their migration to New England and their founding of colonies and States in the New World, and characterizing the service to liberty and progress of the sect called Independents or Congregationalists. The article is illustrated with portraits of Cromwell, Milton, Bunyan, and Defoe, representing the early Independents, and with striking groups of the principal English Congregational clergymen of to-day, including the officers of this summer's international council. Published at 13 Astor Place, New York City.

The Home-Maker, "Jenny June's" monthly magazine (New York, 44 East 14th street), is very attractive, both in letter-press and illustrations. The frontispiece is a full-page copy of F. Morgan's expressive painting of "The Old, Old Story" of love; Chas. F. Bridgman contributes some pleasant "Sketches of Madison Square," with corresponding illustrations of persons encountered in that metropolitan resort; Ella Wheeler Wilcox writes about "The Old Sanders Wimin," in a graceful story; "The Sixth President of the Sorosis" (Mrs. Jennie M. Lozier) affords a readable sketch, with a fine portrait and local views of a famous woman's society in Gotham; Nelson C. Parshall gives an illustrated sketch of much interest concerning "Nantucketers and their Island;" Mary Kyle Dallas portrays the adventures of "An American Knight-Errant"—a pleasant love story; "The Three Fates," by F. Marion Crawford, is continued; with poems by various contributors; "Art and Home," "Our Little World" (by the editor); "Talk at the Hub," "In Town," by the editor, and a well-filled Housewife's department. As a "Midsummer" number it is a success.

The African (C. E. Welch, Vineland, N. J.,) is replete with authentic information useful to missionaries and colonists desiring to go to Africa, as well as for those who are already there. It embraces particulars relating to Africa in general, West Africa, Congo, South Africa, etc., with letters from residents in Africa, showing the condition of missionary works, etc., in "the dark continent."

The Missionary Review of the World for September, edited by Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, (Funk & Wagnalls, publishers, 18–20 Astor Place, New York City,) contains seventeen distinct articles from various contributors of ability and eminence, embracing many of the most important topics connected with foreign missions. Besides these, Dr. Pierson's editorial notes, and general missionary intelligence are of great interest to all Christians who are imbued with the spirit of mission work. It is difficult to conceive of a better periodical in this department of the world's progress. $2.00 per annum.

DR. J. N. NORRIS.

Dr. John Nelson Norris, editor of the Birmingham, (Iowa) Free Press, died on Tuesday morning, July 28, 1891. "During his last sickness," says the Free Press, "which had confined him to his bed for several months, he made arrangements for his funeral, even to the selection of the text, Scripture readings and psalms which he desired used on that occasion. The funeral occurred at the house on Wednesday, July 29, the exercises being conducted by Rev. Dr. McGill, of Fairfield. Business houses were all closed, and a large concourse of friends and neighbors listened to the sad rites and followed the remains to their last earthly resting place." On the 9th of last April we printed in the Cynosure the following sketch of this good man, taken also from the Free Press of a previous date:

The subject of this sketch was born near Bath, in Steuben county, N. Y., June 7, 1816. His parents moved to Millersburg, Ohio, in 1818; and in 1837, in company with his brother-in-law, Dr. William Miller, he came to Iowa. In February, 1838, they located adjoining the present site of the town of Birmingham, where he has resided ever since. At the age of 21 he began the study of medicine under Dr. Miller and has now been a practicing physician for over fifty years. Dr. Norris is a man of noble appearance and pleasant address, having a kind heart and a sociable manner to all. As a citizen, Birmingham has had few if any who took so deep and intelligent an interest in the general welfare. As a physician he has been eminently successful.

The greatest effort, sacrifice and success of Dr. Norris' life has been in behalf of moral reforms. Christ has been his leader and example. He looks upon Christianity as one grand system of reformation. If Christ was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil, then those works should be opposed by the Christian and they must eventually be destroyed. Thus he reasoned, and on this principle he has always acted. Though liquor was so plenty and its use so common in his early days, yet he always shunned and abhorred the intoxicating cup. He has always held that the State should protect its citizens against the destroying curse of intemperance, and his vote has coincided with his works and prayers every time.

When the slavery question began to agitate the minds of the American people he was one of the first to declare himself an Abolitionist. Even when the cause was unpopular and when his neighbors would turn from him with scorn and disgust because he was a friend of the "niggers," still he stood by his principles because he knew they were RIGHT. Some of the very men who then held their noses and turned their faces away from the Dr. as they met him on the street, because he was opposed to slavery, are now drawing big pensions for small disabilities and shouting: "Give us the offices."

Probably to no other reform, however, has he given so much aid and support as to opposition to secret societies. When he was ten years old the Masons murdered Morgan not far from his birthplace in New York. At the age of twelve he read Morgan's book and he has been an Anti-mason ever since. Very few have stood as faithfully by the cause as he. Lodgemen have tried to injure him and his practice in every way possible, but it has not moved him in the least. How often have weaker souls said: "Yes, I am an Anti-mason, but I am not an Anti like old Dr. Norris." They are "Antis" up to the point where it costs something in money or reputation; then they are on the fence. His influence for good in this cause has been great both at home and abroad.

LODGE NOTES.

Nothing can be had for nothing. Whatever a mau achieves he must pay for; and no favor of fortune can absolve him from his duty.—Secret Society Journal. Which means, "Pay up, or get out."

A Temple in Greenfield, Indiana, improvised a degree for the Knights, called "The Queen of Sahara," and used it for a time; but its use was prohibited by the Grand Chief, the Temple disciplined, and t was abandoned.—Pythian Knight.

The American branch of Odd-fellowship numbers fuliy 680,000; the Manchester Unity branch, 675,000—making a total of 1,355,000. Add to these figures the other smaller branches and it will give about one and three-quarter millions.

Some scoffers have asserted that King Solomon was a myth of the Sun-God and not a mortal man at all, and that his name consists of the names of the sun in three languages—Sol-om-on.—Exchange. Poor Solomon has to undergo a great deal of lodge nonsense.

Chosen Friends Lodge, of Philadelphia, has formed an auxiliary association to gain new members, under the rule that each member must "get in" a candidate for membership or forfeit $1.00 The fund so accruing will be expended on a grand banquet each year.

The man who carries a hod and who has a clean character, is entitled to as much consideration in the order as the one who lives off the interest of his money. This fact is not always considered by the brothers as it should be.—The Knight. Especially if he pays his dues regularly and never calls for "benefits."

The color line among the Knights of Pythias: It has been said, with great pride, that the late Kalakaua, late toy king of the Hawaiian Islands, was a Red Man, a Mason, and so on; but no one ever said that he was a Knight of Pythias, as none but white men are admitted into this order. There are those who claim such membership, but the claim is false and misleading.—Pythian Knight.

The Inquisition still lives in Rome, The Converted Catholic quotes a letter from Rome to the Catholic News which states that "the Holy Father has been pleased to nominate Rev. Father Sebastian Sanguinetti, of the Society of Jesus, Consultor of the Holy Roman and Universal Inquisition, vice the late Father Molza, S. J." Possibly it is living a concealed existence in some of our American cities. —Christian Inquirer.

There are seven chapters of the Eastern Star in New Hampshire, and a Grand Chapter has been formed, with Sister Mary D. M. Quimby, of Whitefield, Grand Matron; Dr. Frank Spooner, of Lancaster, Grand Patron; Sister Mary J. Horn, of Derry, Associate Grand Matron; Bro. J. H. Connor, of Gaffstown, Associate Grand Patron; Sister Eunice A. Peaseley, of Ashland, Grand Treasurer, and Bro. J. Sullivan Chase, of Colebrook, Grand Secretary.

Lodge slush: The Knight who lives up to the vows he has taken, and keeps inviolate the tenets of the order, will find as his life approaches evening, that the sunset of existence will bring to him no terrors, but only the beginning of a brighter day in that Supreme Lodge where we will all raise our visors before the Divine Chancellor and never lower them again.—Savannah Independent.

The lodge is like a hornets' nest. The initiate thinks that he is going to get it, and just then he discovers that it has got him—foul.

Rev. G. R. Wallace of Saginaw, Mich. has arraigned Mayor Weadock for his action in declining to accord the honor of laying the corner-stone of the new city hall to the Masons. The Mayor replies that the Masons are entitled to no more recognition than are other secret orders and that the distinction thus conferred is an invidious one and unfair to other orders. He suggested that the president of the board of public works lay the corner-stone, and the suggestion was adopted. The attack was made at the Sunday morning service of the Congregational church and has created a sensation.

Another case of skin-grafting has failed. It is that of Dr. Frank C. Runyan, a prominent dentist, of Springfield, Ohio, who died after a lingering illness. His death was directly caused from the amputation of his leg, the shock being too great for his enfeebled constitution to stand. The operation of skin-grafting was performed a number of times on the doctor's limb, which was wasting away, owing to the death of the bone. The members of the Masonic lodge, to which the doctor belonged, each contributed a portion of the skin of their arms for the purpose.

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

First, We do not offer any man a premium to renew his own subscription. If a man has taken this paper a year and does not care enough about it to take it longer without being hired to, we do not offer him a premium.

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

☞Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, postpaid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

NEW PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

THE BEST OFFER YET MADE.

During June and July we offer to each NEW subscriber for the Christian Cynosure the following liberal premiums:

One copy of Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary, neatly printed and bound in half-seal covers, and one copy of "The Life and Words of Christ," by Cunningham Geikie, D. D., a larger volume, equally well printed and similarly bound.

Smith's Dictionary has long been a standard publication for Bible students, and is especially rich in trustworthy biography and geography, indicating a vast amount of study and research. It contains 468 pages of closely printed, double-column pages, and, with its thousand references, will be found a useful help in studying the Scriptures.

Geikie's Life of Christ is also very rich in Biblical information, combining the history of our Lord and his disciples with reliable descriptions of the manners and customs of the times in which they lived, the worship of the Israelites, and other matters of interest for careful students. Its reputation as a literary work is excellent. It contains 826 pages.

For persons who have never taken our paper and desire to subscribe for one year, we consider this the most generous offer that has ever been made by this office. On receipt of two dollars, both books will be forwarded, with the paper, to the address of any actually new subscriber. For three dollars and the names of two new subscribers, the books will be sent free, during June and July.

We offer as a PREMIUM for subscribers to the Christian Cynosure the choice of nearly

100 BABY CARRIAGES,

from the Lowest to the Highest grades.

These carriages are manufactured by L. G. Spencer, who has carried on this business for years in the "Carpenter Building," where the Cynosure is published.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 20, 1891.

TWO GRAND LODGE MEETINGS.

THE GRAND LODGE OF NEW YORK.

This body has just held its one hundred and tenth annual communication. During the past ten years 10,103 Masons, under its jurisdiction, have died, and 36,883 have been initiated. How many have ceased to pay dues we do not learn. It is reported that more were initiated in 1890 than in any one year since 1873. If this be true, our brethren in New York must bestir themselves. Of late years, they have not done so much work as formerly. Secret societies flourish in silence and darkness; information among the people as to their character and tendency is fatal to them. The debt of the New York lodge, ten years ago, was over $600,000; at this time, over $250,000 are in the treasury, i.e., beside paying running expenses, the lodge has drawn from the men who compose it over $850,000 in ten years. Here is a partial explanation of the fact that our Home Missionary societies have to make appropriations for weak churches in that and other States. It also explains the fact that church attendants are so largely female, and that in all our towns men who live prayerless, godless lives expect in some way or other to enter heaven, or, as they call it, "the grand lodge above." A tithe of the annual expense of our Home Mission societies spent in warning men against home heathenisms would be good financial policy, as well as a means of salvation to multitudes of men.

THE GRAND LODGE OF RHODE ISLAND.

This body recently celebrated its centennial in Providence. The exercises consisted of a reception, a street display, and a platform meeting. There is no mention of liquors and dancing in the report which we find in the Masonic Chronicle, and we suppose that the religious and temperance sentiment of the city prevented these usual accessories of lodge gatherings.

The addresses, we regret to say, were given by ministers; at least the speakers are entitled, "Rev." Possibly this is an error. Some time since a report of the meeting of the Grand Lodge of Connecticut spoke of the chaplain as Reverend, while, in fact, he was not a member of the ministry. If it be true that two men who profess to be called of God to preach Christ as the only way to life and hope took part in this pagan celebration, it is only one more proof that we are in the great apostasy.

One of these speakers, Rev. E. O. Bolles, D.D., is reported to have said: "If on this centennial day I can only inspire you with one new truth of the principles of this Masonic order, one new beauty, or add one new dignity to the craft, then my mission among you to-day shall have been fulfilled. If the sight of these emblems that surround you, bright with love, truth and peace, as when I first learned their names, do not impress you with their significance, permit me to say that these are the emblems that have served me well, have kept me from evil, have maintained that peace and brotherly affection in my heart that only death can dissolve, and which I trust shall entitle you and all of us to find our places in the lodge of the hereafter."

We confess that we cannot understand how any man who professes to be a Christian, to say nothing of being a preacher, can use such language. The emblems of Masonry have kept him from evil. Not the companionship of Jesus, nor the power of the Holy Ghost, nor the pure Word of God, but the emblems of Masonry. What an awful lie to speak of square, compass and level, plumb, etc., as producing results in men that will entitle them to places in the Grand Lodge of the hereafter.

The first speaker of the evening seems to have been a man of some scholarship and honesty. He acknowledges that Masonry has no history prior to 1717. He admits that Masonry came to this country over one hundred years later than the Pilgrims. He does not attempt to cast doubt on the murder of Wm. Morgan, as the swearing ignoramuses of the order do. He mentions the fact that the charter of the Grand Lodge was given up in 1834, and not restored until 1861. His remarks impress one as the attempt of a man of intelligence to say something in favor of an institution which he knows to be unworthy of respect.

On the other hand, the address from which we quote is the typical Masonic oration—a little cheap joke about the garden of Eden and a vast deal of "lofty" "dignity," "symbol," "inspiration," "charity," etc., etc., with no hampering dates, figures, or authorities. After a production of this sort, he is said to have closed as follows: "Heaven itself set for Masonry the high ideal of Him who walked by Galilee and died on the Mount of Calvary. Now, I believe that when a Mason dies, he is entitled to the respect and honor of humanity; and that mankind should feel that although it has lost a firm friend in this life, it has but gained an angel of humanity in heaven."

What will our Christian churches do about an order which leads a minister thus to dishonor the Gospel he preaches, and to magnify a lodge which casts out the Saviour and welcomes even pirates and savages?

FINE LOOKING—IDIOTIC OR INSANE.

Some time since we published a renunciation of Freemasonry, by Mr. Joseph W. Mattey, of Niagara Falls, Ont. As it is not long, and is a good letter, we reprint it, that all may have it in mind:

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., May 9, 1891.

To the Secretary and Members of St. Mark's Lodge, No. 105, A. F. & A. M.:

Through the grace of God, and faith in the Lord Jesus, I have been led to the way of salvation, which is through Jesus Christ alone. I am therefore compelled to tender my renunciation of Freemasonry forever.

God has brought me out into the world as a witness of the light. Christ says: "No man when he hath lighted a candle putteth it in a secret place, neither under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that they which come in may see the light." Again, "Also I say unto you, whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man also confess before the angels of God; but he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God."

Oh, friends, this salvation of God is a blessed privilege; it is free to all; but while you are in bondage of soul God cannot deal with you. No man can serve two masters. Now, friends, I beseech you, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to deny yourself and take up your cross and follow Jesus Christ, because no man can go unto the Father but through Christ the Son.

With that love which is of God alone, I am enabled to love my neighbor as myself; and I do pray for you all daily at the throne of grace, believing that God will use me as an instrument in pointing you to the way of salvation. I am yours, very respectfully, (Signed) JOSEPH W. MATTEY.

In the Masonic Chronicle we find this renunciation reprinted, with comments and further information. The Chronicle says:

Judging by the language used above, and the idiotic use of the Scripture quoted, that the poor fellow needed rather the care of friends, or the State authorities whose duties include the care of the idiotic and insane, and not having the address of either officer of St Mark's Lodge, we wrote the Secretary of Beaver Lodge, asking the circumstances and conditions surrounding this "renunciation of the lodge." The following reply tells the whole story, and we hope the "Dog's Tail" will print both letters:

BEAVER LODGE, No. 6, POINT ST. CHARLES, MONTREAL, June 26, 1891.

Chas. A. Poland, Esq., Columbus, Ohio:

DEAR SIR:—I am instructed by above lodge to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 13th inst., and in reply would say that this party was a member of Beaver Lodge, No. 6, at one time, but withdrew about a year and a half ago without giving any special reason. About five or six weeks ago the lodge received a communication from him—an exact copy of enclosed slip—but he not being a member, no notice was taken of it except to congratulate ourselves that he was not a member. I might here say that previous to his withdrawal, for quite a length of time, he was not a resident here, so that we are not in a position to say much about him. Some of our members, however, who know him and some of his family history, think that he should hardly be held responsible for what he says. Fraternally yours,

D. J. DICKSON,
Acting Secretary.

And of such is the kingdom of imbeciles, to whom the Cynosure is indebted for its readers, correspondents and recruits. It is well that they have a suitable phonograph into which they can pour their idiocratic sputterings.

It is strange that no seceding Mason ever becomes irresponsible until he leaves the lodge. For example, in the same copy of the Chronicle, we are told of a large number of Master Masons who have united for the purpose of getting more fun than they can secure by stripping candidates and playing Hiram Abiff with them. They have made an order of "Owls" and have "Sapient Screechers," "Scratchers," etc. The men who have time and money to spend in such fooling are a "fine looking body of men." They are "our leading citizens." But the man who writes a sober, temperate, Christian letter, like that of Mr. Mattey, is thought by Masons "idiotic" or "insane." He belongs to "the kingdom of imbeciles." If one of these "Owls" should be converted, spend his time reading the Bible, attending to his business, caring for his family, and performing his religious duties; if he should stop grinning at hearing adult men calling one another "Sapient Screecher," or "Scratcher," and give attention to the serious affairs of this life, and the life to come, then some Mason would probably call him "idiotic or insane," and get some Oddfellow to say that he was "probably irresponsible" for his words. This, with some calling of names, would be considered by the average lodge editor as an elegant and satisfactory disposition of the whole case.

The only explanation of such a state of things is the fact that devil-worship not only destroys the moral sense, but paralyzes the intellectual faculties as well. The grandiloquent titles of lodge, chapter, commandery, the wretchedly wicked penalties constantly invoked in the various degrees, the mutilations of holy Scripture, the so-called prayers which do not confess sin, invoke the Holy Spirit, or recognize the Saviour, the burial of men who die of delirium tremens "in hope of meeting them in the grand lodge above," the blackguarding of men who for conscience' sake leave the lodge, and the childish malignance of "dog-tailing" persons who differ in opinion,—these all exhibit the Satanic leer and mental vacuity of the false religion. The worship of God in Christ not only elevates the character, but improves the mind; the worship of satan not only takes away the disposition to righteousness, but renders correct intellectual action impossible as well.

THE PENALTIES EXPUNGED.

The Mexican Freemasons have expunged the penalties from their obligations.

Our readers are familiar with the penalties of the lodge. Throat-cutting, tongue-tearing, heart and vitals tearing, disemboweling, beheading, etc., etc. It is one of the mysteries that ministers of Christ's holy Word can say, as some of them do, that they find nothing in the lodge contrary to the Christian religion, when we know that at the very beginning they are obliged to swear, under death penalties like these. The common defense, that these imprecations mean nothing, will not stand, for two reasons: In the first place, if they mean nothing, they should not be repeated; and in the second, we have abundant evidence that they have been repeatedly inflicted, and reason to suspect that they have been administered in multitudes of cases unknown.

The statement that they cannot be omitted, because that would be an innovation on the body of Masonry, is of course idle. Masonry is less than two hundred years old, and has been repeatedly changed already. It had originally only one degree. To increase the fees and sprees, this one degree was divided into three. And after the three a host of rites and degrees, each one contrived to support a few lodge-builders, until there were over twelve hundred degrees called Masonic. Multitudes of these rites have perished, but enough remain to cause such strife as is going forward in Ohio at this time, between the "Cerneau" Masons and others.

In view of facts like these, why should not Masonic lodges drop their secrecy, their penalties, their absurb initiations, the obligations to partial charity, honesty, purity, etc., and retain the principle of a common fund from which relief could be drawn in case of need? It is perfectly evident that every legitimate purpose of the order could be preserved if this were done. We are glad to see a movement in this direction. We confess it would have been pleasant to know that these murderous penalties had first been abolished by the Masons of Great Britain or the United States. But as the less perfectly civilized men of Mexico have led the way, we trust that others may follow.

The same remarks are applicable to all other secret societies. The Clan-na-Gael, the Highbinders, and the Mafia, have the same right to secrecy, and the same justification for it, that the Masons, Odd-fellows, or Knights of Pythias have. The fact is, there is no need for secrecy on the part of any society which proposes legitimate ends, to be attained by legitimate means. Why may not the great mass of lodge men who do not live by selling old, revealed rituals to men as secrets, why may not these men simply throw off Grand Lodge yokes, let the officers who attend these meetings pay their own expenses, and, retaining the principle of mutual aid, confirm to the spirit of our age, open dealing and fair play between man and man?

SECRET SOCIETY RIOTS IN CHINA.

Rev. J. T. Gracey, D. D., President of the International Missionary Union, contributes an interesting paper on this subject to the September issue of the (New York) Missionary Review of the World. The destructive riots at Wahu and Nanking, in China, two or three months ago, have been widely reported through the secular press. "The animosity of the rioters" (native Chinamen), writes one correspondent, "seemed to be directed chiefly against the Roman Catholics. Demand was made for the release of the children of the R. C. orphanage. At Wahu all foreigners fled for their lives, and their buildings were looted and property stolen or destroyed. At Nanking the Methodist property was looted and destroyed as well as that belonging to the Roman Catholics. No lives were lost....I judge the excitement to be largely political, aimed against the authorities and rulers, and intended to make them unpopular, and to secure their removal. It seems to have been instigated by some secret society men and literati, which abound in great numbers in the Yangtsi Valley. They would like to stir up a rebellion if possible. Several of the rioters have been beheaded, and the local authorities have already begun to rebuild the premises, and will make restitution for damage done."

Mr. Gracey rightly thinks that the anti-foreign party, including the secret societies, may be compelled to find a better method of managing their political affairs than by these lawless disturbances. The murder of Mr. Argent, a lay missionary, is also attributed to their lodge machinations. The Emperor is supposed to have little or no control over these societies—quite as little as King Humbert has over the Mafia of Italy. Altogether it would seem that lodge secrecy is not always the great, grand and good thing that its defenders would have us believe; and a righteous revolution of the citizens of China against its rule would undoubtedly produce some startling revelations.

THE F. M. B. A. IN POLITICS.

President Cicero J. Lindley, President of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association (a secret society), in the Illinois State Encampment, a few days ago, reviewed the purposes for which the association was founded, and said that its organizers never intended that it should be a political society. But that it has dabbled in politics, little to its credit, is manifest in the utterances of this speaker, who seems to have been troubled with forgetfulness of the position which he assumed for the occasion. Among other things he said:

"The trouble in securing legislation in our State last winter was the lack of unity among the farmers and their determination to ask everything and to grant nothing. The part the organization had taken in politics led to the fear among the members that one party might gain advantage over the other in the coming contest. Thus were killed many measures which under different circumstances would have passed the Legislature, would have secured the approval of his Excellency and have become laws."

Speaking of existing evils, he said: "The remedy is a series of compromises on the part of all concerned. Those engaged in agriculture must concede that others have rights the same as we have. Many of our members have had apparently no purpose except to drag our organization into the field of politics against the earnest and constant protest of thousands of us in the organization. If any doubt the necessity of avoiding the rock of politics, let them compare the growth and condition of the membership of the lodge in this State this year with last, and they will concur with me in the opinion that on that line we must call a halt or all the good we have accomplished will be covered up in the rubbish of the dissolution. At the first meeting of the delegates that formed the federation of the farmer and labor organization of the State, that you have welcomed, we formulated the only basis on which we can prosper as an organization. That was that every member should be a missionary in his own party to secure the passage of measures favorable to our interests. To that end many of us have earnestly labored."

One thing is evident: Each and every form of Farmers' Alliances will either affiliate with some existing partisan organization, or will vote independently as a new political party.

They are quite as evidently built on the principles of all class secret associations, (like the Knights of Labor, for instance) to rule in their own way, or ruin other organizations that refuse to affiliate with them. A gentleman at the South says that the Southern Alliances will vote the Democratic ticket.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—George S. Haskell, president of the Illinois State Board of Agriculture, and a seedsman of Rockford, died at that city Wednesday, aged 54 years.

—William Armstrong, who it is said was the oldest living Odd-fellow, died at Salem, Oregon, Tuesday aged 89 years. He was initiated into the order at Buffalo, N. Y., in 1834.

—Rev. O. V. Kettels, pastor of Humboldt Park F. M. church, on Sunday evening last preached a stirring sermon against the evils of secret societies, with good effect. Let the good work be kept up.

—Hon. Frederick Douglass, United States Minister to Hayti, tendered his resignation to the Department of State Monday. The letter of resignation bears date July 30. Mr. Douglass does not give his reasons for resigning.

—Hon. James Russell Lowell died at Elmwood, his home, in Cambridge, Mass., Wednesday. He had been an invalid since his return in 1885 from his eight years' diplomatic service at Madrid and the Court of St. James. He was buried on Friday last.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard read a paper before the San Francisco Monday Club, or ministers' association, on the 3d inst., on "The Church and the College," which was so well received that it is published in the Pacific, the Congregational organ of the Coast.

—Mrs. James K. Polk, relict of the eleventh President of the United States, died at Nashville, Tenn., Friday morning. Mrs. Polk was born at Murfreesboro Sept. 4, 1803. She was married to Mr. Polk while still in her teens, and lived continuously in Nashville, except when in Washington during the Congressional career of her husband and while mistress of the White House.

—We learn indirectly that Pres. C. A. Blanchard is well-pleased with the people of Dr. McLean's church in Oakland, Cal., with whom he began a month's vacation ministry on the 26th of July. He is heard by large congregations. The church itself is the largest and best appointed of any in the twin cities of Oakland and San Francisco. The pastor is spending the summer in Europe. Pres. Blanchard was on his first visit to the San Francisco ministers' meeting invited to address them.

—The College agent of the N. C. A., Rev. S. F. Porter, is now actively engaged in the prosecution of the Reform work in North Dakota. Last week he also visited Minnesota in behalf of the cause. Bro. Porter has just issued a new 16-page tract, for general circulation, on "The Kingdom, from the Law to the Gospel," which will interest Christian readers, however they may differ from the author's opinions. Bro. Porter now hires a colporteur to distribute his tracts on Reform subjects. He expects to return to his field in the South in November next.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Sixty years ago my father was "Right Worshipful Master," whatever that flatulent title may mean to Freemasons. My soul has never come into their secrets, though solicited to do so. There lies before me a unique address which was delivered by this "Master" to brethren of a New England lodge. A few paragraphs show the drift of it as an appeal to them to become prayerful, temperate Christian men in order to be true Masons. My father was an earnest evangelist at the time, in connection with his daily vocation. He read religion into the rules and regulations, and said, "He whom we are taught to consider an eminent patron of Masonry came preaching that men should repent. Have we, my brethren, all repented? . . . . Without faith it is impossible to please God. Have we that faith which works by love and purifies the heart? Alas! are there not many who are called Masons who profanely use the name of Him whom they call to witness in our solemnities? We have all received a solemn charge to discountenance intemperance as well as profanity. If we see our brethren pursuing a course which is directly leading them to ruin and do not stretch forth a hand to save them, can it be said with any propriety that we live in the practice of friendship, morality and love? Will the celestial lodge above be less strict in examining those who may apply for admission, crying, 'Lord, Lord, open to us?' Will any say, 'This is not Masonry, it is too serious a theme?' Then let it no more be said that we take that sacred book as the rule of our faith. I trust that your good sense will see the propriety of these remarks, and the inconsistency of pretending to take the Bible for our guide while we pay little or no attention to its solemn requirements."

That night he resigned his office, and not long after quietly dropped out of all association with the order. He found that the church of Christ and supreme allegiance to its Head required his undivided interest and time. For more than thirty years he was a Boston city missionary and went home to his reward, to receive a crown full of stars.

The matter of Sunday observance is occupying much attention. In Germany, it is said, the laity take more interest than the clergy in securing to the workingman the privilege of rest. It is not so here; yet some clergymen are very quiet, insomuch as they are traveling about from city to city by railway trains on the Lord's day, because it is, they say, pleasanter to be in their own house at night. They also say that the Sunday papers have come to stay, and they give their money and influence to this form of Sabbath desecration. Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs says that three-quarters of the church-goers here are saturated with this kind of thought, utterly alien to the Sabbath. Some of our sensational preachers lend themselves to hotels, rapid transit railways, and other secular schemes for Sabbath days by which money is made, with the thin guise of religion to attract. The action of ministers in Kansas, last week, is significant in repudiating such duplicity.

One of our dailies remarked, this week, that it was a gratifying fact to learn that Sam Jones was having small audiences at a neighboring camp ground. How much the hot weather and the charge for admission had to do with it does not appear; but the editor saw a healthful sign in this ejection of "theological garbage" on the part of the public. This belauded talker had promised, on a recent Lord's day, to give politicians "a roasting," and to express his mind as to preachers and churches. Such bitter, spleeny speech alienates the people from the pulpit and the sanctuary. It is possible to utter the truth in love. It does more good than when spoken in wrath. Even the golden-mouthed Wendell Phillips, at one time, won the epithet of "a common scold," because he dwelt so continuously on a single line of censure. Adroit reformers are not one-eyed men.

The recent tragic death of Missionary White, who was about to sail for China, is a severe blow to the missionary work at Canton. I enjoyed the hospitality of his home while laboring among the foreign residents of Macao last year, and this appalling event comes with peculiar impressiveness to me. The needlessness of so frequent slaughters at open and unguarded railway crossings is again illustrated. It is a constant wonder to Europeans that we should allow crossings at grade in this country, and so quietly submit to the results. Had Mr. W. been slain in China by a native, the nation would be stirred until his death were avenged. He drives into a death trap and four or five are killed, as thousands before him have been in like manner. What can be done? If States are indifferent, Congress ought to legislate in the matter.

THE REAPER'S REWARD.

BY SADIE BRALLIER NOFFSINGER.

Firm he stood amongst the reapers in the Master's vineyard, toiling
With a strength repressing faintness, as the noonday hour drew near;
Binding sheaves of priceless value, gleaned 'neath scorching suns, for heaven;
When God's own dear voice in merey, sounded on his wond'ring ear:

"Come, thou good and faithful servant! Leave the vineyard hot and dreary.
Lo, the rest which thou hast labored long and earnestly to win,
Now awaiteth thee. Why wonder? Gladly cast aside thy sickle,
Lift thine eye far, far beyond thee; view thy home and enter in!"

Then the veil was rent asunder, and the pearly gate was opened;
Harp of gold, and voice of seraph were attuned to joyful song.
Rays more dazzling far than sunshine, streamed from out the "many mansions,"
While the angels swung a ladder to the earth and echoed, "Come!"

Swectly, joyously, he answered: "Lord, I come to thee most gladly! believed in thy rich merey. Lo, the recompense is great!
was lost and thou restored me. I had sinned and thou didst pardon.
Alleluiah!" and his spirit floated through the pearly gate.

Oh, we weep! but tears of sorrow flow not from our hearts' full fountains.
We rejoiee that thou art sheltered in a home so fair and blest!
Fain we, too, would wing our spirits, cumbered with earth's heavy burdens,
To that dwelling, where our Father giveth his beloved rest.

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

[Copyrighted by "The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association," 161 LaSalle St., Chicago. Printed by permission.]

X.

"I thought I'd go to the stand and see if Pete wouldn't sell me something and be friends. Tom Dixon was with me. The stand was shut up. We asked some men who were hanging around if they knew anything about him. They said he'd got hurt in a fight and was at home in bed. Tom thought we'd better go and see him. His mother opened the door. She looked dreadful, and ——"

Poor, tender-hearted Johnnie looked so distressed, Tom took pity on him and went on with the story.

"She told us some men had coaxed him into the saloon one day, and made him drink. They had bet among themselves beforehand, how much he would drink before they could make him fight."

"Just think of it!" exclaimed Johnnie, breaking in. "Make a poor, one-armed fellow drunk and then make him fight! Wish I'd been there."

"Calm yourself, old fellow!" said Robert, laying his hand on John's doubled-up fist. "Go on, Tom."

"They treated him until he didn't know what he was doing, and then plagued him until he got into a perfect rage and struck some one. They got into a regular drunken broil, and poor Pete was beaten and then kicked into the street. His arm was broken and his head cut, and—he's dying."

Grace covered her face with her hand and sat perfectly still. Tom cleared his throat and continued:

"His mother found him there insensible—it was at night. She got a policeman to help her take him home. The policeman sent a doctor who set his arm and fixed his poor head, but Mrs. Sinclair told him he needn't come again,—she wouldn't have him."

"Who told you that?" asked Robert.

"One of the neighbors. They say she's an awful queer woman."

"Those men ought to be put in prison and thrashed, every one of them!" cried Gussie, springing to her feet. "Oh, dear! What a dreadful world! Can't we do anything?"

She looked appealingly round upon the sober-faced group.

Robert answered her gravely and slowly, "I think if we have all remembered our pledge, every part of it, we've been doing something. If we keep right ourselves,—you know it says,

"'To thine own self be true,
And it must follow as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.'"

"Oh, I know," said Gussie, almost petulant in her aroused sympathy and indignation. "But that's all about ourselves; it isn't helping any one else."

"Yes, it is, since it's not hindering."

"But I want to do something. Little Captain, can't you think of anything?"

Grace looked up, her great, dark eyes full of such pity as brought tears to other eyes seeing them.

"Only to pray," she answered. "God will show us. Are they poor, Johnnie?"

"Ever so poor."

"Then we can all give something," said Gussie.

"No, you can't," objected Johnnie. "She's so proud. Tom wanted her to take some money he had, to get something nice for Pete, and she almost slammed the door in his face."

"Maybe she'd let a girl help her," suggested one of the others.

"Or a woman," added Grace, thoughtfully. Then eagerly, as a new suggestion came to her, "Fanny's mother is just splendid, that way. Let's tell her."

"But we must help," almost grumbled Gussie.

"She will tell us how, I'm sure; won't she, Fanny?" asked Grace.

I said "Yes," positively enough. So we all went back to the house and took dear mother by storm. Gussie was speaker this time, and she managed to put mother in possession of the facts very briefly, and in a very vivid manner. Mother's quiet way had a good effect on our excitement, and we listened quite rationally to what she had to say. She promised to go that afternoon and see the mother and son. Tom was to come to our house after supper, and if there was anything we could do to help, he was to let the rest know, by postals or otherwise. So it was settled, and the boys and girls went home satisfied.

Mother returned from her visit that afternoon looking very serious. I had begged to go, but from what the boys told her of Mrs. Sinclair she thought it better to go alone.

"How is he?" I asked, before she had time to get her bonnet off.

"I do not think he will live long," said mother.

"Mother!—Do they want things?"

"I think they want for everything, child, except misery."

"Can we do anything?"

"You young folks? I should not wonder. What do you want to do?"

"Anything."

"And everything, I suppose," she added, with a gentle smile. Food and money would both be welcome. There was nothing but some stale crackers and water for that poor boy."

"Oh, mother! Are they starving?" I cried in horror, looking at the bountiful meal that stood on our table waiting our enjoyment of it.

"Poor people sometimes live on poorer food than crackers, dear. But there is even a greater burden on the poor woman's heart. It seems Pete has got heavily into debt, and just as soon as he dies, their little home will most likely be sold."

"How much does he owe?"

"Over a hundred and fifty dollars—in his mother's name, too."

"How could he owe all that? What did he buy?"

"He's been gambling and drinking, besides going into debt for his stand supplies."

"And he's dying."

"Yes, Fanny, he's dying," repeated mother, sadly.

Tom came in after tea; we went together over to Gracie's, and told her the sad story.

"The most dreadful part of all is that he's not ready to die," said Grace.

"Shall I call a meeting of the others?" asked Tom.

"They ought to get here before to-morrow afternoon."

"Tell you what we'll do," said Tom. "Bob and I will go over and get John. We'll divide the names among us, and see them all to-night. There's just twenty besides him and us,—that will make about seven houses each that we will have to stop at. What shall I tell them, Miss President?"

"Tell them what you can, and ——"

"We'll tell them we need hard cash instanter, and to bring their pocket-books along." This from Robert. "We'll meet at the Tank, if it's fine—there's lot's of room there. Come on, Tom; if we're going to get through to-night we'd better be lively."

They started off on their errand, when Grace turned to me. "Now, Fanny, you must come and help me."

"What are you going to do?"

"Father," she said, going up to him and pulling away his newspaper, "will you take Fanny and me to town to-night?"

"To-night, little woman? What's that for?"

"That poor boy, Pete, I was telling you about the other day, is dying, and they are almost starving. I'm going to put some things into a basket, and you'll help carry it?"

"I suppose I must submit when the President commands me," was his answer.

Then Grace beckoned me into the kitchen.

"You pack and I'll forage," she said. She made such a disastrous onslaught on the stores of cellar and pantry and refrigerator, that I put in a plea for the household's breakfast the next morning.

"That doesn't matter. We've got money, and stores near by, and no one sick."

The three of us started off, taking the cars, and were soon at our destination. On the threshold of the Sinclair house, Grace's courage gave way.

"Father, you'll have to speak to Mrs. Sinclair, I can't."

He knocked gently at the door, which was opened by a tall, gaunt, hard-looking woman, whose face seemed chiseled out of stone, so set and cold was every feature.

"Good-evening, Mrs. Sinclair," said Mr. Darling, with quiet courtesy. "We heard your boy was ill and came to see how he is to-night."

"He'll never be much worse," answered the woman in icy tones. "Will you come in?"

She offered us no chairs, but Mr. Darling was not easily put to confusion.

"Are you alone?" he asked her.

"I've always been alone, but for Pete."

"You should have some one to stay with you at night."

"There was a lady here this afternoon, but I told her I'd get along all right. She brought me some things for Pete. I'll get along, I'm used to it."

"May I see your son?" was Mr. Darling's next question.

"I guess so. He's asleep."

She led the way to a little room where a candle burned dimly. They went in, Grace and I lingering near the door. Mr. Darling came back in a few minutes and whispered something to Grace, returning at once to the bedside. She drew me away from the door, and lifting the basket on to a table, unpacked it. Then we sat down where we could hear if any word was spoken in the little room. Presently the silence was broken by a moan.

"Oh, mother! What be they doin' to me?"

It was Pete's voice.

"Nothin', lad, nothin'; you jest sleep easy," she answered him.

Another moan, followed by a sharp cry. Then he spoke again,

"Be I goin' to die, mother? I've been dreamin', I guess."

"Yes, you've been dreamin'. Go to sleep again. You ain't goin' to die yet awhile."

"Peter," said Mr. Darling, speaking in low, clear tones, "Peter, you are very, very sick. You may get well, and you may not. Do you understand?"

There was a quick, restless sound, as if the sick boy had raised himself in bed. Mr. Darling spoke again,

"There, does that rest you? Let me get my arm around you. Poor fellow, the pain is very bad, isn't it?"

"Be I goin' to die, mother?"

He wanted the truth from her lips. If she told him, he would know it was true. We listened for her answer, but it was not given. She came quickly out of the room, and seating herself in a low chair, bowed her face in her hands, and rocked back and forth.

"Yes, Peter, you are going to die," answered Mr. Darling, tenderly.

"But I hain't lived right yet," said the boy. "I wish I hadn't learned to drink. I wish ——"

A groan of pain closed the sentence, followed by a long silence. Still the mother sat there, with hidden face, silently rocking back and forth. Then we heard words of prayer.

"Dear Father in heaven, this child of thine is going to thee. He has not learned to live right yet, but he is sorry, and thou dost love him. Wilt thou not forgive him all that he has done wrong, and receive him unto thyself, for Jesus' sake."

A long silence.

"Be you a preacher?"

"No, Peter, not a preacher. Would you like to see one?"

"No. You be good enough."

"Are you afraid, my boy?"

"Of what?"

"To die."

"Guess it can't be much worse than livin'. God's fair and square, ain't he?"

"Yes, Peter, indeed he is."

"He won't be rough on a chap when he's down?"

"He loves you, Peter."

"Then I guess it's all right. He knows all about me. It's too late to fuss now. Where's mother?"

"In the next room."

"Don't call her. It's pretty hard for her. Can you lift me higher? Queer how light it's gettin'. Oh, sir, be I dyin' now? God knows all about me. You're sure he's fair and square?"

"I know he is, my boy."

"All right. He knows all about me. Tell mother ——"

Still the mother rocked back and forth, though the voice of her child was silent forever. Grace had hidden her face on my shoulder and was crying softly. After a little, Mr. Darling came out, and bending over Mrs. Sinclair, gently told her the end had come, but she made no sign of hearing. He beckoned us away, and after taking us to a car, returned to the lonely woman, saying he would remain with her as long as he should be needed.

TORNADOES—WORTH REMEMBERING.

From report of the Weather Bureau at Washington, we take the following:—

Tornadoes move east or northeast.

The line of safety is toward the northwest. If the observer faces the storm, let him turn to the right and make the best time he can. The strength the tornado is near its southern edge. Time is usually afforded for escape if people will keep cool and make no false steps.

If they run to the east they will soon be overtaken. If they run into the woods they increase their danger. If within a house or cellar they should avoid the easterly side.

In a wooden house the cellar is the safest place; in a house of brick or stone the cellar is the most dangerous. The best preparation is to make an excavation in the west side of the cellar, supported by heavy timbers and well-constructed masonry.

HORSE SHOES OR WATCH SPRINGS.

A boy is like a piece or iron, which, in its rough state, is not worth much, nor of very much use, but the more processes it is put through the more valuable it becomes. Iron that is only worth $5 in its natural state is worth $12 when it is made into horseshoes, and, if it goes through the different processes by which it is made into needles, its value is increased to $350. Made into penknife blades it would be worth $3,000, and into balance springs for watches $250,000.

But the iron has to go through a great deal of hammering and beating, and rolling and pounding, and polishing; and so a boy, if to become useful and educated, must go through a long course of study and training. The more time spent in hard study, the better material you will make. The iron does not have to go through half as much to be made into horseshoes as to be converted into watchsprings, but how much less valuable is it! Which would you rather be, boys, horseshoes or watchsprings? It depends on yourselves. You can become whichever you will. This is your time of preparation for manhood.—Selected.

THE MOTHER'S PRAYER.

Starting forth on life's rough way,
Father, guide them;
O, we know not what of harm
May betide them!
'Neath the shadow of Thy wing,
Father, hide them;
Waking, sleeping, Lord, we pray,
Go beside them.

When in prayer they cry to Thee,
Do Thou hear them;
From the stains of sin and shame
Do Thou clear them;
'Mid the quicksands and the rocks
Do Thou steer them;
In temptation, trial, grief,
Be Thou near them.

Unto Thee we give them up:
Lord, receive them.
In the world we know must be
Much to grieve them—
Many striving oft and strong
To deceive them;
Trustful, in Thy hands of love
We must leave them.

TEMPERANCE.

The Tenth National Temperance Convention, at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., in July, adopted the following "Address to the American People:"

1. The Tenth National Temperance Convention, representing many temperance organizations, State and national, and various religious bodies in session in Saratoga, N. Y., asks earnestly your attention to the perils involved to our beloved country in the prevalent, injurious, social-drinking usages, in in the making and vending of intoxicating beverages, and in the present attitude of the organized, law-defying, rebellious oligarchy of brewers, distillers, and saloon-keepers.

2. Scientific research, Divine admonition, and human experience all concur in a common warning against the beverage use of intoxicants as needless and harmful. The liquor traffic imposes enormous, avoidable economic burdens upon individuals, families and the State. It is chief among the producing causes of poverty, vice, and crime. The saloon is a centre of irreligion, impurity, anarchy, and misrule.

3. The large influx of ignorant foreigners, bringing with them the Old World drinking customs, is an evil of threatening proportions. The purity of the American home, the preservation of the American Sabbath, and the maintenance of good government, especially in cities, are all jeopardized.

4. This convention, therefore, in the name of God and humanity, appeals to thoughtful men and women in all parts of the land to abstain from the use of intoxicants, and from providing them to others on all social and festive occasions; and it urges all citizens and voters, irrespective of partisan political associations, to combine in primary meetings, and at the polls, to insure the overthrow of the iniquitous liquor oligarchy by the selection and election of legislators and executive officers, State and national, favorable to the immediate and entire prohibition of the manufacture, importation and sale of all alcoholic beverages throughout our national domain.

TEMPERANCE AND LONGEVITY.

An endeavor was recently made to show that total abstainers do not live as long as those who consume alcohol in moderation; also, strange to say, that those who often drink to excess outlive the teetotalers. Statements purporting to come from the medicinal profession in England were adduced in support. The facts were evidently cooked, but so skillfully as to deceive unwary people. All persons possessing common-sense are aware that an excessive consumption of alcohol leads to ill health and a high rate of mortality. But many are not convinced that even what is called moderate indulgence tends to lessen the duration of life. The United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution, London, England, has two classes of insurance: one for total abstainers, and another for temperate people who are not total abstainers. All insurance offices carefully avoid insuring the lives of drunkards or of those who they suspect to be inclined to overindulgence. That of itself is sufficient to show that the universal experience of the life offices is that alcoholic excess means a high rate of mortality. The directors of the before-mentioned institution at their last annual meeting reported that for the total abstinence section on the whole number of life policies for every 100 claims estimated to fall due by the actuary's tables there had been only 59 deaths, but that in the general section—that is among those who drink in strict moderation—the deaths amounted to 86 out of the expected 100. Therefore, out of equal numbers of two lots of insurers—total abstainers and temperance men—the abstainers show 45 per cent better than the temperate drinkers.—Toronto Mail.

TEMPERANCE NUGGETS.

It is not the prohibitory law that has been steadily injuring the Republican party in Iowa; but the fact that Republicans have been too much like ordinary brass pins, pointing in one direction and headed in another.—F. B. Turney.

The sale of intoxicants at Burlington Park needs regulating. It is said that too many minors are taking their first lessons in beer drinking. The general public is taking notes of the performances at the resort, and will report in the not far distant future.—Naperville (Ill.) Clarion.

The high-license scheme has acted as an opiate upon the public conscience. Its tendency is to create what Dr. Northrup forcibly calls "a paralysis of conscience." It creates even in the church of Christ a criminal policy of "laizer faire." Leave the infamous thing alone.—Rev. F. T. Burhoe.

Old John Brown once said in relation to the anti-slavery cause: "It is a mighty big thing for a man to do all he can." The prohibition cause would make much faster and more satisfactory progress if all who profess to be its friends would remember this. And how soon the kingdom for which we pray would come if every Christian lived up to this homely saying.—Christian Witness.

The present number of saloons in Chicago is 5,600, and if they were placed on a street side by side on each side of the street, they would extend a distance of ten miles. The beer consumed is said to be two million barrels a year at an expenditure of $40,000,000. All this in a city under high license. Worse than all, a great number of these saloons are said to be the hot-beds of social vice in its most degraded forms.—Exchange.

Score one for the ballot law. The first election under its operation was held at Berlin, a small town, but one in which heretofore saloons have been triumphant. At this election, however, the anti-license people elected all but one of their candidates. May the law thus happily inaugurated prove like beneficent wherever used. Although there was only a short time to prepare the people for the change in method, only two mistakes were made. Moses Bucher, a Democrat over 80 years old, was accorded the privilege of casting the first vote under this system, and it was an anti-license vote.—Geneva (Ill.) Patrol.

Fifteen hundred dollars license is just five hundred dollars worse than one thousand dollars and is the sale of blood. It is an assault on hungry childhood. It is a wicked and brutal abuse of fettered womanhood. It is a compromise with death and a league with hell. It does not stop drinking. It does not curb the ravages of the accursed traffic. It does not mitigate a single horror to the murderous liquor pandemonium that rages on with its consuming fires and maddened cries of the doomed. Life is too precious to be weighed against dollars. Judas could not rest with the blood-money for which he had betrayed innocence on his hands. Can the voter rest with the stain of the license bribe upon his soul? Look upon the smiling face of childhood, turn sudden to the face of motherhood and make reply.—Southern Star.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The people divided.—vs. 31, 32. The rage and hate of the priestly party towards Christ had now reached its culminating point. They had fully decided that he must in some way be put to death; but though on several occasions he seemed to be completely in their power, they were mysteriously prevented from touching him. His hour had not yet come, and before his mission was fulfilled neither men nor devils could compass his destruction. There is a saying that "every man is immortal till his work is done." The safest place we can be found in is at the post of duty, and they who desert it from cowardly fear often rush into the very dangers they would avoid. Whoever has read the life of John G. Paton, missionary to the New Hebrides, will find in the way in which he was protected by an invisible power from infuriated savages, when instant death seemed imminent, an illustration of this truth. Partisan feeling respecting Christ was now beginning to run high. He had said himself (Luke 12: 51) that he came not to send peace on earth but rather division. His claims must be met and either accepted or rejected. Even if it had been possible to ignore them, the result would have been a fatal and deadly peace—the calm before the cyclone. Many believed on him and were not afraid to say so. "When Christ cometh will he do more miracles than these which this man hath done?" was their natural query. But as soon as the priests and Pharisees became conscious that the popular feeling had already begun to turn in his favor, they lost no time in sending men to arrest him. The outcome is told at the end of the chapter. Christ spoke with such thrilling, divine eloquence that the officers were powerless to arrest him. We proceed now to take up the separate links in this wonderful discourse.

2. The precious opportunity.—vs. 33–36.—Scarcely six months remained of his earthly ministry. It was but a short time at the longest before the precious opportunity to hear the truths of the Gospel from his own gracious lips would be gone forever. And yet to all who sincerely pray for it he sends his divine Spirit to teach and comfort; and his own words (John 16: 17) imply that this is even a more blessed gift than his bodily presence. How then do we treat the Holy Spirit who comes to us in Christ's stead? Do we reject or receive his heavenly admonitions? Are we careful not to grieve him, or do we indulge in anything by which he is wounded, and through him the Son of God crucified afresh, even by the hands of his professed followers? "Ye shall seek me and shall not find me." This had special application to the Jews, who, as a nation, have so long sought their rejected Messiah without finding him; but we have the solemn words of Scripture that to every individual who now rejects Christ the hour will come when he will feel his terrible need of a Saviour, and seek in vain the refuge he once scorned. The Jews took up his words and repeated them in irony: "Whither will he go?" Will it be to teach the Gentiles? How little they understood of their own prophets, who all along had prophesied that the blessings of his redemption should extend even to the remotest isles of the sea!—and that nations that he knew not, in the sense that they did not then exist, should run unto him for salvation.

3. The living water.—vs. 37–39. We must bring before our minds the circumstances under which Christ thus departed from his usual custom, to see the wonderful appropriateness of time and place to his words. It was the same discourse, in substance, which he had preached to the woman of Samaria. The ceremonial of pouring out water before the Lord furnished the text in this case;—water, the most prized of earthly blessings to an Oriental. But Christ himself was the Fountain of living waters. "If any man thirst;"—thirst for something more than earth is able to supply, more than he can find either within or outside of himself, here is a stream which can never run dry;—which is not affected by the most dry and desert places which we go through in our wilderness journey. And more than all, whoever has this fountain in himself can give it forth to others. If one is full of the Spirit how thirsty souls will flock to him for the life-giving draught. With a Spurgeon or a Moody we see this illustrated on a great scale, but the humblest Christian can do the same in his measure, and be not a cup-bearer simply, but a fountain-bearer to others.

4. Different views of Christ.—vs. 40–44. Some were wholly decided that he was the Christ. Others entangled themselves in a point of theological criticism regarding his native place. "Shall Christ come out of Galilee?" How easy it is to make a blunder when we try to make Scripture prove our own preconceived notions, instead of proving our opinions by Scripture. This is the way in which most skepticism originates.

Religious News.

BAPTIST.

—A farewell meeting for four missionaries who were to sail during the week following was held in the Calvary church, West Fifty-seventh street, New York, Sunday evening, Aug. 16. The four missionaries are Miss Slade, Dr. Ida Fay, and Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Owen. All go to work among the Telugus.

—Mr. Spurgeon is so much better that his speedy recovery is confidently predicted.

—The announcement is made that Rev. Dr. Hoyt, of the First Church, Minneapolis, Minn., has received a call to the First Church, Cleveland.

—The appointment of President Kendrick to the task of raising $40,000 for Shurtleff College created a vacancy in the teaching force of the institution. It is announced that Rev. W. H. H. Avery, of Jerseyville, Ill., has received and accepted the invitation of the board to a professorship, with the view of filling the vacancy created.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Clyde W. Votaw of the last class of Yale Divinity School, has accepted a position as Instructor in the American Institute of Sacred Literature, one branch of the new Chicago University. He will be located at the Institute in Chicago after Sept. 1.

—On account of the continued ill health of his wife, Rev. E. F. Schwab has resigned the pastorate of the Sedgwick street, Chicago, Branch of the New England Church, to take effect Sept. 1. During the past year the resident membership has more than doubled.

—The corner-stone of the new building of the First Church, Salt Lake City, Utah, was laid with impressive ceremonies July 27. Rev. J. B. Thrall, the pastor, laid the stone. The building completely furnished and with organ will cost $50,000, of which $33,000 is already in hand. It is to be built of stone and brick.

—The North Church, St. Johnsbury, Vt., has received a legacy of $3,100 from the late Miss Mary Smith, and $5,000 by the will of ex-Gov. Horace Fairbanks. The income of both legacies will be used for the relief of the poor.

—One result English Congregationalists expect from the London Council, said Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, is an infusion of iron in the blood from their American brethren; they seemed as if they were men who never bowed the head to any one but God, and the infusion of their spirit would be of the greatest service to those in the old country.—Advance.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—A Methodist medical missionary in India makes a strong plea for a preliminary service in the home field for those who go abroad. Such experience would not only be a test of their qualification, but would also be educational, preparing them for wiser and more efficient service when they enter the foreign field.

—The Methodists of San Diego county, Cal., have had a present of forty acres of ground and a hotel at Carlsbad, in that county. The place is to be used as a seaside resort. They propose to begin with a temperance convention of a week, and follow with a camp-meeting.

—The women have failed in gaining an entrance into the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church. The main difficulty in the way seems to have been the indifference of the laity and the ministry. Out of 10,000 preachers only about one-half voted, and the majority in this vote was against the sisters.

FREE METHODIST.

—Camp meeting at Artesia, California, September 9-20.

—The North Minnesota conference will be held at Alexandria, September 30.

—A grove meeting will be held at Oneida, N. Y., Aug. 21-23 in a pretty grove on Seneca street.

—The Toledo circuit camp-meeting will be held at Kingman, Ill., August 25–September 1.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The statistics of the Presbyterian church, North, in the United States, show that the entire membership is 806,796—an increase of 140,000 during the past six years. The whole number of churches is 7,070—an increase in the same time of 789. The contributions for all purposes for the year 1891 were $14,062,000. For home and foreign missions, $1,780,000.

—The First Presbyterian church in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., of which Rev. Dr. Francis B. Wheeler has been pastor for the last thirty years, has been made the recipient of twelve beautiful opalescent windows and an oaken pulpit, from Hon. John F. Winslow, the senior elder of the church.

—The Union Presbyterian church, Thirteenth Street, below Spruce, Philadelphia, Rev. Alexander Waddell, pastor, by a vote of ninety-three to eleven have agreed to give up the exclusive use of the Psalms, and to permit the use of the organ in divine service.

—Ten years ago the Southern branch of the Presbyterian church had in Louisville, Ky., four churches with 1,336 members. According to the minutes of the assembly, just issued, it now has nine churches and 2,170 members, an increase of sixty-three per cent in ten years.

UNITED BRETHREN.

—On the 18th of July last, a cyclone struck the United Brethren church at Limeville, Lancaster Co., Pa., and utterly destroyed it, nothing being left but the foundation wall and floor. Will the kind friends who may read this come to their relief? If only in small donations, it will be helpful, and will be gratefully received. Please send contributions to Rev. A. L. Shannon, pastor, Compassville, Pa.

—Rev. Mr. Cline lectured in favor of Odd-fellowship at the United Brethren church in Rising Sun, Ohio, on the 18th day of July. Cline boasted of Odd-fellowship wonderfully. A lot of sinners, called Odd-fellows, marched up into the amen corner of the church.

—A United Brethren church of twenty-one members was organized by Rev. F. H. Bohn, pastor of Colerain Circuit, Miami Conference, Jan. 9, 1891, at Mt. Airy, Hamilton Co., Ohio. Immediately after the organization of the church steps were taken to build a house of worship. A board of trustees was elected and a subscription circulated. Work was commenced on the foundation in the spring, and the corner-stone was laid on Sunday, Aug. 2d.

—The new United Brethren church at Hall's Grove, Butler Co., Iowa, was dedicated on Sunday, July 26th. A large audience was in attendance.

—The Missouri Conference will hold its next session at Brashear, Adair county, Missouri, September 4th.

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS.

—A Seventh Day Adventist down in Tennessee thought he would carry out his convictions and plowed his field on Sunday. He was arrested and convicted of breaking the Sabbath. His friends of like faith and others made a strong effort to have the decision reversed. In this they failed, and the violator of the law was compelled to pay his fine or serve out his time in prison. The plea made by his counsel was that his conviction was not in accord with the Bill of Rights and the constitution of the State.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Free church of Scotland is celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the disruption.

—Justice Strong, of the Supreme Court, is eighty-three years of age. He recently addressed the Y. M. C. Association of Washington on "Personal Religion."

—Rev John M. Fulton has resigned the pastorate of the Willow Creek church, presbytery of Freeport, and accepts the call of the Lake View church, presbytery of Chicago.

—The English Christians are looking after their soldiers. A society has been formed; over $40,000 raised. The sole object of the society is to spread the saving knowledge of Christ among our soldiers. Experience shows that this can be done by the appointment of God-fearing laymen to labor as Scripture readers under the supervision of her Majesty's chaplains. There are about seventy-seven agents working under the society.

—President Finney used to pray, "O Lord, use thy servant fully in thy work, but use him as economically as you can." This was the correct doctrine. Save, not waste. If vacations increase the aggregate of a minister's life-work, they are right and necessary.—Advance.

—There are to-day 8,000,000 Negroes in this country, 4,000,000 of whom profess no religion. Of the other 4,000,000 very few have any definite knowledge of revealed truth. The Trinity, redemption, the Ten Commandments, the existence of God, are unknown to whole families in some Southern districts. A large portion of their ministry can scarcely read the Word of God (says Rev. T. L. Cook in the Evangelical Repository for June), to say nothing of understanding the truths contained therein. Their religion is highly emotional, mixed largely with superstition. Thus a large mass of Negroes of this Christian land of light and truth are groping in darkness and sin. Is there not a necessity for missionary work among the Negroes of the South?

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The firm of Jerome Howe & Co. filed a bill in the Superior court against B. F. Jacobs, S. A. Kean and Everett M. Warren to declare a trust and for the appointment of a receiver. Kean is indebted to complainants in the sum of $4,796.51. The bill sets forth the assignment by Kean to Jacobs in trust for the benefit of the former's creditors and then the transfer of the assets to Warren. It is claimed that the last conveyance was illegal.

Investigation of the National Capital Savings Building and Loan Association's books shows that over 3,100 victims were swindled out of sums aggregating $90,000. Secretary Mortimer is still uncaught.

Judge Tuley took up the Kinsman failure, characterizing the Goodrich connection as a "partnership in rascality" and the failure generally as a fraud.

The loss on Tuesday morning's North Side fire proves to be about $86,000, with an insurance of $104,000.

The annual report of the Northwestern road shows a large surplus.

The will of the late David B. Fisk was filed for probate. It disposes of $1,225,000, all but about $10,000 going to the widow absolutely.

A transfer loop is under way at the Illinois Central's intersection with the Belt Line, exclusively for World's Fair business.

Department stores will probably be subjected to an increase in insurance rates.

Assignments were made by the St. John & Marsh Lumber Co. and Joseph Brothers & Co., dealers in furnishing goods.

Conductors on the South Side cable line are discovered to pass considerable counterfeit money on passengers.

COUNTRY.

The remains of Herman Raster, formerly editor of the Illinois Staats Zeitung, arrived at New York from Europe Monday.

Monday was the hottest day in twenty years at New York. Many persons were stricken dead or driven insane by the heat.

According to a census bulletin issued Monday the population of Iowa has increased 287,281, or 17.68 per cent within ten years, though each of twenty-seven counties show a slight decrease from the figures given in the census of 1880.

It is reported that J. O. Wynne, business agent of the Georgia State Farmers' Alliance, is a defaulter to the amount of $20,000.

The Duluth, Minn., Street Railway Company's property has been placed in the hands of a receiver.

The total assessed value of Illinois property for 1891 is $737,816,405, against $727,425,707 in 1890. The question of the Chicago assessment was taken up, and after some discussion postponed for one week.

According to Frank McGrath, President of the Kansas Farmers' Alliance, the farmers of that State will only sell their wheat as they are forced to raise money. They expect an advance in price.

It is reported that 40,000 Negroes are to colonize in California with the assistance of Senator Stanford.

After a series of experiments at the Missouri Agricultural Station with sixty-three varieties of wheat, the Fultz variety was pronounced the best, although the Early Oakley gave the largest yield.

The yacht Nellie C. was struck by a squall off Preque Isle on Tuesday, and her cabin filling with water, three young ladies were drowned.

Reports of the hay crop from the counties of twelve States show that while in some States it is large, in others the yield is light. The best yield is in the States of Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska.

Miss Annie Harkness was killed at Cincinnati while attempting to make a parachute drop.

Farm profits will be $1,000,000,000 more this year in the United States than they have been during the recent years of depression. At least this is the estimate put forward by the American Agriculturist in its annual review of the harvests, to be published in the forthcoming September issue of that magazine.

James Patton, aged 16, son of the Hon. James W. Patton, of Springfield, one of the most prominent lawyers of Illinois, was drowned while bathing in the Ohio river, near Shawneetown.

James Buckingham made a balloon ascension at Pleasant Beach, N. Y., Sunday, and, coming down in a parachute, was drowned in Onondaga Lake, in sight of about 7,000 persons.

All the property, rights, and franchises of the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway Company have been deeded to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company, the deeds being recorded at Beatrice, Neb., and the consideration placed at $25,222,000.

Several citizens of Morgantown, Ind., have been arrested for destroying a saloon with dynamite last fall.

Health officers have prohibited the sale of milk at Galesburg, Illinois, on account of the prevailing distemper among cattle.

New shipping associations are being organized by the Farmers' Alliance in Kansas. Three charters were filed on Tuesday.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from Aug. 10 to Aug. 15.

Mrs E Tozier, Rev I C Weidler, J F H Dobler, Dea N Pierce, Mrs T A Prest, A Bliss, M W Holt, J G Hanson, S Mathew, E A Cook, A G Young, E F Perry, T B Wilson, J Turner, L Landon, E Trumbull, Rev J Harper, N H Jamison, Rev J D Owens, A Gummer, J C Rider.

The insertion of the two premiums in this number, namely, "Smith's Bible Dictionary" and Geikie's "Life and Words of Christ," was a mistake. Since the failure of John B. Alden we are unable to furnish these books as premiums.

N. C. A. LOCAL AGENTS.

"Secret Oaths by Joseph Cook ought to be read by all Christian people over and over again."—Rev. G. James Jones, former editor Christian Record.

"Enclosed find $1.00 for a package of Carradine sermons. I am just now making it warm for the lodge in this parish. Am giving out anti-secret literature all the time and quite often speak out against lodgery in the pulpit. People are thinking and taking ground against secret orders all around us."—Rev. Nathan Callender.

WAYS OF DOING GOOD.

"Little influences, apparently insignificant, such as words, examples, books, tracts, visits, contributions, warnings, letters, songs, prayers, etc., have resulted in the conversion and consequent usefulness of thousands. Especially is this true of book and tract circulation."

Tracts did good service in the great reformation in Germany. Huss and Baxter were converted by reading tracts. The late Rev. Dr. Fish of Newark, says that "he can safely say that he has known of hundreds of conversions that could be traced to tracts and books."

"During the year 1890, I sold 570 anti-secret, anti-Catholic and prohibition papers. And I distributed here about one hundred Cynosures free, besides mailing many to intelligent persons. I sold and distributed 500. 'Killed without Inquest.' I also gave out many anti-secret and anti-Catholic tracts. And I sold 242 anti-secret and anti-Catholic books and pamphlets.

"I desire to say that I believe that millions of anti-secret and anti-Catholic publications of all sorts could be sold yearly, in the United States, if our friends would try to sell them. I find no difficulty about selling such publications in the city of York."—Edward J. Chalfant.

IN REFERENCE TO MATTERS OF DIET.

There is abundance of advice, as there is a multitude of advisers. But the question, what specific set of directions will apply equally and alike to all is truly pertinent. The tastes not only, but the necessities of people, vary. One prescribes abstinence from eating after 5 o'clock P. M. Another believes that a little food before sleeping time is beneficial. Note that a very hungry man with a good digestion may eat heartily before retiring, and sleep "like a log," as the phrase goes. If the body requires nutrition, ordinarily it would be foolish to retire with the need unsupplied. As nightmares and bad dreams often follow overeating, so they do also attend an utter emptiness of the stomach. With this organ complaining, there is apt to be dreaminess, or wakefulness. With the stomach moderately distended, the action of the diaphraghm and intercostalmuscles is freer, being steadied by the resistance of subjacent gastric and intestinal organs. If the digestive cavities are empty the blood goes careering through the brain and making havoc with over-wrought cerebral action. And as to over-eating, wise and watchful people soon learn the folly thereof, and escape the direful consequences by reasonable abstention.

"How shall we eat and drink?" is a question much considered and much discussed. One adviser says, "Drink nothing when you eat, because the gastric juice acts with more energy undiluted with fluids." But does the experience of mankind, on the whole, bear out this advice, and sanction it? I think not. In certain cases of weak digestion it may be found best, and experience soon settles he matter in any given case. But often liquids are soon absorbed by the stomach, in part, at least. And a healthy stomach is invigorated and encouraged, if I may say so, with a certain degree and condition of fullness. Look at an ox, full-fed from the pasture, lying down to rest at night. He has eaten heartily, and has drunk at intervals as he pleased. It is not ignoble to learn something by comparison with this noble animal. The fact is, in a state of health, we may largely follow the dictate of instinct, giving heed to the double argument of desire and necessity. Some liquid drank during meals appears to me safe and useful, and some have found that it has worked especially well with them, while drinking but little at first, to drink freely at the close of a meal. I question the wisdom of undertaking to prescribe any arbitrary or absolute rule in these matters. Indeed so much thought and anxiety are given to them that not only is the enjoyment of a repast interfered with, but digestion itself may be impaired by a chronic mental perplexity, fostered by innumerable clashing opinions and conflicting counsels. It will be one feature of a better day coming when there is less confusion on matters of hygiene.—C. Colegrove, M. D., in Words of Truth.

TO EASE PAIN.

One of the best hot applications for pain, in pneumonia or dysentery, is a flannel bag filled with hops and wrung out with hot vinegar. The wringing process may be avoided by the use of two tin plates. After the bag is ready, pour a little vinegar into one plate, set in on the stove and lay the bag in it. Place the other plate on the top to keep in the steam. When the vinegar has all evaporated into the hops, add a little more and turn the bag. In a few minutes the bag will be steaming hot, but not dripping. This keeps it light, a thing always to be considered when the chest is weakened by pneumonia. and saves the hands of the nurse from the scalding vinegar.

In extreme cases, where there is not time to make hop bags, flannel may be wrung from almost boiling water without scalding the hands. Double a thick crash towel two or three times; pull the flannel up from the water with a fork, wrap the cool crash towel around it and wring. Keep the towel around it until just ready to apply, and it will be hot enough to do some good.—Ibid.

Some think a level teaspoonful of the best white sugar added to a pound of butter improves the flavor of it greatly.

A bracket shelf over the kitchen table will be found a convenience when the table is over-crowded with dishes, or with pies on baking days, especially if the table has to be cleaned for other use.

FARM NOTES.

PROGRESS OF AMERICAN AGRICULTURE.

The report of the statistician of the department of agriculture shows an increase, within the past year, of more than 100 per cent in the price of corn and oats; thirty per cent in wheat in first hands; thirty-two per cent in Chicago for choice beeves, and advanced values generally in all farm products in all markets. A hopeful and cheerful feeling is noticed, says the report, in official correspondence from all parts of the country. The elimination of the surplus of corn and oats, through the under production of last year, insures good prices for those crops, and the shortage of the wheat of the world for two years, with the assurance of a small foreign crop the present harvest, gives promise of the largest export demand for ten years, and at remunerative prices. Fortunately, present appearances indicate ability to meet such demand with ease. Farm lands at present prices are good investments, and we look to see a much higher range of value for them established in the near future, and then maintained. Farming will be a profitable occupation here for a long time to come.

WHEN TO DIG POTATOES.

A good many farmers look upon the potato crop as one that can be gathered whenever it suits their convenience to attend to it. They plant in good season, cultivate with care, but often do not harvest until long after the tubers are in the right condition to be dug. This is especially true of the early varieties, which may be planted early enough to mature by the last of July, but are then not infrequently left in the soil as a "convenience" crop until other crops have been gathered. Sometimes this delay continues until after corn husking.

The result of this method, or lack of method, is that the potatoes in the ground are exposed to a great variety of temperatures, to the chances of wet weather and to the various diseases to which the potato is subject.

The proper time to dig potatoes is when they are ripe, as shown by the decay of the tops. Some assert that it is safer to gather them, even before they are ripe, maintaining that they will then keep better and be less liable to be attacked by rot. At any rate, they should not be left in the earth after full maturity. When dug the ground should be dry and the air as cool as the season will permit, but not damp. They should be allowed to lie on the ground for some hours if the sun is not too hot. Then place in a cool, dry spot, where they will not be exposed to the light.

BRIEFS.

Ashes give the best results when broadcasted over the ground instead of in the hills.

To destroy lice in the hen's nest, pour a spoonful of carbolic acid in a quart of air-slaked lime, mix it in well, and sprinkle well.

Does milk come from the barn covered with specks of filth and dirt dropped during milking, from the poorly bedded and unbrushed cows?

For regular farming purposes, all things considered, says a contemporary, it is questionable whether a better breed of cattle exists than the milking strains of the Shorthorns.

The Farmer's Review estimates the average wheat yield in Kansas at eighteen bushels to the acre. This is at least two bushels too low. It is more liable to exceed twenty bushels than to fall below it.

A man who spent many years in lumbering camps where a great many horses are used, has proved to his own satisfaction that watering horses immediately after they have eaten is the most frequent cause of colic.

A fifteen mile journey is an average day's work for a horse. How far does the cow travel in poor pasture, nipping a penny-weight of grass here and there, to get her daily ration? Then she is expected to pay for it through the milk pail, says the Mirror and Farmer.

Rotate the crops in the garden as well as in the fields. Do not grow peas or cabbages on the same ground occupied by such crops last year, but change all crops to new plats, or to plats occupied by some other crop the previous season. Rotation is a very important matter in agriculture.

If the ladies would abandon cosmetics and more generally keep their blood pure and vigorous by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, naturally fair complexions would be the rule, instead of the exception, as at present. Pure blood is the best beautifier.

Improve the nutritive functions of the scalp by using Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer, and thus keep the hair from falling and becoming gray.

Southern expression of principle is not confined, in its boldness and quaintness, to the old-time white "fire-eater." In the recent colored Baptists' State convention, at Jackson, Tenn., one brother said, on the question of Baptist education: "There will be a fuss about this thing as long as the world stands. If I had the power I would put the fire of the altar into every Negro Baptists' mouth and burn it open."

Voters in Illinois should not forget the new voting law, which will be enforced at the next general election. It is entirely different from anything ever before attempted in this State, and the results of its operation will be awaited with the greatest interest, as it secures to the voter, whatever his condition in life, the perfect right and freedom to cast his ballot without fear of interference by any person or party. We shall print a synopsis of it next week.

The Western Catholic News recently began an editorial with the opinion that the Christian Cynosure should stick to its war on secret societies and their evils, and leave the Roman Catholic church alone; in other words, that it was exceeding its mission. Really, as long as our memories of the Spanish Inquisition and its branches in other countries remain, and as long as the Society of Jesus and the Clan-na-Gael have an existence under the sanction of the papal hierarchy, the Cynosure feels perfectly confident that its war upon the evils of secret societies extends also to the Roman Catholic or any other church which fosters, encourages, or allows such societies to exist.

Treves is a town in Rhenish Prussia, situated on the right bank of the river Moselle, about sixty-five miles west of Coblenz. It is an ancient city, with a Romish cathedral, in which is preserved, it is alleged, the coat worn by our Saviour on the night when he was betrayed. The Romish church has invested it with due sanctity, and claims that the mere touching of it will heal the diseases of the faithful in that denomination. We speak of it here because on the 20th of August it was made accessible to invalids for a certain term of weeks. Large numbers of pilgrims have gone to Treves to test the healing power of this relic, including many from the United States. We leave the reader to draw his own conclusions as to the authenticity of the relic, and the condition of mind required to seek the virtues ascribed to it, as well as the authority by which they are advertised.

The New York Catholic Review says that "Protestantism has gone to seed." True, O Reviewer: "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church;" Romanism has never been sparing in sowing this precious seed; and it may yet be sown more relentlessly than in former times. Thus baptized in blood, ruthlessly shed by its enemies, Protestantism, the handmaid of true Christianity, is especially under the care of the God whom Luther, and Calvin, and Wycliffe, and John Knox worshiped in spirit and in truth. Its Head is become the chief stone of the corner—and "whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder."

There appears to be trouble brewing between the Roman Catholic and Masonic authorities at Rolla, Mo. "Father" O'Laughlin, a Catholic priest, having heard that Dr. John C. Vincil, Grand Masonic Secretary of Missouri, while laying the corner-stone of the Masonic Temple in that place, had spoken incidentally of the opposition of the Roman church to Masonry, considered the remark an abuse, and demanded the resignation or removal of the Doctor from his official position in the Grand Lodge. The demand was "treated with silent contempt." The Masonic Chronicle thinks this action of "Father" O'Laughlin equal to that of the arrogant letter of the Pittsburgh priest who demands that President Harrison shall dismiss Indian Agent Morgan from the service because he will not hire teachers in the schools recommended by the Propaganda to teach sectarian religion, and threatens Harrison with the loss of the votes of Catholics if he refuses to comply. Well, when it comes to matching the Roman church against the lodge, we are reminded of Mrs. Partington's decision when asked what would happen if an irresistible body should strike an immoveable one. She thought that one or the other of them would "get hurt."

Advices from Germany continue to give gloomy reports as to the prospects of the harvest in the agricultural provinces. "Everything," says one writer, "confirms the belief that the winter of 1891–'92 will be one of the worst, so far as food is concerned, on record. Grave news comes from the Rhenish provinces, where an official circular announces the appearance of the dipterial insect which committed such ravages in the wheat fields of America of late years. Everything points to a dearth of breadstuffs." "In Britain also, the outlook for the English farmers is gloomy. Almost continuous heavy rains have fallen for the past week and the hopes of the agriculturist for good crops are dashed. The end of August will arrive with the harvest only half finished unless there is quite an unexpected change in the weather. Reports received indicate that the three principal cereal crops are seriously damaged." The trading men in America, in view of our native exuberant crop prospects, are jubilant over these reports, and, with their usual rapacity, will undoubtedly increase the prices of breadstuffs at home until they become oppressive to our own poor citizens. The Farmers' Alliances, it is claimed, will also engage in this nefarious business. Thus, in a land of plenty, even the blessings of Providence are made a source of heartless traffic.

I'VE CAUGHT A TARTAR.

BY REV ALEXANDER THOMSON.

An Irishman, so chronicles relate,
In Eastern war called loudly to his mate,
"I've caught a Tartar, Pat!" "Then bring him in."
"I cannot—sure, he struggles so like sin;"
"Then come, yourself, and set the Tartar free!"
"By ould St. Patrick, he's fast hold of me!"

O humorous story, with its moral grave;
Sin, held in bonds of silk—a willing slave!—
Would we be free, on us lays desperate hold;
The pet wolf leaps into the shelt'ring fold,
His play all gone, wild-eyed, for blood athirst,
He shows his race and nature, both accursed.

Thus in our struggle with our mortal foe;
Fired with the fight, would we our hold forego,
The rum-fiend's grip is on our breast to stay;
We must destroy him, or confess his sway.
Arouse, then, brothers, as Duneden rose
When Flodden's vict'ry gladdened all her foes;
Let boys and old men harness for the fray,
And woman dash the briny tear away,
And every man who heeds the voice of woe,
Arouse to instant battle with the foe.
No hour for parley, not a day for truce;
Each hour's delay the foe will put to use—
Extend his outposts, and make strong his line,
Or deep beneath us sink the hidden mine;
'Tis now or never!—onward, one and all,
Whatever party rise, or party fall!

In this, the deadliest conflict under heaven,
There is no quarter sought, or quarter given;
And should we falter for the strain severe,
For those who fall, take time for pall and bier;
For those who curse, take time to reason long,
Or pause to hear the politicians' song;
Then yield the victory—ours it cannot be—
And to the conqueror bow the supple knee;
Stand in his presence, humble, cowed, and dumb,
And yield obedience to our master—Rum!

A HADDOCK MEMORIAL ADDRESS.

In an address in the Academy of Music at Sioux City, Iowa, Monday afternoon, August 3, the fifth anniversary of the assassination of Rev. Geo. C. Haddock, Rev. M. A. Gault said:

That tragic event which startled your city, and the whole country, five years ago to-night, is growing in importance, and will continue to make this city more memorable as the years go by. To my mind the assassination of Dr. Haddock was a most emphatic testimony against the greatest defect in our government, its failure to enforce law. God, in his Word, has ordained civil government for the protection of society. He has clearly defined its constitution and laws. He has prescribed the qualifications of civil rulers, and he has placed the responsibility upon the people of selecting those rulers. Thus we have kind of a wheelbarrow government—the power to enforce law comes from behind, or through the people. If law is not enforced, the people, or the voting citizen, is responsible. The character of our government is a reflection of the character of the people, as truly as a government by one man is a reflection of his own character. Here, in Sioux City, you have a city government maintained at large expense to the people. Your mayor, sheriffs and policemen are called by the people to the responsible duty of enforcing the law. You have employed them as public guardians of your lives, homes, reputations and property. They have the law clearly defined, and the machinery of your courts at their disposal. You do not merely pay them for doing this duty. but they have been solemnly sworn to do it. But do they do it? I am told your city officers, from the mayor down to the last policeman, are in rebellion against the prohibitory law of your city and State. What would you think of a camp that to protect itself from horse-thieves would elect a gang of horse-thieves to stand guard? The man who steals your horse, in point of criminality is not to be compared to the man who steals your life and reputation. In defiance of our State law, your mayor receives bribes of $50 a month from your saloon-keepers to allow them to go on in their work of crime and ruin. This blood money is put into your city treasury, and thus you all become partners in the business, sharing in the profit and in the crime. This worse than license system saddles upon veery voting citizen all the crime that grows out of it. If you ask me what is the remedy, I answer: Do as any sensible business man would do, when the agent he has employed and paid to do a certain work refuses to do it, discharge him at once, and employ one who will perform the duty. To retain the perjured, faithless officials, and employ other agencies, such as law and order leagues, is to connive at crime and pay a premium on the infidelity of your officials, besides oppressing the long-suffering people with additional burdens of taxation.

But so long as our constitutions, State and national, continue to ignore any higher standard of right than public sentiment or the will of the people, then, perhaps, your officials are faithful to the standard to which they are sworn, and the responsibility would rest upon your public sentiment. Sentiment is to the law what powder is to the ball. John B. Gough once said, "I would rather have sentiment without the law than law without the sentiment." Without a stronger sentiment against the saloon, your law and order leagues, or your political parties, can afford you but little relief. Sentiment is to a political party what a stream is to a mill. It is not the mill that runs the stream, but the stream that runs the mill. It is not the steam-gauge on the engine that runs the machine; so it is not the party platform that is the moving power, but it only indicates the pressure of public sentiment behind. Your relief must come through a stronger temperance sentiment, aroused by means of pulpit, platform, press and reform organizations.

As an illustration of the power of public sentiment, even where the law is wanting, Mr. Gault said: A year ago in Kansas, when the Original Package decision was announced as nullifying the prohibitory law of the State, the liquor men of Kansas City boasted that they would establish an Original Package house in Ottawa, a city known to have the strongest prohibition sentiment of any in the State. The liquor men about midnight, were seen putting their stocks of liquor into an empty building; but the people were organized and on the alert. They did not have law upon their side, but they had what was better—public sentiment. Immediately the church bells, one after another, began ringing; then all the fire bells rang out their alarm upon the midnight air; then two engines at the depot began to whistle their wildest alarm. The people poured out from every part of the city, and soon the street around the Original Package house was filled with a surging mass of people. The liquor men said to the policemen, "You must protect our property." They replied, "If you will not get out of here, we cannot even protect your lives." With difficulty the policemen preserved order till the liquor men got their stocks on the train, but they did not breathe easy until the train started for Kansas City. It is such a sentiment you need in Sioux City, and you can have it by the same means they obtained it in Ottawa—thorough, constant, persevering agitation.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE?

BY REV. WILLIAM WISHART.

When we consider the state of society in our country at present, in comparison with what it was fifty or sixty years ago, in relation to the use of intoxicating liquors, we must admit that a very great change has been effected. At that time the use of strong drink was almost universal. No class of society seems to have been exempted from this vice.

Then the bottle stood on the side-board, as an ornament, in the houses of the wealthy, and was usually not wanting in the houses of the poor, however destitute they might be of the necessairies and comforts of life. Some of us can remember when the morning dram was given to the laborer in order to stimulate his energies for the duties of the day, and when men generally were unwilling to labor without the aid of some intoxicating stimulant. We can remember when the intoxicating cup was passed around at all social gatherings and on all festal occasions, and, indeed, sometimes on funeral occasions. And strong drink was bought and sold by all classes of society as one of the necessaries and comforts of life. There seems to have been at that time scarcely any sense of the evil and danger of indulging in the use of the intoxicating cup. To take a little too much or to become somewhat intoxicated, was regarded as a Christian infirmity and often treated as a practical joke, but was not condemned as criminal and shameful.

Such was the state of society in general when Lyman Beecher's sermons first made their appearance in 1825; and such to a great extent was the state of society when the Washingtonian movement was set on foot in 1840.

But look at the state of society now. Is it not true that entire abstinence from the use of intoxicating drink has become the universal custom in all good society? The drink custom is confined to a class—it prevails among the ignorant, the irreligious, the sensual, the degraded, but has been banished from all good society. There is, at present, among the religious and virtuous everywhere, an intelligent conviction of the evil and danger of even the moderate use of intoxicating liquors, and there is a dread and abhorrence of them as a thing seductive and ruinous. No man can maintain an honorable standing in any evangelical church in this land at the present time who is known to indulge in the habitual use of intoxicating liquors. The time was, and that not very long ago, when the moderate use of spirituous liquors was supposed by Christians generally to be sanctioned by the Word of God, and to be altogether warrantable and safe, and when intemperance was the cause of more cases of discipline than all other causes put together. Church sessions often found it necessary to take cognizance of this sin, and sometimes to deal with the same member repeatedly on account of it. They would require such member to acknowledge his sin and promise to be on his guard against the excessive use or abuse of a good creature of God in future. But as they themselves were generally moderate users, they were careful "to restore such an one in the spirit of meekness—considering themselves, lest they also be tempted." We remember of reading a story about a professing father teaching his little son the Sunday-school lesson; it was on the parable of the tares and wheat. "My son," said the father, "can you tell me what a tare is?" "Yes, pa," said the son, "you have them." "Why what do you mean, John?" "Why, when you were away at town week before last and did not come home for two days, I heard mother say to Aunt Susan, that you were 'on a tare.'" This story is suggestive of the state of religious society fifty or sixty years ago. But since that period, the Scriptures—so far as they relate to this subject—have been subjected to a more strict and correct analysis, and a higher and better sentiment prevails. Many learned men and eminent theologians have demonstrated that the Scriptures lend no sanction—give no countenance—to even the moderate use of intoxicating liquors, but, on the contrary, point to them with notes of admonition and warning, as a thing seductive and dangerous.

Certainly, then, when we look back a few years, we can easily see that there has been a great change both in sentiment and practice on this subject. There has been a great moral and religious revolution, in view of which the friends of temperance have good reason to thank God and take courage.

But still our work is not yet done. It is only in a progressive state. The great work to be accomplished is the complete deliverance of all classes of society from the dominion of strong drink, the entire eradication and banishment of the fearful curse of intemperance from our country. This is the grand consummation which every true Christian and philanthropist seeks, and for which he labors and prays. Can it be accomplished? We are sure that by the help of God it can.

Monmouth, Ill.

According to the report of the First Internal Revenue District, for the year ending June 30, 1891, Philadelphia spent over $46,000,000 for beer alone, or about $46 for every person in the city. The report shows a marked increase in beer drinking over the previous year, or a gain in two years of nearly 20 per cent. However, the report shows a decrease in the consumption of spirits. The consumption of beer in the city averaged 880 glasses to each person, or 3,700 glasses to each voter.

A SYMPOSIUM ON REFORMS.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

The relative importance of National Reform to other reforms, and especially to the anti-secret reform, is a subject on which I have recently asked an expression from ministers and others most interested. The following are the first replies I have received, and I hope to be able to add many others.

Rev. D. G. Thompson, pastor of the Covenanter church at Oakdale, Ill., writes: "National Reform seeks the proper acknowledgment of divine authority, of the rulership of Christ and the supremacy of the divine law in civil government; and is therefore fundamental to all other reforms. To advocate National Reform is directly or indirectly to advocate every other reform. To secure National Reform is to insure the success of all others. With National Reform secured, there would be no place found for secretism."

Rev. R. W. Chestnut, pastor of the New Light Covenanter church at Marissa, Ill., writes: "The principles of the National Reform Association lie at the very foundation of all reform. Without these principles, which are taken from the Bible, no reform can fully succeed. These Bible principles are both the foundation and the chief cornerstone of the whole reform structure. It has a vital relation to the anti-secret reform. The anti-secret idea should be kept fresh in the minds of all reformers. There is a time coming soon when it will be the great issue of the day in politics. The Prohibition party will then not be adequate to the crisis. An anti-secret party will then be a necessity, for the Prohibition party is full of members of secret societies: hence it will not, and cannot, be an anti-secret party. To bring in an anti-secret plank would drive out all but anti-secret members, and that would split the Prohibition forces. All must unite against King Alcohol, but the doom of secret darkness must come."

Rev. David S. Faris, pastor of the Covenanter church, Sparta, Ill., writes: "National Reform is the center and substance of every reform to be won by means of civil government. It lays down the principles which other reforms must adopt and apply if they rise to the dignity of scriptural reformation. A Sabbath law based on the will of the people like that of the State of Illinois, can have no permanency; Prohibition, having no higher authority, must be settled anew every generation; and if the State strike at secrecy only because experience proves it bad in operation, and not because before God it is immoral, it would evidently come up again for settlement in our children's day. The anti-Mormon reform ought to be based on the seventh commandment. Indeed, every law to secure the rights of man must strike its roots into the law of God, or storm and tempest will speedly overturn it. I consider our liberty badly secured in the United States, since it has only the endorsement of the will of the people. We already see how fluctuating majorities are. All that springs from man only is as the shifting sand, and must be in a state of unrest.

"To show that National Reform is practical, the several special reforms may, and ought to be brought in to illustrate. To the Christian, nothing is valuable except as it centers in Christ. In fact, Christ is so placed at the head of all that no human interest can be best promoted except in reference to him. There is danger in the reformer becoming a policy man. Political parties are apt to form about a single practical matter, as slavery, temperance, or the Sabbath. The reformer who is governed by the law of God is not concerned about policy, but duty. His business is to put forth principles, and leave it to God to give application to them in his own good time. Policy men will raise objections which are not easily answered in advance, but Divine Providence will run over these objections without difficulty when the time comes. I consider National Reform at the head of all political reforms, because it furnishes the rallying point, and the argument for all. Other reforms will lean up against it, or they will fall. Where sentiment is ripe for any special reform, it is important that National Reform should lay hold of it, both to direct it, and put it on the right foundation. Prudence and discretion are necessary in all things. Our Saviour has charged us to be 'wise as serpents and harmless as doves.' We must take care that our good be not evil spoken of."

A ROW IN THE "ROYAL ARK."

A recent number of the Boston Herald prints the following, which explains itself:

The supreme officers of the Royal Ark went to Malden last evening and ran into a regular hornets' nest.

Malden has or had a lodge of something like 500 members, and an aggregate loss of upward of $15,500 is predicted.

The Malden lodge has been one of the most prosperous, apparently, of the order in the State, and it has been a round of wonder, until very recently, that certificates maturing as far back as April 28 have remained unpaid.

President Lane, Secretary Powers, and other members of the supreme lodge, called the meeting last evening to explain the present standing of the order, and to induce the scattering sheep to again flock into the fold. But they refused to flock. Bailey's Hall was secured for the meeting.

Shortly before 8 o'clock over 300 persons had gathered. There were many ladies present.

Supreme President Lane started the ball rolling by saying that he had been president for so short a time that he really knew but little about the order. He then introduced Supreme Secretary Powers, who, he said, could tell them all about it.

Mr. Powers began by saying: "I want you to realize that this is a serious business," and his hearers audibly murmured, "We do." He continued: "All of us have entered this thing for gain. On Jan. 1 we had a fair increase of membership, and we presumed we would be able to pay all maturing certificates and still further increase. In February and March the order was dead, as far as increases were concerned.

"Ours was the first short term order to be chartered, and we had to form all the laws and plans. The reasons for the falling off was the bill before the Legislature, which was discussed for so long a time.

"There was then nothing to do but to levy extra assessments, and five of these were ordered in April and cheerfully met. There were three assessments in May and five in June and July. Objections came to these later ones and we could see that the order was doomed.

"The June and July assessments were not paid to freeze anybody out. This is not our policy. We arrived at that state that some extraordinary effort had to be made.

"The last assessments ordered need not be made before Aug. 30, and if they are paid in, it will replenish the treasury by $200,000, and your certificates will be met in full if you pay them, and co-operate with the supreme lodge by submitting to three assessments a month. Co-operate with the supreme lodge and stand together, and you will get your money; but if you kick up turmoil, your lodge is doomed."

One gentleman asked the secretary if he would guarantee the money if the assessments were paid, but the secretary could not do this.

Mr. G. W. Packer said that he understood the lodge was a fraud, and he wanted to find out if it was otherwise. He said the circular sent out led him to believe that the matured certificates up to May 1 had been paid. He joined the order on this understanding, and now found out that certificates due before that date had not been paid.

The secretary could not explain this fact satisfactorily. Mr. Packer wanted the circular read, but his wish was not granted.

Local Secretary G. A. Weymouth then caused a commotion by criticising Mr. C. A. Grover, one of the local auditors, for failure to audit the local accounts as ordered.

This brought Mr. Grover's wife to her feet. She is president of the local lodge. She explained how her husband came to neglect his task, saying that the other members of the committee failed to take any notice of their appointment, and so the work was not finished in time to report.

Then Mr. Weymouth replied to Mrs. Grover, until President Lane interfered and stopped the wordy war.

Solon M. Allis, superintendent of the Malden water board, then asked several pointed questions, which delighted the audience.

Secretary Powers stated that, as some of the officers of the lodge had ceased making payments, a new set of officers was necessary. He then prepared a blank, and stated that all persons who were to continue keeping in the lodge must sign, and then a set of officers could be chosen from them.

Only three or four signatures were received, and this plan was abandoned. So was the election of officers.

The secretary also stated that the 29 certificates, on which $50 was paid last Saturday, were not paid by the supreme lodge, but by outside brokers, who did it for speculation.

The meeting then abruptly closed.

THE LUTHERANS AND THE LODGES.

Many people act as if it were difficult to see the sinfulness of lodges. The fault found with lodges, say they, consists of certain subtleties which are beyond the understanding of an ordinary Christian, and which may only be discovered by one who has been at college for a number of years. Is this true? No, it is not. On the contrary, whoever thinks and acts thus, merely proves that he has either forgotten his catechism, or at least does not use it any longer; i. e., he does not apply what he learned at school and in catechumenical instructions. 1. Everyone has certainly learned the Bible passage quoted under question 19, John 17: 3: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

QUESTION.—Whom alone are we to acknowledge and profess according to this passage?

ANSWER.—The true God.

Q.—Who is the true God?

A.—He who has sent Jesus Christ.

Q.—What sin, therefore, do all those commit who confess God, but not Jesus Christ?

A.—They commit idolatry; they worship an idol.

Q.—The Jews say they believe in God, but they do not believe in Jesus Christ—how about that?

A.—They have strange gods; they commit idolatry.

Q.—Why?

A.—Because they neither acknowledge nor profess Jesus Christ.

Q.—It is true the lodges demand faith in a god, but not faith in Jesus Christ—whom therefore do they imitate?

A.—The Jews.

Q.—Of what are they guilty?

A.—Of idolatry.

Q.—Why?

A.—Because they do not acknowledge nor profess Jesus Christ.

Q.—To what kind of a society does a lodge member therefore belong?

A.—To an idolatrous society.

Q. What difference, then, is there in this respect between Jews and lodge men?

A. None whatever; both are idolaters; for they do not confess Jesus Christ.

2. In the second commandment every one, no doubt, has learned that he must not take an oath needlessly. (See question 38.) But you must swear before you are received into the lodge. Now tell me:

Q.—Do you in that case swear for the glory of God?

A.—No.

Q.—Does the welfare of your fellow-men make it necessary that you take an oath?

A.—No.

Q.—Does the government demand that you swear allegiance to the lodge?

A.—No.

Q.—Do the exigencies of your profession or business make it necessary?

A.—No.

Q.—Therefore, how do you swear in the lodge?

A.—Needlessly.

Q.—But, according to the second commandment, what sin does he commit, who takes an oath unnecessarily?

A.—He uses the name of God in vain.

Q.—How does God threaten such a one?

A.—"The Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

3. Whoever has learned the second commandment has also learned that he must not take an oath in uncertain matters. In other words: whatever you swear to, you must know and understand perfectly. If you do not know and understand a matter perfectly, then do not swear.

Q.—What do you think of the oath King Herod took in promise of whatever might be asked of him?

A.—It was a wicked and thoughtless act.

Q.—You are right! And how does he act who swears that he will obey those laws also which are yet to be made in the lodge?

A.—He acts exactly like King Herod.

4. Whoever has learned the second command has also learned that we must not lie or deceive by the name of God; that is, (question 40) we must not abuse the name of God by falsehood and deception. Now look into a lodge-room. There lies the Bible upon the table. For what purpose?

A.—To create the impression with the credulous, that is, upon those who still care for the church: Why the lodge believes in the Bible! Now look at the company who are here coquetting with the Bible. There are gross infidels, enemies of the Bible and its doctrine, also Jews (they at least are permitted to enter) who slander the New Testament or even spit upon it.

Q.—What is this society doing, therefore?

A.—It is using the name of God (the Bible) in vain. In plain language, such conduct is otherwise called falsehood and hypocrisy.

5. In the catechism (question 213) you will also find the passage John 5: 23: "All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him."

Q—Who is to be honored as the Father?

A—The Son.

Q—And who is to honor the Son?

A—All.

Q—How must they honor him?

A—"Even as they honor the Father."

Q—Is the Son honored in the lodge?

A—He is not.

Q—In this respect what difference is there between a Jewish temple and a lodge-room?

A—There is none.

Q—Why not?

A—Because in neither is the Son honored.

Q—But in what respect are they, that is, a Jewish temple and a lodge meeting, alike?

A—The name of Jesus is prohibited in both.

6. Everyone has certainly also learned what is written under questions 353 and 354 in our catechism, namely: "How must we pray? (In the name of Jesus) and: When do we pray in the name of Jesus?

Q—Now, do they pray to the Lord Jesus in the lodge?

A—They do not.

Q—Do they pray in the name of Jesus; that is, do they pray to God for mercy for Jesus Christ's sake?

A—No. For what would the Jews and infidels think!

Q—Is it permitted in the lodge to pray in the name of Jesus?

A—No.

Q—How, then, does a lodge-room differ from a Jewish temple in this respect?

A—In nothing.

Q—Why not?

A—In the temple of the Jews they pray to God, but not to the Lord Jesus; in the Jewish temple it is not allowed to pray to the Lord Jesus; in the lodge-room, is not permitted to pray to the Lord Jesus:—

You see, therefore, dear reader, that in order to see the sinfulness of the lodge, it is not necessary for you to attend college for a number of years like your pastor. You have already learned all this in your catechism. Only apply what you have learned, and your catechism will soon fill you with disgust for the lodge; or if you have already been ensnared in it, your catechism may by the help of God become the means of drawing you out of its meshes.—*Amerikanisch-Lutheirscher Kalender. 1890. NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A needed faculty.—A new departure at the laying of a church corner-stone.—The Royal Ark.—An infallible editor.—A solemn thought.

"Economists have long been inquiring what is the best disposal of the industry of the human race," observes the Attic philosopher who has said so many wise and excellent things. "Ah! if I could only discover the best disposal of its leisure." Every vacation time, every holiday, must bring this truth home to the mind of any observant person:—that the way to properly enjoy and make the most of such intervals from toil seems known to but a few. The poorest people are proverbially the worst economists, and it is not strange that such should squander their leisure in unprofitable ways. But I am afraid the remark will apply to others who are much higher in the scale of culture and morals. To know how to make the most of a leisure hour—nay! of a leisure moment, is an art in itself. It is too much the fashion to despise this small change, and want to take one's pleasure all in a lump. Yet the great difference between the worker and the drudge lies in this faculty for extracting enjoyment from trifles. It is the good luck-penny in one's pock-pocket that is worth more than all the millions of an Astor or a Vanderbilt.

The laying of the corner-stone of the new Congregational church in Dorchester is noticeable for two things. They did not consider it necessary to call upon the Masonic lodge for help, and they did call upon a woman, Mrs. Eliza Trask Hill, President of the Independent Woman Voters, to make one of the speeches. I am not sure that she is the only woman, as the Traveller intimates, who has made an address on such an occasion, but it is the first instance of which the writer has ever heard; and while the cause of Christianity and the cause of woman were both honored in the choice of Mrs. Hill, it marks another mile-stone in the conquering march of modern ideas. Now, in future, when the corner-stone of a new church is to be laid, let the lodge take a back-seat, and let the women who have labored, and sacrificed, and prayed, and given their mite, hardly earned or painfully saved, to its erection, come to the front.

The Ark, not the one which stranded on Mt. Ararat, has come to grief, and its members, particularly those in that branch of it which is located in Malden, are not in a pleasant frame of mind. The treasury contains about $400, and the problem is, whether to re-organize, or abandon their unseaworthy craft altogether, and divide the money among the old members in the most equitable way possible under the circumstances. It was proposed at the last meeting to give it to some benevolent purpose, such as the Malden Home for the Aged, whose shelter one member, not so depressed by his losses but that he could crack a joke, dryly observed would be needed by all the members if they kept on investing their funds in such concerns as the Royal Ark. The suggestion, however, that it be given to the poorer members of the lodge, especially the young working women, on whom the loss fell heaviest, seemed to carry the day;—which shows, if nothing more, the encouraging fact that the poor deluded victims who flock into these orders are a great deal better than the selfish swindling system with which they are identified. It would be a sad thing for humanity if there was not a certain something in every healthfully constituted human soul that gathers itself up to resist the evil influence of corrupt institutions or false beliefs, just as there is a something in the human body that will resist even the extremes of Arctic cold. It is said that the endowment orders spent over $8,600 for lobby services in the last Massachusetts Legislature; but though they have not ceased their spasmodic effort to live, their day is practically over.

The Transcript commends the New Orleans Picayune for unusual editorial candor. It frankly acknowledged a lapse of memory in making Madame Ronald, instead of Charlotte Corday, the murderess of Murat. Why this curious unwillingness to confess an error when once it has gone out into the world in black and white? I have seen more than one instance of it. A Providence paper published, a short time since, a report of a sermon delivered at an Odd-fellow celebration in that city by a Masonic clergyman, who took occasion in his discourse to hold up to the scorn of the fraternity, branding it meanwhile with all manner of opprobious epithets, that tiny sheet for women called the National Home Guard. Neither the publisher nor editor of said sheet felt disturbed by the occurrence, or the fact that its name was clipped in the report and the "National" left out: "but hereby hangs a tale." A lady in Providence publishes among other papers a Sunday-school monthly called simply the Home Guard, which many people who read the above-mentioned report naturally supposed to be the one referred to. Annoyed at the mistake, the lady sought the editor at once and desired him to make the statement in his next issue that it was not her paper which had been so unpleasantly criticised. But he refused to acknowledge that any error had been made, and it was only by paying for it as an advertisement that she got a correction inserted. One is amusingly reminded of the editor who published a statement in his paper that a certain man had been hanged; and when the individual appeared before him in person and asked to have the statement taken back, refused to do so, finally consenting, however, to amend it so far as to say that the rope broke. I think he must have been a near relation to the Providence editor.

That a system is false and dangerous does not mean that it may not contain within itself some important truths. Christian Science—"falsely so-called"—has done some incidental good in teaching that the less the mind occupies itself with the body the better, and that health largely depends upon our mental condition. Theosophy, as a religious system, has in it no "leaves of healing for the nations," yet the other day I was struck by the way in which one of its writers sets an old truth in a new light: "If we find that we are hard and unsympathizing towards any certain kind of delinquent, we may infer that we have not as yet conquered in ourselves that person's evil tendency or weakness. The very man who is hard and contemptuous towards a drunkard, may, however temperate he is in this life, be himself a drunkard in some future incarnation. If a woman scorns a fallen sister, she thereby indicates that she needs and will have in her future career just such a fall herself, however superbly she may wear her virtue at the present temptationless moment." While we reject the idea of a past or future succession of lives on this earthly planet, we all believe in another life somewhere—a life of purity and joy, or its reverse. As we feel and act towards the degraded children of vice and misery will it be meted to us then. The merciful shall obtain mercy. But scorn for those who fall is the very spirit of the bottomless pit.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, Aug. 19, 1891.

Washington is just now the scientific Mecca of America, owing to the presence here of a large number of scientists from all sections of the country in attendance upon the fortieth annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, which has a membership of about 2,000, although not more than two-thirds of them are expected to attend the meeting, which began here to-day, and which will continue for some days. The meetings are held in the Columbian University building. This evening a reception is to be held.

General regret is expressed at the resignation of Rev. A. H. Zimmerman, State Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association for Maryland, West Virginia and the District of Columbia, which is to take effect in September. He will, it is thought, return to the evangelistic work which he left to accept the Secretaryship.

It is now evident that a considerable portion of the $51,000,000 4½ per cent bonds maturing in September, perhaps as much as $20,000,000, or $25,000,000, will not be presented for extension at 2 per cent under the offer of the Treasury Department which holds good until September 2d. Those not presented for extension will have to be redeemed, and the Secretary of the Treasury says there will be no difficulty about meeting this obligation, although it is in a measure an unexpected one, as it had been expected that all of these bonds would have been presented for extension at 2 per cent.

Rev. Samuel Kramer died here on Sunday, in his eighty-third year. He devoted the greater portion of his life to work in the itinerate field, and was the founder of the Seaman's Bethel, which, until several years ago, was located near the Navy Yard in this city. He was also vice-president of the board of managers of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Temporary Home. During the late war he was a chaplain in the Navy, and a major in the army, a record that was certainly unique.

"Is the young man safe?" was the very interesting theme upon which Rev. Dr. Henry E. Mott, of Dubuque, Iowa, who is temporarily filling a Washington pulpit, talked to the Y. M. C. A., Sunday afternoon. He gave, as the three greatest needs of the young man, direction, companionship and redemption. In concluding his talk, he summed up the evidence and decided that the question "Is the young man safe?" must be answered in the negative. "For," said he, "remember that our country is as dangerous a foe to itself as its own worst enemy. Do not forget that New York City elected to Congress both Sunset Cox and John Morrissey, and the illustration will prove the meaning. Young men who have learned the three great qualifications of a good life, and, above everything, honor in its highest sense, are our hope in the preservation of everything that is noblest and best in the land."

Some of those who think that science is the enemy of religion should have listened to the address delivered by Prof. Conrad at Mount Vernon Place church, Sunday night. The fact of the professor being a scientist of distinction made his testimony all the more valuable to his hearers. "The Christian's Reply to the Skeptic" was the title he chose for his discourse, and he took the interview of Nicodemus with the Saviour to start with, and said that if public men of to-day were to be measured on the standing of Nicodemus they would leave the public service by brigades. Nicodemus, he said, of the outgoing dynasty, met Christ, of the incoming dynasty, in a respectful manner and wanted his doubts settled. He then spoke of how natural it was for the young man to doubt, and how necessary it was for him to get his doubts settled. "Pure science," he said, "does not contradict religion. There is as much evolution in religion as in science." After speaking of the business aspect of religion and urging his hearers to serve the Lord with happiness and build their religion on the ground of determination, he closed by saying: "A man has just as much religion as he acts."

The Washington delegates to the recent High Tent of Rechabites, held at Savannah, Georgia, have returned. A Washington man—Mr. N. Bunch—was elected High Chief Ruler, and it was decided to hold the next annual session of the order in Washington. As that convention will celebrate the semi-centennial of the order, it is to be made a memorable event in secret temperance circles.

It is now understood here that President Harrison will return to the White House early in September, because of pressing public business to which he wishes to give his personal attention.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

Narragansett Bay, R. I., Aug. 14, 1891.

An hour's run by rail brought us from Boston to Providence, where we took the steamer Richard Borden for a seventeen-mile sail and a Sabbath with the faithful in Christ at Bristol. The day is fine, and the change from city bustle is a happy relief; quite as exhilarating as a life-insurance policy or membership certificate in a "benevolent order," and much less expensive.

By the way, judicial investigation is unearthing some lovely features in these tender-hearted, open-handed schemes that furnish "Golden Opportunities" for the industrial masses to invest their hard-earned but scanty margins, with promises of enormous returns. Turning on the light discloses the fact that the applicant for benefits makes all the promises, does all the swearing, and, in most cases, actually pays all the money. The contract is artfully worded, but when judicially sifted it transpires that the sovereign grand lodges have supreme authority not to pay one cent to policy holders if they so elect, and their sweet will is restricted only by an injunction not to pay to any one a sum in excess of that mentioned in the bond. This is Masonry pure and simple, and it reveals the paternity of the secret benevolent orders. As in one, so in all these lodges, the swearing is all done by the applicant, and when once inducted he finds that the indispensable requisite to good standing is "pay and obey." Now, since the Masonic covenant does not provide for pecuniary benefits, and since payment is left entirely optional with the sovereigns in the grand lodges, who shall presume to deny their benevolence? Every cent remitted to policyholders is not required by contract, but is simply and solely a gift of benefit orders that never promised to pay a farthing at any time, or under any circumstances. Here, for instance, is the "Old Colony." Its beneficiaries have paid in assessments at different times—$128, as reported by the press, under an impression that they were to receive $100 on maturity of their policies. Now that they have paid their money and the testing time has come, they find it was not in the contract; only an impression or "tacit understanding" that if they paid all assessments, they should receive $100. That is, the lodge takes $128, never promising to refund one cent, but, out of pure unalloyed generosity, offers to pay $80, charging only the trifle of $48 for manipulating the affair.

Providence, R. I., Aug. 18.—A live prayer-meeting at Bristol on Friday evening was the harbinger of what proved to be a time of refreshing. We were the guests of Bro. and Sister Geo. H. Green, to whose attention to our comfort nothing could have been added to render our visit more pleasant or helpful. With them we visited the Soldiers' Home, recently started, and containing about fifty of the veterans. The place where King Philip fell was pointed out to us. The residence built by General Burnside, where he died, with many places of note, were shown us.

Three Sabbath services at the Independent Christian Church were in the Spirit, and fairly well attended. At 6 o'clock that evening I attended, and, by request, took the lead of the Y. M. C. A. meeting. It was a profitable hour, and strong testimonies were given to the saving power of the Gospel.

Our trip up the Bay, on Monday, was simply delightful. Landing, we were met by Bro. and Sister Graves, of Rehoboth, and taken six miles to their quiet country home. Bro. G. is not strong physically, but our cause has no stauncher friend in New England, and there is not a home on this continent where a true reformer will receive a heartier welcome. We made a number of calls, and trust the way will open for a return and meetngs in the direct line of our work.

FROM THE WASHINGTON AGENT.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 19, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—As revolves the Hub, so moves the wheel. I find the spirit of reform in the air. Meetings are held and public sentiment created. Many voices are crying "Stop, stop!" to the forces which are dragging thousands of priceless souls to the pit.

Sabbath before last an open-air meeting which I attended in Washington was interrupted by companies of men passing, with bands playing and banners flying. It was the G. A. R. returning from camp. Had a theatrical company, or Masonic funeral, been the occasion of the interruption, we should not have thought it so strange, but to see the old soldiers thus desecrating the Sabbath was a sorry sight indeed. I question if many would have done it but for loyalty to their lodge. They both went and returned on God's holy day.

The failure of a number of the "Royal Grand" insurance lodges of this city is calling forth the ridicule of the papers, and opening the eyes of many who have been expecting chickens from bad eggs. The Great Noble Grand hatchers will have to move their nests to more congenial quarters if they get big salaries for silly secrets.

Notwithstanding there was much opposition, Rev. Mr. Hood, of the United Presbyterian church, welcomed a discussion of the lodge. I addressed a good audience on Sabbath evening. The best of attention was given, and from what I learn, I judge the truth was welcomed in many hearts. Some were greatly disturbed, manifesting an un-Christlike spirit. With those who took a more sober view this but helped to confirm the facts.

In the absence of the New England agent, I conducted the 39th parlor meeting, held on Monday evenings in the parlors of Suite 1, Hotel Howland. These meetings have been of great help to those seeking light on the lodge question. Brother and Sister Powers, who so kindly provide the place of meeting, are recent converts to our work. Their zeal for Christ leads them to put forth every exertion possible for the enlightenment of those around. There were present at this meeting six ministers and several young men and women just entering upon their life work. It was indeed a pleasure and privilege to address such a company. The utmost freedom was felt. Questions were asked and experiences given until a late hour. Sister Rockwood, though over three-score-and-ten, is engaged in most of the prominent reform works, especially that of the W. C. T. U., and is helping nobly in the furtherance of our work. She had not known of our paper till one year ago. In renewing her subscription she says: "I have become attached to your paper, and want it a constant visitor in my family. I circulate it when I have read it." The leaven of truth is at work in New England, and we have every reason to press onward and upward, for the victory will be ours.

CORRESPONDENCE.

IN MEMORY OF HADDOCK.

Cresco, Iowa, Aug. 17, 1891.

By invitation of the Law and Order League, I spent Sabbath, August 2, at Sioux City and preached in the First M. E. church in the morning, the church of which Dr. Haddock was pastor when he was so cruelly shot down upon the street. I preached in the evening in the Whitfield M. E. church, where the Immanuel Baptist, Second Presbyterian and Whitfield congregations united for a memorial service. It was the fifth anniversary of the death of Iowa's prohibition martyr. Each year there is an increased interest in these memorial services.

The growth of the city is marvelous since I was here four years ago; but for the past two years the temperance sentiment aroused by the assassination of Dr. Haddock has been on the decline. Liquor men have entire control of the city government. This is mainly owing to the fact that the wealthy men of Sioux City—men who control its street-car lines and large business interests, are men whose influence is thrown against the church and in favor of the saloons. The mayor collects fines each week from a large number of saloons, and they go on the same as under license. Gambling and houses of prostitution hold high carnival.

The city is fearfully lodge-ridden. Arensdorf, whom very few doubt to be the murderer of Dr. Haddock, still walks the streets, but all remark his altered appearance. His property has been swept away, and his dejected look and melancholy face proclaim that he walks under the shadow of a great crime. The ex-sheriff was once my schoolmate in Wisconsin, and gave me much inside information. He said that Arensdorf belonged to the same lodge with himself. There is little doubt but that the lodge had much to do in securing his acquittal.

The Republican party, as well as the Democratic, is under the heels of the beerocracy; but the Democratic paper of Sioux City is more outspoken against the liquor administration than the Republican. Ex-Senator Clark spoke on Monday evening in the Academy of Music, cracking the Republican lash over the heads of the people. He said, "I tell you I have little respect for a Prohibitionist who will not stand by the Republican party this year." Senator Clark, in the Senate, opposed giving the police power to the governor, some years ago, the only measure that would have secured the law's enforcement in Iowa. There are indications that leading politicians of both parties in Iowa will allow Prohibition to be knifed this fall, as in 1889, and then in 1892 will try to carry a license platform.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

Boston, August 16, 1891.

We are sure that the readers of the Cynosure are interested in the progress of the anti-Romanist movement being so faithfully conducted in this city by that noble and self-sacrificing gentleman, Mr. Benjamin F. Bradbury, whose indefatigable energy excites the admiration of even the class he is striving to educate and emancipate.

At the present crisis of American independence, loyal and patriotic men are needed in its defence, and none are more entitled to recognition and encouragement than Mr. Bradbury for the uncompromising stand he has taken. There are many grand men and women who have been, and are now, actively engaged in the conflict, but in this section of the country no one is better known, and dreaded as well as hated, by the Roman hierarchy than the Winter street pharmacist.

He is the right man in the right place. The post which he occupies in the field is indispensable to the cause, and pivotal so far as the work here is concerned. Few men are properly constituted to successfully hold the position.

To fully appreciate his efforts one must come in close contact with them. Those who are simply interested, can have little or no idea of the impediments to be overcome,—the insufficiency of funds; disappointments in speakers; the recreancy of professed adherents; the sharp criticisms from pulpits which have only a superficial conception of the situation; the denunciations and unsympathetic attitude of a degenerated and Romanized press, and a thousand and one other seemingly insignificant annoyances, which, nevertheless, are potent in their evil effects. In spite of all these discouragements, there is no fear of his retreat. There is nothing ephemeral about his advocacy.

It is quite easy to suppose a reform outside of business interests, or in a manner which will not directly involve those interests in any risks, but Mr. Bradbury has risked everything in his identification with this movement.

As regularly as the weeks come round, the card announcing the speaker for the following Sunday at Music Hall, or Tremont Temple, in defiance of the imminent danger of broken heads, as well as glass, appears in the window of his store, which is located in the most central business part of the city, and is a most excellent advertising medium for the cause.

Every Sunday afternoon, in summer as well as in winter, when a respite would be reasonably expected, he appears on the platform of the Patriotic Lectureship, as its chairman, apparently as fresh, and doubtless as earnest, as when he first entered upon the work, and one glance at his complaisant, yet determined, countenance should banish any fears which his compatriots may entertain of his ever becoming a victim of desuetude.

Mr. Bradbury is sustained by something more than transient emotion or volatile enthusiasm, which are characteristics of all great reforms, and more or less essential in the early stages of their development. He has in a sense outlived both, and stands on the solid bed-rock of an immutable principle. His purpose is comprehensive, and method of procedure well defined in the defence of American institutions against the intrigues and onslaughts of the papacy, their most deadly enemy. His motto is practically, as well as theoretically, that of old Davy Crockett's. He does not idly accept the simple advice of making sure of being right, and then spasmodically going ahead, but is sure he is right and goes unswervingly ahead.

His firmness is an inspiration to the community. Fearless of boycott, ignoring the innuendoes of the enemy, and the sneers of a mongrel Protestantism, he stands invincible at his guns, sending shot after shot, most effectually, into the ranks of the aggressive foe.

It must be most gratifying to Mr. Bradbury to note a development in the movement which Rome has most dreaded, and insidiously done her best to prevent, the augmentation of prominent lay, and eminent clerical, Protestants from almost every denomination, and especially the increasing attendance at his meetings, of the most respectable classes; for she knows full well that if this American Demosthenes can get the attention of the intelligent citizens of modern Athens, the phillipies which he is hurling from the platform of a patriotic Aeropagus must inevitably thwart her machinations against our Republic, its overthrow, and the subjugation of its people to her dictates, for her acknowledged ambition is the ubiquity of her domination.

To see an auditorium with a seating capacity of 2,500 crowded nearly to its lofty dome, in midsummer, by not only a well-dressed, but decidedly intelligent, audience, is indisputable evidence of the awakening which these meetings are affecting. Indeed, Music Hall may be appropriately termed the new cradle of American liberty.

At this juncture of the work, the best speakers must be procured, whose statements must be scientifically positive, their criticisms philosophical, and conclusions logical, for the thinking and studious classes who are now becoming interested will not be satisfied with merely empirical allegations, no matter how pleasing the address or elegant the language. It will require no small amount of money to supply the platform with such speakers, but nevertheless it must be forthcoming, or the work will be lamentably and perhaps fatally retarded.

When it is remembered that Mr. Bradbury's services are rendered without remuneration, and must, unavoidably, infringe, more or less, upon the interests of a large pharmaceutical and drug business, his perseverance certainly seems little less than phenomenal. D. P. MATHEWS.

PENNSYLVANIANS, READ THIS!

YORK, Pa., Aug. 17, 1891.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In order to advance the cause in general, to extend the circulation of the Cynosure in Pennsylvania, and to strengthen the Pennsylvania Christian Anti-secret Association, I will mail an envelope containing seven anti-secret and anti-Catholic tracts, to any address in this State, on the receipt of one red stamp. This offer is good for the remainder of the year.

Let all readers of the Cynosure in Pennsylvania send to me a list of the names and addresses of their honest and intelligent friends, with one stamp for each name, and I will attend to them immediately.

Every envelope will contain a Cynosure prospectus and several N. C. A. tracts, besides the very best anti-Catholic documents. And now if any of our friends in this State are wide awake and free from chills, I am ready and anxious to hear from them. Yours, etc.,

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

THE BATTLE IS ON.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., August 17, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The weekly visits of the greatest herald of God's truth are looked for by me with much anxiety, and next to the Word of God I prize the Cynosure. I am fighting Masonry in the church and out of it. I meet with many of the "craft," and as soon as I open up on them they show their temper, not having fully learned to "subdue their passions." Some, however, have a Masonic plaster on their mouth, and they keep silent. I am also working for the Cynosure's circulation in this city, and many would take it and read it that have quit the lodge, but that oath is what holds them. Yours for the truth,

A. J. MILLARD.

"NO JEWS IN THE MILLENNIUM."

ELGIN, Ill., August, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Brother Blanchard, in his Baccalaurate sermon, preached at Commencement at Wheaton College, June 21, 1891, and which the readers of the Christian Cynosure are asked to peruse carefully, says: "And, first, there are to be no Jews in the millennium. For Christ will be King there; and in him there is neither Jew nor Greek." Gal. 3:28.

After the readers of the Christian Cynosure have carefully perused our brother's sermon, may they then carefully study Gal. 3:28; and may the Holy Spirit lead them to see what logically follows the above statement, if that statement is true. Is not the second clause of that verse as true as the first? "There are to be" no bondmen nor freemen in the millennium. For Christ will be King there; and in him "there is neither bond nor free," Gal. 3:28. And now for the third clause in the above verse: There are to be no men or women in the millennium. "For Christ will be King there; and in him there is neither male nor female." Gal. 3:28. If Gal. 3:28 has any reference to the state of things in the millennium, we are unable to see it.

We trust we shall be pardoned for taking exception to our good brother's interpretation of Scripture. Respectfully yours,

GEO. R. MILTON.

MASONRY SHOWS ITS HAND IN THE CHURCH.

GURDON, Ark., Aug. 16, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—There has been some very serious trouble caused by the Masons in this city. A meeting was called by the Baptist church of which I am pastor, for the purpose of carrying into effect some of the by-laws of the society. The meeting was held, and its action resulted in the exclusion of several members, some of whom were Masons, and of every Mason who was not present. When a charge was about to be brought against them, those members in the meeting who were Masons interfered to stop the question and discuss it, and declared that before they would suffer the delinquents to be excluded they would pay the debt for them. On the other hand, when a charge was brought against the members who were not Masons, there was stillness, as there was when heaven struck silence. Of course, this was observed by the other members.

Now there is no higher tribunal on earth (for the trial of its members) than a church; and whenever it meets, the object should be to please God and not man; for we are not to please ourselves, but God. "Call no man master;" "Let God be true, but every man a liar." Ah, what a benighted land is ours! Z. H. ANDERSON,

Pastor.

[The brother should write to Rev. R. N. Countee, Memphis, Tenn., who has had a similar experience, for condolence and advice.]

HOW TO CURE MOUTH AND LEG DISEASE IN CATTLE.

MARTINSTOWN, Mo., Aug. 11, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I saw in your news items of the 6th instant a report of mouth and leg disease among cattle in your State. I suppose the same malady attacked my cattle two weeks ago; but all seem to be well now. The following is the treatment adopted, which please publish, and ask other papers to reprint: Quarantine the sick cattle, giving them access to water in which they can stand if they like. Give, once a day, one heaped tablespoonful of powdered alum and one heaped tablespoonful of salt, dissolved in half a gallon of cool water. The sick cattle will probably drink this mixture voluntarily; if not, drench them with it. Give them soft, chopped feed twice a day. We used this, and soon found the sick cattle recovering. I don't know it would work in a delayed case; but it would not be much trouble to try it. Yours truly, A. B. LIPP.

PITH AND POINT.

SAVING LOVE.

"Our Lord Jesus Christ is still 'the way, the truth and the life,' 'the same yesterday, to-day, and forever;' and his love has neither grown cold, nor diminished, nor lost its power to redeem us, nor is it a whit less precious to those who seek and enjoy it. It can still save from sin and from being overcome by temptations, and cleanse us from all iniquity."—SCRIP AND STAFF.

WHAT A CHURCH IS.

"Whenever two or more persons agree to help each other to serve God, they form a church."—EDWARD EGGLESTON.

"I OPPOSE MODERN SPIRITUALISM:

"(1.) Because it is expressly forbidden and denounced in the Bible (where it is designated 'possessed of devils,' 'possessed of a spirit of divination,' 'having unclean spirits,' etc.), under the titles of 'doctrines of devils,' 'sorcery,' 'witchcraft,' 'familiar spirits,' and other like names. (2.) Because it antagonizes the Bible and reviles its teachings. (3.) Because it rejects the divine nature and mediatorial office of Jesus Christ. (4.) Because it claims a probationary state after death. (5.) Because it leads its devotees to believe, say, and do, many silly things. (6.) Because no reliance can be placed on its revelations, which are either distortions of truth or real lies. (7.) Because its phenomena are unsatisfactory and useless. (8.) Because (with other reasons) Jesus and his apostles drove multitudes of evil spirits out of the 'mediums' of their day, restoring them to sanity and physical health."—H. M. HUGUNIN, Chicago.

NINETY-TWO, AND LOVES THE CYNOSURE.

"I am nearly ninety-two years of age.....I have been a reader and admirer of the Cynosure for many years, and shall take it as long as I live. I wish it was taken in every family; it would not fail to do a vast amount of good. May God bless its editors and publishers and all its patrons."—W. G. KIRK.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

"Christianity is a life, not a dogma. Theology may be dogmatic, but Christianity is truth manifested in the flesh, even as the Godhead was manifested in Christ. It is a principle, opposition to which has always wrought havoc in the churches, and dishonored the Saviour."—THE MAN WITH THE INK-HORN.

BEGINNING AT THE WRONG END.

"It is no part of a church's duty to give the children a denominational training in the hope of making them Christians. Get them first thoroughly converted to Christ, as early as possible, warn them against everything that is evil and un-Christian, and let them go forth into the world, not to be of it, but to win it for Christ. This is better than teaching them that the church has the first and greatest demand upon their service."—IBID.

ONE OF THE FAMILY.

"The Cynosure has become one of the family, and is as anxiously looked for each week as an absent one's return. I regard it as the leading 'down-brake' on secret societies, and one that holds them in check; otherwise they would run themselves, the church, and the State, to destruction. May its beacon-light on the ocean shining help many a tempest-tossed soul to the haven of liberty, religion and the Father's house."—REV. J. C. WEIDLER, Biglerville, Penn.

IN NEW ENGLAND.

"I am much pleased with the Cynosure under its present management, and as my son (W. B. S.) is with me, we hope largely to increase its circulation in Boston and New England."—J. P. STODDARD, Boston, Mass.

A HELPFUL PAPER.

"I find the Cynosure a very helpful visitor, both to my family and pulpit. It inspires me to be more separated from the world, and more fearless in saying to the people 'thus saith the Lord Almighty.' My prayer is that the paper and its editors may live long and be useful instruments in suppressing the powers of darkness in high places."—REV. E. D. SIMMS, Franklin, La.

"REJOICING IN THE TRUTH."

"I have been sitting by and rejoicing that our work is being so well and wisely done by the Cynosure. I, however, hope to take a more active part than of late. I am not less convinced of the reality and magnitude of the great evils you are combating, and the importance of the great reform you are laboring to effect than aforetime."—REV. JOEL SWARTZ, Gettysburg, Pa.

A "SOUL-LIFTER."

"I am proud to read your paper. It lifted up my very soul. I long since took a decided stand against secret societies."—REV. WM. FOUNTAIN, Little Rock, Ark.

SHOULD CHURCH ASSOCIATIONS DISCUSS LODGE SECRECY?

Nearly a year ago, among other questions addressed, through the Cynosure, to the pastors of Congregational ministers in various parts of the United States, was the following:

"Do you believe that this subject (secret societies) should be discussed at our associational meetings?"

Answers were received from numerous pastors, as follows:

'Yes, and in the pulpit, and everywhere. The cowardice of the church has been a great feeder of secret societies."

"Discuss it in various religious gatherings, where it may willingly be considered,"

"Yes, in due proportions with the great variety of topics which must be discussed in these meetings, and in due relation to the importance of each topic to the present emergencies of Christian life, character and influence in the church."

"Yes, and no."

"I do not."

"Am inclined to the opinion that the time at our associational meetings could be used to better advantage than by the discussion of this subject."

"Yes, temperately. In nothing is there call for greater charity."

"Yes; discuss them, unless there is some especial reason against it."

"I do think the subject should be discussed at our associational meetings, and will do what I can to bring it before our association."

"Yes; but don't know that we could get this done in ———; we have too many Masonic preachers—some of them D. D's. at that, Secret societies are strangling some of our churches in this State."

"By all means; and one session will not be long enough to exhaust the subject, or bring the church up to the Christian standard."

"By all means, at the State associational meetings."

OBITUARY.

DR. JOHN HAYS GRAY.

Cambridgeboro, Proctor county, Pa., mourns the loss of one of its most eminent and public-spirited citizens, Dr. John H. Gray, who died at his home on Monday, July 13, 1891.

He was the oldest son of Joseph Gray, of Egremont, Mass.; was born in Concord, Erie Co., April 24, 1824, and was, consequently, but little more than 66 years of age at the time of his death. When he was five years old the family removed to Cambridge, where he resided during the remainder of his life. His education was received in the Cambridgeboro schools and at the Waterford Academy. Later on he taught school and studied medicine with Dr. Terry, of Edinboro, and, in 1847, was graduated from the Berkshire (Mass.) Medical College.

In 1848 he was married to Miss Sophia R. Wheelock, and from this happy union sprang seven children, all of whom survive their father, are all married, and all with one exception (Mrs. D. E. Kelley, of Millers' Station, Pa.), reside in Cambridgeboro.

For forty years Dr. Gray practiced medicine, having a large and lucrative practice. In 1870 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature, taking an active part in the political contests of that period, and was a prominent figure in many of the various notable movements of the past twenty years. A man of strong convictions, he dared to advocate and defend whatever he deemed right. For a long series of years he was a member of the Baptist church in Cambridge, but on account of his Anti-masonic belief he felt it his duty to sever his connection with that church.

About thirty years ago he discovered what are now known as the "Gray Mineral Springs;" but not until he visited the Hot Springs in Arkansas did he become acquainted with the valuable medicinal virtues of the water flowing from his own. From that time onward he devoted his efforts to the promulgation of the great curative qualities of the springs which he controlled.

On the 23d of last March he had a stroke of paralysis, which to some extent rendered his right side helpless. On the 10th of July he rode out in his carriage, and on the following day he suffered a second stroke of paralysis, and gradually sank until death came to his relief. He died full in the faith of the Redeemer, and looked forward, longingly, to the joys of the future world.

Originally a Democrat, Dr. Gray subsequently became a Republican, ardently supported Horace Greeley for the Presidency, and afterwards joined the Prohibitionists. He was always foremost in the cause of temperance.

An immense concourse gathered in the Baptist church in which his funeral services were held. The funeral sermon was delivered by Rev. Mr. Thomas, formerly of Cambridge, and a life-long bosom friend of Dr. Gray, who had specially requested him to officiate. Rev. L. B Underwood and Rev. William Grassie also participated in the exercises. The choir sang several songs, favorites of the deceased, and the speakers referred to his life-work and strong Christian sentiments, telling in touching words of his personal traits and character. Mr. Underwood, especially, bore witness to his Christian triumph in the hour of death.

The remains were enclosed in a handsome black casket, on which rested a beautiful wreath of white water-lilies. When the services were ended, the procession proceeded to the Cambridge cemetery. The pall-bearers were Messrs. Frank Hyatt, Perry Gage, Sherman Sæger, and D. E. Kelly, all sons-in-law of Dr. Gray. There his body rests in peace, awaiting the resurrection of the just. Peace to his memory.

WAYS OF DOING GOOD.

"Little influences, apparently insignificant, such as words, examples, books, tracts, visits, contributions, warnings, letters, songs, prayers, etc., have resulted in the conversion and consequent usefulness of thousands. Especially is this true of book and tract circulation."

Tracts did good service in the great reformation in Germany. Huss and Baxter were converted by reading tracts. The late Rev. Dr. Fish of Newark, says that "he can safely say that he has known of hundreds of conversions that could be traced to tracts and books."

"During the year 1890, I sold 570 anti-secret, anti-Catholic and prohibition papers. And I distributed here about one hundred Cynosures free, besides mailing many to intelligent persons. I sold and distributed 500. 'Killed without Inquest.' I also gave out many anti-secret and anti-Catholic tracts. And I sold 242 anti-secret and anti-Catholic books and pamphlets.

"I desire to say that I believe that millions of anti-secret and anti-Catholic publications of all sorts could be sold yearly, in the United States, if our friends would try to sell them. I find no difficulty about selling such publications in the city of York."—Edward J. Chalfant.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 27, 1891.

MEN WHO DID RIGHT IN THE SIGHT OF THE LORD.

It is recorded in 2 Kings 15:34 that King Jotham "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord." This was the common record made of all the Hebrew kings who were faithful to the true, and who opposed all false religions. They were not all perfect men, but they were true patriots and benefactors, and so obtained the same honorable record: They "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord."

There is but one religion which makes men free. All false religions enslave men, by making them dependent upon priests. But "this is life eternal, to know the true God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent." (John 17:3.) And the Hebrew Messiah was the Mediator, Christ—the Sent One; and when a man has made his peace with God, through Christ, he is free and independent of all created beings. Being in Christ, and so one with God, he needs no priestly absolution; and no Balaam can effectually curse him. He may

> "The darkening universe defy
> To quench his immortality,
> Or shake his trust in God."

Jesus Christ was the leader of the armies of Israel. He presided amid the clouds of Sinai, whose lightnings were his sceptre, and their thunders his voice; and from that sublime day and hour to the present day, a ceaseless conflict has been waged by the usurping god of this world, to suppress Christ and set aside his law, on which hangs the hope of the human race. And this conflict grows fierce as the end draws nigh. As "humanity sweeps onward," God is evermore presenting test-questions on which men divide, putting "the sheep upon the right side, and the goats upon the left."

Those old Hebrew wars always turned on the one pivot-question, viz.: Whether mankind should worship the one true God, through Jesus Christ, or the many false gods, without Christ. In those trying test-periods, those old reformer-kings stood firm for Christ; and the inspired historian sums up their history for us in the same words for each of them: "He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord." For in every such struggle God is ever looking on!

In 1811 the Methodist Episcopal church was in the greenness of its vigor. Coke had been ordained its first bishop, and for twenty years after that date he preached the principles which the Methodist church in America had adopted. Unlike many Methodists of the present day, Mr. Wesley, when he saw anything damaging or destroying human welfare, assailed it without hesitation. In his sermon on the distillers of England he said: "They murder His majesty's subjects without stint; neither does their eye pity or spare; they drive them to hell like sheep." Among his rules for his praying bands, he wrote one excluding all who "take snuff or drink drams." Clarkson and Wilberforce were there in the midst of their struggles to abolish the African slave-trade. Three hundred ships sailed in that traffic from Liverpool alone, and, of course, violent opposition was aroused.

Mr. Wesley might have shrunk, and if governed by modern motives, would have shrunk, from bringing the hatred and opposition of the powerful West India interest down on his societies. He said to Mr. Wilberforce: "Your cause is of God, and you will surely triumph, unless the devil first wears you out." In America he published a letter to slave-holders, telling them that their houses, lands, furniture, all that they had, was covered with blood; and that "American slavery is the vilest that ever saw the sun."

But, in 1843, the Methodist Episcopal church in America had become poisoned with the virus of human slavery. Its general Conference, at Cincinnati, in 1836, voted to censure George Storrs and Orange Scott for attending an anti-slavery meeting and praying for the downfall of slavery. Both were blameless, and excellent men and ministers of Christ. The conference, at the same sitting, forbade its ministers to preach against slavery. A Methodist in the Marietta circuit sold a whole family of colored Methodists down the Ohio river to the Legrees of the South, among plantations which were the graveyards of murdered slaves. A slave-mother, caught and shipped South from Cincinnati, where that conference met, arose at midnight, threw her three little children into the dark river, jumped after them, and all went together to testify at the bar of God. In the face of the ringing testimony of Wesley against slave-holding—the early rule of their own church excluding slave-holders—and in the face of a multitude of facts like the above, and of the Bible law that the man who should steal and sell a man, or in whose hands a stolen man was found, should be put to death; though every slave had been stolen, or his father or mother before him had been stolen; against this Niagara of proof that slave-holding was both crime and sin, it was suffered to grow up under American communion tables and attempt the dissolution of the American Union, the abolition of free government, and the annihilation of the hopes of man. A Methodist bishop—Andrew—held slaves, and the general conference could not find law to order him "to let the oppressed go free." In that dreary hour, conscientious members left the church which had been their earthly Paradise, and, in so doing, "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord."

John Rawson, one of them, had this crowning characteristic: "He abhorred that which is evil," as the Bible commands us, and whenever he met it, he opposed it. He "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord." He voted against the saloon and those who license it. Like Wesley, too, he despised a Masonic lodge, and wore none of its drapery or costume. He "hated even their garments spotted by the flesh." (Jude 23.)

In 1762 a correct exposition of Masonry was published in London, entitled "Jachin and Boaz." The author was found dead in the street, with his throat cut. Wesley read this book, and says, in his Journal, "If this book be true, and it appears to be, what a banter is Freemasonry on the human race!" Every Mason, when properly initiated, still swears consent to have his throat cut as was the author of "Jachin and Boaz." Morgan was murdered in 1826, and his blood is still encrusted on Masonry, silently calling down the wrath of God. The late John Rawson was fifteen years old when that murder was committed, and his life, like that of Wesley, has been a testimony against the lodge.

These, and all other men who have done that which was right in the sight of the Lord,—"these are they that have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." (Rev. 7:14-17.)

A STUPENDOUS SERMON.

The sermon of Dr. E. P. Goodwin, well-known to our readers, delivered before the representatives of all the Congregationalists in our world, London, July 10, and already mentioned in our columns, has come to our hands. It was heralded to the secular press by the hiss which its delivery occasioned. We have now read the sermon, with profound admiration for the author, and gratitude to God. In our deliberate judgment the writer will be , and deserves to be, remembered for that sermon as the great work of his useful and successful life.

We shall attempt no analysis of it in a column newspaper article. The only way to form an idea of it is to read it. He stood in the focal point toward which the eyes of Christians of two continents were turned, and he realized the grandeur of his theme and the prominence of his position. Hume, Brougham, Macaulay, and Motley, with their multitude of echoes, have declared that the mind of the Puritans was the mint of freedom for both the British and American constitutions; and the mind of the Puritans was illuminated by their "Faith," which was the theme of the discourse.

It is the fashion of the day to impute the doctrines of the Bible, which the world hates, to some fearless man or men who have taught them; and, as all men are imperfect, denounce the truths of God as the errors of men. God's sovereignty is "Calvinism," "hell-fire" an invention of the "Middle Ages;" as though Christ had not taught the reality of both. Dr. Goodwin's sermon is altogether the most masterly defence of the Bible against the cavils of modern criticism we have ever seen. He shows that the Puritans believed the Bible, and that Christ indorsed it, and, hence, to scout their teaching is to deny Christ. The miscalled "Higher Criticism" which does this is but the "opposition of science falsely so called."

The first meeting of Congregationalists established in London was broken up, and sixty-four men, women, and children were locked up in the New Gate and Giltspun Compter prisons. The venom of human depravity was aroused by the truth taught in those meetings, and neither depravity nor truth have changed nature since. And nothing will reconcile man to the truth which indicts him, but submission to God and a change of heart.

At a meeting of Dr. Goodwin's people in their church August 19, copies of this sermon were distributed; and a friend present has furnished a sketch of the pleasant remarks made them in reply to the learned vituperation which the sermon received from Dr. Joseph Parker and his wife, in whose church the Great Council was held.

One of the prominent deacons of the church spoke on the prayer meeting subject, and then asked leave of the leader of the meeting to make an announcement. He announced that a noted English divine, Mr. Meyers, was to preach in the church next Sabbath, and also that there would be copies of Dr. Goodwin's sermon preached before the Congregational Council, at the church, for all who wished them. He wanted to say, also, that he had read the sermon and had found nothing in it to justify what was said about it in England, and that it was very well worth reading. Then the leader of the meeting took up the subject, and said he had read the sermon, and as he was reading it expected any minute to come to something he could not quite indorse, but he didn't come to it. It was nothing but sound doctrine and Gospel. The church visitor then remarked that she had read it, and when she had finished thought that it must be that some of it was left out for she didn't see anything in it to give cause to the comments in England. Another lady said she had read it and that it was all good. Then one of the most active workers in the church and Sabbath-school, also a deacon, arose and said he had read it, but he had never doubted for a moment that everything in it was grand Gospel. He believed in Dr. Goodwin all the time. Another suggested that those were his sentiments too. Another brother thought that if that sermon came from something equal to a theological corpse two hundred years old, the English people had better resurrect some more corpses. The leader agreed with him perfectly, with a little chuckle. He thought "what a stir some corpses do make," we suppose.

A MOUNTAIN ON FIRE.

Mr. Kellogg, so long and well known as editor of the Cynosure, took his family to the pleasant city of Auburn, near the snow-capped Sierras of Eastern California; and although the skyey solitudes send down streams from the snow banks which whiten the distant horizon, the law of a California climate prevails there, and the hills and summits around there, in summer, become as dry as tinder. Last week the Chinese were holding a post-mortuary carnival for their dead near Auburn, and set fire to the furze with which the wet season covers the landscape. Mr. Kellogg and his daughters were returning from their Sabbath-school, and a black column of smoke diffused itself over the ridges between them and their ranch and veiled their cottage, barn, garden, and orchards of figs, peach and apple trees from their sight. The scene as Mr. Kellogg described it, reminds one of Pope's "Messiah," where the poet says:

> "The seas shall waste, the skies in smoke decay; > Rocks fall to dust, and mountains melt away."

The good citizens of Auburn rallied to the fight with fire; and though the raging element surrounded their home, and its destruction was so imminent that the people emptied the cottage, loading the furniture into wagons, and covering it with wet blankets, by the good providence of God they drove back the flames, which came on like a steady blazing wall ten or fifteen feet high, fed by the wild gorse and chapparel, so that the buildings were saved, with the lives of the occupants.

Mrs. Kellogg and the children "kept cool" in spite of the raging heat around them, except the youngest daughter, Geraldine, who could not help crying out when she saw the bedding being taken from the house, which she took as proof that they were to sleep under the open sky. The numerous friends of the family will join with them in gratitude to God for their happy deliverance.

THE SECRET EMPIRE IN CHINA.

The opposition shown by the Chinese to foreigners in the recent riots in the "celestial" empire, which culminated in open assaults upon the persons and property of alien missionaries and others, has been freely commented upon by the press in America and Europe, and has been justly denounced as an international outrage. Ostensibly the warfare on Americans is charged upon the anti-Chinese immigration law of the United States; and other grievances by other nations are mentioned as incentives to persecute residents from those countries in the same relentless spirit.

The London (Eng.) Standard, which ranks as a competent authority, commenting upon this subject, says: "Should China persist in her present attitude, grave consequences are threatened, and no one can foresee the issue. This is what the shrewder of the Kolao and other secret societies desire. They hope to embroil the government with the foreign powers and thus distract it while they follow their own schemes, knowing that if the foreign powers attacked China doubtless the Empire would collapse and the whole land would fall into a state of anarchy which would not be suppressed in our time."

This understanding of the present condition of affairs in China has also been referred to by other authorities, and can, no doubt, be considered a trustworthy solution of the situation. The Kolao Society, it is understood, is saturated with malevolence, and, like all iniquitous secret organizations, works covertly to poison the minds of the people and enrage them against the foreign residents.

Providentially the outside "barbarians," as the Chinese term other nations, are fully aroused to the exigencies of the situation, and are taking active measures to protect their citizens against further outrages. They propose to hold the Chinese imperial government not only responsible for the future good behavior of its people, but to demand the punishment of those who have created the recent and existing disorders.

Other nations besides China, however, are, knowingly and supinely, cursed with similar secret societies, which only need opportunity to manifest their vindictiveness in various ways upon these whom they deem their enemies. It was of these societies that the late Earl of Beaconsfield, Disraeli, said: "In conducting the governments of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

"The secret lodge," says "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated," "undermines the college, by concealing its rowdyism and sheltering its rebellions; the court house, by its rival oaths; the legislature, by corrupting and intimidating its members, and the church, by its rival, mock sacraments"—all of which are proved by that work. "In 1649," continues the same writer, "Charles I. was beheaded, and his queen and son, Charles II., were exiles in France, where there was then no centralized lodge power. But Charles II. secretly joined both the Papists and the Masons; and by the aid of French Masons, who were Papists, and English Masons, who were Protestants, he regained his father's throne; was pensioned by the French king, who was then called 'the eldest son of the Romish church;' reigned disgracefully twenty-five years, and died, gazing on a silver cross held before his eyes by a Romish priest named Huddleston, in 1685. Three years afterward, England was revolutionized. James, the brother of Charles, fled from his throne and people, and took headquarters at the Jesuits' College of Clermont, in Paris. This college thenceforth became a factory of higher Masonic degrees, to govern English lodges and restore James and popery to the throne, as Charles II. had been restored before."

History furnishes many similar exhibitions of lodge influence and its disastrous effects upon the welfare of nations; and yet secret orders are popular and are increasing all over the world. Judging the end from the past and the present, what does the future promise?

THE SECRECY "FAD."

"The College of the Ancients" is an "ancient" fraternity incorporated by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and is one of the most exclusive on record. It can number but 144 real members in all the continent of North America, but may embrace additional or associate members. When a vacancy, by death, or otherwise, occurs in the real memberships, one of the associate members is chosen to take his place in the "college." A "grand chancellor" appears to be the controlling spirit in the institution, at least for the reception of associates. There are no branch "colleges," "preceptories," or "mother supreme councils" in this organization; and we are told that "it is composed entirely of active workers prominently identified with the leading secret orders of America." We are not informed as to what it is all about, but the probability is, considering the character of its adherents, that at least one of its objects is the glorification of the older and larger paid-up-benevolence orders. Or it may be merely an aristocratic club.

"The Companions of Friendship" is the female branch of "The Knights of Friendship," and has recently formed a "grand" organization. The order is divided into "chambers," instead of lodges or divisions. But they are all birds of similar plumage.

"Bill Nye," the alleged humorist, in a lucid moment, utters this great reflection: "I would think that a man who belonged to most all of the secret societies, must have very little time to devote to his business after successfully remembering all the grips, signs, passwords, explanations, signals, rituals, work of degrees, constitutions, by-laws, reports of committees, initiations, communications and new business, good of the order, violations of obligations, opening odes, manual of arms, laying of corner stones, and funeral services. If I had all these in my head I could just about remember the combination of my safe, but I would not be mentally adequate to anything further than that. If it rained, some good friend who had my best interest at heart would probably have to take me by the hand and bring me in".

—We call especial attention to the approaching Christian Union Conference, to be held (D. V.) in the Kenwood (Chicago) church, of which Rev. J. P. Hale is pastor. Sessions are to begin at 10 o'clock Wednesday forenoon, Sept. 16, continuing through the following day. Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, Dwight L. Moody, and other able speakers have been invited, and efforts will be made to greatly advance the cause of Christian unity.

—A church Unity Conference has been called by John G. Fee, ex-President of Berea College, Ky., Rev. R. W. Lyman, of New York, and others, to be held at the Kenwood Evangelical Church in Chicago, September 16-18, proximo, "for the purpose of discussing, in a practical way, the unification of the church of Christ, and the possibility of consolidating supernumerary churches." It is announced that good and well-known speakers will address the conference.

—A note from Bro. Edward J. Chalfant, of York, Pa., announces his desire to form a permanent State Christian Association in opposition to the lodge system. His plan comprises a State charter, and a written pledge from all persons uniting with the organization that they will do what they can to advance the interests of the institution. He proposes to admit to membership, free of expense, ministers of the Gospel, seceders from lodges and Union veterans. Further information can be obtained from Bro. Chalfant by addressing him as above.

—The autobiography of the venerable John G. Fee, D. D., ex-President of Berea College, Berea, Ky., is about to be issued, and copies can be obtained at this office or of Mr. Fee at Berea, Ky. The history of a vigorous and life-long reformer—one who has witnessed and participated in so many of the great events of this nation—one whose heart has ever been in harmony with the best interests of sin-cursed humanity—will find this story of his career an interesting work. The only objection to it is that the author has been too modest in recording his own part in the reforms which he promoted and advocated. It will receive further notice in these columns when published.

—The work of the N. C. A. is rapidly becoming better known among the churches in the South, since the free distribution of the Cynosure and other reform literature has been extended during the past few months. New men are gaining an interest in our work, and inquiries for anti-secret information and publications are more frequent. The good seed already sown is beginning to bear worthy fruit, and if the work is properly pushed this fall, next winter will see a corps of effective lecturers against the evils of the lodge in the field. To keep up the war as it should be, and carry it into the dark places in the South, will require considerable money, and it is to be hoped that contributions for the support of the Southern ministers' fund will be both numerous and prompt.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—C. F. Gunther intends to present his collection of antiquities to the people of Chicago.

—"General" Booth, of the Salvation Army, who asked for £100,000 with which to regenerate some of the social conditions of London, announces that he has received £10,000.

—Rev. W. H. Chandler, Illinois State evangelist of the Congregational church, is to remove from Princeton, Bureau Co., to Wheaton, which place is henceforth to be his home.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, our College agent, writes from Glenwood, Pope Co., Minn., Aug. 20: "I am (D. V.) to preach here on Sunday evening next, and do missionary work at points around, for a few weeks."

—H. L. Hastings, of the Christian, Boston, was heard with great interest, as always, at the Endeavor Society meetings in Minneapolis. May these ten thousands of young Christian workers learn to speak as calmly, faithfully and truly of the lodge evil as do the editorials of the Christian.

—The Cynosure has lost another good friend in the death of Steadman Gray, of Wolf Lake, Ind., who died August 3, 1891, aged nearly ninety years. Throughout his long life he was true to his convictions, maintained a consistent Christian character, and was liberal to the cause we advocate. Such men cannot be spared without a sigh, and a prayer that God may speedily enlist many more such under our banner.

—A memorial sent from Scotland through Rev. John Smith, as commissioner to the Northfield, Mass., Bible Conference, requests D. L. Moody and Ira D. Sankey, as soon as convenient, to make a third visit to Great Britan. The memorial was 160 feet long and contained 2,500 names, many of them prominent friends of Mr. Moody and distinguished divines. The invitation will probably be accepted when Mr. Moody's other engagements permit.

—Rev. Dr. Williams, of San Francisco, attended the late great Christian Endeavor Society's meeting at Minneapolis, and was quite impressed with the originality and goodness of heart of our old friend, Elder Rufus Smith, of Wheaton, whom he compares to the celebrated Peter Cartwright, of famous Methodist memory. Elder Smith was so efficient a helper at the convention, that hundreds of hands went up to invite him to become an annual visitor at the Endeavor meetings.

—The letter in this issue from Bro. W. B. Stoddard, who has for the present transferred his field of labor from Washington to New England, gives a very encouraging view of the reform work on his new circuit. The seed already sown by the New England agent is beginning to bring forth palatable fruit in favor of the anti-secrecy movement, and also the inevitable wrath of lodge adherents. But all agree that the prospects for the work of the N. C. A. are now much brighter than a year or two ago; a fine list of new subscribers to the Cynosure and Miss Flagg's New England Letter, this week, also tend to confirm this encouraging view.

The Home.

FULLY RECONCILED.

Master! how shall I bless thy name
For thy tender love to me,
For the sweet enablings of thy grace,
So sovereign, yet so free,
That have taught me to obey thy Word
And cast my care on thee?

They tell of weary burdens borne
For discipline of life,
Of long anxieties and doubts,
Of struggle and of strife,
Of a path of dim perplexities,
With fear and shadows rife.

Oh, I have trod that weary path,
With burdens not a few,
With shadowy faith that thou wouldst lead
And help me safely through,
Trying to follow and obey,
And bear my burdens, too.

Master! dear Master, thou didst speak,
And yet I did not hear,
Or long ago I might have ceased
From every care and fear,
And gone rejoicing on my way
From brightening year to year.

Just now and then some steeper slope
Would seem so hard to climb
That I must cast my load on thee;
And I left it for a time,
And wondered at the joy at heart,
Like sweetest Christmas chime.

A step or two on winged feet,
And then I turned to share
The burden thou hadst taken up
Of ever-pressing care;
So that I would not leave with thee
Of course I had to bear.

At last thy precious precepts fell
On opened heart and ear,
A varied and repeated strain,
I could not choose but hear,
Enlinking promise and command,
Like harp and clarion clear:

"No anxious thought upon thy brow
The watching world should see;
No carefulness! Oh, child of God,
For nothing careful be!
But cast thou all thy care on him
Who always cares for thee."

Did not thy loving Spirit come
In gentle, gracious shower,
To work thy pleasure in my soul
In that bright, blessed hour,
And to the word of strong command
Add faith and will and power?

It was thy Word, it was thy will—
That was enough for me!
Henceforth no care shall dim my trust,
For all is cast on thee;
Henceforth my inmost heart shall praise
The grace that set me free.

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

XI.

The gathering at the Tank the morning after Pete's death was a very quiet one. Grace looked ill, but she insisted there was nothing the matter except that she felt sad after what she had seen and heard the night before.

"What will Mrs. Sinclair do now?" asked Johnnie, whose round, good-natured face was full of trouble.

"Father said she would be cared for. He has spoken to the Ladies' Charitable Society about her. She will have to sell the house to pay the debts; but she is strong, and now people know about her, she will have work."

"Our money won't be needed, then," complained Gussie, "and we haven't helped one bit."

"We couldn't have done very much by ourselves," said Robert, "and so long as she is helped, it is no matter who helps her."

Grace looked over at John, saying, "If Johnnie had not wanted to do something for Pete, and told us, we never would have known they needed help."

"I'd never have cared, only for you," answered John, who was noted among us for for his "even-handed justice," whether it was in the dealing out of blame to himself or praise to some one else.

"Do you think what money we have will do any good?" was the next question raised.

"How much is there?"

"Nearly eight dollars."

"What can we do with that? She won't need food or clothes now, and poor Pete needs nothing."

"Would flowers do?"

"Don't buy flowers," said Gussie, "we've got so many at home. Mother will let me have all I want. I'll see to that part."

"I wish we could manage some kind of a stone for his grave," suggested Johnnie, who had been thinking deeply. "You know they've no lot in the cemetery, and he'll be buried by the city. In a year or two his mother won't be able to find his grave among all the rest."

A bright thought came to me just then, and I put it into words.

"I know some one who works in the marble yards. Perhaps he could tell us about prices. Maybe he could get something cheaper than we could."

"Good for you, Fanny! Find out about it, will you?"

"I wonder if they have anything nice to bury him in," said Robert. "I'll ask father. If they haven't, I guess one of the suits I've grown out of will fit him; they are perfectly good."

"I wish we had helped him when he was alive," said Tom, pulling up handfuls of grass, energetically. It's all very well to get flowers and gravestones and things, now!"

"That is just what I was thinking," responded Grace. "Oh, don't let us not think about people ever again!"

"I want to tell you all something," said one of the boys, Harry Metcalf, a quiet fellow who said little in our gatherings, but who was, perhaps, our most earnest listener. "I never read my Bible or prayed until we all said we would. I promised to do it because I couldn't find a good reason not to, and I always keep my promises. I have read some every day, and I pray every day, and I'm so glad I promised!"

"And so am I, Little Captain," said Gussie. "I'll never, never forget that pledge. I am going to try to be like Christ—and like you."

"I've always said my prayers every day since I can remember," went on another voice, "but it is different now—it helps me more. I did not know there were so many people in trouble, and I did not know I was put here to help."

I was watching Grace during this bit of spontaneous testimony to her influence among us. How her eyes glowed with grateful light, as one after another took up the strain. They did not all speak, but perhaps the silent ones had none the less to speak of. Surely there had been some helping done by our Society.

That evening I went to the Clarke's and told them all about Peter and the sad ending of his life.

"How much would a little stone cost, Mr. Clarke?"

"I don't know exactly. How little a one?"

"Just so as to mark the grave for his mother. She'll feel then as if he wasn't buried anywhere."

"Want any writing on it?"

"It is not necessary, but it would be nicer to have his name. We've got eight dollars. Perhaps we could make it ten, if that would be enough."

"You keep your money for something else," answered Mr. Clarke. "The boss isn't very particular, and I know a neat bit of marble he'll let me have. It is part of a shaft that got broken the other day. I'll fix it up so that it will look like new. What did you say the boy's name was?"

"I didn't say. It is Pete—Peter Sinclair."

Mr. Clarke jumped from his chair. "Not one-armed Pete?"

"Yes; did you know him?"

Instead of answering me, he strode out of the room, took several quick turns up and down the little yard, and then came back.

"Yes, Fanny, I knew him. His death lies at my door. That time I was away from home—do you remember?" (How well I remembered, though he did not know how Grace had waited, watched, and prayed for his return, and how it was our boys who finally influenced him to return.) "It was I who teased him into drinking his first glass of whisky. After that he seemed mad for it; couldn't get enough. So he's dead! God forgive me. You tell the boys and girls, Fanny, not to worry about the stone. It's little enough for me to do now. And here," he continued, taking some money out of his pocket, and handing it to me, "I meant to get myself a new coat, but I guess his poor mother needs the money more than I do."

It was five dollars.

"No, no," I said, "that is too much."

"No, it is not, is it, wife? Poor Pete! I only hope God won't visit my sin upon him. I'd bear the punishment now if I could."

I remembered what the dying boy had said about God being "fair and square," and felt sure the Father would not visit upon him greater punishment than he deserved.

The next day we gathered again at the Tank, and I told the Society about the donation of the stone, and of the generous gift of money. Somehow the whole story got out, and they all knew that Mr. Clarke was the man whom our boys had followed that day, and who had first tempted Pete to that which had been his ruin. Our hearts were very tender just then over Pete's death, and also because of the impending sorrow within our circle, so that we were more gentle in our judgment of Mr. Clarke than we might have been.

We all went to the funeral, and I think it pleased the poor mother. Gussie had been there before us, and the dead boy's coffin was almost covered with flowers; he held them in his cold hand, and they lit up the cheerless room with their loveliness. Whatever Gussie did she did largely, and, as a matter of course, she loved to do.

The service was very short, and when the coffin was carried out, Mrs Sinclair leaned on Mr. Clarke's arm. A carriage had been provided for her, and mother, with another lady, went with her to the burying. Mr. Darling, Mr. Clarke, and our boys followed, we girls staying behind to help restore the little home to its usual order. When we went away we left the money we had raised, in an envelope where Mrs. Sinclair would be sure to find it. We wrote on it, "For Pete's mother, from friends." Grace it was who said that if we put "Mrs. Sinclair," she might be too proud to touch it, but that "Pete's mother" surely would not.

When Robert and Tom came home from the funeral, we asked if the stone was there.

"Yes, it was there, all ready to put into place. It is more than a little one. It is quite handsome, and has his name, with the date of his birth and death. I do believe Clarke is a fine fellow, for all he did beat his wife that time."

Grace put her hand on her brother's mouth.

"We won't speak about that, dear—he was not himself, you know. Did he recognize you or Tom?"

"Yes, he did, and he knows all about everything now."

"All about what?"

"About our Society. Bob's eyes gave Mr. Clarke an idea, they are so like Grace's, and he asked all sorts of questions. John told him everything,—you know the four of us walked home together from the funeral. He thinks the Grace Darling Society is just tip-top, and he's awfully cut up about Pete. You are to take our Record Book over, next time you go there, Little Captain; he says he wants to put his name to that pledge, too. He wishes he'd known about it long ago."

So, a day or two after, Grace and I took the Record Book and went to visit our friends. It was Mr. Clarke's dinner hour, and he took us at once into the little parlor, calling his wife in.

"You have done a great deal for me, child," he said, laying his great brown hand on her head. "From this day I shall be a better man. I want to see this pledge you young folks have signed."

Then he read it over.

"See here, Sophia," he said to his wife, "can't you sign that, too? We want every bit of help we can get."

"Yes, Jim, I'll sign it. I've not been a good wife. It was all my fault, even Pete's death, for I made you drink, and you made him. We'll both sign it, Jim."

So they wrote their names there, side by side, and our Society numbered twenty-seven.

"Wasn't it these," said Mrs. Clarke later, pointing to the twenty-five names, "you wanted all to have a picnic together?"

"Yes."

"Well, we can manage it. Father will send in a man with two big wagons, and you can all drive out to the farm. Jim will look after one team and the man the other. There are hills and woods all around the farm for you to scramble in, and a large spring from the hills runs through our land. Father and mother will be glad to see you; they are great hands to have folks round. The berries will just be ripe, and I know you'll have a splendid time."

We were delighted. A day was fixed upon, and Tom commissioned to communicate with the others. The following mysterious summons was thereupon issued:

"Two new members! All aboard for the farm! Meeting called Wednesday, eleven A. M., at the Tank. Keep Monday free from all engagements."

As Grace and I walked home from Mrs. Clarke's that day, I noticed how very lame she was, and spoke to her about it.

"You've never been so lame before, Grace."

"I know it. But you know it's got to get worse."

"Are you sure? Can't anything be done?"

"No, nothing. The doctor said an operation might do some good for just a little while, and it might do more harm than good, so I would not have it, unless father wanted me to, and he said I could do as I liked."

How she could talk so calmly about it, I could not understand, except that she had always been different from anyone else I had known. Perhaps the long years of suffering under an incurable disease had thus disciplined her, though she was only fifteen. She always seemed older than I, though my eighteenth birthday was near.

"I do not think I will be able to go about much longer, Fannie," she continued, "but I do want to go to that picnic with all of you. How lovely it will be! What are you thinking about, Fan-fan?"

"Thinking about? Several things. What a thin little hand," I said, taking it in mine, as it rested on my arm—she always leaned on me when we were together; it seemed to help her.

"Yes, and yours is so strong. You are such a help to me, Fanny; do you know it?"

"How?"

"You are always so strong and brave, you put strength into me, when I get so tired."

"Oh, Gracie, I wish I could give you all my strength."

I was not brave; I shrank from pain for her, and from the pain of losing my friend, but I did try to hide it all from her.

"No, dear," she answered, clinging lovingly to my arm, "that would never do. Fanny, if I am not able to go with you to the Tank on Wednesday, will you tell them all about Mr. and Mrs. Clarke, and about the picnic?"

"Yes, Grace."

I had no further word. Looking into her face with sharpened vision, I saw how dark the rings of suffering were about her eyes, how pinched was every feature, and that every bright smile and gay word was an effort. I kissed her a silent good-bye and went home.

(To be continued.)

A PLEASANT WORD.

A young lady had gone out walking. She forgot to take her purse with her, and had no money in her pocket. Presently she met a little girl with a basket on her arm. "Please, miss, will you buy something from my basket?" said the little girl, showing a variety of book marks, watch cases, needle-books, etc. "I'm sorry I can't buy anything to-day," said the young lady. "I haven't got any money with me. Your things look very pretty," she stopped a moment, and spoke a few kind words to the little girl, and then as she passed she again said: "I'm very sorry I can't buy anything from you to-day." "Oh, Miss!" said the little girl, "you've done me just as much good as if you had. Most persons that I meet say: 'Get away with you!' but you have spoken kindly and pleasantly to me, and I feel a heap better." That was "considering the poor." How little it costs to do that! Let us learn to speak kindly and gently to the poor, the suffering. If we have nothing else to give, let us at least give our sympathy.—Selected.

THE THREE TROUBLES.

A clever and charming old lady at a fashionable resort said to her group of girl admirers gathered for a talk: "My dears, you wonder that nothing ever seems to annoy me. Some people, you know have their troubles three times (I used to have)—first in anticipation, next in experiencing the reality, and lastly in living it all over again. But I have made up my mind that to have trouble once is enough. I prefer variety, you see. So now I wait till the disaster befalls; then I think about it as little as possible, unless I can see some way to remedy it and I forget it as soon as I can.

"I have found out that it isn't really worth while to be disturbed, especially by an occurrence that can not be helped. Thus I escape two-thirds the worry that I would otherwise have."—Selected.

SOMETIME—SOMEWHERE.

Unanswered yet? the prayer your lips have pleaded
In agony of heart these many years!
Does faith begin to fail? is hope departing,
And think you all in vain those falling tears?
Say not, the Father hath not heard your prayer;
You shall have your desire, sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? though when you first presented
This one petition at the Father's throne,
It seemed you could not wait the time of asking,
So urgent was your heart to make it known:
Though years have passed since then, do not despair;
The Lord will answer you, sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? nay, do not say ungranted,
Perhaps your part is not yet wholly done;
The work began when first your prayer was uttered,
And God will finish what he has begun.
If you will keep the incense burning there,
His glory you shall see, sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Faith cannot be unanswered;
Her feet were firmly planted on the Rock;
Amid the wildest storms she stands undaunted,
Nor quails before the loudest thunder-shock,
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer,
And cries, "It shall be done," sometime, somewhere.

TEMPERANCE.

AFRICA FLOODED WITH RUM.

By all accounts it is plain that the "Christian" nations, with Germany in the lead, and the United States following fast, are debauching the millions of Africa with rum. There is room also for the painful and humiliating suspicion that our government refused to concur in the action of the Brussels convention for the mitigation of this evil, because of the influence brought to bear upon Congress by representatives of the liquor trade. We have long had to confess that our city governments were hopelessly in the power of this trade. It is to this that is chiefly owing the condition of things described by Prof. Boyce, when he says, "There is no denying that the government of cities is the one conspicuous failure in the United States. There is not a city with a population exceeding 200,000 where the poison germs have not sprung into vigorous life; and in some of the smaller ones, down to 70,000, it needs no microscope to note the results of their growth." It is well known that these germs of corruption originate in the beer vat and the still. Liquor men are interested in keeping dishonest, greedy men in municipal office, but we have been flattering ourselves that the federal government was not thus dominated by the liquor power. There are evidences that we were mistaken, not the least of which is the refusal of our government to ratify the action of the Brussels Conference. The Christian people of the nation should make their voice heard on this matter by the time Congress meets again.—Christian Standard.

TEMPERANCE BOYS AND GIRLS.

I wish to give three reasons why all the boys and girls ought to be on the side of temperance. First, because they know enough about the evils of rum and the meaning of the pledge. Some one who thought boys and girls ought not to sign the pledge asked a little boy, "What does the word 'drunk' mean?" He answered, "Getting crazy on purpose." Then he was asked, "What does pledge mean?" He answered, "To promise something, and stick to it." The man saw the boy understood it, and so he let him sign the pledge and work for temperance. The second reason that I want the boys and girls on the side of temperance is because men by-and-by will be in character what we get the boys to be now. Bad boys will most likely be bad men, and good boys good men. In France, when wicked tyrants were kings, some of the boys had a band of hope, and when they marched they had on their flags the words, "Tremble, tyrants, we shall grow up." They intended to drive the wicked rulers out of the country when they were men. So temperance boys can say, "Tremble, intemperance and rum-selling, we shall grow up and put a stop to it." The third reason is because everybody can do something to help the cause of temperance, even the boys and girls. If there were only two temperance people in the world to-day, and each of them should get one more every year, it would be but thirty years before all the people in the world would be on the side of temperance. Let us all sign the pledge and keep it and get everybody else we can to let rum entirely alone.—W. F. Crafts.

TEMPERANCE "STATUTES OF LIMITATION."

A speaker for prohibition whose word is the best of authority, relates a personal incident that shows how prohibition doesn't prohibit: "I came through Iowa this morning, and when I took my breakfast on the dining car I saw on the bill of fare, 'No liquors sold in Iowa.' While I was passing up on the Central Iowa road I ordered lunch, and on the bill of fare there were twenty-five or thirty kinds of liquor, including Old Bourbon and all kinds of liquors. I said this didn't look like enforcing prohibition in Iowa, with all kinds of whiskey, gin and rum on the bill of fare, and I thought I would try it. So I said to the porter: 'Get me a bottle of Old Bourbon;' and he said, 'No, sah, couldn't do it, sah. We can't sell it here.' 'Well,' I said, 'but you have it on your bill of fare.' And he said, 'Yes, sah, but we can't sell it in the prohibition States.' And at the top of that bill of fare I saw 'No liquors sold within the limits of prohibition States.' Well, I thought maybe he was fooling me a little, but I looked around, and nobody knew me, and I knew nobody, so I said to him: 'Couldn't you get a fellow a bottle of beer, anyhow?' And he said, 'Oh, no, boss; couldn't do it, nohow.' I said no one would know anything about it, and he said: 'Why, sah, dey counted every bottle in the car before we reached the State, and then they count 'em after we leave it, and if a bottle is gone I has to 'count for it.'

"As soon as we left the Iowa line the porter came to me with a face like a full moon, and said: 'Now, boss, we's in Minnesota; I let you have what you want.' Not a drink in Iowa under prohibition—all you want in Minnesota under high license."—Christian Statesman.

TEMPERANCE NUGGETS.

The cause of prohibition is making great headway in Sweden. Already many parishes or communities enjoy absolute prohibition. Total abstinence societies are numerous and strong. Clergymen take an active interest in the work; altogether the outlook for prohibition is encouraging. At a recent parliamentary election, six candidates of the prohibition party were elected. The cause of temperance has long received official recognition and support. Last year, twenty-five thousand crowns were appropriated toward this cause. Of this appropriation a certain sum is set apart as prizes for the best essays on the best method of dealing with the traffic. The remainder of the money is to be employed in printing and distributing the essays.—Exchange.

"One hogshead of whiskey, in the city of New York, judiciously placed, can make or unmake a President. Give out enough glasses of gin, in the city and State, and you place the dispenser in the chair of Washington."—T. V. Powderly.

Of the twenty-four men composing the New York Board of Aldermen, eleven are liquor dealers.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. True freedom.—vs. 31–36. "Many believed on him." Evidently this does not mean that they were true followers, or even ready to become such, as some of them took offence when he proceeded to explain more fully his real character and mission. "If ye continue in my word," etc. They only are Christ's true disciples who persevere in spite of all real or imagined obstacles. Many refuse to believe the Bible because they cannot understand all its mysterious doctrines; but if they could, what room would there be for the exercise of faith? Only they who do God's will are in the way to perfect knowledge of the truth, and, consequently, to perfect freedom. It does not seem as if Christ could have made his words any plainer. A child ought to have known that he was speaking of spiritual freedom, yet they wilfully misunderstood his words. It is difficult, also, to see how they could utter such a barefaced falsehood: "We were never in bondage to any man." Had they forgotten how many times, as a punishment for their backslidings, they had been reduced to slavery under foreign lords, while, even at that very moment, they were vainly hoping for a temporal Messiah who would deliver them from the Roman yoke? But still more surprising is the patience and gentleness with which Jesus meets their absurd claim, not by stopping to controvert it, but by the solemn, emphatic assurance that a state of sin is the real bondage, as a state of righteousness is the true liberty. "And the servant abideth not in the house forever." A servant has no permanent ies with the household in which he lives; no certainty that he shall always remain there; but "the son abideth forever." If, therefore, the Son shall make them free they are free indeed, for they become sons themselves by adoption, with the right to dwell eternally in their Father's house.

2. A false claim.—vs. 34–43. They were Abraham's seed by natural descent, but their murderous, malignant spirit, so different from that of the meek and pious patriarch, showed them not to be his true children. Otherwise they would do his works. Still less was God their Father, as they so confidently asserted, for in that case they would have welcomed his Son, and gladly and understandingly received his word into their hearts. Are we the true children of our patriotic and devout sires? We have inherited the liberty they left us, and perhaps their names, but unless we have their spirit it is useless to say we are their children. The claim that God is our Father, which so many make who never think of honoring and obeying his Son, is an equally false one. These Jews are a picture of thousands to-day, setting up a pretended claim that their lives deny, and which the searching light of the Judgment day will show up in all its falsity.

3. Their real paternity.—vs. 44–47. Perhaps nowhere in the life of Jesus, unless in his trial before Pilate, have we a grander instance of true heroism than when he thus boldly tells them who were even then seeking his death, a truth that must have angered them to the last verge of madness. "Ye are of your father, the devil." He was a murderer from the beginning—not of one man only, but, through Adam, of the whole human race. So he was a liar from the beginning, compassing his wicked ends by falsehood and deceit. He does not have, like man, a dual nature of mixed good and evil; nor is he, like man, subject to outside temptations. His nature is purely and only evil, and when he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own, for he is the father of lies. In their murderous spirit towards Christ, and their boastful falsehoods, they proved their true paternity. "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" Through all the ages of the Christian era skeptics have had to meet this question in silence. His most virulent foes have not dared to malign the spotless purity of Jesus. It follows that if even his enemies have not been able to find any flaw in his character, he must have spoken the truth about himself; and they have had to face the same dilemma as did the Jews of old. "And if I say the truth why do ye not believe me?" Jesus himself answers the question. Because they were not of God, for he that is of God heareth his words. Do we want a test that we are God's children? Here we find it laid down for us in the words of him who was the Truth, and who was in the eternal counsels of God before man was made. That test is to listen when he speaks to us; to hear the voice of his messengers that he sends to show us the way of life; and, above all, to obey the commands of his Son as laid down in the Gospel. Let us each put the question to ourselves. Are we doing this? If so, then we are his true children, and neither man nor Satan can deprive us of our rights as sons and daughters of the Almighty.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—In five months of the last missionary year over 5,000 converts were baptized in connection with the Telugu Mission of the Baptist church, in India, and the good work still continues.

—The whole world will rejoice to hear that Mr. Spurgeon, the famous English minister, is growing in health. Men and women of all classes have manifested the most affectionate personal regard for the distinguished sufferer.

—It is said that the recent great revival in the Baptist mission at Ongole, in the Telugu field, India, at the close of which 1,671 persons were baptized, is one of the most remarkable in the annals of missions. The unprecedentedly short time in which the rite of baptism was administered to the multitude was one of the features which has excited most comment. In exactly three hours and five minutes two native preachers are said to have immersed 1,065 persons. Rev. Drs. Clough and Johnson immersed 606 in one hour and twenty minutes.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Dr. Newman Hall, the noted English Congregationalist divine, is seventy-five years old. The famous tract, "Come to Jesus," of which he is the author, has had a greater sale than almost any other religious work, excepting the Bible. Several million copies of it have been printed, and it has been translated into more than thirty languages.

—Dr. Goodwin's recent London sermon continues to be the subject of general comment. A number of interested parties have placed copies for free distribution at the salesrooms of the Sunday-school and Publishing Society at Boston and Chicago, and of F. H. Revell at Chicago and New York.

—The first Protestant church bell in a large section on the south shore of Lake Superior, now sends out its inviting tones from the belfry of the Ashland Congregational church.

—Aug. 5, a church of twenty-nine members was organized at Blairsburg, Iowa. Twenty-one of those uniting came from the Wesleyan Methodist church of the village which disbanded for the purpose of organizing a Congregational church. The last action of the Wesleyan church was to convey their property, church building and parsonage, to the new organization. Mr. Paul Douglass, a recent graduate of Iowa College, is supplying the church during the summer.

EPISCOPAL.

—The Rev. Phillips Brooks has received the consent of the majority of the bishops of the Episcopal church to his election to the See of Massachusetts, and he is, therefore, a bishop, and will be consecrated in the autumn.

LUTHERAN.

—It seems that the Lutheran church is strongest in the State of North Dakota, says the Kirchenblatt, the organ of the Synod of Iowa. The number of Lutheran communicants in that State is larger than that of the Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists and Congregationalists combined.

—The gate receipts of the Lutheran Rock River Assembly for the first five days of the assembly averaged over $200 per day, including sale of season tickets. It is estimated that the receipts for the assembly will foot up to at least $2,500.

—A Lutheran widow in Nuremberg, Germany, bequeathed 50,000 marks for a Lutheran church in a Roman Catholic town, where her co-religionists had to meet in a private room.

—Of Norway's two millions of population only about one thousand are Roman Catholics, the whole population nearly being members of the National or Lutheran church.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Bishop Vincent and his wife sailed for Europe Aug. 23, to be absent two or three months.

—The mission of the M. E. church, Northern India, is said to be embarrassed by its very success. The large ingatherings require additions to the native pastorates, and the funds are not at hand to supply the demand.

—August 9-15 was observed by the Methodist Episcopal church South, as a week of prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon its work at home and abroad.

—The African Methodist Episcopal church, on Aug. 10, lost, by death, its Bishop Campbell, who, when a lad, was mortgaged by his father for a fishing-boat. Learning that foreclosure was imminent, the boy ran off He was made a bishop in 1864. He is well spoken of as a churchman, and was evidently thrifty, having left his widow $50,000.

MORMONS.

—Mormons ettlers are making great progress in the Sates of Sonora and Chihuahua, Mexico. Hundreds have located in the Corralitos Valley, and as the soil is a remarkably fertile alluvial deposit, it is predicted that it will shortly become a veritable paradise. Numerous colonies are invading the district, and it is not improbable that they and their problem will soon in great part be transferred to the care of the Mexican government.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—At an influential Roman Catholic Conference in Wigan, Eng., last month, Father Powell proved, by figures which he declared there was no gainsaying, that "never since Elizabeth ascended the throne had the prospects of the Catholic church been darker in England. In most parts of the country the church was not only losing numbers relatively, but absolutely. Liverpool was the only diocese in the country which showed an increase of Catholics, and even there not proportionately to the increase of population." Emigration to America, apostasy, and the aversion of young men to matrimony were the causes assigned.

—In Hungary the religious world has the singular spectacle of an open rebellion of the Franciscan monks against their ecclesiastical superiors. For some months the latter have been endeavoring to introduce stricter regulations in the life of the monks, but without success, at least in the case of the older fratres. The matter has now been referred to the Papal Nuntius at Vienna.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Our Presbyterian church has reached, by the summary of 1891, a total communicant membership of 386,796. During the year there were received on profession 59,650—the largest number of any year in its history, and on certificate 37,935—also the largest of any year—a total of 97,585. The net gain over last year is 30,893. Ten years ago the total membership was 581,401. During the last year 21,576 adults and 26,121 infants were baptized. The whole number of churches is 7,070; of ministers, 6,223; of Sunday-school membership, 883,680. The total amount reported as contributed to church and missionary work for the year is $14,062,356.—The Interior.

—Rev. Dr. John H. Worcester has formally advised the directors of the Union Theological Seminary of his acceptance of the professorship tendered him.

—It is announced that the new Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Omaha will begin its work Sept. 1. The opening address will be delivered by Rev. W. W. Harsha.

—At Wichita, Kan., during July twenty-three persons were welcomed to fellowship in the First church, making, in all, 269 accessions in the two years and three months since the Rev. David Winters became pastor.

—Rev. John Gillespie, D. D., one of the secretaries of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, accompanied by his wife, left New York on the 4th inst., on a tour among the mission fields in foreign lands.

—The Presbyterians North and South are rapidly nearing the million mark, the actual figures being 977,861; it will be a round million next year. The combined churches of both branches gained more than 10,000 over the accessions of last year through personal confession.

—There are about 3,200,000 Presbyterians in Scotland. There are 1,650 places of worship in connection with the Church of Scotland, and 1,575 in connection with the Free and United Presbyterian churches—in all 3,225, or more than one church for each 1,000 of the population.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Dr. G. Lansing writes to Dr. Dales that he has received a letter from Coutts & Co., London, containing an order from the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh for $10,000, as a gift to the Egyptian mission. This is surprising and gratifying news, for it was generally thought that the Maharajah had abandoned the Christian faith. Dr. Lansing has not received a letter direct from the Maharajah, and he does not know where he is, or the reasons which prompted the gift at this time.—United Presbyterian.

—At Greenville, Pa., July 26, while Rev. J. C. Scouller was delivering his sermon in the United Presbyterian church, a sudden storm arose and the high steeple was struck and badly shattered by a thunder-bolt. There were over 300 people in the church at the time. and a panic followed that was only quelled by the pastor and other cool heads. The congregation then joined in a prayer of thanksgiving for their marvelous escape.

A New Manufacturing Suburb of Chicago.

Prominent among the new manufacturing towns springing up about Chicago, is the important Railroad junction called Griffith, which lies south of Hammond and east of Harvey. It is the junction of three Great Eastern Trunk lines, the Michigan Central, the Grand Trunk and the Chicago & Erie Railroads, and the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Outer Belt line, which encircles the city of Chicago and makes a switch connection with every Railroad that enters the city, twenty-six lines in all, bringing their combined advantages to Griffith's doors. The Standard Oil Pipe line also runs through Griffith, and the Standard Oil Company are under contract to tap the same, put in a tank, and supply fuel oil to manufacturers at a price which is equivalent to only two-thirds the cost of the cheapest coal. Griffith is the only manufacturing point about Chicago which has three Trunk lines, a Belt line and a Fuel Oil-pipe now in operation. Lots have just been put on the market by Jay Dwiggins & Co., whose advertisement appears on the 15th page of this week's paper. The prices are still very low, and terms are so easy that any one earning wages can buy.

COOKING VEGETABLES.

The stems of beets should be left an inch in length, and the beets scrubbed with a vegetable brush, as cutting or scraping the skin allows the juice to escape and detracts from the flavor.

The skins of new potatoes can be removed more expeditiously with a vegetable brush than by scraping. Salt should be added to the water in which they are boiled, and a napkin covered over them after they are drained.

Green peas should be boiled in as little water as possible; and the cover removed ten or fifteen minutes before they are done to allow them to cook nearly dry. Season with milk, butter, salt, sugar and pepper. Peas are a very flatulent vegetable and persons with weak digestion or dyspepsia should be careful about eating them.

String beans are delicious when properly cooked, but this is seldom done thoroughly. They should be boiled two hours, and a piece of carbonate of soda the size of a pea added to each quart. Season with butter, salt and pepper a half hour before they are done, and allow the corn to remain off. Add milk when ready to serve, having previously warmed it.—K. B. Johnson, in Exchange.

FRUITS FOR BREAKFAST.

Serve blackberries in small glass dishes with sugar and milk or cream.

Serve raspberries without sugar.

Serve muskmelons with some chipped ice in each hemisphere, and with salt, sugar and a knife, fork and teaspoon at each plate.

Serve peaches pared, sliced and with sugar and cream.

Serve grapes, for a novelty, in a thin crystal tumbler with ice water.

Serve sweet apples pared, sliced, dusted with sugar and deluged with sweet cream.

Serve pears pared, sliced and with sugar and whipped cream.

Serve huckleberries in a quart bowl filled with rich new milk with crackers crumbled in. Half a cup of berries.

Serve bananas sliced and with cream and powdered sugar.

ROSE SAUCE.

Peel and slice a large beet and boil it quietly for twenty minutes in one and one-half pints water, then add two and one-half pounds sugar, the thin rind and juice of one lemon, boil until it becomes a thick syrup, strain, and add one teaspoonful vanilla. It is contrary to the rule to pare a beet before cooking, but in this instance it is done to secure all the juices. This sauce is nice for all plain puddings. It has a pretty rose-colored hue and its flavor is nice. The sugar may be either weighed or measured for this. One pound of sugar is two cups. There is not enough lemon juice added to give an acid flavor.—Boston Cooking School.

BANANA SHORTCAKE.

Banana shortcake can be made, at least, a first cousin to strawberry shortcake, "too good for anything." One pint of flour, one large teaspoonful Royal baking-powder, one-third cup shortening, made moist with milk. Slice bananas in the proportion of three to one orange, grate the best of the yellow orange rind, and mix with one cup of sugar. Split the freshly baked cake, butter, and fill with the prepared fruit. Four spoonfuls of sweet cream beaten stiff is a great addition. The white of an egg can be beaten with it, and sweetening and flavor added.

HINTS ON TOWELS.

As to texture or quality, that must be a question of taste and means, but, if possible, have a generous supply, and of good size. One can rub much drier, after bathing, with an ample-sized towel, than with a small, narrow one. While the first cost may be a little more for the large-sized ones, they will last longer, and be much more satisfactory in the end. It will be an economy, too, to buy them in the winter, as most large stores have "clearing sales" then, when they can be had at a little above wholesale prices. Then they are more easily softened and whitened by being hung out to freeze in the cold weather.

It is well to have roller towels in bathrooms and children's rooms, as well as in the kitchen. They are thus more easily kept in place, and are more evenly soiled than the separate towel. Children are very apt to leave a towel on the floor or washstand, or use one instead of a wash-cloth, but a roller towel is safe from all such neglect and misuse.

From long experience we find huckaback toweling wears longer than damask, or the ordinary diaper toweling. Crash is also desirable, and as it comes in all grades, can be utilized not only for bathroom, but kitchen roller towels. Russian toweling is also desirable, as it wears well, is pleasant to the skin, and with its somewhat rough surface helps to keep the pores open.

A hint as to dish towels: They are too often made of coarse, harsh linen. These, when new, will not wipe the dishes dry, and after washing are apt to retain a greasy smell. Time is saved by using those that are soft and somewhat fine. The silver linen, as it is called, that barred with blue or red, wears and washes very well and leaves no lint behind, and we believe it quite as economical as any.—Orange Judd.

"A Back Number."

This is the slighting remark that is often applied to women who try to seem young, though they no longer look so. Sometimes appearances are deceitful. Female weakness, functional troubles, displacements and irregularities will add fifteen years to a woman's looks. These troubles are removed by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Try this remedy, all you whose beauty and freshness is fading from such causes, and no longer figure in society as a "back number." It's guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it returned. See guarantee on bottle-wrapper.

Hotter the Weather Bigger the Proof.

As the weather grows warm, the sale of James Pyle's Pearline Washing Compound rapidly increases. This proves that many women recognize the fact that Pearline makes washing and cleaning very much easier than when done with the ordinary means. Proves also that summer clothing, being of delicate texture and color, will not stand the rough usage necessary when washed with soap, and establishes the fact that PEARLINE, in doing away with the rubbing, lessens the wear and tear and fills a very important place. Delightful for bathing in fresh or salt water. Its ingredients render it harmless to the most delicate skin. Especially during the hot weather it is to your advantage to use Pearline, and only humane to supply your servants with it, and thus lighten their labors; besides you insure much better results.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearline, or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—they are not, and besides are dangerous.

106 Pearline is manufactured only by JAMES PYLE, New York.

FARM NOTES.

FATTENING HOGS.

I find that green sweet corn is excellent hog feed, and they relish it, devouring stalk and all excepting blades. I don't think I shall ever be without an acre or two of sweet corn planted as early as the season will permit, to start my hogs on. As a usual thing pastures get very short about the 1st of August, and from that time till corn is ready to feed, our hogs go back instead of gaining all the while, as they should be doing. The farmer that has plenty of old corn left over might use it instead of growing a small crop of sweet corn to start his hogs, but ordinarily I think it is the best to start a hog on green corn, and it is cheapest. Farmers don't begin feeding hogs so early as they should, as a rule. The fall months are the best part of the year to feed in. The corn is in the best condition. More pounds of meat to the bushel, with less labor, can be made in the fall better than at any other season. The farmer does not get the very best of pork who puts off feeding until corn matures, and then feeds on all dry corn diet. Green corn should be provided as late in the season as possible. A late planting of evergreen corn comes in, and lasts till cold weather sets in. For a late green food, resort must be had to roots.—Indiana Farmer.

CLOVER FOR POULTRY.

Wherever the seed can be sown let white clover be grown, advises a poultry-raising expert. It is more permanent than the red variety, is hardier and more suitable than the larger kinds. It will grow on the lawn with other grasses, and a stand of it can be secured where the red clover fails. Being short, the hens prefer it, and as it grows rapidly, quite a supply of it can be secured from a very small plot. It is one of the most valuable of all green foods for poultry.

POOR APPLES MAKE GOOD VINEGAR.

One way of preventing the inferior grades of apples from going to waste, is by making them into cider for vinegar. As with other products care should be taken to make of a good quality in order to realize good prices. There is no advantage in using dirty, rotten fruit. At the start have everything clean; wash and rinse out the press and all of the vessels to be used in handling both the fruit and the cider. After the fruit is gathered up, all the rotten parts should be cut out and thrown away, and then what is to be used to be thoroughly washed. Have the barrels clean, and so far as possible keep everything connected with the work clean.

At first do not fill the barrels more than two-thirds full. This will give the cider more room to work and will lessen the waste. In many cases, after pressing well once, it will be a good plan to stir the pomace up thoroughly and add a small quantity of water and then press again, putting this second juice, however, in a separate barrel. It is best to lay the barrels down on the sides, putting a couple of rails or poles underneath to keep them off the ground. Tack a piece of mosquito netting or wire-screen cloth over the bung-hole to keep out flies and bugs. After it has ceased working it should be drawn off, strained and put in barrels again; this time the barrels can be filled full. It will make vinegar quicker if it can be left in the sun till cold weather, when it should be stowed in the cellar or in some place where it will not freeze.

Some think it a help to take strips of common brown wrapping paper, dip in molasses and drop into the barrels; a few strips in each barrel will help to make mother. But that is not necessary. Keeping in the sun while the weather is warm and keeping from freezing in cold weather is sufficient. Worked up in this way apples that otherwise would go to waste, can be made to sell at from 15 cents to 25 cents per bushel.—St. Louis Republic.

BEET FERTILIZERS.

From five years of experimenting with fertilizers on sugar beets two celebrated German scientists have arrived at the following conclusions: 1. The application of increased amounts of potash gives rise to a corresponding increased production of sugar. 2. An increased manuring with nitric acid has the effect of increasing the amount of leaf of the plants, and is unfavorable to sugar formation, so that the production of sugar is diminished. 3. The increased nitric acid manuring has also the effect of raising the amount of nitric acid, and also the protein in the roots. 4. The increased sugar production brought about by the application of potash is at once canceled by the physiological action of the corresponding amount of nitric acid. 5. Phosphoric acid influences leaf growth in a manner favorable to sugar production, and expedites the ripening of the plants; phosphoric acid, therefore, assists the favorable action of potash in sugar formation.

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

First, We do not offer any man a premium to renew his own subscription. If a man has taken this paper a year and does not care enough about it to take it longer without being hired to, we do not offer him a premium.

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

☞Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, postpaid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

Some people are constantly troubled with boils—no sooner does one heal than another makes its appearance. A thorough course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the best of blood-purifiers, effectually puts an end to this annoyance. We recommend a trial.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

Twelve persons were killed Sunday by a railroad collision in Switzerland.

Secretary of the Treasury Foster declared Monday that the reports that the United States Treasury is nearly without immediate resources were unfounded.

The lowest estimate of the wheat crop of Minnesota and the Dakotas is 150,000,000 bushels.

Parker & Aurer, of the Bluffton, (Ind.) and Niles (Mich.) electric light works failed Monday with liabilities of $40,000 and with assets stated to be nearly as much.

It is estimated that by a hailstorm in Minnesota Monday afternoon, nearly 15,000 acres of grain were laid low.

J. L. Leach & Co., of Chicago, have been awarded the contract to construct the public building at Duluth, Minn., at a cost of $127,400.

The new building for the insane at Jacksonville, Ill., is finished, and Tuesday ninety-one persons were transferred to it from Elgin.

A convention of the Christian churches of Iowa began a session Tuesday at Des Moines, with an attendance of 200 clerical and lay delegates.

In Paradise Canon, twenty-five miles northeast of Ogden, Utah, mines of almost pure lead, with a paying quantity of silver, have been discovered.

Hail destroyed 2,000 acres of grain about Deer Creek, Minn., Tuesday. Near Jackson, Mich., a tornado accompanied by a rain and hail storm destroyed crops, blew down houses and barns, and damaged orchards.

Arrangements have been perfected for the consolidation of the Des Moines Northern and Des Moines and Northwestern Railroads, extending from Des Moines to Fonda, and Des Moines to Boone, Iowa, and comprising a total of 160 miles of road, purchased for $6,000,000.

Miss Hamberger, a music teacher of Chicago, was drowned in the Ohio river, near Dayton, Ky., Tuesday, together with two companions. Their boat was upset.

Fire at Jacksonville, Fla., at 1 o'clock Tuesday morning mowed a path two blocks wide and six blocks long. Thirty firms were burned out and sixty dwellings were destroyed. No lives were lost, though there were many injured by flying plate glass caused by a dynamite explosion. The loss is over $1,000,000, with one-half insurance. The Peacock canning establishment and some adjoining structures at St. Louis were destroyed, causing a total loss of $150,000, well covered by insurance. The Damon Iron Works, E. Kendall & Co., machinists, and the Harvard Dry Plate Company at Cambridge, Mass., were burned out. The total loss is about $300,000 and the insurance $413,000. A loss of $80,000, insured for $71,000, was caused by fire in Putnam & Co.'s spring bed factory at Boston.

President Harrison was present Wednesday at the dedication of the monument erected at Bennington, Vt., to commemorate the victory of the Vermont and New Hampshire militia under General Stark over a detachment of Burgoyne's army. The Hon. Edward J. Phelps, ex-Minister to England, delivered the principal oration. Wednesday was also the centennial anniversary of the admission of Vermont as a State into the Union.

The steamer Teutonic arrived in New York Wednesday morning, five days, sixteen hours, and thirty-one minutes from Queenstown. This lowers the fastest previous record one hour and thirty-seven minutes, made by the Majestic on her last trip from Liverpool.

Edward Lambert, Jr., book-keeper of the San Juan Smelting and Mining Company and mayor of Durango, Col., is a defaulter in the sum of $110,000. His method of stealing was in drawing checks for freight charges in access of the true amounts.

Official reports to the Iowa Christian church convention show a gain in membership the past year of over six thousand, and twenty-one new churches have been dedicated.

Harvesting is in full operation in North Dakota. The surplus of wheat for export is estimated to be 46,000,000 bushels. Other crops are equally promising.

Over eight hundred pieces of skin have been grafted to the body of William Shaw, of Lima, Ohio, who was scalded in the Standard Oil Refinery July 4. This eclipses all previous skin-grafting operations.

It is reported that gold and silver in paying quantities have been discovered in the Kiowa and Comanche country. Permission to negotiate with the Indians for the privilege of working the mines has been refused.

Several butter factories at Elgin, Ill., have been compelled to suspend operations on account of the shrinkage in the supply of milk, by reason of dry weather. Butter is increasing in price.

It is reported that the Iowa, Sac, Fox, and Pottawatomie Reservations will be opened for settlement Sept. 15.

The Wilkin Manufacturing Company, at Milwaukee, Wis., makers of saw mill and general milling machinery, made an assignment Wednesday night to John Barth, whose bond has been fixed at $400,000.

The building at Nos. 68, 70, 72, and 74 Park place, New York City, collapsed at noon Saturday, burying in the ruins scores of men, women, and children who had been employed in the building. Up to midnight Saturday only eleven bodies had been recovered. The number of killed and injured is variously estimated at from twenty to two hundred. Fire added its horrors to the catastrophe, and those who were not killed in the ruins were roasted alive.

Arrangements are nearly completed for the trial of Dr. Briggs for heresy.

FOREIGN.

Thirty lives were lost Monday by an overflow of the St. Marie at Port au Prince, San Domingo.

Monday the failure of the British Bank of Australia, with liabilities of $800,000, was announced.

Captain Barchewsky, the explorer, arrived in Sansarcand Tuesday. He reports the discovery of large deposits of gold, lead, and iron in Eastern Bokhara.

At Melbourne, Wednesday, the Anglo-Australian Bank, another land company connected with the British Bank of Australia, suspended with liabilities of $600,000.

The heavy replenishing of the stores of military grain depots in Poland, Lithuiana, and Bessarabia gave rise to the recent rumor of Russian war preparations.

In commenting on President Harrison's speech at Albany, the London Daily News says that the evil effects of the McKinley law are disguised by the coincidence of good crops in America and bad harvests in Europe.

Sixty persons are known to have lost their lives in the recent hurricane at Martinique, West Indies. Twenty vessels were wrecked, among them the American brig Ned White. The growing crops were also badly damaged.

A ranchman named Medina, living in the United States of Colombia, has confessed to murdering thirteen children under 5 months of age. Ten were his own children, and three his grandchildren.

The National Welsh Eisteddfod Association at Swansea, Thursday, decided to hold an eisteddfod in Chicago during the World's Fair. The meeting is arranged to occur six weeks before the American Eisteddfod.

The German papers which have been printing articles opposing the Chicago Columbian Exposition have made a sudden change in their tactics and now print a circular setting forth the advantages to be derived by having an excellent German exhibit at the fair. They now urge in unmistakable language that Germany must take a prominent part in the exhibition.

THE manufacturing industries located at Harvey within one year represent nearly $4,000,000.00 capital, all brought here on account of the strong Prohibitory features of the town.

As an investment Harvey is ahead of all other places in or around Chicago. We sold 180 lots in a single week recently. Many lots have already advanced from $200 to $700, giving the purchasers over 300 per cent profit.

Harvey has a very strong Prohibition Club, also W. C. T. U.; four churches organized.

Academy Addition

on which the HARVEY INDUSTRIAL ACADEMY is being built, is located between 147th Street and the Calumet River. Look at No. 9 in the illustrations. The completion of this building and the opening of the Fall term, will largely increase the value of all property in Harvey. The President of one of the largest manufacturing concerns in Harvey said that the coming of this institution would add more to the values than the coming of all the manufactories now located there. Those who purchase now in ACADEMY ADDITION buy at first prices. It is in this Addition that the Manager of the Pullman Palace Car Co. of New Orleans has purchased 48 lots. Houses being erected on this Addition rent for 30 per cent of cost of house and lot. These are opportunities for investment seldom offered. It is crossed by the proposed Elevated Road to the City. It is the nearest to the World's Fair Site, a 15 minutes' ride; over a half mile of river frontage. Lots from $150 and upward. Payments to suit. We will send FREE to CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE readers the ONLY PLAT which shows the WHOLE of HARVEY, as originally proposed. We are exclusive agents for ACADEMY ADDITION. At last week's session of the National Camp, Patriotic Order Sons of America, in Philadelphia, the question of excluding the word "white" from the constitution of the society was discussed at length, and decided in the negative. So colored men are still ineligible to membership. This is not genuine "patriotism," but about what might have been expected from a political secret organization.

The devil is called, in the Bible, an "old serpent;" a "dog;" a "lion;" and a "great red dragon." Romanism is his religion, and is called a "beast;" "the great whore;" "the mother of harlots," and "Babylon the Great," which is to be "thrown down" and "found no more at all." The Scriptures containing these statements are: Rev. 12: 9, and 20: 2; Psalm 22: 20, and 35: 17; Rev. 12: 3; 17: 1, 18; 17: 5, and 13: 1; indeed, all of chapter 17. A careful scanning of these Scriptures will throw immense light on human history and our condition, and also throw hope on our future.

The death of Samuel Clark Pomeroy, ex-Senator from Kansas, occurred at Whitensville, near Worcester, Mass., on Thursday of last week. Mr. Pomeroy was born at Southampton, Mass., January 3, 1816, and would, in a few months more, have been seventy-six years old. He has been a prominent figure in American politics for many years, owing to the tenacity with which he advocated the cause of genuine reforms, with the usual result of calling down upon himself the malevolence of unscrupulous politicians, and of winning the esteem of all right-minded men. In his opposition to secret societies, and his affiliation with the National Christian Association, he identified himself boldly with its aims and interests, and became its champion. An extended life sketch and portrait of him is underlined for early publication in these columns.

Sons of Veterans, in general session at Minneapolis, Minn., last week, voted in favor of a plan for organizing a military rank, to be known as the Sons of Veterans' Guards, and a code for its government. This code is based upon the regulations of the United States army, with stated uniforms and plenty of military titles for the officers, from a brigadier down to fourth corporal. Regiments will range in numbers of men from 320 upward. The convention also voted to change the clause of the constitution admitting "lineal descendants" of soldiers or sailors in the Union service as members, so as to include only "male descendants" as eligible candidates for membership. We are getting too many of these imitation military societies, whose principal glory seems to be sought and found in the fuss and feathers of social dress parades.

At the present writing, on the eve of going to press, the general unrest of the times is again emphasized by the lowering of the war cloud upon important European States. The government of Austria is watching with considerable anxiety the massing of Russian troops along the frontier, and has found it necessary to add 18,000,000 florins to the war budget, in order to increase the effective strength of national infantry and artillery. Military authorities, acute observers, writing from Odessa, concur in statements respecting the unusual activity existing in the military depots of Bessarabia, and especially the concentration there of large forces of cavalry, which is something extraordinary. Immense bodies of troops are continually arriving at and departing from the camps along the Russo-Roumanian frontier, passing beyond to unknown points of occupation. Austria, fearing a sudden declaration of war, is constantly on the alert to prevent any invasion of foreign troops that may be massing against her. The same feeling of uncertainty and distrust is also visible in Bulgaria, and the government vigilance is fixed principally upon Servia, where, under cover of performing the annual maneuvers, the reserved military force has been called to the field. Nothing serious may result from all these warlike demonstrations, after all, but there is a general impression across the sea that a war of great importance in pending.

While subservience to the laws of the order, as expressed in its various obligations, permeates every degree of Masonry, it remains for the thirtieth degree in the Scottish Rite to cap the climax. "A careful reading of its ritual through," says President J. Blanchard, in his exposition, (Vol. 2: page 306) "will convince thoughtful persons that this degree is the ne plus ultra (no more beyond) of Masonic knowledge; and that it is also the ne plus ultra of Masonic falsehood, hypocrisy, treason, and general scoundrelism..... Why, this very ritual gives the Master power to stop and adjourn any debate, by three raps with the pommel of his sword! No slaves on a southern plantation were ever bound by the law of property to a more abject, cringing obedience to their master than these Masons are to theirs.... This degree quotes Christ's law of equal 'love to our neighbor,' and yet tells the candidate, after he is received: 'When your rashness prompted you to enter this awful sanctuary, you were no doubt informed of the danger which threatened you, and of the trials which still await you. Swear, therefore, upon your word of honor, never to reveal what you have seen or heard hitherto. Remember, however, that even now you are at liberty to withdraw in peace, if a timid conscience, if prejudices and superstition, or any other reason, cause you to hesitate, but forget not that the slightest indiscretion will cost you your life!'" Masonically, this is called "the apex of the Masonic edifice," although there are still three other degrees beyond it. Finally, these valiant Knights of Kadosh drink wine from a skull and break bread with the new knight, who consigns himself to the utmost contempt and disgrace if he ever breaks his iron-clad obligation. In the meantime, what becomes of all his other obligations to God and his fellow men?—and how shattered must be his manhood and his self-respect!—Masonry is tyranny, "from soup to black coffee!"

THE BATTLE-AUTUMN OF 1864.

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

In that stormy battle-Autumn,
Long years ago,
When the battle-flags were waving
In the sulphur-laden air,
And the noble hearts were braving
Death for home and freedom there.
There, beneath the Southern sky,
Warriors met to fight and die;
Death, without a fear or falter,
Laid on Freedom's holy altar,
In that Autumn long ago—
Long years ago!

In that gory battle-Autumn,
Long years ago,
In the South, beneath the palm,
In the North, beneath the pine,
With a sad despairing calm,
Women watched the battle-line:
Saw the banners rise and fall,
Heard the bugle's thrilling call,
While the God of battles thundered,
And brave souls in death were sundered.
In that Autumn, long ago—
Long years ago!

In that fiery battle-Autumn,
Long years ago,
Where the mists, so cold and damp,
Hung above the soldiers' camp,
Marching farther, day by day,
From their homes so far away;
Boys in gray were sadly sighing,
'Neath the chilling Northern sky;
Boys in blue were slowly dying,
Where 'neath Southern stars they lie;
Over both our God was keeping
Guard above those armies sleeping,
In that Autumn long ago—
Long years ago!

It was over long ago—
Long years ago;
Hushed the cannon's sullen roar,
And the weary march is o'er;
"Taps" has sounded, and the call
Falls like blessings on us all.
Northern hills and Southern land,
Blue and gray, united stand,
Calling "peace!"—our God forever
Guard the land we love forever;
When we fought so long ago
In that Autumn long ago—
Long years ago!

SECRET SOCIETIES IN AFRICA.

BY H. W. JOHNSTON.

It is not my purpose in writing about the above-named institutions to enter into any general treatment of the secret work or organization of these orders, but simply to tell some of the things I saw and heard of their operations as I have journeyed here and there about the country. I am not aware that any of the "bush" secret societies exist in Sierra Leone. They have given place to the imported article, just as tobacco has superseded the chew-stick, and rum the palm wine for general use. Freetown has a Masonic lodge and several Good Templar lodges.

I peeped inside a "bush" lodge-room for the first time at Robana, a Temne town, about eighty miles from Freetown. Almost every tribe, or section of a tribe, has a different name for its society; but the general arrangements for meeting and the general characteristics of the orders are substantially the same, and follow the general outline of lodges in all lands: a secluded place, guarded by a man on the watch in an anteroom, admission of only the initiated, an oath of secrecy, and means of helping one another and securing advantages in the community by secret signs of recognition. Here, in Africa, where there are no upper rooms to gather in, they select a patch of thick bush near the village, and just off the path. Across the path they cut out into the bush, they erect a screen of thatched grass, to prevent "cowans" and the women from catching a glimpse of their sacred enclosure. Inside, beyond the first clearing, they make another, a grass fence separating them. Within this last room they usually have a "devil-house," and the human devil of some of the lodges resides there. The people have been taught to regard the bush about this "lodge-room" with such superstitious fear that there is no danger of eaves-droppers. In some places it is supposed to be sure death to the uninitiated to enter the adjacent bush.

At the town of Bompeh, the mission secured of the Christianized chief a grant of the very bush where the devil's sacred precincts had been located for years, but the missionary could not get laborers to touch the devil's domain. The station is in charge of a woman, a daughter of Bishop Crowther. She seized a cutlass, and began the attack, and when the people saw that she suffered no harm from his Satanic majesty, they began their work of cutting away the bush.

Like all other lodges, whether in Africa or America, they choose the night for their conclaves, and keep late hours. The African variety make night hideous with their yelling, singing and dancing. We have already stated that the names of these societies are different in almost every locality. At Robana the men's order is known as "Bundoo Boys;" while at Rotofunk the name "Bundoo" is given to a female order, and the males have a different name. In the Limbah region the lodge takes the name of Kuffoo, while in the Sherbro and Mendi country and in the southern part of the Temne country, the "Porrah Boys" are the prevailing order.

While at Kusifa, Commander, a Temne king, was making great preparations to have his boys, five in number, made "Bundoo Boys." During the day about forty women, chiefly, if not all, his wives, were hard at work cleaning a quantity of rice for the great occasion, and some men were engaged in making "Bundoo" gowns for the boys, out of country cloth. While the work was going on, a band of musicians was playing on various styles of country instruments, and the candidates for Bundoohood kept up a firing of guns to cheer on the work.

At night, a big dance, lasting till almost daybreak, continued the festivities. I did not learn whether the initiation to the Bundoo is similar to the Porrah or not. In the latter, the candidate is secreted in the bush for a few weeks and not allowed to see any of his friends, though they are allowed to bring food. They bring the food, despite the fact that the report has been given out that the person is dead, and everybody pretends to believe the matter. After a time, the candidate is given a new name and brought forth, and he, following his instructions, feigns strangeness and recognizes no one. We suppose the design, like the Hiram Abiff farce in Masonry, is to bring about the death of the old man and the resurrection to a new life, as in true religion, by other means than through Jesus Christ. Since the devil plans all false worship it is not strange that even in heathendom he should attempt to satisfy the deeply-felt want of the human heart for a new life in God, by teaching the people a false way of getting born again.

We recently lodged one night at the town of Mabang, on the Ribbe river, about forty miles southeast of Freetown. It was lodge night, and the Porrah Boys were out in force. Awhile after dark, the "Porrah devil," or grand mogul of the order, raised the peculiar yell of the order in the Porrah bush, near the town. The conclave assembled, and, forming in a squad, marched through the town, with a constant volley of Porrah yells. The women and the uninitiated, and especially the native strangers, hide away in their huts, and the Porrahs have the freedom of the town. Our hammock men had been quartered for the night in an open barray, built for mission services. The devil had not let off many yells until a part of our men came pell-mell right into the house where we were stopping, like frightened sheep. When asked why they had done so, they explained that they were not Porrah Boys, and as they came from "the other side"—northern part of the Temne country—they were afraid the Porrahs would catch them. We questioned them about it, and they stated that this order often seizes a boy from some other place, or one whose relatives have money, and hide them in the Porrah bush, under guard of the Porrah devil, and before he gets out a full-fledged Porrah, his friends pay well for it. It was with some difficulty that we persuaded the men to return to their sleeping place, assuring them that we were not afraid of the Porrah devil, nor would he dare to molest men in our employ. This is a more barbarous, but about as honorable, a method of recruiting the lodge ranks as the popular one in America of sending a presiding elder to intimate to the young minister that if he hopes to succeed and do well in his conference he must join the Masons, or for an old lawyer to tell the young man that he will stand no show of success in court unless he becomes a lodgeman.

Rev. John Williams, a native of Sierra Leone, has planted a little mission at Mabang, and gathered a few converts; but he complained of being greatly hindered in the work by this secret society. He says the people about him have not been led astray by Mohammedanism, and that they realize the weakness of their old religions and receive the Gospel as the truth and acknowledge its claims, but that this secret devil worship keeps the men from Christ. Missionaries at Rotofunk, Bompeh and Shengeh bear the same testimony. Not only is this African species of Masonry opposed to Christ by the very organic nature of its system of secret works and devil worship, but in many places it is actively opposing the missionary work.

The "Bundoo women" seems to be a secret order of dancing women. They dress with scant clothing, rub their faces and the exposed parts of their body with chalk, or any white substance obtainable, and encircle their waists with a string of anything that will jingle or rattle when they dance. Perhaps the chalking of their bodies is to give them more of the appearance of their sisters —the American ballet-girls. Two young girls had been made Bundoo girls shortly before we visited the town of Rotofunk. Their period of initiation—or hiding in the bush—being over, they were brought out in Bundoo costume by those who had them in charge and made to dance in public. They danced until weary, and then refused to dance any longer. Preparations were being made to flog them, when they consented to dance longer if they were not flogged.

But these works of darkness have taken on the darkest shades in the Sherbro country, where there is an institution that, for want of a name, we will call the "Ancient and Honorable Order of Human Leopards." Whether it is simply the Porrah Bush order in action, or is an inner circle, or higher degree of that order, it is certainly Porrah Bushism gone to seed. There exists a widespread superstition among the tribes about Sierra Leone, and even among the Sierra Leoneans, that certain persons are "able to go in the bush and do devil" and turn themselves into leopards or alligators, and, in form of "grezre" animals, take vengeance on any unlucky enemy that may chance to be caught by them. This superstition may have been originally instilled into the minds of the people by the Porrah lodge; but however it originated, the order of A. H. of H. L., as named above, know how to take advantage of it. They manufacture iron claws that will tear flesh like claws of a wild beast, and, thus armed, they go forth at night to watch for their intended victim. It is said that sometimes they complete their outfit by wearing a leopard skin. They lay in ambush by the roadside, and if a belated enemy chances that way, he is pounced upon and killed, and the body torn with the claws. In the beginning of this order it is probable that the intention was only to have a convenient means of revenge, of "removing" obnoxious rivals, or of terrifying the "cowans." But of late years it has degenerated into pure cannibalism, and the victim is eaten as well as killed. Last year so many were falling victims to these human leopards that an appeal was made by some of the Christian missionaries laboring in that region for the governor of the colony of Sierra Leone to take steps to check these "beasts."

WORDS.

BY WM. F. DAVIS.

"By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Matthew 12: 37. This verse flashes the search light of the great white throne upon words, and furnishes the only curb strong enough to tame the human tongue, which no mere man ever yet hath tamed nor ever can tame.

Look upon that stream of humanity pouring along the crowded thoroughfare! Some of them are walking the highway of holiness. They are justified. The others, though to the outward eye walking close by the side of the holy, are in reality treading among the traps, snares, gins, and pitfalls of the road to everlasting woe. They are condemned. By what are these condemned? By what are those justified? By their words.

Out of the mouths of the justified proceed words of blessing; and because of these words the speakers are blessed. Out of the mouths of the condemned proceed words of cursing; and because of these words the speakers are cursed.

Out of the mouths of the justified come forth loyal words of truth, by which the speakers are saved. Out of the mouths of the condemned steal treacherous words of falsehood, by which the speakers are destroyed.

Out of the mouths of the justified issue the living words of God; and by these words they are characterized as the children of the living God, born from above. Out of the mouths of the condemned pour the words of the death-dealing devil and by these words it is known that they are the death-doomed children of the devil.

The power of life, and the power of death, is in the tongue.

"Deliver my soul, O Jehovah! from lying lips and from a deceitful tongue. What shall be given unto thee? or what shall be done unto thee, thou false tongue? Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper." Psalm 120: 2–4.

"The words of his mouth were smoother than butter." Hear them! Psalm 55: 21: "There came one running;"—what eagerness!—"and kneeled to him,"—what reverence!—"and asked him, Good Master"—how smooth the words!—how glibly spoken! Mark 10: 17, 18.

Practice makes perfect. The young man had, we know not how many hundreds of times, until conscious falsehood had become the unconscious trick of politeness, spoken these identical words to his sinful fellow-men; and it is safe, perhaps, to assume that never before were his honeyed insinuations openly rebuked. Will he bring out his whitewash to bespatter the face of the sun? Will he play off his cheap compliment of stale flattery upon incarnate Truth? A sharp arrow of the Mighty One, into whose lips grace is poured, now meets this false tongue. "Why callest thou me good? There is none good but one; that is God." Mark 10: 18. Did the young man mean by his "Good Master," or Teacher, to acknowledge "God was manifest in the flesh," 1 Tim. 3: 16, in the person of Jesus Christ visible before him? If not, he intended to tickle the ears of one whom he believed to be a sinner, calling him good, and pretended to seek instruction as from a teacher, from one who he imagined would be pleased with flattery. If he did recognize God in Christ, why did he not obey him, and follow him, instead of going away sorrowful, when the question he asked had been truly and faithfully answered, and the Lord had shown him how he might "inherit eternal life"? "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." 1 Peter 4: 11.

What have we, as professed Christians, to do with the false and flattering speech of men? We need not join the Quaker sect to know that thou, not you, is the simple language of truth when applied to the second person singular, nominative or vocative. Jesus said: "Why callest thou me good?" The substitution of you for thou and thee, as of we and us for I and me, sprang from polite lying and worshiping men; and is grammatically as inaccurate, and logically as false, as it is obviously obnoxious to the first and second commandments.

The same objections lie against the worldly "Mr.," "Master," "Lord," "Rev.," "Doctor," "Teacher," "Father," "Sir," used as titles of eminence, for exalting a man above his fellow men on pedestals of honor.

Many now say they use these words without meaning anything by them, except to conform to a custom. Thus multitudes of ignorant people and poor children now curse and swear without meaning anything more than to be emphatic, and conform to customs existing around them. They speak the greatest words often without being aware that they have spoken them. Mere words, idle words. He who said, "Neither be ye called masters: for One is your Master, Christ" (Matt. 12: 36), said also, "That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

In the light of the judgment day no man will defend the polite flatteries of this day, which so many professed Christians now practice lest they appear odd. That judgment day light is given us to walk by in this dark world now. Let us use it.

Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass.

SECRECY.

[Oration by E. C. Clapp, delivered June 18, 1891, at Hartsville (Ind.) College Commencement.]

That the Bible describes an ideal state of society cannot be truthfully denied. If any one doubts, let him read and be convinced. In this ideal society every one is a Christian.

The Bible is the supreme law. There are no saloons. No murders, suicides or thefts are committed. No jails are needed. All dwell together in harmony. Of course there are mistakes and misunderstandings, for men are finite beings. But every one keeps the two great commandments, "Love God with all thy heart; and thy neighbor as thyself.

Most words have more than one meaning. The word secret is used in so broad a sense that it is often difficult to understand. Many things properly qualified by the word private are usually called secrets. For instance, one's thoughts or the private affairs of a family. Yet secrets do exist both in families and in the minds of men.

Let me illustrate what I mean by secrecy. The ordinary transactions of every-day life are not secrets. If a man goes to the store and buys a pound of coffee, though he and the merchant are the only ones present, they have no secret. Or, if a man alone in the middle of a corn field takes a chew of tobacco he has no secret. Or, if a man goes to his neighbor's house, when there is no one at home, and borrows a tool, he has no secret. Or, if a man commits murder and makes no attempt to conceal it, he has no secret, even though it be months before he finds occasion to tell it. But if in any of these acts there has been the intention to conceal, then is secrecy practiced. If a man, in a crowd, picks one's pocket, he is practicing secrecy: because he intends to conceal his act.

Allow me to define the term secrecy. Several definitions are given by the dictionaries, some of which include this one. But each include other ideas. You may consider that a particular kind of secrecy is to be discussed. Secrecy is knowing, doing, or thinking with the intention of concealing. If this intention be lacking, there is no secrecy, whether the thing be good or bad. If one knows a thing and decides to conceal it, he is practicing secrecy: if afterwards he changes his mind, he has no secret. The secrecy is in the intention. God judges men not so much for their actions as the motive in their actions. A man may have a right motive and do a wrong act, but if he has avoided all carelessness and acted according to his best knowledge, God will not condemn him.

Remember, now, what I mean by secrecy. There are multitudes of little things occurring in all families, and as many thoughts coming into all minds, the knowledge of which would neither benefit nor harm any one. But if a circumstance should arise in which they would be useful, no one would hesitate to tell them. But, one says, there are things which no one would be willing to tell. I admit it. But no one should do that which he is ashamed or afraid to acknowledge to any one having a right to know.

Can a man be a Christian and continually do things he is not willing to have made known for the good of others? Do you suppose Christ did or thought anything he was not willing the whole world should know?

But, we say, we can not help thinking such thoughts. Perha s not. That is a result of our fallen nature. But we can choose one subject of thought in preference to another, govern what we do, and control our intentions.

Secrecy is contrary to the nature of God. He has no secret in all his universe. From whom should he conceal anything? But it may be said, "God has secrets. He has not revealed to us all he knows. He has not told us how he formed the universe or even this earth."

Those are not secrets. We are not capable of comprehending the thoughts of God. Do you suppose that if we were capable, and to know them would do us good, that he would conceal them from us?

He would not then be God.

Neither will you find any secret in Nature. She says, "I am free; come explore and examine." As rapidly as we become competent, we may pry into and learn what are called her "secrets."

The religion of Christ, too, is open and free as air. Listen to his word, "In secret have I said nothing." "What I have spoken in the ear, that declare ye upon the housetop."

Yes, his religion is free, and he wants us to be free. We are commanded to dwell together in unity. Apply your idea of a family of brothers, not each contending for his own advantage as opposed to that of every other; nor yet, a part seeking their united good to the exclusion of the rest.

Again, secrecy is foolish.

Can a thing be concealed from God? Then why should one wish to keep it from men? Is not God more powerful than man? Moreover, all things will be brought to light in the Day of Judgment.

Again, a secret is not necessary.

If Christ, founding a kingdom in the midst of powerful enemies, needed no secrets, are we in need of any?

All this leads me to conclude that what I have called secrecy is a sin in the eyes of God.

But if it is a sin for an individual thus to conceal a thing, what shall we say of a company of men who form an oath-bound organization? Besides committing sin as an organization, each individual takes an oath to sin. One swears to "conceal and never reveal." It makes no difference what shall become known, if connected with the lodge or any of its members, it must be concealed. Not only so, but the taking of such oaths is sin. For in Leviticus 5: 4, God says, "If any swear rashly with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall utter rashly with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then shall he be guilty in one of these things."

Such an organization limits one's benevolence. We are commanded to love one another: i. e., everybody: but the lodge says, love your fellow lodgeman better than any one else. Treat him a little better than any other man. Help him even though some other man is in greater distress. Christ's idea of benevolence is clearly taught in a parable. We know the Good Samaritan and the man "who fell among thieves" could have been bound by no other than human ties. However good the original purpose of such an organization may have been, its secrecy makes it peculiarly attractive to men whose lives need concealment. Hence perversions of law and justice are common, and would be more so, but for the fact that most members are better than their obligations.

Again, the system is absurd.

Suppose everybody should join all the lodges. From whom could they conceal anything? Evidently, then, carried out logically to its fullest extent, it would defeat its own end. Can you say the same of Christianity?

We have only one standard of truth—the Bible. To it we must refer everything. If things will not stand this test they must fall. We have only one perfect example—Christ. We have but one great object in life—to fulfill God's purpose in placing us in this world. To do this we must follow our Example. All things that aid us are right; all that hinder are wrong. There is one straight and narrow path which we must follow.

We must always conform to undisguised truth, else we will become entangled as does a false witness.

It was for this reason that Christ so easily baffled all his adversaries. But, says some one, "We cannot do that, for we are not equal to him." What then? Shall we cut loose and not try to follow him? Some one may say, "We cannot live so, because of the state of society. We find it what it is and have to accept it. We find men practicing secrecy, and we have to do so to keep abreast of the times."

Must a man sin because his neighbor sins? Instead of this, why not resolve to add one man's mite toward helping to change this state of society?

* * * * *

We are commanded to avoid the very appearance of evil. A taint of sin always connects itself with secrecy, because secrecy has always been connected with sin. "Men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

Morally there are but two things in the world, good and bad. No one need conceal the good; no one ought to conceal the bad.

Where then is there room for a secret?

THE NEW BALLOT LAW OF ILLINOIS.

According to the new election law, now in force in this State, the ballots are to be printed in State and county elections by the County Clerk, and in city elections by the City Clerk, and in township elections by the Township Clerk. In Chicago the printing of ballots will be attended to by the Board of Election Commissioners. The names of all the candidates of all the parties must be placed upon one ballot. In order to secure a place on the ticket for a candidate he must have been nominated by a party polling at least two per cent of the popular vote, though by a special provision a place on the ticket for independent candidates is found.

Very heavy penalties are provided in case the officer whose duty it is to print the ballots is guilty of any fraud or irregularity. All of the ballots are distributed by the officer whose duty it is to print them. No ballot can be obtained except those which are legally printed and bear the signature of the proper officer, and the ballots are given alone to the judges of election, who are compelled under penalty to account for every ballot received from the officer who has them printed, whether saved, voted or destroyed or mutilated; a complete check is kept upon all the ballots.

The voter can only obtain his ticket after entering the voting-room and from the judge of election, or in Chicago it will be the proper officer under the law. This ballot he takes and retires to an apartment which is in sight of the judges, and prepares it, returns and places it in the hands of the judge, who deposits it in the ballot-box. At the head of each list of candidates there will be the party name, or some other word to designate the political party. The ticket will closely resemble the Indiana blanket ballot. The officer who has the ballots printed will furnish cards of instructions to the voters, which will give them ample information as to the manner of voting and the other requirements of the law. In each of the rooms in which the election is held there will be furnished small booths or apartments in which the voter must go and secretly and alone prepare his ballot. No one can be in the room where the voting takes place, except three or four persons, who may be waiting their turn to enter a voting booth. No electioneering is allowed within a hundred feet of the polls. One voting booth will be furnished to each fifty voters if necessary, so that there will be no crowding and no one will be deprived of a vote. Due care is taken in the bill to provide for any person who is unable to read, so that his ticket may be made out and his vote remain a secret. Every person shall be allowed two hours to vote, and no reduction of his wages is made on account of his absence for that length of time. In the country the time of opening the polls is changed to 7 o'clock and the time of closing to 5 o'clock. The Chicago law in that respect remains as it is now. The ballots will be preserved six months.—Sel.

HON. SAMUEL DEXTER, in an Open Letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

THE TREND OF MODERN ROMANISM.

The report of the Superintendent of Census gives the Catholic church in the United States 6,250,045. This is but a little over one-third of the actual strength of the Catholic church in the United States.—Western Catholic News.

The Pope is in favor of a republic in Italy. The Catholic church is the grandest republic ever established on earth, and a good one to copy after. The church was established for the spiritual welfare of the whole human family. Republics are established for the temporal welfare and emancipation of the peoples of nations from the thralldom of one-man power. Why, then, should not the church be in favor of the republican form of government?—Ibid.

Protestant authors no longer see in St. Bartholomew's day any cause to blame the authorities of the Catholic church.—New York Catholic Review.

The Inquisition, in its leading principles and ideas, was a valuable organization; its object was to preserve the purity of Christian faith at a time when heresy and its propagation were looked upon as two enormous crimes, dangerous alike to church and state; and if the "Inquisition burned the flesh of human beings made in God's likeness," it was to save other human souls from burning in hell forever.—Ibid.

The truth need not be paraded on all occasions, and there are certain occasions when the laws of God command the truth to be kept concealed.—Ibid.

Secret societies are dangerous to the commonwealth. We are surprised to see an article over a column long quoted from the Globe-Democrat in the Catholic Knights of America News portraying the benefits of secret societies. The writer of that article says those societies "do not plot against the peace and welfare of the community." What is the necessity for a secret, then? Let the community be the judge whether they plot against it, or any portion of it, or not. We have the positive evidence that some, at least, if not all of these star-chamber concerns do plot against the community. He says "the Senate of the United States becomes a secret society every time it goes into executive session." Yes, for the time being, but the business of that session is given to the public later. And while we see no necessity for the United States Senate—a public body—doing business with closed doors, yet it may be judicious at times, but never necessary for the welfare of a community that men should club together to practice heathenish ceremonies under lock and key.—Western Catholic News.

Among the prominent voyagers arriving in New York from Rome a few days ago was Father Bernard Christen, the general of the Order of Capuchins. He proposes to make an official visitation of all institutions under charge of the order. He was born in Switzerland July 24, 1839, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1860. Two years later he was appointed professor of philosophy at the Capuchin convent at Zug, and, shortly, master of novices at Lucerne. He remained here ten years, and was then transferred to Salothurn. In 1879 he was chosen as provincial of the order for Switzerland. In 1884 he was elected by the grand chapter as general of the order. He is the first native of Switzerland holding the position.—Ibid.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Unlearning—A new vegetable—Massachusetts at the World's Fair—What her distilleries are doing—Bro. Wm F. Davis on Boston Common—The "Traveller."

"What I learned in the first half of my life I am now spending the last half in unlearning," said one of the writer's neighbors the other day; a man of liberal education, who has chosen the profession of farming, and the raising of small fruits, and found that it pays—when "mixed with brains," according to that old-fashioned but very reliable formula for success, which I fear is quoted more frequently than practiced. Allowing for any playful exaggeration in my friend's speech, it is for the most of us a true one. The capacity to unlearn our false notions is quite as needful as the gift of seizing and retaining new ideas. The latter we are apt to cultivate at the expense of the former. We are born into a mist of ignorance and prejudice, which is, perhaps, as needful in the first stages of our existence as the seed cotyledons of the young plant that drop off as soon as it begins to send out its tiny rootlets and push its way up into the air and light. So the earlier we begin to think for ourselves, the sooner we can begin to dispense with the swaddling bands of other people's opinions, and the less we shall have to unlearn in the years that lie before us.

This reflection is certainly very apropos to the multitude who have been taught all their lives to consider Freemasonry a good thing, and are now having their eyes opened to the truth. I do not wonder that the unlearning should be with many such a slow process. The fraternities still continue to be stirred up over Bro. Stoddard's victory at the Baptist Ministers' meeting, in June. That he was indorsed by fifty of them against seven is evidently a bitter pill for them to swallow, or they would not make so many wry faces over it. The August number of the Voice of Masonry, which now lies before me, pays its respects to Mr. Stoddard in an article headed, "The Denouncer Denounced," and is decidedly the lamest attempt I have yet seen to turn aside from the lodge those winged arrows of truth which are penetrating everywhere between the joints of its armor. It is too illogical to merit any serious attention. Has the Voice of Masonry no heavier shot than this to fire in response to Bro. Stoddard's scathing broadside? To misquote his remarks and wrest them from their proper meaning is an easy way to dispose of an opponent, especially when his arguments are unanswerable.

I see that the Department of Agriculture has introduced a new vegetable as a rival to the Irish potato—the calla-lily bulb, which we have never thought of before except as an exotic for the window or the green-house. If what we eat has any effect on our spiritual being, as so many wise men claim, we Americans ought to be the most cosmopolitan people existing, for the products of every quarter of the globe can be found on our dinner-tables. A housekeeper of the old colonial days would be quite confounded if she could look over a modern bill of fare; and without doubt a range would be as mystifying to her as to the family of a certain native Texan, who, on a journey to the North, saw this kitchen convenience for the first time, and ordered one sent to his home. But the firm which sold it to him soon received a letter full of bitter complaints that "the thing wouldn't work nohow." An investigation revealed the fact that the family, which had been hitherto used only to the most primitive methods of cooking, had made a fire in the oven and tried to bake in the grate!

It has been suggested that Massachusetts be represented at the World's Fair by a model school-house. The statutes of the State require every school-house to be so built that each pupil shall be furnished with thirty cubic feet of air per minute, and thoroughly ventilated without draughts. Nor has she ever in her history drawn the color line. Well may she be proud of her free school system, and well may her noblest sons and daughters be stirred up to defend it from the subtle attacks of Jesuitism! What of her nine distilleries, seven of which are within a radius of five miles of Boston? I have seen no proposal as yet that this industry shall have any part in the World's exhibit, and yet it is one which the last fiscal year paid into the United States Treasury a revenue figuring up to $868,524.50. New England drinks very little of this; it is not to her own lips but to her neighbors' that she puts the poisoned cup. She sends it South and West, and the poorest and cheapest of the vile stuff she sends to Africa—perhaps on the same ship with the missionary, to undo all his labors and make the very name of the land from which Harriet Newell went forth in her youth and beauty to lay down her life for the cause of foreign evangelization, a hissing and a reproach. Some of these distillers, it is said, give liberally of their money to the missionary cause. Shame on the churches that will accept the price of blood! Is it not time that immaterial questions in theology were set aside by our New England Zion for the more vital point of clearing her garments from all such blood-guiltiness, that she may stand without spot or stain when her Lord shall appear? How can we reconcile the keen scent after heresies in creed which characterizes orthodox Congregationalists to-day with the tolerance of pagan worships in their midst?—their acceptance as church members in good and regular standing of men whose allegiance is not to Christ but to the lodge first and every time?

Several hundred working people gathered on the Common last Sunday to listen to an apostle of free thought, who indulged in the usual tirade against religion, government, monopolists and "blood-sucking office-holders." At its close Bro. Wm. F. Davis mounted one of the benches and began to speak. It made quite a dramatic scene, for the majority had imbibed too much of the free thought spirit to welcome at once the Boston evangelist, and frequently interrupted him with expressions of disapproval. A neat puncture of the previous speaker's professions as inconsistent with his practice in the fact that "he talked against mayors and governments and yet crawled before the mayor of Boston for a permit to speak on the Common," turned the tide, and made the motley crowd willing to listen while Bro. Davis discoursed to them for over an hour on the Bible and salvation, not forgetting to talk against "pipes, cigars and beery breaths," so effectually that many of his hearers stopped smoking. He answered every question put to him without hesitation—questions from Jews, infidels and Roman Catholics. Surely God has raised up Brother Davis for this work, and the devils of Rum, Romanism and Masonry, when they imprisoned him for a year in Charles Street jail, fought a losing battle.

The account given above is taken from the report in the Traveller, the one daily paper at the Hub which stands for religion and pure morals—clean, able, fearless; ready to champion every good cause, and give the reform news other papers will only publish for pay, not only fairly but sympathetically. Long live the Traveller!—and let the City Hall continue its boycott. It is an honorary mark of distinction, well-earned, and the Traveller ought to be proud of it.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26, 1891.

Secretary Noble is receiving, as he deserves, much commendation for his prompt action in heading off the attempt on the part of the brewers to take advantage of a recent judicial decision to flood the Indian country with beer. It is not believed by good lawyers that the United States Supreme Court will ratify the construction which Judge Bryant, of the eastern judicial district of Texas, who has jurisdiction over the Indian Territory, has placed upon the U. S. statute, which prohibits the introduction into the Indian Territory of "ardent spirits" or "spirituous liquors;" he having decided that malt liquors were not included and that lager beer might legally be taken into the Territory and sold. Almost as soon as the news of this decision arrived here the information came that a brewer had shipped or was about to ship a carload of beer to the Territory. As soon as Secretary Noble heard of this he instructed the acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs to telegraph the agent at Union agency to seize and turn over to the U. S. Marshal any packages of beer that might be brought into the Territory. This decision of Judge Bryant's has been criticised very harshly here; it was, it is generally thought, clearly the intention of Congress to prevent intoxicating liquor of any kind being taken into any Indian territory, but by some oversight "malt liquors" were not specifically mentioned in the statute. If one may judge from other decisions handed down by the Supreme Court affecting the liquor traffic, it seems reasonable to predict that this decision will be reversed. Secretary Noble believes that such will be the case, and he is determined that no beer shall be openly taken into or sold in the Territory if he can prevent it, and, as far as known, the Department of Justice, the Treasury and the War departments, all of which have officials in the Territory, will co-operate with him and render the Indian agents all the assistance possible.

The Census Bureau has just issued a very interesting bulletin on the assessed valuation of real and personal property in the several States and Territories. The totals show that the assessed value of all property increased from $16,902,993,543 in 1880 to $24,249,589,804 in 1890, an increase in the ten years of $7,346,596,261, which is slightly in excess of the entire true valuation of all property in the United States as returned by the census of 1850, the exact figures of that census being $7,135,780,228. Should the inquiry now being made in relation to the true value of all property in the United States show that the same ratio existed in 1890 between the true value and the assessed valuation as in 1880, the absolute wealth of the United States, at the close of the last census year, may be estimated as quite $62,610,000,000, or nearly $1,000 per capita, as against $514 per capita in 1860, $780 in 1870, and $870 in 1880.

A young superintendent of one of our Sunday-schools isn't likely to hear the last of a good joke on himself for some time to come. It had been several weeks since he had shaved, and his face presented that nondescript appearance so familiar to those who have raised a full beard, and he had been more or less worried by the comments on his appearance and the questions asked him about that coming beard, when one of his elderly friends, a teacher, asked him why he had disguised himself so. "Well, you see," he replied, "I have always had an idea that a Sunday-school superintendent should present an elderly and dignified appearance, so as to make the children regard him with a sort of fatherly feeling; so as soon as I was made superintendent I determined that I would wear a full beard, but I had little idea of what I should have to go through to get the beard." There would probably have been nothing further heard of the superintendent's explanation, had it not happened that a portion of it was overheard by a mischievous urchin, who, when Sunday-school broke up, shouted: "I know why Mr. ——— is getting whiskers," loud enough to be heard all over the room, and continuing as soon as he saw that he had everybody's attention: "'Cause he wants all the scholars to think he's their father." Amid the general laughter, the blushing superintendent made his escape for the time, but his friends, particularly the young ladies, have only to say "Papa" for him to get confused.

"Manliness" was characterized by Rev. Dr. Kerr B. Tupper, of Denver, in his address to the Y. M. C. A., Sunday afternoon, as the prime minister of our vocabulary, and the controller of our politics, our morality and our religion. "Man," said Dr. Tupper in the course of his address, "is a being possessed of intelligence and will. True manliness and Christianity form the basis of all true character, and they are far more valuable than title, intelligence, high education, or fluent speech. If man has this true manliness, he has more than all these. He has within him that which stirs him to do his best, a royal, loyal, God-like disposition. Three thousand years ago David, the dying king, said to his son, Solomon, 'Show thyself a man.' All things were embodied in that. A thousand years later, Paul, in one of his greatest discourses, also gave utterance to the same thought when he said: 'Acquit yourselves like men.'" *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE WASHINGTON AGENT.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 28, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Last Thursday quite a company of our New England friends gathered at the home of our worthy friend, Miss Flagg. The day was perfect, and a pleasant time was enjoyed by all. If friends all over the country would meet in social gatherings from time to time, talk over the interests of the cause, and get better acquainted, I am convinced it would be a means of grace and strength.

Wellesley's Ladies' Seminary is perhaps of greatest interest to visitors. I shall not here attempt a description of the beautiful grounds and buildings prepared by godly men and women for the education of young ladies. Suffice it to say that all that nature and wealth could do has been done. To be appreciated, it must be seen. In passing through the buildings we noted on the walls many Christian mottoes. Above the library door we read the following: "Christ, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." Oh, how many in seeking wisdom fail to recognize its source! "Search the Scriptures." Those who would obtain the treasures of wisdom can find them alone in Christ. The lodge rejects him, and yet pretends to sell great wisdom.

Much of my time for the past week has been given to a canvass for Cynosure readers. The friends must know what others are doing, if they co-operate. I know of no paper carrying more needed truth than ours. God is on our side. The churches are being opened to the discussion of unpopular truths. Shall we not go forward in the name of our God, dear friends, until Christ shall crown our efforts with final victory? Saturday, Sabbath and Monday were spent at Hebron camp meeting. This meeting is conducted by Bro. A. A. Hoyt. The utmost freedom is given for testimony and remarks. Many were shouting the praises of God, trusting him for complete salvation. Monday was Reform day, and we were privileged to speak against the lodge to a good audience. Several who knew nothing of our work became interested. The New England agent is still there, and will doubtless report.

Last evening I attended prayer meeting in the U. P. church. We had a profitable season, waiting on the Lord. Subject: "And thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." Matt. 1: 21.

I am constantly reminded that I am on historic ground. While waiting for a car, I noticed the following record on a stone: "A sharp fight occurred here between Patriots and the British, April 19th, 1775. This marks British soldiers' graves."

While riding under a large and stately elm, in Cambridge, I read the following: "Under this elm Washington first took command of the American army, July 3d, 1775." Important as was Washington's command, as soldiers of the Cross we have a far more important command.

CORRESPONDENCE.

RELIGION AND POLITICS IN OHIO.

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 26, 1891.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The past four Sabbaths have been spent in Springfield, O., in the United Presbyterian congregation. Their pastor, Rev. Joseph Kyle, has been called to the Fourth U. P. church of Allegheny, Pa. I had preached several times for him. and the people take kindly to our Reform ideas. Last Sabbath afternoon I addressed the Y. M. C. A. A finer set of young men one seldom meets. Such a meeting illustrates the power of the spirit of unity. The church's weakness is her divisions. During the reign of the Latin king Tullus Hostilius, the Romans made war on Alba Longa. Just before the armies were to be engaged, it was agreed to decide the fate of the two cities by a combat between these brothers, the Horatii and the Curatii, chosen from each of the parties. Two of the Horatii were slain, and all three of the Curatii were wounded. The third Roman fled. The three wounded Albans pursued him. They were separated. The Roman turned and slew them separately and Alba Longa was destroyed. Satan's watchward is, "Divide and conquer." Thus he has scattered the power of the holy people. "For the divisions of Reuben let there be great searchings of heart."

There are many vacant pulpits in Springfield. The First and Second Presbyterian churches are without pastors. Dr. Helwig, the champion Reformer, has been called to a Presbyterian church in California. Being dissatisfied with the action of their last Lutheran synod, as to ministers wearing gowns, it is thought he will accept the pastorate of one of the best M. E. churches. Dr. Shannon is just leaving for California. So they are beginning to feel lonely.

Here, in Cincinnati, church matters are very quiet. The United Presbyterian congregation has secured a young pastor, Mr. Shannon, to succeed Dr. French. The papers announce that Dr. Henderson will leave Trinity M. E. church after next Sabbath. There is some complaint, and the Board think that it is for the best interests of the cause that he find another field. They will not soon find a better scholar and writer to prepare sermons for them. He is a fine Christian character. But his Southern ideas do not suit all the Northern Republicans.

The political campaign of Ohio is now inaugurated. McKinley, the Republican candidate for governor, will champion his tariff bill, which is too great a burden for the people to bear. Campbell, the Democratic nominee, will champion free silver coinage, which is a fraud of 20 cents on the dollar. As the Prohibition and Alliance parties cut no figure in this State, these two men will have the field; and, between their high license and low license, the saloon will have free course. Moral questions sustain the same relation to the dominant parties that slavery did before the war. But God prepared the mine and lighted the fuse in his own time and way, and the great upheaval came that buried slavery forever. God is laying another mine. When his time comes another and mightier upheaval will come. The saloon, the lodge, the gambling pit, the brothel and Sabbath profanation will all go down. In a purified atmosphere Christ's kingdom will flourish.

LODGE OATHS PROMOTE CRIME.

MONONGO, N. D., Aug. 10, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—An important maxim both of human and divine law is, that a man cannot obligate himself to the commission of crime; and it is the power of deception which leads to the perversion of this all important maxim that is the strength, the great bulwark, you may say, of the whole secret order system.

It is the business now and has always been the business of secret orders to instruct its novitiates that their lives—yea, more, that their moral standing as well as their eternal happiness, depends upon their faithful fulfillment of their pledges or oaths of fidelity to their lodge, notwithstanding their obligation frequently involves them in crime. Masons tell us their institution has existed from time immemorial. Similar institutions, at least, must have existed in a very early day. They existed, however, only to be condemned by the Word of God. In the fourth and fifth verses of the fifth chapter of Leviticus men were forbidden to take an oath like the Masonic oath, to keep secret something not known before the swearing. But law-breakers have always existed, and often high dignitaries take the lead in defying the law of God.

King Herod was of this character. Perhaps he made no pretensions to obey the laws of God. At all events, he seemed to be infatuated with the principles taught by the baser lodges. You remember upon a certain birthday Herod made a great feast—assembled his cabinet, his chief men of state, to dine with him; and during a revelry of the feast, his niece, his wife's daughter, danced so nicely before him that he swore with a great oath to give the damsel whatever she would ask, even to the dividing of half his kingdom; and shortly afterward, being instructed of her mother, she demanded the head of John the Baptist.

Herod had rashly and wickedly violated the Biblical law quoted above; and instead of repenting and going no further into sin, as is required in that law, he proceeds to commit a greater crime by the murder of that great and good man, assuming to be clear of the crime of murder because of his rash oath. Lodge oaths are analogous to Herod's, analogous in their violation of the Scripture quoted above. Analogous results may or may not follow. It was no more useless for Herod to take the rash oath he took than it is for secret order men to take the usual oaths required of them. They alike swear to something entirely hid from them, and those who think they are justified in committing a crime either great or small on account of any supposed obligations greatly err and need to be taught by some doctor of divinity their true moral obligations concerning this issue. They should also be taught by some legal authority their duty to the state in reference to this matter.

Strange to say, in this enlightened day, and under the Christian dispensation, men regularly ordained to preach the blessed Gospel are so biased with the sophistry of the lodge doctrine that they will justify similar deeds done under similar circumstances as the crime attributed to Herod. Only a few weeks ago, while in conversation with a divine in regard to secret societies and rash swearing, he was led to say that Herod did right in carrying out his oath in beheading John the Baptist, affirming that his sin was in the rash swearing alone, and not in the murder of an innocent man. This divine further stated that Herod was probably drunk when he assumed his rash obligation. This is very probable, but makes the minister's position untenable. Is it not strange men can be so biased by lodge influence, and especially ministers of the Gospel, as to justify the commission of all kinds of crime because they had ignorantly, or rashly, or, it may be, while drunk, assumed such obligations?

In the eyes of the law of the land, murder is just the same crime, whether in the fulfillment of any pretended obligation or not; and surely there is no difference in the divine law. It would be a grand triumph for the cause of Christ and good government if everybody recognized the fact that all so called obligations, be they oaths or pledges, that are in conflict with any divine law are null and void. More anon. C. G. FAIT.

FREEMASONRY IN PROPHECY.

INGLESIDE, Pa., August 20, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—"The Image of the Beast a Secret Empire; or, Freemasonry a Subject of Prophecy; by Rev. Richard Horton," is the title of a book, to me one of the most helpful I have ever been permitted to read. It is the only book that I have ever read which so fully and clearly sets forth the statement that Freemasonry is a subject of prophecy.

God made known to his servant John, the beloved disciple, the things which should come to pass hereafter. The 13th chapter of Revelation, as Bro. Horton shows, pictures the image of the beast—Freemasonry. Here is a book for every Christian of every name to circulate. If you want to stop the mouths of preachers, both great and small, when they quit preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ and turn aside to laud the Secret Empire of Satan, get them to read Horton, and dare them to disprove the truth of his conclusions as shown by prophetic Scripture, and the History of the Roman Empire, written by Gibbon.

I quote from the preface: "We deem the argument quite unanswerable. The conviction is irresistible that if the image of the beast is not found in Freemasonry, it will be discovered in something exactly like it. As but one 'image' is described by the Revelator, and as Masonry is the only institution in the world that fulfills, in every particular, all the conditions of the prophecy, we must inevitably conclude that the image of the Roman Empire and the secret anti-Christian empire of Masonry are the very same. Gibbon, in writing the History of the Roman Empire, wrote the history of the 'beast;' and Rebold, in writing the History of Freemasonry, wrote the history of the 'image.'"

I think this statement enough to awaken the interest of every reader who, from his heart, prays to God "thy kingdom come;" to read and to study this book and satisfy himself of the truth, that we who are in the inevitable contest with organized secretism as it exists to-day are fighting against the "image of the beast" as John the Revelator saw that "image" revealed to his prophetic vision in Patmos, shortly after the birth of the infant Christian church, and was thus permitted to warn us, upon whom the end of the age has come, what is the foe we have to meet and overcome through the blood of the Lamb. Is not the thought that this struggle was foretold more than eighteen centuries ago, together with its final result to both combatants now joined in battle array, sufficient to strengthen and encourage every follower of Jesus to press onward, assured of final victory by God himself. I make a short extract from page 85:

"He (The image of the beast—Freemasonry) raised Charles the II. to the throne, and restored monarchy to England, and proved that his secret diplomacy was stronger than the armies of Cromwell. He shook the world with politics, wars, and revolutions; and when the blood of the martyrs was shed, he held the garments of them that slew them. From him the ministers of the church received their appointments, and the legislators and judges of the State their places. The church dared not expel him, and the State dared not punish him, though he was both a thief and a murderer.....The Scriptures foretold the fact that he should have power to speak, and to cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed. Therefore he waxed great and controlled the commerce of the world." If I could induce every lover of Jesus everywhere to purchase and read this book, I would feel that I have accomplished great good.

PITH AND POINT.

"IT ISN'T NECESSARY TO BE ALWAYS SHOUTING."

'Hallelujah! Glory! Praise the Lord!' etc., to 'rejoice evermore.' An engine is for something besides having the whistle blow and the bell ring from morning until night. Some people can feel more in five minutes than others can shout in two hours. It is well enough to weight down the safety valve a little if you want to keep the steam in sufficiently to do any work with an engine."—CHAS. E. COPP, in Messiah's Advocate.

"THERE ISN'T MUCH IN THIS WORLD THAT'S WORTH A HURRAH, but with good salvation welling up in a man's soul to the overflow, it is enough to make one rejoice amidst weeping, like sunshine through rain. Those are growing days for vegetation when the sun shines and it rains also; and so they are growing days for a Christinn in grace when he can weep with them that weep and rejoice with them that rejoice."—IBID.

PUNGENT QUESTIONS.

"Why do Catholic writers seek to cover up the horrors of St. Bartholomew, the cruelties of an inquisition which burnt the flesh of human beings made in God's likeness, or the self-sufficient wisdom which refused to recognize the truths discovered by Galileo? Let these stories be told in every child's text-book; let them stand, the monuments they are, to the folly, the blunders, the superstition, the weakness of human souls, who, in their arrogance, refused to interpret God's Word, except to suit their own passions, yet deemed themselves acting as his servants, advancing his interests."—JOHN BRISBEN WALKER, a Roman Catholic.

MONEY AND DOGMATICS.

Somebody hints persuasively that "$800,000 of the Union Seminary endowment is endangered by the determination of the directors to resist the Presbyterian General Assembly and keep Dr. Briggs in his chair." If Dr. Briggs is in error, would his chair be in more danger if the sum were only $400,000? Just how many millions are necessary to keep a chair safe? Ten dollars' worth of justification was once worth as much as a million dollars, worth of error. Is the dollar "almighty" even in dogmatics? Is finance closely related to the "new" theology?—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

LITERATURE.

The August issue of the Magazine of Western History Illustrated, devoted to historical research in the Western hemisphere, and edited by James H. Kennedy and a corps of able assistants, is received. The following is the list of articles and contributors: Mary Ball, the Mother of Washington, by Col. Henry D. Teetor; The State of Washington—the Story of its Pioneer Days, by Col. W. F. Prosser; Versions of the Bible, by Gen. Chas. W. Darling; Isle of Wight, and Home, by Hon. F. C. Sessions; The Colorado Midland Railway, by H. D. Teetor; An American Mother—The Story of her Life with the Indians, by Jas. H. Kennedy; St. Catherine Cree, by Hon. Elliott Anthony; Bishop Bedell (with portrait); Origin of Yankee Doodle, by Henry D. Teetor; A Rebel Prison Pen (Belle Island), by Geo. W. Vrooman; Chicago Prior to 1840 (sketches and portraits of Joseph Peacock and William Lock), by Howard L. Conard; The Extinction of the Buffalo, by Chas C. P. Holden; The Bench and Bar of New York (with sketches and portraits of Gen. Thos. H. Hubbard and Hon. Jno. U. Shorter), by Geo. W. Travis; Reminiscences of the 36th and 37th Congresses, by Hon. Jno. Hutchins; Capt. Sam. Brady, by T. J. Chapman, M. A.; The Public Repository of Records, London, by Hon. Elliott Anthony; with editorial briefs and notices of new books. Published at 132 Nassau street, New York City; $4,00 per annum.

The Arena for September has for its frontispiece a full-page portrait of Rev. Dr. Geo. C. Lorimer, who contributes the leading paper—The Newer Heresies. Other articles and contributors are: Harvest and Laborers in the Psychical Field, by Frederick W. H. Myers; Fashion's slaves (with numerous illustrations), by B. O. Flower; Un-American Tendencies, by Rev. Carlos D. Martyn, D. D.; Extrinsic Significance of Constitutional Government in Japan, by Kuma Oisha, A. M., with a portrait of the author; University Extension, by Prof. Willis Broughton; Pope Leo on Labor (a review of the Pope's recent Encyclical), by Thos. B. Preston; The Austrian Postal Banking System, by Sylvester Baxter; Another View of Newman, by William M. Salter; Inter-Migration, by Rabbi Solomon Schindler; He Came and Went Again, by W. N. Harben; O, Thou who Sighest for a Broader Field, by Julia Ann Wolcott; An Evening at the Corner Grocery, by Hamlin Garland; with Books of the Day (reviews), etc. Published at Copley Square, Boston, Mass.; $5 per annum.

Our Day for August, edited by Joseph Cook and other Reform writers, reprints Mr. Cook's excellent address on Disloyal Secret Oaths, delivered at the Conference of the National Christian Association, Chicago, last spring (and which can be had in tract form at this office); it is well worth frequent re-perusal and wide distribution; Hamilton Aide contributes English Criticism of American Social Life; the third paper is Lord Salisbury's Imperial Federation of the British Empire, followed by Joseph Cook's Boston Monday Lecture—Fruitful Faith as Held by Apostles and Martyrs, and Christianity a Philosophy, a Kingdom, and a Fellowship; with reviews of prominent new books, notices of the Tenth National Temperance Convention, papers on the Mischiefs of High License, and on Church Partnership in the Liquor Traffic; John Jay on Catholic and Protestant Demands as to Moral Education in Public Schools, and the usual editorial notes and comments on current events. Published at 28 Beacon street, Boston; $2.50 per annum.

The September Scribner has eleven distinct articles, six of which are illustrated finely and copiously. The frontispiece, a game of quoits at sea, forms part of the fifth paper on Ocean Steamships, by Ridgely Hunt, U. S. N.; the story of the Wrecker, by Robt. Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne, is continued. Other articles are as follows: Odd American Homes (illustrated), by John R. Spears; The City of the Sacred Bo-Tree, Anuradhapura, by James Ricalton (illustrated); For Remembrance, a poem, by Duncan Campbell Scott; Adventures Among Books, by Andrew Lang; A China Hunter in New England, by Alice Morse Earle (illustrated); Browning's Asolo, by Felix Moscheles (illustrated); Run to Seed, a story, by Thos. N. Page; Present Ideals of American University Life, by Professor Josiah Royce, of Harvard University; Captain Joe and Jamie, a story; and editorials. New York: Chas. Scribner's Sons; $3 per annum.

The Bible Standard and Gospel Record for August presents a condensed Report of the Eighth Annual Meeting of the International Missionary Union, with views of heathen children both before and after entering the Union's missionary school; Africa in Prophecy, by H. W. Johnston; A Letter from Dr. Harris; Some Dreadful Place and Dreadful Things in New York; the Choice of a Pastor; Notes on Preaching; the Aim of Life; A Word that is Never Broken, etc. Syracuse, N. Y., Wesleyan Methodist Publishing House; monthly.

The September Ladies' Home Journal has forty-two timely and pleasant articles on numerous subjects, mostly by new contributors. This magazine probably gives a greater variety of short, well-written papers on home topics, in the interest of American wives, mothers and daughters, than any other in the United States, and by this method has become very popular as a social and domestic vade mecum. The illustrations are helpful and attractive. Philadelphia: Curtis Publishing Co.; $1 per annum.

The Fleming H. Revell Co. (New York and Chicago) announce a new book by M. F. Cusack ("The Nun of Kenmare,") under the title of "What Rome Teaches." Since the author's conversion to Protestantism, she has observed how few Protestants are really well informed as to the actual teachings of Catholicism and its attitude toward politics and the press. This has led her to prepare this book with the view of giving information where it is needed and will be of value.

LODGE NOTES.

The National Alliance alone is organized in thirty-eight States and Territories, and its membership numbers, it is stated, more than three millions.

The American branch of Odd-fellowship numbers fully 680,000; the Manchester Unity branch 675,000—making a total of 1,355,000. Add to these figures the other smaller branches and it will give about one and three quarter millions.

The Northwestern Masonic Aid Association of Chicago, Ill., in number of members and amount of insurance in force, leads all but six of the "old line" or level premium companies. It has 55,000 certificates in force, representing $150,000,000 insurance, and has paid $8,000,000 of death claims.

If an extra assessment is necessary, it should be promptly called, not only by the A. L. of H., but by all fraternal organizations. Of course there will be grumbling, and we venture to assert that it comes from those who neither attend the meetings of their council, or display the slightest interest in its growth.—Golden Chain.

One hundred delegates, representing every organization which claims allegiance to the People's party, met at Topeka, Kan., the other day and organized the Alliance Commercial Convention. Their object is to provide for the amalgamation of every business organization which has grown out of the Farmers' Alliance in the State.

Masonic Statistics: North Carolina has 438 lodges and 8,450 members; Iowa, 444 lodges and more than 22,500 members; Kansas, 342 lodges and over 18,000 members; Indiana, 583 lodges, and 24,776 members; New Mexico, 17 lodges and 696 members; New York, 721 lodges and 77,923 members,—the largest number in any jurisdiction in America.

The Chinese opposition to alien missionaries is not so much fanatical as political. The whole region drained by the Yang-tse-Kiang—an immense area—is permeated by secret societies animated by the purpose of overthrowing the present dynasty. Taking advantage of the misery produced among the people by floods and consequent famine, these societies are fanning discontent with the object of raising a rebellion not unlike that of the Taepings.—Baltimore Sun.

"The Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, Oasis of St. Joseph, Mo., sent forth the following for Leylet Al Khamis, 19th Yon, Tenth Month Hejra 1308, Showall, Joyful Feast: Feast of Feseekh, Kahks, Fateerehs and Shoorayks Procession of the Kisweh (covering of the Kaabah). Rosh Hodesh Iyar. Pesah Sheenee, Laghaomer. Rosh Hodesh Sivan. Glad Salutations. Sweet Music. Flights of Eloquence. Traditional Banquet."—Masonic Chronicle. What tomfoolery is this for intelligent, responsible beings!

The Masonic ritual for the several Grand Lodges of the United States—says the Masonic Chronicle—was formulated by Thos. Smith Webb, and is, in consequence, called the "Webb Rite." It is used in no other country. The order of Mustard Seed, whose also called themselves "The Fraternity of Moravian Brothers of the Order of Freemasonry," says Notes and Queries, was instituted in the year 1739. Its mysteries were founded on that passage in the 4th chapter of St. Mark's Gospel, in which Christ compares the kingdom of heaven to a mustard seed. The brethren wore a ring on which was inscribed, "No one of us lives for himself." The jewel of the order was a cross of gold surmounted by a mustard plant, with the words—"What was it before?—Nothing." This was suspended by a green ribbon.

The only radical cure for rheumatism is to eliminate from the blood the acid that causes the disease. This is thoroughly effected by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Persist until cured. The process may be slow, but the result is sure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1891.

LODGE OR CHURCH.

For years we have been endeavoring to show our worthy fellow-citizens, in and out of secret lodges, that these orders are rivals of the church. We have pointed to their rituals, both written and unwritten, to their chaplains, prelates, altars, temples, and sancta-sanctorum. We have shown that a small per cent of the lodge members are even nominally connected with the churches of Jesus Christ, and that those who do maintain this double relation almost invariably cleave to the lodge and neglect the church.

Progress has undoubtedly been made, and many of those who in the beginning thought us unnecessarily alarmed, are now feeling, as we do, that the lodges or the churches will in the end go down. The condition of multitudes of our church organizations, which have hardly men enough in them to hold the offices, which have almost no young men in them at all, is forcing this inevitable result on the attention of all thoughtful Christians. Out of about four thousand five hundred Congregational churches, nearly two thousand are in part dependent on the Home Missionary Society, and many of those not thus sustained live, in large part, on the quarters and half dollars of unconverted men, said quarters and halves being coaxed from un-Christian pockets by "pink teas," "ice cream cool offs," "oyster suppers," etc., etc. The condition of other denominations is substantially the same. Is it not enough to break the heart of the Christian world to see the descendants of those churches of which we read in the "Acts of the Apostles" reduced to such a position before the world? At the same time, the men who should sustain church and prayer-meeting by person and purse are smoking, and chewing, and drinking, and dancing, and building temples to the "Grand Architect of the Universe," and running their heavily loaded trains over the broken law of God. Lodge or church, one or the other, we will have, but we will not have both. Christ or Baal is God, and one or the other will in the end be so considered, and as such honored and worshiped.

These thoughts are suggested by two funerals which occurred in one of our larger cities on Sabbath, August 16. One was held in the Odd-fellows' Hall, the other in the Masonic Lodge. Speaking of the funeral of the Odd-fellow, the press report says:

> Music was furnished throughout the services by the Masonic quartet. After the remains had been viewed by the dead man's friends and the members of the societies, the pall-bearers took up the casket and bore it to the hearse. Then the long cortege moved slowly to the Laurel Hill Cemetery, where the body was placed in the receiving vault.
> The funeral procession was long and imposing. First came a band, and then marched 200 members of the Uniformed Rank of the Knights of Pythias. Fifty members of Justice Lodge, Knights of Pythias, followed in full regalia. California Parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West, sent 200 members to walk in the line, and of the lodge of Foresters, to which Mr. ——— belonged, there were 150 representatives. After these marched forty members of Justice Lodge, American Legion of Honor, eighty members of the Sons of Veteran Firemen and twenty-five delegates from the Odd-fellows' Hall Association, with forty representatives of the general relief committee of the Odd-fellows. Three hundred and twenty-five members of Yerba Buena Lodge, Independent Order of Odd-fellows, of which the deceased was Noble Grand, also swelled the procession. Besides all these was a long line of carriages.

There are in this city (San Francisco) cemeteries belonging to the Odd-fellows and the Masons. Whether this deceased member was buried among the Odd-fellows, or in the cemetery belonging to the community generally, the paper at hand does not state.

Respecting the other burial, occurring on the same day, the same report says:

> ——— ——— was buried yesterday afternoon with Masonic honors. The impressive funeral ceremonies were held in the Masonic Temple under the direction of Mount Moriah Lodge, No. 44, of which the deceased had been a prominent member. The hall was crowded with friends and associates of the dead, with Knights Templar in gorgeous regalia of velvet and silver, and with delegations from every Masonic lodge in the city. Before the high throne the black casket rested in a bower of flowers.
>
> The ritual, read by ——— ———, Master of Mount Moriah Lodge, was that for the Blue Lodge. It is a striking one, with eloquent prayers, solemn charges and touching music. The officers gathered about the coffin, the last invocation was pronounced, the impressive lesson was drawn from Masonic insignia, the touching intimation of immortality was voiced as the tiny leaf was laid upon the casket and the Mason's apron was tied to its place upon the black lid.
> After the ritual had been read the lid of the casket was removed that all might take their farewell glance at the dead. The Knights Templar filed slowly on either side of the bier and marched in silent procession from the hall, and the sorrowing relatives were left alone with their dead.

We do not at this time enter upon any discussion of the comparative merits of the Christian and the lodge religions. We simply call attention once more to the fact that they are not the same, and that if the men of our nation are enlisted in support of the one, the other will necessarily go down. In the end it will be lodge or church, just as it was of necessity to be slavery or freedom. It behooves all thoughtful men to carefully consider which system they desire to prevail. We expect the adherents of the lodges to maintain their religion; we have a right to expect professors, editors, pastors and people who profess the Christian faith to be equally outspoken for theirs. If the lodges live, they will soon not even care for the annual sermon by some preacher, or the use of the meeting-house for burials. They will have the services in their own halls, and bury their dead in their own cemeteries, leaving the places of Christian worship to the women and children, the halt, the maimed, the blind, idiotic, insane, and poor, who cannot afford to pay for an admission to the lodge below with the possibility of translation to the Grand Lodge above.

TO PREVENT IMPOSITION.

We find in a Masonic exchange the following note:

> "The Illinois Freemason says that it has word 'that a stranger giving the name of W. S. Perkins has been attempting to impose on several lodges;' that 'last week he went to the W. M. of Gardner Lodge asking for assistance, claiming that he is a member in good standing of Sebastian Lodge, Fort Smith, Arkansas,' that 'a letter from the W. M. of that lodge says no such person has ever been a member of his lodge.' Now, why are not those scoundrels arrested and placed where they cannot prey upon the fraternity at large? In all cases where a doubt exists they should be detained for 'the good of the order,' and until evidence can be procured to convict, thus saving other lodges from being defrauded. Such a system of detection would soon clear the land of such frauds."

One of the chief excuses for the silly, brutal and blasphemous ritual of the Masonic lodge, is that it enables members of the order to detect imposters. We are told that by examination lodges can satisfy themselves at once whether persons claiming the benefit of lodge oaths are entitled to them or not. If this be the case, why do not these Masons, when approached by these lodge confidence men, simply examine them, expose them to public ridicule, and send them on their way? Why do they go to the expense of telegraphing and letter-writing to ascertain whether men are what they profess to be or otherwise? And if a Mason, in order to secure Masonic aid, is obliged to identify himself, give his location, and prove himself a worthy man, what is the need of the stripping, and gripping, and swearing, and lecturing, and imprecating of the order?

Why should not all the worthy men in the lodge unite to demand the abolition of initiations and secrecy, making the order simply a mutual benefit one, without any religious pretences, or attempts to provide a secret refuge where men may hide? Of course, this would not be agreeable to the members of the order, who desire to plunder the public safely, or to commit other crimes without fear of punishment; but it would be vastly to the advantage of the honorable members of the order. If it be replied, that Masonry has been unchanged since it was organized in the Apple-tree Tavern, London, in 1717, we answer that all well-informed Masons know that the statement is untrue. The one degree was expanded into three, and degrees by the hundred were spawned upon the public.

To choose more recent examples, take the "Owls' Nests," which are now being builded by Master Masons, or the abolition of penalties by the Mexican lodges. Or, to go one remove farther, why not fall back on the principle that the men who compose an organization and pay its bills are entitled to determine its form? We know by personal conference with many Masons, that the secrecy, penalties, and obligations are distasteful to them. May we not hope that instead of trying to catch a few Masons or Masonic pretenders who seek to turn a dishonest penny, these men may reconstruct their lodge, which is a grand confidence game, cheating its honest members and the whole outer world.

—Bishop French, of England, who died recently in Arabia, was known as "that many-tongued man of Lahore," for he could preach in English, Persian, Hindustani, Pushto, Hindei, Tamil, and Punjabi, and was an eminent scholar in Hebrew, Arabic, Syriac, Greek and Latin.

AN ALARMING DECISION.

Not long since, a resident of Tennessee was convicted of violating a law of that State by working on Sunday. The case was appealed to the United States District Court, on the ground that the State law was unconstitutional. Judge Hammond, of the upper court, however, decided that the various States have the right to make whatever laws they please on the subject of religion. They may make not only Sunday laws, but they may even "establish a creed and a church." The constitution forbids such legislation by the general government; but "there is no such prohibition on any State, unless the people of the State have laid it themselves; and in any case the United States would have no right to interfere with such State laws." The inference is that the power to regulate the religion of the several States is vested only in themselves.

This is a view of State rights that may well startle the American people, since it authorizes the union of church and state, without regard to the kind of church that may rule the spiritual interests of every citizen. It may be a Baptist State, a Congregational State, a Roman Catholic State, etc., according to the political strength of the dominant denomination; and the worst of it is the fact that the balance of power to decide which church shall prevail in any State will too often be wielded by unscrupulous politicians who have no religion themselves, but who will vote for whatever denomination shall offer them the most advantageous remuneration for their influence. Such a condition of things would inevitably lead to anarchy.

Whether the Supreme Court of the United States will sustain Judge Hammond's decision or not remains to be seen; but until it is reversed, we had better look the matter squarely in the face, and ask ourselves, as a great nation, Whither are we tending?

BLACKMAILING EXTRAORDINARY.

A secret conspiracy to throw the blame of the burning of Siegel, Cooper & Co.'s store, in this city, upon that firm and sweat them for a large sum of hush-money, forms the latest feature in the details of that catastrophe.

Thomas Higgins and William Dalton were the chief conspirators in this rascally scheme, and by Dalton's confession and the bulk of evidence against both, they are likely to be promptly convicted and severely punished, as they deserve. They were five in number—Higgins, Dalton, Washington, Anderson and Cunningham. Dalton charges Higgins with setting the store on fire.

Prior to beginning their operations, they formed a secret conclave. Washington, the elevator man, testifies that Anderson, who was a spy in the interest of the firm, declared that an oath must be taken by all concerned—an iron-clad oath; and this is the obligation which they all took: "We solemnly swear to be true to each other and to not divulge the secrets of these meetings, so help us God."

Cunningham exhibited luke-warmness and neglected the meetings of the conspirators, and Higgins ousted him, saying: "Remember your oath. If you breathe a word against the brothers of this circle your life's blood will be the only penalty, and I will be the one to impose the punishment."

Washington further testified that each conspirator wrote out what he was to say, and committed it to memory, so that their evidence would harmonize. Anderson was to swear to seeing Wise, the floor-walker of the store, run away from where the fire started, throwing the crime of arson upon him. "Higgins," said Washington, "told us to throw away our religion and swear to lies if it were necessary. When we got the money we were going to Philadelphia to go into the saloon business—no discrimination of color."

Anderson, the spy, or private detective of the firm, but nominally one of the conspirators, testified that on the night after the fire, in company with Washington, he had gone to Higgins' house and had been introduced to Higgins, Perkins,

Cunningham and Dalton by Washington. All joined hands, knelt down and took the oath of the brotherhood. When asked to repeat the oath the witness said: "I can't say it exactly. It was a Clan-na-Gael oath and was full of blood and thunder. Higgins told us several times that he was a Clan-na-Gael. Each of us repeated it after Higgins. As near as I can remember the oath was like this: 'I do solemnly swear that I will be true to my brothers in this circle, so help me God, and that if any one divulges any of the secrets of the brotherhood he shall pay for it with his life's blood.'"

"When the oath had been administered by Higgins, each man told what he knew of the fire. Then Higgins said:

"'We must make our evidence hang together and throw suspicion on Charles F. Wise, and we must be able to swear that Siegel, Cooper & Co. paid Wise a large sum for firing the building. We must meet every night to practice our evidence, so that we may be able to go into court and not get rattled by the lawyers.'"

At the meeting held Monday night, Aug. 17, Wise was dropped at the suggestion of Higgins, and the evidence of the conspirators was directed against Keim, one of the partners in the business. Comment is unnecessary.

A SYNOPSIS OF MASONIC DEGREES.

For the benefit of the uninitiated, for young men, for youths, and for wives and mothers of Masons, who are debarred by their Masonic friends from a proper knowledge of Masonry, we have prepared the following synopsis. It includes Blue Lodge Masonry and Chapter degrees: Scottish Rite Masonry, and Knight Templarism, with their respective divisions accurately defined:

Blue Lodge Masonry, represented by a treble-step stair, with its three degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master, is the foundation, the root, the trunk, of the principal modern systems of Masonry in vogue in the British Empire and North America. No member of the order can attain to any of the higher degrees until these primary steps have been successively climbed. Next above these are also four "Chapter" degrees.

Scottish Rite Masonry is undoubtedly the true and direct offspring of Blue Lodge Masonry, growing perpendicularly from the "sublime" degree of Master, and going upward and onward to the thirty-third degree.

Knight Templarism, with its five successive degrees, is a side offshoot of Blue Lodge Masonry, and has its place between the Royal Arch, in the Chapter degrees, and that of Perfect Master in the Scottish Rite system; although some of its adherents claim that it is also a separate branch of the order.

Another offshoot of Blue Lodge Masonry is the Memphis Rite, with its ninety-six degrees, which branches out independently from the Master's degree, in a direction of its own, and is to be considered a thoroughly side institution, not by any means in general favor with the English and American members of the craft. It belongs particularly to France, and is counted among the eight rites controlled by the Grand Orient, which rules the order in that Republic. The first series of Memphis degrees is said to embrace the thirty-three degrees of the Scottish Rite, while the remainder were borrowed from other foreign systems, or invented by its own authorities.

The York Rite is built upon a legend originating in or relating to something connected with York, England. It claims to trace its origin back to the tenth century. It originally consisted simply of the American Blue Lodge degrees. Modern ingenuity has tinkered it, with innovations, until it is considered of little or no Masonic value, especially in the United States.

We now proceed to give the names and location of the various degrees in Blue Lodge, Chapter, Scotch and Knight Templar Rites:

BLUE LODGE AND CHAPTER DEGREES.

1—Entered Apprentice; 2—Fellow Craft; 3—Master; 4—Mark Master; 5—Past Master; 6—Most Excellent Master; 7—Royal Arch.

DEGREES OF SCOTCH RITE MASONRY.

1—Entered Apprentice; 2—Fellow Craft; 3—Master; 4—Secret Master; 5—Perfect Master; 6 Intimate Secretary; 7—Provost and Judge; 8—Intendant of the Building; 9—Master Elect of Nine; 10—Master Elect of Fifteen; 11—Sublime Knight Elected; 12—Grand Master Architect; 13—Royal Arch; 14—Grand Elect Perfect and Sublime Mason; 15—Knight of the East or Sword; 16—Prince of Jerusalem; 17—Knight of the East and West; 18—Sovereign Prince of Rose Croix de Herodem, and Knight of the Eagle and Pelican; 19—Grand Pontiff; 20—Grand Master of all Symbolic Lodges, or Associate Master Ad Vitam; 21—Noachite, or Prussian Knight; 22—Knight of the Royal Axe, or Prince of Libanus; 23—Chief of the Tabernacle; 24—Prince of the Tabernacle; 25—Knight of the Brazen Serpent; 26—Prince of Mercy; 27—Commander of the Temple; 28—Knight of the Sun; 29—Knight of St. Andrew—"Grand Master of Light;" 30—Grand Elect Knight of Kadosh; 31—Grand Inspector Inquisitor Commander; 32—Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret; 33—Sovereign Grand Inspector General.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR DEGREES.

[Following the Four Chapter Degrees of Masonry.]

1—Knight of the Red Cross; 2—Knight Templar and Knight of Malta; 3—Knight of the Christian Mark; 4—Knight of the Holy Sepulchre; 5—Thrice Illustrious Knight of the Cross.

This will serve as an introduction to some other information concerning Masonry that will be interesting, no doubt, to our youthful readers, and which, from time to time, we hope to print in these columns.

THE CYNOSURE AS A MISSIONARY.

A Baptist pastor, writing from Louisiana, says that he has labored for six years in his present location, the only pastor in that neighborhood who opposed secret societies. All the churches, for a while, favored the lodges, and several members of his own had to be excluded for joining the orders. On a recent Sunday he invited several of his flock who seemed desirous of renewing their fellowship to meet him. For about one hour, he writes, he read to them the Christian Cynosure, with the result of changing their views and strengthening the church. The paper seems to be doing much good wherever it is read in the South.

When Rev. T. R. Griffin, of Louisiana, (so he writes) first became familiar with the work of the Christian Cynosure, he "little thought that secretism was making such alarming encroachments on the Christian church as I now witness daily. May the Lord arrest it by your powerful aid and the prayers of the true church." Never were vigilance and earnest Christian service more needed in the churches than they are now.

—A correspondent in Arizona asks us whether James G. Blaine is a Roman Catholic. It is understood that he has never united with that church; but it is well-known that some of his near relatives are members of it; and we think that a fear among Protestants that he would be too greatly influenced by those affiliations had much to do with his defeat when he was a Presidential candidate.

—A gentleman from Ann Arbor, Mich., informs us that quite a number of the young men attending the State University have recently been inveigled into joining the Masonic lodge at that place, and that some of them came out of the initiation and first degree ceremonies very much disgusted, and feeling that they had been foolishly entrapped. Our informant had gone as far into it as he proposes to go, and is now studying the advanced degrees from the publications of the National Christian Association. He will find it a far more safe and satisfactory method of learning the secrets of Masonry.

—In the number of the Cynosure for September 10 will be printed the last installment of Ada M. Melville's excellent story—"HELPING"—which has been running through our columns for nearly three months. It is seldom that a better story ever comes in our way, and certainly very few that convey such wholesome and helpful lessons in everyday life as this. We are very glad to have had the opportunity to reprint it from the neat little volume in which the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, 161 La Salle street, Chicago, has issued it, and by whose kind permission it has been transferred to our columns.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Oliver Wendell Holmes last week celebrated his 82d birthday. He is quite hale.

—Dr. Lyman C. Draper, for many years secretary of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin, died Wednesday night at his home in Madison, aged 76.

—On account of her mother's feeble health, Miss Frances E. Willard has been compelled to cancel all her autumn engagements in Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Pennsylvania and Iowa.

—Prof. S. A. Alt, recently of Fulton, Mich., has accepted the chair of languages and moral and mental science in the Wichita (Kans.) University, and removed to that city. We congratulate the University upon his accession to its faculty.

—Rev. D. W. Rose, of the Wesleyan Methodist church, who has recently been preaching in northwestern Iowa, was a welcome caller at this office last week. Mr. Rose was on his way to Houghton, western New York, where he proposes to prosecute his studies for a few years.

—Joseph Cook, Boston, writes to us that he has revised and published, in Our Day, his address delivered before the National Christian Association Conference in this city last spring. Parties desiring the amended version of this admirable paper—"Disloyal Secret Oaths"—may order from this office. We propose to issue it in a new tract.

—Rev. W. J. Dawson, of Glasgow, well known in this country through his literary works, the most important of which are "The Makers of Modern English" and "The Threshold of Manhood," is expecting to spend the months of October and November in the United States. Mr. Dawson is also one of the most popular lecturers in the British Isles.

—Rev. C. A. S. Temple, of Lebanon Springs, N. Y., writes, under date of August 24: "I am pressed with work, preparing for a re-issue of my book—'Pagan Counterfeits,' etc. We hope to get it out in a much larger and much improved form, and have a prospect of making it more attractive, and so much more saleable than the first issue. . . . When this work is off my hands, I propose to prepare and (D. V.) send you a communication—already under way—on Romanism, which I feel sure will interest the readers of the Cynosure."

—Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, who was formerly Field Secretary of the American Sabbath Union, severed his connection with that association some months ago; but is hard at work as a general, independent scout in behalf of the cause. Under the supervision of the efficient general secretaries of the A. S. U., and the able corps of district and local field secretaries, the work of organizing auxiliary societies is progressing rapidly, and the friends of the American Sabbath have much to encourage them in their opposition to the encroachments of the degrading, vice-engendering influences of the continental Sunday and the tyranny of Sunday commerce, business and traffic.

—Among the many applicants for the regular junior class in the Chicago Theological Seminary are Edward W. Blatchford, son of Mr. E. W. Blatchford; Herbert Gates, son of the lamented Mr. C. F. Gates, and Paul Douglass, son of Superintendent Douglass, of Iowa. Mr. Day, of Ottawa, returns to the Seminary from New Haven, and President Tanner's son is proposing to take his last year in Chicago. Professor Scott has already returned after several months' study and travel. Part of his time was spent in the Vatican Library. President Fisk has also visited the Continent, and comes back fresh from the Council. Professor Boardman has been studying natural theology at Puget Sound; Professor Willcox has been practicing practical theology in New England; Professor Gilbert has been with his parents in Vermont, and Professor Curtiss at his cottage in Charlevoix, Mich.

CHARLES P. SUMNER, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason: "Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed."

THE HOME.

AN OLD MAN'S OPINION OF "YOUNG FOLKS' MEETIN'."

I walked apast the meetin'-house and heard a tuneful noise;
I thought I'd stick my head inside an' see the girls and boys.
Fust thing I know'd, a han'some lad had grabbed me by the hand;
The meetin'-house was crowded, but they wouldn't let me stand.

Up jumped almost a dozen boys, as spry as spry could be,
An' every single one of 'em would give his seat to me.
In course I couldn't take 'em all; I took the very best,
An' settled down in comfort like to think an' hear the rest.

The singin' done, the leader rose, and said we'd kneel in prayer;
An' such a prayer! I'm sartin that Christ's Spirit, too, was there.
It wasn't long and polished, but 'twas full in every part
Of Jesus' love for sinners; and it went right to my heart.

Ag'in they sung a verse or two of some familiar hymn;
An' when the leader rose an' spoke, my eyes got kinder dim.
He told us how the Saviour came to save this sinful earth,
An' how the angels sung around the manger at his birth.

He said that if we prayed to him, he'd give us strength an' grace
To overcome the hardships that befall our feeble race;
An' then a bright young lady rose an' told us how she'd found
Her Saviour such a comfort, while all others proved unsound.

Another an' another rose an' told us how the Lord
Had brought them through temptation by their trustin' in his Word.
Another simple prayer was made, another hymn was sung,
The leader said 'twas time to close; I thought they'd just begun.

An' then the way they shook my hand I never seed before—
They shook it from the time I rose until I reached the door;
I promised 'em to come ag'in; I tell you, friends, they've given
This poor old heart a mighty lift toward Jesus, home, an' heaven.

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

[Copyrighted by "The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association," 161 LaSalle St., Chicago. Printed by permission.]

XII.

We had to make all our plans for the picnic without our Little Captain, as she was growing rapidly worse, and could not leave the house. We would not have had it at all, but that Grace insisted we must go. She seemed to feel so badly at the thought of our giving it up that we yielded to her wishes.

The two great wagons were full, and in spite of our disappointment about Grace, the lovely day and the exhilarating ride over country roads, chased away all sadness for the hour, and we were a merry party.

We drove up to the farm-house which Mrs. Clarke pointed out as her former home, and were warmly greeted by the farmer and his wife, who were watching us as we drove down the long, shady road leading to the house.

"You're all welcome," said old Mr. Walters, in a loud, hearty voice. "Wife, here, was a sayin' just this mornin', she wished we had a dozen more calves to help drink up the milk. I reckon she's about got her wish now," he added, with a genial, wholesome laugh that won our hearts at once.

"Now, father," said Mrs. Clarke, "don't you go to telling our young folks they're calves, or we'll go somewheres else for our milk."

"Ain't much danger o' that! Wife, she beat up a pan o' do'-nots this mornin', and there's a sight o' berries spilin' on that patch over yonder."

"Oh, we'll stay!" volunteered Tom for the crowd. "You tell us where you don't want us to go, and we'll manage the rest."

"Reckon you know a barb fence when you run up agin' it, don't you? That's all the warnin' you'll need to keep out o' the corn and wheat. We'll ring a big bell at noon, and you can just come right down to the house when you hear it—we usually water the cattle about that time. Jim, drive them up into the north orchard, that's the prettiest bit of land as I know of for a picnic."

Mrs. Walters let her husband do most of the talking, laughing heartily with him, and nodding a beaming approval to all he said.

We spent the morning according to our own sweet wills, hunting for flowers and ferns, feasting on berries, resting under the shade of the trees. But long before noon we had unpacked the lunch-baskets we had brought with us, and made a hearty meal. When the "big bell" rang, however, we were nothing loth to follow the path to the house, anticipations of milk and "do'-nots" hastening our steps.

"It's kind o' hot outdoors," said motherly Mrs. Walters, bustling about, "so if you'll jest pile into the barn there—it's as clean and sweet as my best parlor—I think it'll be cooler."

Into the big barn we piled, finding seats all ready, formed from planks resting on large knots of wood. The "do'-nots," crispy, light and altogether delicious, were passed around in huge tin pans, and the milk was dipped from bright tin pails that had just been lifted out of the ice-cold spring. I would not like to say how many dozens of those doughnuts and how many quarts of that milk we disposed of, but as there seemed no end to the supply, and our host and hostess grew in geniality as we demonstrated our enjoyment of their good things, we were not slow in our proceedings. We spent the afternoon wandering about the farm, the worthy proprietor taking no little pains to show us all the things that city-bred boys and girls delight in. As the long, happy day was drawing to a close, we gathered again in the shady lane, while Mr. Clarke saw about the wagons and horses.

"I declare, I most forgot this," said Mr. Walters, appearing among us with a hired man who carried a tray on which were two large jugs and several glasses. "We're all out o' cider, but this beer is home-brewed, and if I know a thing or two, city folks don't get anything to beat it very often. You ain't had any o' our home beer in a long while, Sophia," he said, holding up a glass of the glowing liquor with its snowy cap of froth, and then handing it to her. "Just taste that, now, and see if it isn't prime."

There was dead silence in the little group, and more than one heart beat high at this turn of affairs. Before there was time for Mrs. Clarke to take the glass or to refuse it, her husband reached out his hand for it.

"I want to tell you something, father, before we drink your beer, though I am sure it does taste prime," and right there he told the story we already know, of his downfall, of the sad days that followed, and of his return home prompted by the two boys.

"Here they are, father, God bless them! They would not let me go; they pleaded with me, until they made the devil in me ashamed."

He told about Pete's death, and how he had found out about the Society we had formed.

"And I thought, father, if these young folks could sign a pledge never to touch the stuff that makes beasts and devils of men, to pray every day, to read their Bibles every day, and to help those who need help,—if they can take such a work on their young shoulders, I can—and my wife can—and we have! But for these young fellows, father, who held on to me, and but for one,—I can't speak of her, somehow,"—his voice broke and the tears stood in his eyes—"who isn't with us to-day,—but for God who put the grand idea into her heart,—your daughter and your son might be lower than the lowest to-day! Shall we drink the beer now, father?"

"No, lad, no—here, throw it out."

The jugs were quietly emptied over the green grass.

"Well, well," said the old man, clearing his throat violently, "maybe you're right. I'm an old man, now, and it never hurt me. It's hard for an old man to change, but maybe you're right, maybe you're right. Who is the one that isn't here? A little one? Sick? Wife, you just fix up some o' them do'-nots. They'll taste good to her, no doubt. And put the rest o' them berries into something; and here you, Mike, run up to the creek and bring down that pail of cream I'd set out for the parson's folks—guess they can wait a spell. Give it to her, the sick one—sorry she couldn't come. Well, young folks, hope we'll see you again. Got them berries ready, wife? All right. Tell her they're country bred, and she must hurry up and get well, so she can come out and pick them herself. Good-by! good-by!"

Grace laughed and cried over the way in which our picnic had wound up.

"Oh, Fanny! How good everybody is."

Yet while she said it, she was in such pain and weakness that she could not bear any noise or excitement without suffering, and it seemed to us all that the end was not far off.

"I've got some news for you, Fanny," said mother, about a week later, "good news."

"What is it?" I said, impatiently, I fear, for I was just leaving the house to go and sit with Grace.

"Don't you want to hear it?"

"Why, yes," I said, restraining myself and appearing interested.

"We are going away,—going to live out West, where your cousins are."

For a minute or two I was all glad excitement, until a sudden fear swept over me. "We're not going soon?" I asked.

"In about a month. We will go by boat, by way of the Lakes. It will be a delightful trip."

"No, it won't," I said, snatching up my hat, "I don't want to go—I can't leave Grace!"

Mother said nothing to this outburst, beyond giving me a gentle kiss. I thought she was cold and cruel, but I know now that it was because she knew the unreasoning pain of my heart and sympathized with it, that she said so little. Words would only have irritated me. I broke away from her as soon as I could and went to tell Grace.

[Concluded next week.]

SECRET PRAYER.

There is one great secret of advancement in religious experience, and that is secret prayer. It is very easy to come into a public assemblage, and stimulated by the hearty singing and by the cheerful faces of scores and hundreds of God's people, to bow our head and lift our hearts in prayer; but to have some secret place where, day by day, either at morning, or at noon, or at night, we kneel down before God, no one in the whole world listening, and to do that thing day after day, and month after month, and year after year, and for scores of years—that is not so easy a thing to do. It wants some perseverance, some high appreciation of duty, some grand Christian determination, some Almighty help. No one can pray in public his whole prayer. Take the best man in the world, and let him rise up before God in public assemblage, and tell all his temptations and sorrows and annoyances and grievances and deficits, and he would clear the room in ten minutes. People would say, "We didn't come into the house of prayer to-night to have our ears and hearts insulted." We knew an excellent Christian man who had the habit, in prayer meeting, of telling the most astounding things of what he used to do, and where he used to go. We all believed in him as a useful man; but we all wished he would not go so much into particulars. It edified no Christian ear, it advanced no Christian heart. And yet there is a place where a man ought to be able to tell everything to his God, to review his past life, to count up all the wonderful deliverances, and take all the annoyances and the grievances of the present moment before God; but if he has no closet of secret prayer, where shall he do that? There is no such thing as stalwart Christian character except that which grows in private, and which starts from secret communion with God—an-out-and-out unlimited utterance such as a man cannot give in a public religious assemblage.—Dr. Talmage.

A COSTLY BOOK.

From a money stand-point Rome boasts of the most valuable book in the world. It is a Hebrew Bible, preserved in the Vatican at Rome, and remarkable for its size, weighing over 325 pounds, and requiring usually three men to carry it. In 1512, "a syndicate of Venetian Jews" offered Pope Julius its weight in gold, or $125,000, for it; but though needing the money greatly, he refused it. According to the present standard value of gold, as compared with that period, the book ought to be worth, upon the terms of those old Jews, about $375,000, and it is doubtful if Rome would sell it for any such amount.

While it has its place as a legacy from bygone ages, each man and woman and child in Christian lands can have the Bible in his own language and at a small cost, which he can study day by day. We ought to be thankful that we have not the Bible in costly folio simply for the few, but in cheap form for the many. All who will can have it. Many a poor woman whose Bible costs but 50 cents makes better use of it than the possessor of the finest and rarest of Bibles.—Presbyterian Observer.

THE CHILD'S PRAYER.

"Now I lay me." Thought how sweet—
In weakness is His strength complete!
"Down to sleep." Heaven's host are nigh,
Angel of God encampeth by.
"I pray thee, Lord." Attent his car;
The God of Samuel waiteth near.
"My soul to keep." What can compare
With this commited to his care?

Thus in sweet faith the child-form kneels—
A hallowed hush the heart o'er—steals.
The Shepherd bends from throne above
This lamb to guard in fold of love.

"If I should die." To one and all,
Or young, or old—will come Death's call.
"Before I wake." Sweet, blest repose,
Resting pillowed on "Jesus knows."
"I pray thee, Lord." He would be sought;
"Who early seek, will find," he taught.
"My soul to take." 'Twill ever be;
"Suffer the children to come to me."

We almost hear the Christ-voice teach—
We almost see his arms outreach—
Love, might and majesty divine,
That with this child-prayer intertwine.

OBEYING PLEASANTLY.

Little Harry had seen some older boys fly their kites from the tops of the houses, and he thought it would be nice fun if he could do so too, so he came to his aunt and said:

"Aunt Mary, can I go up to the top of the house and fly my kite?"

His aunt wished to do everything that was proper to please him, but she thought this was very unsafe, so she said:

"No, Harry, my boy; I think that is very dangerous sort of play. I'd rather you wouldn't go."

"All right. Then I'll go out on the bridge," said Harry.

His aunt smiled, and said she hoped he would always be as obedient as that.

"Harry, what are you doing?" said his mother on one occasion.

"Spinning my new top, mother."

"Can't you take the baby out to ride? Get out the carriage, and I'll bring him down."

"All right!" shouted the boy, as he put his top away in his pocket, and hastened to obey his mother.

"Uncle William, may I go over to the store this morning?" said Harry, one day at breakfast. "I want to see those baskets again that I was looking at yesterday."

"Oh, yes, Harry," said his uncle; "I shall be very glad to have you."

"But I cannot spare you to-day, Harry," said his mother; "I want you to go out with me; you shall go to the store another time."

"All right," said Harry, and went on eating.

No matter what Harry was asked to do, or what refusal he met with when asking for anything, his constant answer was "All right." He never asked, "Why can't I?" or "Why musn't I?" Harry not only learned to obey, but he had learned to obey in good humor.—Little Christian.

CAN BE TRUSTED.

A teacher said the other day: "Henry Stover is the only boy in school I can trust when my back is turned." Wasn't that a good word for Henry?

A mother once said: "I can leave any letter I write open on my desk, and if I am called away, no matter how long, I am certain Nelly will never try to read a word of it." These things could not be said of every boy and girl.

These children are honest. They do right, not only when others are looking at them, but always, remembering that God's eye is upon them. They do right because it is right. This is what we should all and always do—live as in God's presence, and do what will please him.

TEMPERANCE.

TEMPERANCE BIBLE READING.

"And Noah began to be a husbandman and he planted a vineyard, and he drank of the wine and was drunken, and he was uncovered within his tent." Gen. 9: 20, 21.

Here is found the earliest mention of wine and drunkenness. Noah was a man of God, but how could he know that grapes or the juice of such would become a powerful poison if not carefully prepared for preservation. There is no proof that Noah ever tried this again. Grape wine was strong enough to lay this man helpless within his tent.

"Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine. Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder. Thine eyes shall behold strange women and thine heart shall utter perverse things." Right here let me remark that the oaths and initiations of secret lodges are perverse things, and who can prevent a drunken member from uttering them?

"Yea, thou shalt be as he that lieth down in the midst of the sea." Can a man possibly save his own life, if he lies down in mid-ocean? No; but some friend may steer his bark that way and if it be not too late, may pull the helpless one out into safety. "The midst of the sea" is the place farthest from all shores, the place of certain death, without friendly aid from one in better circumstances, and what is done must be done quickly. Christ alone can rescue the soul that is drowning in the ocean of sin. "Or as he that lieth upon the top of a mast." Oh, what imminent danger! "When shall I awake? I will seek it yet again." Prov. 23: 29 and 35. "Wine is a mocker and strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Prov. 20: 1. Did Christ pass a mocker to his sorrowing disciples and say, "This is my blood which is shed for you." It cannot be.

The 25th chapter of 1 Sam. tells of Nabal, who was very drunken. Wine made him so. He was merry when he should have been mourning. "His heart died within him and he became as a stone—the Lord smote him that he died." In 2 Sam. 13th chapter, we find Amnon also whose heart was merry with wine, when he should have been weeping before the Lord.

Prov. 31: 6: "It is not for kings, O Lemuel, it is not for kings to drink wine, nor for kings strong drink, lest they drink and forget the law and pervert the judgment of any of the afflicted." These words spoken to Solomon or Lemuel by his mother were words of wisdom. We know that God has always, since the fall of man, been trying to get him to remember the law; and the arch enemy, who hates God, devises plans to cause man to forget it. Reason teaches us that the wine here referred to contained alcohol. This mother proceeds to say, "Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish and wine unto those that be of heavy hearts." Does she say that it will restore health or better the circumstances? No, listen! "Let him drink and forget his poverty and remember his misery no more." This woman did not wish her kingly son to do thus, but seemed to think poor outcasts might. How much better the Gospel of the free grace of Christ! "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest."

Isaiah 28: 7: "But they also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way. The priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink; they are swallowed up of wine; they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision; they stumble in judgment." Even those who are in possession of great wisdom and great grace are not proof against the evil results, if they use any intoxicant.

Deut. 32: 33: "Their wine is the poison of dragons and the cruel venom of asps."

Let us now turn from Satan's counterfeit to look for a little time upon God's good gift. Ps. 104: 14, 15: "He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man, that he may bring forth food out of the earth; and wine which maketh glad the heart of man and oil to make his face to shine, and bread which strengtheneth man's heart." The fruit of the vine is here classed with food, oil and bread, and cannot be the same article as referred to in previous passages.

Luke 5: 39: "No man, having drunk old wine, straightway desireth new, for he says the old is better." Who says the old is better? Not Christ, but the drunkard. He does not straightway desire new. There must be a valley of repentance gone through, ere the sinner can ascend the mount of God. The Saviour was showing that man must become a new creature and then he would have an appetite for new, sweet, divine joys.

Gen. 40: 11: "And Pharaoh's cup was in my hand and I took the grapes and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand." New wine.

Isa. 65: 8: "Thus saith the Lord, 'As new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, destroy it not for a blessing is in it, so will I do for my servant's sake, that I may not destroy them all.'"

Luke 7: 33: "For John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine, and ye say, 'He hath a devil.'" This preacher in the wilderness was practicing a perpetual Nazariteship.

1 Tim. 5: 23: "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities." Timothy, who was conversant with the Scriptures, was doubtless practicing a sort of Nazariteship but had not sufficient health to endure such fare. The wine which Paul advised Timothy to use was not that which is the "poison of the dragons," but good, pure, health-giving fruit, before fermentation. [Nazarite vow, Num. 6: chap.]

Ten different Hebrew and two Greek words are in our language translated wine.

Ex. 29: 40, 41: "With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour mingled with the fourth part of a hin of beaten oil and the fourth part of a hin of wine for a drink offering, for a sweet savor, an offering made by fire unto the Lord." The holy God would not count the odor arising from an offering of the cruel venom of asps as a sweet savor. Such might appropriately be offered to a demon, but not to the God who is love.

Num. 18: 12, also 28: 7, denote grape honey which was made by boiling down new unfermented juice to one-fourth its bulk, sometimes adding dates for sweetness and spices for fragrance. Thus we see the fitness of the term "strong wine."

John 2: 3: "They have no wine," said the mother of our Saviour to her son. We all remember what followed. But let us remember that this wedding feast wine was made by the Son of God, was made of water only and was used immediately.

Matt. 26: 27, 28, 29: "And he took the cup and gave it to them, saying, 'Drink ye all of it: for this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins. But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom.'" Surely Christ did not use, as an emblem of his sin atoning, cleansing blood, the old wine which causes men to break every command in the Decalogue. Let no church furnish the Lord's table with the cups of devils. A presiding elder or conference evangelist whose time is mainly used in attending quarterly meetings, will, at the end of a year, have an uncontrollable appetite for strong drink, if such be used on these occasions

Matt. 15: 23. The Saviour was brought to Golgotha, and before the cruel nails were driven into the flesh, he was offered by some person that which was calculated to cause insensibility, or at least to deaden the sense of pain somewhat. "And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh; but he received it not." After long hours of intense anguish upon the cross, "there was set a vessel full of vinegar, and they filled a sponge with vinegar and put it upon hyssop and put it to his mouth. When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, 'It is finished' and he bowed his head and gave up the ghost." Vinegar formed a part of the food of the Son of God, and in his last moments it was given him for drink. —Mrs. I. R. B. Arnold, in Wesleyan Methodist.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

LESSON XI.—Third Quarter.—September 13.

SUBJECT.—Christ and the Blind Man.—John 9: 1-11, 35-38.

GOLDEN TEXT.—One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see.—John 9: 25.

Open the Bible and read the lesson.

DAILY READINGS.—M.—John 9: 1-11. T.—John 9: 35-38. W.—John 9: 13-21. T.—John 9: 23-34. F.—Mark 10: 46-52. S.—Matt. 13: 10-17. S.—Cor. 4: 1-6.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. An unprofitable question.—vs. 1–5. "Now as Jesus passed by." Do we realize that our times of special need are always the times when Jesus is passing by? but this poor man, blind from his birth, could not see the Great Physician who stood ready to heal him. Neither can we, until our blind eyes are spiritually anointed. We come now to a very singular question asked by the disciples, who must indeed have been of "little faith" that they could see in this pitiable case before them only a chance to make one of those curious and unprofitable inquiries in which they, in common with other Orientals, delighted: "Who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?" Curious speculation about things that are hid from us, are always in themselves an indication of a lack of faith. Human life is full of apparent injustices impossible to reconcile, and the attempt to do so, with our limited human knowledge, is sure to plunge us into wild and absurd theories. The Rabbinical theology sought to "justify the ways of God to men" by teaching that children suffered for the sins of their parents, and it is possible that they may have also held some vague ideas of a previous state of existence, the sins of which were the cause of those misfortunes in the present life that could not otherwise be accounted for. This is a disputed point; but whether or no the transmigration of souls is dimly implied in this singular question, it was no more absurd or un-Scriptural than many other doctrines taught by the Rabbins. Jesus does not say that sin is not sometimes punished in this life, but his answer shows that the unequal measures in which happiness and misfortune are meted out to different individuals of the human race cannot be accounted for by any such hypothesis; and at the same time it flings a wonderful light on the whole question:—"that the works of God should be made manifest in him." His blindness, in itself a misfortune, became the greatest of blessings to himself and to others, in the fact that through it was manifested forth the wonderful power and compassion of Jesus. Augustine has said that "God had one Son without sin, but never one without sorrow." If we were never tried or afflicted, his Spirit would lose its most glorious opportunities of working in us and through us. "I must work while it is day." It is only to him who has been careless of his opportunities that the night comes too soon. The earnest toiler welcomes the shadows of eve as they fall around him. Here philosophy and religion teach the same truth. "He that dies in the prosecution of some earnest desire," says Bacon, "is like one that is wounded in hot blood, who does not feel the blow. Therefore, a mind fixed and bent upon something that is good steals from the pains of death."

2. The blind man healed.—vs. 7–11. The anointing with spittle and the washing in Siloam were intended, doubtless, as aids to faith, for in themselves they could not have accomplished the cure. Perhaps we may also learn from it the lesson that we are not to despise means on the one hand, nor put our trust in them on the other. In the latter case it is idolatry; in the former, presumption. It was the man's neighbors who were first to notice the wonderful change. They did not need to have him tell them he could see. He no longer groped in the dark, seeking for a hand to guide him, but walked erect and with confidence. So the surest proof that we have received our spiritual sight is when the fact is so plain to all our friends and neighbors that they cannot help observing it.

3. The first brave confessor.—vs. 35–38. The man who had been healed was of low position; he had been only a blind beggar, living on the alms of the charitable. Yet the Council before whom he was brought, composed of the highest dignitaries in the nation, did not think it beneath its official dignity to try to brow-beat him into a denial of his divine Healer. But he had the spirit of a martyr and a hero. His shrewd replies baffled them at every turn, and sentence of excommunication was finally passed, couched in the most stinging terms of contempt and insult. Jesus, hearing how he had been dealt with, sought him out. He had been faithful with his little light and knowledge, and now more should be added unto him. It should be given him to know and recognize the Christ, whom kings and prophets had desired to see, and yet had passed away without the vision. We may find many things in the Gospel that we do not understand. So, to the man who had been healed, the personality of Christ, and by what means he had given him his sight, was all a mystery. But this did not hinder him from bravely confessing what he had done for him, though he could only say, "Whereas I was blind, now I see." Thus he was prepared, when the fuller and clearer revelation came, to fall down and worship him, saying, "Lord, I believe."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—Mr. Spurgeon continues to fail in health and it is evident that his restoration is beyond the power of the very superior medical aid that has been summoned to his bedside. Friends are very voluminous in their expressions of sympathy and condolence. Great interest is manifested in the success of his college, for which an anonymous gift of $4,000 has been received.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Vermont has 198 Congregational churches in 165 towns. The population of these towns has decreased two per cent in the decade, but membership of the churches has increased nearly five per cent.

—The Rev. B. Fay Mills is engaged to conduct evangelistic services at Terre Haute, Ind., beginning Sept. 1. All the evangelical churches will unite in these services.

—Rev. R. F. Horton, London, speaking of some of the results of the recent council, says it has served not only to draw the English-speaking people closer together, and to identify Congregationalism in the closest way with the great social problems of our day, but that "the insufferable arrogance which is too common among the English clergy will fall much more lightly in the future on many a brave and manly country minister, who through this council has been allowed to realize his relation with a world-wide movement, the charter of which is the pages of the New Testament, and the maintenance of which is secured by the constant intervention and operation of God himself."

EPISCOPAL.

—Bishop Potter, in a recent sermon in behalf of New York city missions, said that the church he represented was preaching the Gospel in this city "not only in almost all the tongues of Europe, but in those of China, Armenia, Turkey and Persia."

FRIENDS.

—The Society of Friends in England and America, though numbering but 100,000, contribute to foreign missions upward of $90,000 annually. A beginning was not made until 1866, and since then representatives have been sent to Syria, India, China, Madagascar, Mexico and the American Indians. Their Woman's Foreign Missionary Union raised $23,164 last year. Though efficient work is done in other fields, yet Madagascar has been the scene of their greatest success. Entering the island in 1868, they now have 18 missionaries, 40 native pastors and 370 other native assistants, 230 churches with 4,000 members and 40,000 adherents, and 132 schools with 14,600 scholars.

GREEK CHURCH.

—There are about two thousand adherents of the Greek church in Chicago, mostly in comfortable circumstances, not one dependent upon charity. A church of this faith is about to be established, and after the building has been erected a priest will be sent from the old world.

LUTHERAN.

—The German Lutheran church at Ghent, N. Y., which was demolished by a cyclone on April 18th, has been rebuilt, and on the 12th of July was re-dedicated.

—Muskego, Wis., is one of the oldest Norwegian settlements in America, and possibly the oldest church was organized there in 1839. The old first building is now used as a stable, by the man who occupies the parsonage of the venerable Pastor Clausen, undoubtedly the first Scandinavian minister in America. The old church was built in 1844 and dedicated that winter.

—The corner-stone of the new German Lutheran church at Greenpoint, Brooklyn, N. Y., Rev. F. W. Oswald, pastor, was laid on Sunday, July 26th. The church, when completed, will be a beautiful structure.

—All the Lutheran pastors in St. Petersburg were compelled by imperial order to read to their congregations the Czar's proclamation on the apostasy of the Grand Duchess Sergius to the orthodox church. This order was plainly given in order to humiliate the Lutherans.

—The prospects for an English Lutheran church in South Indianapolis, Ind., are good. Rev. I. D. Worman, who has been laboring there for several weeks, was to have organized a congregation, Sunday, August 30th.

—The king of Sweden has given permission for a general collection in all the churches of his kingdom for the benefit of the struggling Lutheran College in Lindsborg, Kansas.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Ten thousand converts in China and Japan is the gratifying report Bishop Goodsell, of the Methodist Episcopal church, brings back from his visit to those countries.

—Asbury Methodist Episcopal church, New York, has done extraordinary work the past year. It has opened a free dispensary, an employment bureau, a wood and coal yard; fed on bread and coffee the hungry; held special services for the "army of despair," as the unemployed are called, and given open air preaching to thousands upon thousands of the poor.

—On a recent Sunday evening at Bethany Methodist Episcopal church, Philadelphia, the Rev. J. W. Rudolph, pastor, four persons were baptized and fifteen were received into full membership, making a total of 727 in the past two months.

—A "China Methodist Union" has been constituted, the object of which is to bring all branches of Methodism in China into closer fellowship, both of spirit and service. The membership comprises all the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal church (thirty-four), Methodist Episcopal church, south (thirteen), Wesleyan Methodists (twenty-two), other English Methodists (eight), and two Methodist missionaries in connection with the China Inland Mission, and two in connection with the American Bible Society, making a total of eighty-one members. A common name for the Methodist church in China is proposed. Other objects which the Union hopes to carry out at an early date are the arrangement of one common course of study for native preachers and one common form of rules for Chinese church-members.

—The next International Council is to be that of the Methodists, who are to have their second Ecumenical Methodist Conference next October, in Washington. The provisional committee was in session at Saratoga last week maturing arrangements for the great meeting. There are to be five hundred delegates, three hundred of these from America.

PRIMITIVE METHODISTS.

—The Missionary Society of the Primitive Methodist church (England) reports an income of £11,099, and an expenditure of £10,477. Aside from this there was the special income of the African fund, amounting to £3,313, with an expenditure of £2,263. The work of the society is carried on entirely in Africa in the Kaffraria mission at Aliwal north. An increase of one hundred and fifty members was reported.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Rev. J. H. Worcester, D. D., of Chicago, has been elected to the chair of Systematic Theology in Union Seminary, New York.

—The first graduate of Pierre University completed his theological course at McCormick Seminary this year, and is now the successful pastor of an influential parish. Were it not for this young college on our frontier this man would still have been on the government survey, as he himself has told us.—Interior.

—At a congregational meeting of Immanuel Presbyterian church in Chicago, at which Rev. T. C. Hall, of the Forty-first Street church, presided, a unanimous call was extended to Rev. E. B. Hubbell to the pastorate. Mr. Hubbell was a member of the class of '87 in McCormick Seminary.

—Prof. James Woodrow, D.D., the man over whom there has been the theologic-evolutionary discussion in the Southern Presbyterian church, has been elected president of the re-organized South Carolina College, and professor of biology, geology and minerology. The election was unanimous.

—Rev. John Newton, D. D., missionary of the Presbyterian board at Lodiana and Lahore, India, died at Murree, in the Himalayas, July 3, at the age of eighty. He went to India in 1834, and has been identified with the work in India as no other man has been.

—The Catholic Review says: "Catholics are bound to build up a Catholic branch of the public school system where children will be educated as Catholics at the expense of the State." The Presbyterian replies: "The people of this country will go into a long and bitter struggle before such a scheme reaches its accomplishment."

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—While some Roman Catholic papers are venting considerable spleen on the recent action of Commissioner Morgan in relation to the Indian schools, it appears that Cardinal Gibbons has satisfied himself that his church has little cause for complaint.

—A dispatch from Seattle, Wash., Aug. 6, says: "Father Quay, the Catholic priest of Snohomish, was tarred and feathered by a mob this morning. He is accused of practicing various forms of immorality."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the [illegible] church. 10 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and law of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15cts each.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Dury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church, is clearly shown. 10cts each.

HOME AND HEALTH.

EVERYDAY HELPS.

Sprinkle corn meal on the baking pan instead of greasing it.

Insect stings or eruptions on the skin are relieved by alcohol.

Salt dissolved, gin, or ammonia will take out grease spots.

To cool earthenware or glass quickly place the article in cold salt water.

Never breathe through the mouth unless it is impossible to breathe through the nose.

For an aching tooth saturate a piece of cotton with ammonia and lay it on the tooth.

Powdered alum applied to a fever sore will prevent it from becoming very unsightly or noticeable.

Equal parts of sweet oil and vinegar and a little powdered gum arabic make an excellent furniture polish.

A tablespoonful of oatmeal soaked a number of hours in a glass of milk is a very nutritious and flesh-forming food.

Never put potatoes on the table in a covered dish. They will re-absorb their own moisture and become soggy.

A pleasant household deodorizer is made by pouring spirits of lavender over lumps of bicarbonate of ammonia.

To extract ink from woods, scour with sand wet with water and ammonia. Rinse with strong saleratus water.

If fruit stains are washed in tepid water, they will generally come out. It's the putting them in suds that sets the color.

Delicious sandwiches and cheap ones can be made by mincing fine rare beefsteak. Season with pepper and salt. These are excellent for invalids.

It is said that to drink sweet milk after eating onions will purify the breath so that no odor will remain. A cupful of strong coffee is also recommended.—Selected.

HEADACHE SPONGED AWAY.

Nervous headache is often called woman's curse. The hard day's shopping, the day when everything in the household "went wrong," the afternoon spent in paying calls, or a day of ceaseless toil with the needle, all these are apt to end in the state mentioned, to the great discomfort of husband and family, and still greater to the sufferer herself.

Bromides are the most common resort in such a case, but they soon lose their effect. A sponge and hot water will effect the best cure of all, if properly used.

First, fasten the hair high on the head, to keep it dry as possible. Have the water just as hot as it can be borne, soak the sponge, and place it at the back of the neck. Apply it also behind the ears, where center most of the nerves and muscles of the head; and these will be found to soften and relax most deliciously. Often the pain will be relieved in a few minutes.

Then, in the same manner, bathe face and temples; and when through, give the face a dash of cold water. Afterward, if possible, darken the room and lie down. You will be apt to fall into a gentle slumber, from which to arise refreshed and strengthened, with all trace of nervousness gone.

The face bath with hot water is far better than any cosmetic; it restores to the face color and smoothness of outline, and helps to keep away wrinkles. It quickens the circulation, and keeps the pores open and the skin perfectly clean, and if you are expecting to attend an evening party, after such a day of wear and tear, and view with dismay the drawn lines of the face and eyes and the hollow looks of the latter, try this remedy, not neglecting the nap, if possible, and great will be the change thereafter in your appearance. The lines will be gone, and the look of distress; the soft, healthful color will come again to the cheek and lip, and a restful and rested look return to the eyes, and you will be once more in a condition to enjoy, and better yet, to be enjoyed.—Selected.

Hall's Hair Renewer is free from alcohol and dyes that injure the skin. It is scientifically prepared, and will restore gray hair to its original color and vigor.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

FARM NOTES.

BITS OF WISDOM.

Take care of the tools.

Mow those weeds before the seed ripens.

Give the young chickens plenty of sweet milk.

The garden is the remedy for headaches.

Most successful shepherds are kind-hearted men.

The discharge of one duty shows the way to another.

Head and hand should be trained to work together.

Different soils require different treatment to secure the best results.

Industry and energy without intelligence is up-hill work all the way.

What is produced at home does not have to be hauled to or from market.

See that your wife has all reasonable conveniences and does not overwork.

If you want to avoid competition, produce an article above it in quality.

There is no panacea for earthly sorrow like the absorption of useful work.

White beans always bring cash, and might be easily grown on every farm in the Northwest.

Shallow cultivation, keeping only the very surface soil loose, acts as a mulch during a drought.

Yes, pigs will eat sour milk; but they like sweet milk much better, and it will do them more good.

"I did not think," costs any amount of trouble, wastes labor, and brings grief to many a heart.

Kindness costs less than grain and hay. It is just as necessary for success with domestic animals.

The moment a farmer tries to cultivate too much land he becomes a drudge, and farming don't pay.

The boy or girl who has learned to think has taken a long step in the direction of happiness and prosperity.

A sharp hoe saves the back and ruins the weeds. Ten cents' worth of file will save a dollar's worth of muscle.

For farm work a good four and a half or five mile walk in a horse is better than a "two-forty on a plank road."

Don't leave the corn planter, the harrows, and other tools in the field. Sun and rain will wear them out faster than ordinary use.

Roadside weeds on the prairie are a dangerous nuisance, as the winds, scatters the seeds for a long distance, and spoils fields which might otherwise be clean.

A bad road is a self-imposed tax, which costs the farmers who live beside or travel over it more than all the "robber tariffs" that politicians ever imposed.

Allowing weeds to grow on the roadside is reprehensible, and every landowner should be required by law to keep his front free from weeds by frequent mowing.

There are few wage-payers who will not respect those who deserve it. Competent and thorough workers can stand on their dignity as well as employers, while those who are inferior must often take what comes.

Statistics show that at least eighty per cent of the successful men of all callings were born upon the farm or in the country. The country is the fountain from which the cities draw their fresh blood; and they must have this fresh vital force to save them from disaster.—Minneapolis Tribune.

HINTS FOR HOG RAISERS.

Do not set the rings in hogs so as to wound the bone.

Give the little pigs green grass or young clover in a rack.

Do not put the ring through to the partition between the nostrils.

Get acquainted with the little pigs. Do not let the stronger pigs rob the smaller and weaker ones.

When hogs eat on dusty ground they may inhale enough dust to cause catarrh or to injure their lungs.

The sow should be fed a small amount the first three days after the pigs are born so as not to make more milk than the pigs can take.

The best whole grain for the little pigs is oats. They will chew and swallow the meats and spit out the shells. Give the little pigs all they will eat.

Linseed meal, old process, is the best food for hogs to prevent constipation when they are confined in pens and yards. There is more fertilizing value in it than in any food except cotton-seed meal.

Some one wants to know if there is a pig-pen breed of hogs? The small Yorkshires and the Essex come the nearest to this want of any breed. These small and chunky breeds will bear confinement much the best. They are naturally quiet and lazy.

For tape-worms in hogs or dogs, give no food for twenty-four hours, then give half an ounce to an ounce of spirits of turpentine according to the size of the animal. Dilute the dose with a half pint of milk and give no food for twelve hours following.

Wet beds will cause paralysis in the legs of hogs and across the loins. Lack of succulence in the food will produce fever and paralysis. The remedy for these troubles lies more in the prevention than in doctoring. Give laxative food always to hogs and especially to sows in pig.

A Westerner thinks we take too much pains with our hogs. Of course a man must choose between the cost of labor and care and the cost of loss. There is a comfort in care as compared to loss, but then some folks get used to all sorts of things. We cannot, as we were built to be particular.

As soon as the sow has gotten used to the loss of her pigs she may be put into a pasture and fed there for a few days a little grain, and if there is water for her she will want nothing else but a dry bed in which to sleep till the next litter of pigs are born. The pigs will be strong and healthy, as grass is a perfect food for a hog, and it wants nothing else for its support. When thus managed there will be no cake in the udders nor frenzy at the birth of the young.—Farm Journal.

The Beauty Standard.

The standard of female loveliness varies greatly in different countries and with individual tastes. Some prefer the plump and buxom type; some admire the slender and sylph-like, and some the tall and queenly maiden. But among all people of the Caucasian race, one point of beauty is always admired—a pure, clear and spotless complexion—whether the female be of the blonde, brunette, or hazel-eyed type. This first great requisite of loveliness can be assured only by a pure state of the blood, active liver, good appetite and digestion, all of which are secured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is guaranteed to accomplish all that is claimed for it, or money refunded. If you would have a clear, lovely complexion, free from eruptions, moth patches, spots and blemishes, use the "Golden Medical Discovery."

Will Lewis, colored, was taken from jail and hanged by a mob at Tullahoma, Tenn., Monday night. Lewis was a drunkard, but had committed no crime.

A new military post is to be established at a point 150 miles northwest of Duluth, to prevent Canadian thefts of American timber.

Daniel Sherekey, a farmer near Lincoln, was shot and killed Monday night by a chicken thief, whom he had overtaken.

Thursday morning a fast mail train on the Western North Carolina railroad ran off a bridge near Statesville, and fell a distance of sixty-five feet, killing twenty-two passengers, seriously injuring nine others, and badly bruising twenty more. The accident was caused by the spreading of the rails.

Jack Hogan, brother of Aeronaut Hogan, of Jackson, Mich., who lost his life two years ago in experimenting with an air-ship on Long Island, fell 2,500 feet from a balloon Saturday afternoon at the Detroit Exposition grounds, and was instantly killed.

All the northwestern part of Faulk county, S. D., was burned over Friday night by a terrible and most destructive fire twenty miles wide and extending from Faulkton fifty miles northwest.

General R. S. Dyrenforth, who conducted the recent government rain experiments, said Friday the experiments were correct beyond question. In three weeks six rains were produced, three of which were down-pours and the last one was the heaviest rain in three years.

Fire at Grand Mound, Iowa, Tuesday, destroyed six business buildings, causing a loss of $20,000, partly insured.

Train service has been resumed on the Lake Erie and Western railroad, all difficulties between the company and its men having been satisfactorily adjusted.

Wheat is reported to have been damaged by frost in the vicinity of Jamestown, N. D.

Fire destroyed the First Baptist church at Benton, Ill., Wednesday, together with Crisp, McCreary & Co's livery stable and the Hon. Thomas L. Layman's barn. Loss, $8,000.

At Sandy Creek, N. Y., Wednesday, at a depth of 1,020 feet a large vein of natural gas was struck which blew the tools in all directions. The noise of escaping gas can be heard for miles.

It is announced that the total number of seals taken in Alaska water since Aug. 1, 1890, by the North American Commercial Company is 7,234, and it is estimated that poachers took about 40,000.

A number of Russian Jewish refugees have arrived penniless at Detroit, being received through Canadian seaports.

FOREIGN.

Henry Cecil Raikes, the British Postmaster-General, died in London on Monday.

Santiago, the capital of Chili (S. A.) has been formally surrendered, the triumph of the Congressional party is complete, and peace and quiet may be looked for in Chili before many days have passed. After the crushing defeat which Balmaceda's forces met with at the hands of General Canto's troops on the hills back of Valparaiso, Friday, and the subsequent entry of the conquering army into Valparaiso, the fall of the capital was only a question of time.

Emin Pasha reports that his operations in Africa have been entirely successful, having defeated the natives and re-occupied all the old stations in the Equatorial Province.

Venezuela's Congress has rejected the reciprocity treaty proposed by the United States.

It is said that recent exports of rye from Russia have about exhausted the reserve stocks.

Heavy rain in England and Northern France is reported to have proved destructive to wheat.

A revival of piracy in the Eastern Mediterranean is reported. French vessels trading with the Levant have been ordered to carry arms.

Mr. Gladstone has written a letter denouncing gambling as a growing national evil.

The steamship Easby collided with the Gambier in the port of Philip Heads, Australia, at 1 o'clock Friday morning. The Gambier sank in seven minutes, carrying down five saloon and fifteen steerage passengers and six of the crew. The others were rescued by the Easby.

The latest skilled estimate of the deficiency of the wheat crop in Europe is 40,000,000 quarters, besides a deficit in the rye crop of 35,000,000 quarters. The potato crop a few weeks ago promised splendidly, but since then continuous wet weather has developed disease in Great Britain, Ireland, Germany, Holland, and France. The net result of this concatenation of agricultural disasters will be to make a scarcity of breadstuffs in Europe to an extent unknown to any living man, and will tax the resources of exporting countries outside of Europe to their utmost to supply the deficiency. It is calculated that even if the United States sends 21,000,000 quarters of wheat, and Canada 2,000,000, that the prices of grain must rise enormously unless the supplies from India, Australia, Argentine, and other minor sources of supply greatly exceed the usual supply.

Elsewhere we print the attempt of one Musgrave, a Knight of Pythias, to fleece several life insurance companies by a spurious report of his death. It now transpires that a part of his scheme was to also "work" the Knights. His confederate, Trout, was to have the Knights of Pythias take charge of the remains and inter them, thus lending color to the claim that they were his. An effort was also to be made to have the Knights of Pythias take up a collection to defray the funeral expenses. Desertion and betrayal by his associates in the crime, however, frustrated the scheme before it was matured.

At its recent gathering, the Grand Orange Lodge of British America, at Kingston, declared that the definition "Orangeman" and "Orangeism" in Chamber's Encyclopedia and in the American Encyclopedia was objectionable, and the proprietors will be asked to publish the general declaration as set for in the constitution. A gentleman formerly connected with the Canadian Orangemen thinks the order manifests undue anxiety on this question, considering that while its constitutional principles may be respectable, the principal objects of its members seem to consist in cursing the Pope, patronizing saloons, and thumping Irishmen who are outside of the lodges. It is also described as a mixture of the Master Mason's degree, the Royal Arch degree, and Knight Templarism. On the whole, what is not bad in it seems to be ridiculous.

Preston's "Illustrations of Masonry" (chap 1: sec. 3), and the Book of Constitutions of South Carolina" (p 2), both declare: "From the commencement of of the world, we may trace the foundation of Masonry. Ever since symmetry began, and harmony displayed her charms, our order has had a being." It is a wonder Freemasons should even be willing to concede that their order began only with the terrestrial genesis, since the era which we find mentioned in the foregoing quotation certainly antedates the earth. Perhaps in the revised history of the order this mistake will be rectified, and somewhere near the middle of the book we shall find this foot-note: "About this time the world was created!"

The following is a copy of a telegram, not signed, which was received on Wednesday by the New York State Prohibition Convention at Albany: "Gentlemen: We, the wine, liquor, and beer dealers of this State, in convention assembled, tender you the assurances of our most profound consideration for the outcome of your deliberations." Rev. C. H. Mead proposed to answer it by sending the following verse of an old hymn, and was appointed a committee for that purpose:

And are we wretches still alive, and do we still rebel?
'Tis wondrous, 'tis amazing grace that we are out of hell.

Congressman Simpson, known as the "sockless," has recently visited the South, where he found that the color question is causing serious disruption in the Southern Farmers' Alliance organizations. He tells the Kansas Alliance managers that the fight on this subject has already assumed dangerous proportions in many Southern localities. The Alliance people have been trying to recruit for their ranks with colored men, but they now find that this is arousing protests from the white members of the organization. The Alliance leaders have counted much on their connection with the colored Farmers' Alliance of the South, but the news Congressman Simpson brings back is that this connection is doing more harm than good and is driving more white men out of the Alliance than it is bringing colored men in.

The organs of modern Romanism profess an earnest opposition (as shown in last week's paper) to all secret societies, while it is notorious that it is itself intimately connected with the most stupendous system of secret machinations that ever existed. In addition to this, it has under its wings one or two other secret societies, of which it ought to be heartily ashamed. It also wars with Masonry; yet the writer was once assured by a member of that order, that at least one high official of this city was not only an adhering member of the Romish church, but also a working member in good standing of a Chicago lodge. Nor is there reason to believe that this is an isolated case. But this class of Masons keep their relations with the forbidden fraternity a profound secret even from their "father-confessors" in the church.

Among the interesting incidents at the recent meeting of the American Sabbath Union, in this city, was the presentation by the Women's Christian Temperance Union of a petition containing the signatures of 20,000 women, asking that the World's Fair may be closed on Sunday. The interest manifested in this great movement is national, and its influence should be carefully heeded by those in charge of the Exposition. Indifference to the combined wishes of so large and respectable a representation as is engaged in the laudable work of keeping the Sabbath holy during the Fair, or the treatment of the movement with undue flippancy, will not be tolerated. The claims of the Christian Sabbath are paramount to any human regulation of the manner in which it should be observed by the ungodly. God says he will be honored in sanctified Sabbaths, and that should settle the question without circumlocution or evasion.

Rev. Geo. C. Haddock, Iowa's revered martyr to the cause of Prohibition, lies buried in beautiful Mound Cemetery at Racine, Wis., and, seemingly, his spirit is at work in that city, encouraging the friends of temperance to make it worthy of his memory. The Congregational church, with possibly other evangelical denominations, and the better class of citizens, are now, and have been, for some time past engaged in the suppression of the saloon influence, and, especially, in a joint movement to have all liquor shops tightly closed on Sundays. The opposition is quite fierce and vindictive, and it would not be surprising to learn that Rev. Charles H. Percival, pastor of the Congregational church, had fallen, like Haddock, a victim to the courage of his convictions. Anonymous letters, intimating that death awaits him if he persists in advocating Prohibition, and warning him against the fate of Haddock, have been sent to him. Fortunately, Mr. Percival has the moral integrity and confidence in his work to believe that the saloons must be closed, and that he may live to see his enemies confounded and their devices brought to naught. May the Lord grant it!

COMPROMISE—ISAIAH 28: 15.

BY REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D.D.

Compromising truth with error,
Whatsoe'er the gain or prize,
Is to marry light with darkness,
And the law of God with lies;
And in such accursed wedlock
Truth makes all the sacrifice;

For she binds her hands with shackles,
Forged in hell's profoundest caves,
And she ties her tongue with pledges,
And with curses framed by knaves;
And thus selling out her birthright,
Makes her children's children slaves.

LODGE MORALS TRIED IN CHURCH.

Rev. H. Degree was one of those Masonic ministers who join the order and do not afterward join the thousands that withdraw again. He was, therefore, a valuable man, and very serviceable as a stool-pigeon. Any desirable young man on whom a Mason was attempting that proselyting work which, in theory, is never done, but in practice is pushed fairly well, could be answered, if he questioned the character of what was so carefully hidden, "ministers belong to it; there is Mr. Degree—he is a Mason."

Mr. Degree was not the man to make a real study of Masonry. He was social, friendly and ready always for a sociable, a pastoral call, or whatever kept things lively and interesting. Never troubling himself to any great extent about the exegesis of texts, and spending little time on philosophical or theological questions, he was just the man to see the lodge as a mere society, and take its lectures and surface representations at their full face-value. As a society, it was a means of making acquaintances and having a good time. He observed this chiefly, not noticeing very much more. He was sure that all the Presidents had been Masons; he had been known to say that Solomon was the first Grand Master, and he never stopped to question the Masonic standing of John the Baptist or St. John the Divine.

It was not strange, then, that, being a man of this type, he advanced rapidly in the chapter as soon as he finished the Blue Lodge, and at the time when many others were wondering whether three degrees were not quite enough, not to say three times one too many, he was already a full-blown Royal Arch Mason. To a man like him this rush was most exhilarating. He was intoxicated, and his enthusiasm was at the high pressure stage of intense ebullition. He contrasted the church and the lodge. Why could not these glorious principles enlighten all the world? If to be a Mason was, as he fully believed, to be a better Christian, why could not the great principles, and even some of the dazzling methods, of this venerable order, old as Solomon, and nobly wise, be imported into the Fourth Street church, without being known as features of the Masonic system?

Seed-thoughts ripened rapidly in the hot-bed of his fertile brain, and, as usual, he no sooner conceived the idea, than it was matured into a plan, and started toward execution.

Fourth Street church was to lead in the great work of bringing the Christian churches up to the line of Masonic and improved practical morality. Or, if the other churches continued to drag behind the lodge, then Fourth Street church should blaze out resplendent among them, outshining all like a planet crossing a constellation.

Several new candidates for church membership were, at that very time, about to be examined at the monthly church meeting, and it was here that he decided at once to begin. Each of the candidates having related his experience, he arose at length, and, with a few introductory remarks, called on all together to pledge themselves to keep, inviolable, everything communicated as a secret by any member of Fourth Street church, Sunday-school or congregation. At this there was a little sensation, but the candidates had as little time to think as those in a Masonic lodge, and before the deacons had time to recover from their amazement and check proceedings the deed was done.

The pastor's class of young men was a little surprised, the next Sunday, when they were taught that the morality required of them was, to avoid all illicit relations with members of Fourth Street church, or, at least, with those whom they positively know to be in full membership and regular standing. In the evening service of the same day the pastor expounded the parable of the Good Samaritan. It was not surprising that a man of his type should overlook the point and force of the parable as answering the lawyer's question in the word, "Who?" But all were startled at their pastor's originality when he warmly and dogmatically urged the duty of helping every attendant at the Fourth Street church out of any difficulty whatever, no matter if it were caused by his own crimes.

Within a few days there was a humming. An ominous buzzing surrounded the Fourth Street hive. One zealous old maid, staring through her silver spectacles, had confided, in a stage whisper, to her next-door neighbor, that the pastor had taught the young men that they would be fully as good as the average church member, not to say a great deal better, if they confined their criminal relations to those outside the church, or, at the utmost, included members not known by them to be in actual membership. But she was by no means the only one who made this advanced and improved morality the theme of animated discussion. It was said, all over the parish, that Mr. Degree had emphatically assured the young men, that if they lived up to this line they would be perfect. It was also told in Gath, and some of the most notorious Philistines in the bar-rooms and billiard halls were laughing at each other for their saintliness before the week was done. "Tom," said one of them to a notorious libertine, "Tom, you had better join that Fourth Street church; you would be a shining light there; the rest of the world is room enough for you."

Unfortunately for Mr. Degree's scheme, and by the strangest possible coincidence, a fellow who had, for a month or two, attended this church and hired a pew, just at this very time was trying a scheme of his own. It had nothing to do with church affairs, but was purely personal, between him and some man in a neighboring town. But it had got him into serious trouble, which he well deserved, and from which he must be extricated soon, or complaint and arrest were inevitable. It was not a case for sympathy or help, however, and no good citizen could be justified in helping him and aiding him to injure an innocent man. The only decent and moral thing to do was to let him reap the harvest he himself had sown; yet to the astonishment of every one, he boldly demanded help from all the members who had lately joined the church. He appealed to the pledge they had taken.

That settled the case of Mr. Degree. The pulpit of Fourth Street church was vacant before very long.

The new pastor is not a Freemason, the deacons are not in favor of improvements on Christianity as a moral system; and two or three members, who were Freemasons having seen Masonic morality set so closely in the light of Christian morals, have had their eyes opened to the falsity of the ordinary Masonic claim. I am happy to add that, in consistency with this new light on the immoral system they had hitherto failed to understand, they have now taken demits and withdrawn, like Christians, from the lodge.

CRUCIFER.

DR. GOODWIN AND HIS CRITICS.

BY REV. C. A. S. TEMPLE.

It seems that Rev. Dr. Goodwin, of Chicago, has struck "High Twelve" in London; and to your ejaculation that, "If his religion is two hundred years behind the unsettled and dangerous theology of the present day, let us all thank God and take courage"—every true friend of "the truth, as it is in Jesus," must say "Amen and amen!" The bitterness with which he has been assailed, and the sources from whence those assaults have come, are all only so many testimonials to the truth, to the soundness of his position, and to his faithfulness as an ambassador of Christ.

In his statement that, "If Congregational polity was either to be loyal to its history, or helpful to the world, it would not only stand by, but magnify the old faith," he took the only consistent position for one in his place. He was not sent that he might, before the assembled Congregationalism of the world, renounce or defame "the old faith," but he went as its champion and defender. By his ordination, he had been "set for the defense of the Gospel," and in that hour, when the eyes of the world were upon him, he was not the man to cater to the miscalled "progress," the "advanced theologies," etc., of these degenerate times, to gain applause from either a disguised liberalism in the church, or the more open and popular skepticism of the secular press. Most nobly has he fulfilled his mission!

Gratuitously and very generously, and withal, very gravely, we are reminded, on the right hand and on the left, that "the world moves," and "has long since outgrown" those great truths, the old Calvinistic faith," to which Dr. G. so eloquently called the attention of his hearers and of the whole body of the church. As if fundamental truths could ever be "outgrown!" They may be ignored, or denied, or disregarded, but they can neither be "outgrown" nor overthrown. They are as enduring as the throne of God.

It is not strange that Liberalists of every stripe should join the hue and cry of avowed infidels against such an open, manly defence of "the old faith," but that one wearing the livery of that faith, and hailing, originally, from its old New England home, could bring himself at such a time, and under such circumstances, to become, thus publicly, its enemy and traducer, is humiliating indeed! It is reported in substance that Rev. Washington Gladden, formerly pastor of a church in, I think, Chickopee, Mass.,—as an offset to the sermon by Dr. Goodwin—assumed for himself the role of champion and defender of the backward and downward drift, which now characterizes and dishonors a portion of our Congregational Zion! thus dignifying apostasy and unbelief, and showing them as "progress," as "advanced theology," and such like fulsome, bombastic glorification of a disguised, but bitter, warfare upon the truth of God. All that by one of its professed friends, in its own citadel, and within its own lines!" "O shame, where is thy blush?" Why cannot such men throw off all disguise, sail under their own colors, and thus deserve, at least, the meed of consistency, and of open and fair antagonists of the faith which they both profess and oppose!

But God be thanked that the Elijahs are not all gone; that there are yet a "goodly remnant" who do not "bow the knee to Baal;" men, and women, too, who "are not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," and who do not fear to defend that Gospel, even when assailed by "baptized worldlings, who affect a criticism higher than Christ." We thank God, too, for that most precious promise that "when the enemy cometh in like a flood, the Spirit of Jehovah shall lift up a standard against him."

That sermon by Dr. Goodwin, let us hope, is a sure forerunner, a bright harbinger, of the fulfillment of that gracious promise.

The howl of vexation and rage which goes up alike from confessed skeptics and self-styled "advanced" theologians, shows clearly that the arrow of truth, from the quiver of Chicago's great archer, has found its mark. It has penetrated far deeper than "the joints of the enemy's harness." It has pierced a vital part, for he writhes, as well as raves!

"Blessed are ye when men shall revile you . . . . for my sake, ... for great is your reward in heaven."

"Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee, O God, and the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain."

MASONIC OATHS CRIMINAL.

BY REV. C. G. FAIT.

We have already shown that the pledges and oaths usually required by lodges are in conflict with the Word of God. If these rash and wicked oaths are of any binding force whatever, then those who take them are certainly involved in crime. It is well understood that a man, before becoming a member of any one of the many different fraternities, must swear to forever conceal and never reveal the secrets of the order. This oath, you will perceive, is a kind of double oath, an iron-clad oath. If men were only bound by this oath never to reveal those secrets themselves, the care would be vastly different. But, alas, when men swear not only never to reveal those secrets themselves but to forever conceal them also, when others attempt to reveal them, they swear not only to their own fidelity and allegiance to the lodge, but virtually swear to the lodge fidelity of every other member of the fraternity in the whole universe. Such obligations frequently lead to horrid crimes. Hence the murder of Dr. Cronin of Chicago by the Clan-na-Gael, the murder of Chief of Police Hennessey, of New Orleans, by the Mafia, the murder of Capt. William Morgan of Batavia, New York, by the Freemasons. The murder of Capt. Morgan in September of the year 1826 probably created more excitement, more agitation of the public mind, and involved more lawsuits and greater expense, than any other murder trial ever instituted in the United States.

The tragedy with the secrets disclosed during the trials which followed, so completely laid open to the public gaze the secrets of the lodge, that for several years the fraternity of Freemasonry was thought to be dead. Out of fifty thousand, the number of Freemasons supposed to exist in the United States at that time, forty-five thousand left the lodge never to return again. In the trials for the murder of Morgan, alike with those for the murder of Dr. Cronin and Hennessey, the courts fixed the guilt of murder upon the fraternity as such without being able to designate the particular individuals perpetrating the foul deed. The murderers were shielded in each case by virtue of the obligations to forever conceal and never reveal. After a new generation sprung up who knew nothing of the Morgan tragedy, Freemasonry rapidly grew into public favor again, and that too without changing any of its ancient landmarks. But it lost nine-tenths of its membership for the murder of one man in its compliance with the obligation to forever conceal, yet utterly failed to suppress the publication of the same. A little reflection will convince the intelligent mind that a society of large dimensions would naturally be composed of all the elements of human nature, and this being true, revelations of all that pertained to such societies would be inevitable; it would be unreasonable to expect anything else; it it would be wild and fanatical to even hope for anything short of this.

This being true, the man who swears to forever conceal his lodge secret, swears to what he ought not in reason to expect to be true, much less know to be true; and it is perjury to swear to anything not known to be true; therefore, every man taking the obligations to forever conceal lodge secrets commits perjury.

If these lodge men had not perjured themselves, the writer, with others now in possession of those secrets, would know nothing about them. Those lodge men, mind you, are not swearing merely to keep these secrets to the best of their ability and knowledge, but swear positively to forever conceal them. Our courts of justice would construe such swearing, if legal, perjury.

If failing to conceal these secrets is not perjury, then those forty men who failed to kill the Apostle Paul, before they would eat or drink, did not commit perjury, although they had bound themselves under a great oath to kill him. The Morgan tragedy resulted in such signal failure to conceal Masonic secrets and proved so disastrous to the order in general that the fraternity was forced to change its tactics somewhat, without changing, however, its obligations or any of its ancient landmarks.

The more mild and human interpretation of this obligation is now generally given, which leads to the murder of a man's character instead of his person. To illustrate. We will suppose a lodge is established in our midst, consisting of one hundred members, and that ninety-nine of them remain faithful and true to their obligations; but one becomes dissatisfied and renounces his allegiance to the lodge, and that he proceeds to reveal the secrets entrusted to him, and in doing so his word and testimony is confronted by the ninety-nine adhering members, who by virtue of their obligations to lie if need be to screen the institutions from exposure, unite in denouncing the man revealing the said secrets as a liar, a perjurer, a base villain, a man who cannot be trusted or his word taken for anything. Thus the character of the innocent is murdered and the truth buried in oblivion by a great preponderance of witnesses whose obligations hold them to bear false witness against their neighbor as the less of two great evils. The renouncing member may have been led to sever his lodge connections from the purest of motives. He may have been led to take this step by hearing the great Boston lecturer, Joseph Cook, in his speech on Disloyal Oaths, or listening to a sermon on Secret Societies by Rev. B. Carradine, of St. Louis, Mo., or to the Scripture denunciations of the lodge as given by D. L. Moody. If so, he might have been convinced that his eternal interest, the salvation of his soul, depended upon his action in denouncing and exposing the lodge. Yet all the members remaining loyal to their lodge obligations must deny the right of repentance and confession of sin, an inherent right in every man and woman of which no power on earth should assume to destroy. Freemasons frequently boast that their secrets cannot be revealed. Cannot be revealed, they say, because the character of the man attempting to do so is so base that he cannot tell the truth, and therefore cannot reveal the secrets. When will men get their eyes open again to see the great iniquity of the lodge as our fathers saw it from those of 1826 to 1840. May the Lord open the eyes and hearts of the honest reader.

DEFINING HIS POSITION.

Sometimes a person will insult me by asking me which side of the temperance or prohibition question I am on! Which side am I on? Well, you go to the drunkards and thieves, and burglars and gamblers, saloon-keepers and the makers of the accursed stuff, and find out which side they are on, and then put me down on the other side. As you go down to that wretched hovel, where that poor woman, worse than widowed, sits with her worse than orphaned babe at her breast, her heart's blood dripping away drop by drop, put your ear down close to her heart, and hear which side she is on, and then put me down on her side. Why is it that these accursed saloons exist in Elgin to-day? Because men worship the god that favors hades. Suppose a man should come here to-day and take one of your fairest and brightest children, and by making a few passes over it convert it into an idiot, the whole community would be after him. Millions of dollars would not induce you to license him to do such a thing if he could do it in ten minutes, and it is only a question of five years, or possibly ten or twenty, and you will allow him to do that very thing and for only a paltry few hundred dollars.

I will say one thing more: If I have ever, since the day I gave my heart to God, by voice, or vote, or influence withheld, given the weight of one finger in support of the accursed traffic, I should deserve to have my son fill a drunkard's grave or to give my daughter into the foul embrace of one of the loathsome products of the business. Now, if any one does not understand this, let him now rise up and say so.—B. Fay Mills, at Elgin, Ill.

SAMUEL C. POMEROY.

Samuel Clark Pomeroy was born in Southampton, Mass., on Jan. 3, 1816, where his boyhood was spent. He received his education at Amherst, and after graduation he removed to New York, where he remained but a short time. After visiting a number of eastern cities he finally returned to his native city and settled there, becoming a power in local politics. He held various local offices and in 1852 was elected to a seat in the Massachusetts Legislature. At this time he was the financial agent of the New England Emigrant Aid Association, and in 1854, when his term in the Legislature had expired, he led a colony of emigrants into Kansas and settled at Lawrence, being the first to locate in that Territory. He was instrumental in forming the territorial government and took a leading part in the free State convention which met at Lawrence in 1859, the same year in which he was elected mayor of Atchison, whither he had moved some time previous. He was president of the relief committee during the famine in 1860–61. He was elected to the United States Senate in 1861 on the Republican ticket and was re-elected in 1867, but after he had been nominated for a third term charges of bribery suddenly came to light and were brought before the Legislature with the result that he was defeated. A committee was then appointed by the Legislature, who reported the case to the United States Senate, from which a majority report declared the charges not sustained. From this the matter was carried into the Kansas courts and subjected to a thorough investigation, but no evidence could be found to secure his conviction. Mr. Pomeroy was a powerful speaker, a subtle and skillful debater, and the author of many speeches and political pamphlets.

MR. POMEROY VINDICATED.

On page 4 of the issue of the Christian Cynosure for August 7, 1884, at which time he was the presidential candidate of the National Christian Association, appeared a full vindication of Mr. Pomeroy under the charges of bribery referred to in the foregoing sketch. The true story of the affair is as follows, and shows the vindictiveness and unscrupulousness with which the lodge covertly attacked him because of his opposition to secret societies:

In January, 1873, the Kansas Legislature, met at Topeka, was engaged in the important business of electing a Senator for the term beginning March 4 of that year. Hon. Samuel C. Pomeroy, a pioneer of the State, to whom Kansas was indebted more than to any other man, had served for two terms, and was a candidate for re-election. In May, 1869, Mr. Pomeroy being in Chicago on business, was asked to attend and speak at the National Anti-masonic Convention then being held in Lower Farwell Hall. Although the daily press was teeming with abusive and insulting reports of that meeting, Mr. Pomeroy bravely accepted the invitation, and spoke. The lodge marked him from that hour, and let slip no opportunity for revenge. Within two weeks the Leavenworth Herald declared that in that speech Pomeroy had signed his political death-warrant. He was soon after burned in effigy, and all his life-long labors as an Abolitionist, and his sacrifices for Kansas in her early struggles, were forgotten.

A large majority of the Legislature was in favor of returning Mr. Pomeroy to the Senate, and for days before the election, as said the St. Louis Republican at the time, "It became evident that there was but one possible method of beating Pomeroy, and that was to set a trap for him."

A number of Freemasons concocted a diabolical plot to accuse him of bribery just as the vote was to be taken, and amid the confusion to resist an adjournment of the Legislature and force an immediate vote.

The Legislature met January 29, and was about to proceed to ballot, when A. M. York, of Montgomery county, arose and was granted the floor on a question of privilege. He drew from his pocket a package of bank notes, and asked the Speaker to count them. With pale face and glittering eye and demon heart, York then told his story, that he had received the $7,000 from Pomeroy, in the latter's room at the Tefft House, in payment for his vote, asking that the money be used to defray the prosecution of S. C. Pomeroy for bribery and corruption, and swearing by the "Almighty Ruler of the universe" that "every word I have spoken is God's truth." In the excitement of the hour the plot succeeded, and Pomeroy was beaten in the forced vote.

The investigation of the charge of bribery by the Legislature, reported March 6, failed to prove anything against Mr. Pomeroy, who hastened to Washington and asked for a Senate committee of inquiry, to be largely composed of his political opponents, that there might be the severest scrutiny. On the report of that committee he was acquitted. The investigations brought out these facts:

1. That the four principal conspirators, A. M. York; B. F. Simpson, State Attorney-General; J. C. Horton, agent of the Kansas Pacific railroad, and W. A. Johnson, were Freemasons, and that their whole work was done under cover of Masonic signs.

2. That Mr. Pomeroy had some time before promised to assist a friend, Mr. Page, in starting a bank in Independence, Kansas. The money was expected by express, but as it was delayed, Page could not wait at Topeka, but arranged to send it by A. M. York, a member of the State Senate. York called and got the money, paid it over to Page after the conspirators had accomplished their hellish plot, and in due time Page returned it to Mr. Pomeroy.

These facts were public for years following, and most of them appeared in the Cynosure. It also transpired that an interview between York and Mr. Pomeroy was obtained only after considerable effort, the lodge conspirators finally getting a man from Kansas City, in whom they believed Mr. Pomeroy had confidence, to open the way for their nefarious scheme.

On June 12, 1873 the full particulars of all this devilish villainy were brought to light in the columns of the Topeka American. It was then known that the $7,000 flourished by York in the faces of the Legislature had not yet been called for, and for more than a year afterward it was still reported to be in the hands of the State Treasurer of Kansas. In answer to the question, who furnished York that money, so that he could give color to the lie which he swore before God was the truth, that Mr. Pomeroy had bribed him for that amount, Mr. Pomeroy himself said, subsequently: "It would now seem that the Kansas Pacific furnished the $7,000 which York flourished before the Legislature." (The road wanted aid to extend its lines, and had no reason to believe that Mr. Pomeroy was favorable to its policy.) Mr. Pomeroy always charged his defeat to the influence of Freemasonry—that the conspirators were Freemasons, and that everybody knew it.

A Mason also told President C. A. Blanchard that he knew of the conspiracy, knew that it was hatched in the lodge, and that he told Mr. Pomeroy not to permit an interview with York, for "if he did he was ruined."

JOHN MARSHALL, Chief Justice, in a Letter to Edward Everett, July 22, 1833, said of Freemasonry: "That the institution ought to be abandoned, as one capable of producing much evil, and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The great American public.—The last of summer.—A piece of religious superstition.—The Royal Ark, again.—Romanism at the City Hall.—Must Boston women do their work over?

In spite of all that Anglo-maniacs may say to the contrary, I believe it to be a rule—only proved by the occasional exception—that the average American crowd is quite as good-natured, polite and chivalrously attentive to women, aged and infirm people, as any other on the face of the globe. I was going to say more so, but remembered in time that we are such a composite race it is just as well not to make invidious comparisons. Perhaps the writer's lameness has rendered her more alive to the kindliness and helpful sympathy which such misfortunes always elicit, and which is surely not the least among the many ways in which adversity ministers to our higher nature, as Dr. Bushnell has showed us so admirably in his treatise on the "Moral Uses of Dark Things." Lodge benevolence, as everybody knows, has no gospel for the lame and halt; and it is therefore with the greatest pleasure that I testify from my own experience to all who belong to that class that they do not need to wear a Masonic pin, or the three links of an I. O. O. F., to insure them when traveling all needed "protection and assistance."

The reign of the dog-days, hot, sweltering, "muggy," is at last over. And, by the way, though the old provincial word for fog, mug, has gone out of use, we still employ the adverb made from it, which is only another instance of the fact that in nine cases out of ten the so-called provincialisms of New England were the provincialisms of Old England, farther back than most of us can count our family pedigree. How could we ever say good-bye to summer if her end was like her beginning? But when her June roses are all withered, and her bird-songs hushed; when the oxygen is all out of the atmosphere, and the stiffest collars and cuffs refuse to keep their integrity, then we are ready to sing:

"Hey! for the days of the frosty white mornings,
The blaze on the hearth-stone that gladdens our eyes,
When we hear in the chimney the autumn wind's warning,
Of rain-muffled landscapes and fog-hidden skies."

And so it would be much harder to go out of life if the order of things was reversed and June came last; if Providence did not so graciously cut one by one the flowery ties which bind us to existence, and take our singing birds to heaven, as if on purpose to make the farewell easy to say.

The day of the festive mosquito is also over, and possibly some of the Cynosure readers who have suffered from his assaults will enjoy the speech of a certain little maiden, as she contemplated her chubby arms, red with the marks of their unwelcome attentions: "I 'sposes Dod made 'skeeters just as he did everyfing else," she remarked tearfully—for she is a very orthodox little damsel;—"but, mamma, what I don't understand is why he made so many. When Dod was making 'em why couldn't he have made only two or free?"

Religious superstition is not entirely a thing of the past, but it seems curious in this age of the world to read of such a display of it by a Protestant sect as recently occurred in Boston. The Jews of this city, who form, especially at the South End, a numerous and well-to-do portion of its population, recently bought the church of the Messiah, an Episcopal place of worship, on Florence street, but have now broken their bargain (though they forfeit a considerable sum by so doing), disgusted by an act of superstitious folly and bigotry on the part of the former owners. This was no less than their performing the ceremony of de-consecration—whatever that is—which the Jews very naturally look upon as a gratuitous insult. And now the story comes from Evanston, Ill., that a Methodist congregation, whose pastor is a Boston man, bought an Episcopal church in that place, and when they moved into it omitted the dedicatory services, thinking that the former dedication was enough. Their feelings, on learning that this same ceremony of de-consecration had been gone through with before the building was given up to their occupancy, may be imagined. It would be interesting to know just how the thing is done. An individual can be excommunicated, if a layman, and, if he is a minister, degraded from his pulpit functions; but when it comes to inanimate matter—wood, brick and stone—the common, secular mind does not find it so easy to grasp the idea. Some say that it consists in a reversion of the consecration ceremonies; but if there is any process by which the sacred character of a church-building could be destroyed, I should think that to turn it into a bazaar, a stage for mimic theatricals, or a place to eat and drink in, was as easy and expeditious a way as any. It is to be hoped that Bishop Brooks does not lend his sanction to this antiquated piece of ecclesiasticism.

One of the saddest things in connection with the frequent arrests of youthful criminals is to read, as we so frequently do, that "they come of respectable families." What kind of home influence can surround the boys who thus go astray, bringing shame on their parents and all who belong to them? Is it not possible that the lodge craze has its share, among other causes, in bringing about this result? Twenty years ago its evil effects on the home was chiefly seen in taking the husband and father from his family, but the legion of orders eligible to women now take the wife and mother as well. It may be observed, in this connection, that the Malden Lodge of the Royal Ark, which has figured so extensively in the papers of late, has at last disbanded, after a stormy meeting in which, to quote the reporter's account, "sharp biting, and personal criticisms were made, and stinging repartees given." A policeman was in attendance, though his services did not prove to be needed. Eight persistent ones, however, refused to disband, intending to form a new lodge and keep on; and the tug of war at this last and final meeting was to prevent the aforesaid members from getting the money still in the treasury. It was finally voted, after paying all bills, that it be given to the home for aged people. And so the Royal Ark, in Malden at least, has gone to pieces, and its quondam members, sad-faced and sad-hearted, have learned that to say two and two make five will never make it anything else than four.

The work of "purging" the City Hall when Hart came in, two years ago, was evidently not so efficient as old Oliver Cromwell would have made it. Democratic Mayor Matthews has all the leaning towards Irish Romanists, characteristic of his party, and they seem to have the pick of all the salaried offices fully as much as under O'Brien. The Carney Hospital, to which $10,000 of the State funds has been appropriated, is a shining example of what Rome can do for the bodies of men: the bedding and food provided being so poor, and the patients so disgracefully neglected, that an Italian, sick in one of the wards, actually asked to be taken back to all the discomfort of his crowded tenement-room rather than stay there! The noble women of Boston will have to rally once more and do their work over again. But isn't it a little discouraging, to say the least? Woman without the ballot can never bring in any permanent political reforms, for she has no power to appoint officials who will make them so. She has no guarantee that the next election will not sweep in like a tidal wave and destroy all she has labored under such disabilities and disadvantages to accomplish, leaving her in the predicament of Mrs. Partington with her broom.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 2, 1891.

A most notable body of men left here, this morning, as guests of the United States government, on a special train which will travel more than 6,000 miles before the party finishes its journey. They are the members of the International Congress of Geologists, which has just finished a week's session in this city, and they are going to make a geological inspection of a score of our States and Territories, including the famous Yellowstone National Park. The program for the excursion is twenty-five days long. Although geology is one of the youngest of what may be called the standard sciences, it is already recognized as one of the most useful, and this government spends a large sum of money every year for the maintenance of the U. S. Geological Survey, which is one of the most important bureaus under the Interior Department. All of the foreign geologists who attended the Congress carried away collections of specimens of the rocks along the shores of the Potomac river.

Prof. Henry C. Spencer, one of the five brothers who originated the now universally known Spencerian style of penmanship, died here very suddenly of congestive chills this week. He had been at the head of the Spencerian Business College in Washington ever since it was established.

Our city pastors are beginning to return from their summer vacations, and the members of their congregations who have been out of the city are also returning very rapidly; and soon the conspicuous vacant seats will be again filled with familiar faces.

Almost a quorum of the Cabinet have been in Washington this week, but none of them will stay here long. Secretary Proctor is going on an inspection tour of the Western military posts, which is the last he will make, as he is to leave the Cabinet for the Senate soon; Secretary Rusk only stopped over one day, and he is now the guest of President Harrison at Cape May Point; Secretary Foster is going on a short ocean cruise. Secretary Tracy and Postmaster-General Wanamaker will probably remain here a few days. The date of the President's return is as yet uncertain.

Rev. Dr. George H. Wells, of Montreal, Canada, who made such a powerful impression upon those who attended the recent convention of the National Christian Endeavor Union at Minneapolis, and who has been earning golden opinions while temporarily filling the pulpit of the Church of the Covenant in this city, delivered a short but powerful address on "Example" to an overflowing audience Sunday afternoon in the Y. M. C. A. Hall. He began by graphically sketching the life of Christ, and calling particular attention to the erroneous idea of many people, particularly the young, in allowing themselves to think of the Divine Master as being an old man during his earthly administrations; one whose example was not applicable to the young. "How many people," said the speaker, "remember that Christ was but thirty-three years old at his crucifixion?" He then, in a few well-chosen words, impressed upon his hearers that they could find no better example to live by than the life of Christ as recorded by his chosen apostles. He then devoted himself to showing the force of example in an organization of young men, and the great and lasting results which good examples always leave behind them. He closed with an illustration of his argument, telling of a visit he once made to the great Gobelin tapestry manufactory; he said he had immediately solved the secret of the business when he discovered that unskilled as were the workmen in other things, they owed their leadership in the weaver's art to the fact that they followed in the strictest manner the pattern set before them. It was not the loom they were compelled to watch, but the model. 1. "And so young men must lose sight of their own graces and defects, do away with all conceit and self-consciousness, and look to the model of a perfect man, their Redeemer." *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE WASHINGTON AGENT.

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 3, 1891.

The anti-secrecy friends of Boston and vicinity who do not attend the Monday evening meetings held in Suite 1, Hotel Howland, No. 218 Columbus Ave., do not know how much they miss. Remember these meetings are held every Monday evening, at 7:30, and all are welcome. If you have a friend who is uninformed regarding the lodges, bring him or her with you. The utmost freedom to ask questions or make remarks is given. Not a few have been convinced of the truth at these meetings who will stand for the right in the present conflict. Last Monday's meeting was not so largely attended as some, but it was both pleasant and profitable for those present.

Sabbath afternoon I attended the meeting held in Tremont Temple for the purpose of arousing the people to stem the tide of Romanism which threatens the destruction of everything dear to all true American hearts. These meetings are held each week, and are increasing in interest and attendance. Notwithstanding the rain, there were not less than 2,000 people assembled. Dr. McArthur, of New York, was the speaker of the occasion. His address was clear and forcible. The enthusiasm felt was manifested by frequent applause. Were I to criticise, it would be the Doctor's allusion to President Harrison. He said that the Pope was anxious to send a representative to Washington to receive honor of the President; but, said he, while President Harrison is in the chair no such representative will be sent. He then referred to the President as a man of smooth words but of a lion-heart. Surely the Doctor could not have seen his lion-hearted man as he sat at the feet of Cardinal Gibbons in the Catholic Congress, held in Baltimore, or as he attended the dedication of the large Jesuit College in his own city. His dining with Catholic cardinals and prelates must have escaped the Doctor's notice.

I have heard it said, by those who have been courting, that Love's eyes are blind. Bro. Mathew's tribute to Mr. Bradbury, the conductor of these meetings, as published in the Cynosure, had been brought to the Doctor's notice, and in speaking of the papers advocating the anti-Catholic movement, ours received honorable mention.

Those who attended the Christian workers' camp meeting, held at Hebronville, report a grand time. There were several conversions. All Christians present received a baptism of the Holy Spirit for service. Several will go as missionaries. Nearly $800 was raised for missionary work. The lodge received its share of condemnation. It was regarded by those who spoke of it as one of the great evils to be overcome. May God hasten the day when darkness will be banished by the brightness of his appearing!

In less than two days I secured fourteen subscriptions to the Cynosure at Worcester and Quinsigamond, Mass. Our Swedish friends there are coming up to our help grandly. A protracted meeting was being held in the Methodist church, and several conversions were reported. The Congregational church, of which Rev. Mr. Ohlson is pastor, has been greatly blessed in the ingathering of souls during the past year.

While in Worcester, I met Rev. Mr. Nelson, of the Swedish Congregational church, Campello, Mass. He has invited me to address his people next Sabbath.

I shall (D. V.) be in Washington again by the time this report is published. Any who may know themselves indebted to me will greatly favor me by writing without special notice. All indications favor a grand work in New England this fall and winter. Let us all pray for the coming annual meeting in December, and as far as possible arrange to be present. The N. E. agent hopes to report time and place soon.

Yours for victory, W. B. Stoddard.

FROM THE WESTERN AGENT.

Clarinda, Iowa, Sept. 1, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—The Gospel anti-lodge sermon I preached at Richland stirred the hearts of those who practice the false worships of the lodge. The Odd-fellows, particularly, were deeply agitated. The fact that a former Noble Grand, who who was a member of the Christian church, did not appoint a chaplain, and did not have prayers because, as he said, it is contrary to the constitution and ritual of Odd-fellowship to pray in the name of Jesus Christ in the lodge, was referred to by me in my discourse. This Noble Grand said he believed it was an insult to God and an offence against him to assume to approach him in prayer in any other way than through the mediation of our Lord Jesus Christ. To belong to the lodge, which must be a synagogue of Satan, if Odd-fellowship authorizes a Christless and, therefore, a false worship, is so manifestly inconsist ent and wicked, in those who profess loyalty to Christ and are members of his church, that it is no wonder they squirm when the un-Christian character of Odd-fellowship is exposed.

After leaving Richland, I visited Washington, and then came to Pleasant Plain, where the Friends were holding their quarterly meeting.

Advanced growth was taken by this quarterly meeting against the lodge. The discipline of the Iowa Yearly Meeting of the Friends' church forbids receiving Freemasons to membership in their churches. A motion was made to petition the Yearly Meeting to so amend their discipline as also to exclude Odd-fellowship from their churches. This motion was amended so as to include all secret societies, and in this form was adopted by the quarterly meeting. By this action this quarterly meeting has certainly earned the appellation, given them by some, of the "Progressive Friends."

From Pleasant Plain I went to Ainsworth, where I found a pleasant home in the family of Bro. Rowan, and spent my time in laboring from house to house.

I then went to Birmingham in Van Buren county, long the home of that eminent Christian reformer, Dr. J. N. Norris, lately deceased. My heart was saddened, as I approached the place, to think that I should see his genial face no more during my earth-life. I visited and took supper with Bro. Enlow, the enterprising editor and publisher of the Birmingham Free Press, and then went to the camp ground where my friend, Rev. Mr. Hall, district chairman of the F. M. church, was holding a camp meeting. I was hospitably entertained, and, by appointment of the chairman, preached to a vast congregation on Sabbath evening. Bro. Hall followed with an exhortation, and some were won to Christ that night. In that discourse I called attention to the fact that Christ said: "If a man love me, he will keep my words." I also reminded them of the command not to be yoked with unbelievers, as they must be if they joined the lodges, and assured them that it is vain to profess love to Christ while refusing to obey the Word of God, which requires a total renunciation of lodge covenants, so not to touch the unclean thing. Lawful covenants are to be religiously observed; but lawful covenants bind to truth—to right—to duty, and to God. But any effort to bind ourselves to that which is false, and wrong, and wicked, is "a covenant with death and an agreement with hell," which should be repudiated at once and forever.

From Birmingham I came to Albia, and called upon my friend, Rev. Mr. Acheson, pastor of the Associate Presbyterian church of Hickory Grove.

From Albia I went into the country, laboring from house to house. I called upon my old friend, Henry Elder, one of Rev. Mr. Acheson's parishioners, who harnessed his team and conveyed me on my way.

After two days spent in the country, I returned to Albia, and took the train for Beaconsfield, in Ringgold county, where Elder Rathbun was so shamefully mobbed, at Kellerton, years ago. Here Rev. Mr. Richards, of the W. M. church, was holding a quarterly meeting, assisted by Rev. Mr. Platt, of Des Moines. By request, I preached on Sabbath evening, and again on Monday night, showing in the latter discourse the anti-Christian character of the lodge.

Bro. Richardson is aroused, and would work up a convention to be held at Mount Ayer, the county-seat of Ringgold county, to discuss the lodge question, if it were not for the fact that he is about to remove to another field of labor.

I understand that the annual meeting of the Iowa C. A. will be held at Crawfordsville this year; but I have not yet seen the official announcement of the fact.

As the real nature of the lodge system is manifested, true believers in Jesus Christ will shun it; and those who have been deceived and led to yoke themselves with unbelievers in the lodges, will come out, as God has commanded. The day hastens when the whole world will be filled with the glory of God; but before that day comes false worships, as organized in the lodges, moguls, and idol temples of the world, must be rooted up. Amen—even so; come, Lord Jesus!

CORRESPONDENCE.

SECRET ORDER INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Oberlin, Ohio, August 29, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—One would suppose that men would lose confidence in machines for perpetual motion, and in attempts to lift themselves over fences by tugging at the straps of their boots. Just about as reasonable are the schemes for securing a vast increase of capital by committing it to an irresponsible secret fraternity. Such schemes are exceedingly common in the South, and ignorant Negroes are the principal victims. New Hampshire seems to be the only State that secures legislative protection. Strange to say, there are those in that State who so enjoy being cheated that they are ready to revolt at any interference with the scoundrels who thrive at their expense. When will the people learn that secrecy is the refuge of iniquity, and that it is presumptive evidence against any system, that it seeks concealment and promises extraordinary favors? The following, from the Oberlin News, shows how they do things in New Hampshire.

H. H. Hinman.

The report of Commissioner Linehan of New Hampshire ought to be interesting reading to those people who have any notion of investing their hard-earned cash in that bourne from which no dividends return, the One Year Mutual Insurance Society. He says:

"One of the secrets of the craze to enter the endowment orders is the hope of realizing the sum stated for the amount invested. Inducements of this kind were, as the rule, the most potent argument, for among the unthinking the prospect of receiving in a year the sum of one hundred dollars for thirty, forty, or fifty, or $1,000 in ten years from an investment of $268, was too tempting a bait to pass by unheeded, especially when the names of gentlemen of prominence were found on the official roster of the order.

"The connection of such men with associations of this kind is one of the mysteries of the endowment fever, and when the blood cools in the veins of the men and women who purchased certificates on the weight of the titles of Col. Gunstock Martial, Hon. Talkwell Smoothman, and Hon. Cyclone Boreas, supreme magnates of the Sublime Order of the Shifting Sands, it would not be any wonder if indignation meetings of another order would be held, where the people would express, without the aid of a brass band, their opinions of the men, on the strength of whose names they allowed themselves to be so cruelly fleeced. Instead of denouncing the enactment formed for their protection and the official whose duty it was to enforce it, it would be more to their interest pecuniarily to look up another law, enacted for the benefit of the unwary—the statute against the collection of money under false pretenses—and bring the question before the proper tribunal, have it determined as to whether or not supreme collectors could with impunity take money from hard-working men and women on the pretense that they will receive two or three dollars in return for the investment of one."

It certainly must have been a spectacle for gods and men to see the victims of the New Hampshire insurance swindlers parading the streets with a brass band, with the wolves in sheep's clothing at their head, denouncing the unrighteous law which kept them from being swindled to their hearts' content.

OUR NATION AND CIVIL LIBERTY.

Chicago, August 24, 1891.

Editor Cynosure:—Are we indebted to the "Mayflower" Puritans, or to the Baltimore Romanists, for our nation and civil liberty?

Ask the Milwaukee gathering of Roman Catholics under Cardinal Gibbons, last week, and the answer is unanimous that but for the Catholics of Maryland this free country would not have been in existence, nor freedom for every man's conscience or religion been secured in it. But ask Rev. Dr. Goodwin, of Chicago, what he said, as the chosen mouthpiece of the world-wide gathering of Congregationalists in the city of London, and you find in that great sermon the story is all in favor of the "Mayflower" Puritans, and their glorious spirit of loyalty to conscience and to God—the God who is reconciling the world to himself by Christ, whose kingdom is not of this world—and to God in providence, whose government by law is justice between man and man, and, while a protection to well-doers, is the dread of evil-doers.

Our citizens generally know on which side their bread is buttered, but are too careless of it, because so abundant, and imagine that no such thing as hunger for political liberties can ever hereafter be experienced in their beloved and favored country.

But was it not so before our civil war? Did ten men in ten thousand, or even in a hundred thousand, ever imagine such a war possible before the Sumter gun alarmed our people?—and even then our Secretary of State thought the trouble would be over in three months! But, alas, for the delusion of such hopes, and alas, also, for the sad realities to be experienced!—and why? Simply, because our self-satisfied, hoodwinked

Christian citizens had turned a deaf ear to the warnings of the "despised fools," as Abolitionists were called, and popular mobs, South and North, sported themselves with shooting the Lovejoys and destroying their presses (for example), three times destroying that of our now highly esteemed and honored late editor, ex-President J. Blanchard. It is such men as these, whose souls, like that of the martyred John Brown, marched along with the Northern armies, and subdued the rebels and purified our national stars and stripes from their disgraceful protection for three-fourths of a century of that slavery which had to be avenged by the nation's blood. But —Oh yes! the South only wanted their rights! And got them (over the left), at last by the abolition of Mason and Dixon's line, and freedom for all men, henceforth, in our country, North and South, white and colored, whether born on our soil, or brought from Europe or Asia, Africa, or the islands of the sea.

But with such a costly experience, shall our people again be caught napping, and allow the delusion to prevail that the priests of Rome (and, sad to say, some other "divisions" of Christendom, like the owners of slaves before the war) can infringe upon, yea, violate, the root principles of our civil government by their virtual establishment of the church and state connexion principle, in teaching their respective religious tenets in the public schools, where they can command a majority, and where they cannot then have their own separate schools, and share in the school taxes for their support?

The Indian school fund case is one which ought to have startled the whole nation, as the cry of "fire, fire," would any community. But that has been going on for years, until now the wrong-doers claim their hundreds of thousands, instead of the thousands at first granted by the time-serving politicians of both parties, who were in need of votes and keep them in Washington;—whence Uncle Sam's warship was sent by the Democrats to welcome the first popish Cardinal, and where, at a celebration, the Roman Catholics were flattered by the report all over the country that the Pope was first on the list of toasts and our present Republican President's name followed under him. This is just how they believe that all the heads of civil governments and His Holiness ought to be—the Pope on top, and ruler of the swords of steel all over the world.

Americans, are you willing to surrender your country and its institutions to the control of the Pope and his priests? or will you prove to mankind and posterity that whilst your government protects conscience and religious convictions in all your citizens, it will not allow its taxes to be used for the support of any denomination? Why? Because, under God in providence, civil government is, and should be, a terror to evil doers and a protection to every one who tries to do justly to his neighbors; but under "God-in-Christ," our dispensation has no Moses nor Sinai, for the law was given by Moses to the natural seed of Abraham, "but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ," whose kingdom, since the day of Pentecost, "is not of this world," and whose army banners signify death, burial and resurrection.

PERSECUTION FOLLOWS THE TRUTH.

BIG SPRINGS, Kan., August, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have always been a great friend to all reforms. But to note the sad change made in this community alone, during the past two years, caused by "Liberal" rule, makes me feel more than ever like working in the Reform cause. If it had been my enemy who opposed me and the cause that I so dearly love, I could have stood before him; but it was my friends. Like the old Psalmist David's complaint, it was those who used to walk with me to the house of the Lord, holding sweet communion together, who lifted up their heels against me, simply because I will not bow the knee to Baal. To see the demoralization of the community on account of a few who have deserted their first love, and are now seeking the world's favor and applause, is enough to make the angels droop their wings and weep. I hate a saloon worse than I do a panther. You can count on me as a life-long subscriber to your ever welcome paper. I would feel at a loss if I were deprived of a single number.

PITH AND POINT.

"The due-guard of the Entered Apprentice shows that he considers himself as possessing a right to the disposal of his own life."—D. B.

"Men who declare that Freemasonry is not fully disclosed will affirm anything. Men who solemnly aver that they are Masons and also solemnly deny the disclosures of Masonry now before the public, are not careful of their veracity. They will say anything to suit their purposes."—Infidelity Unmasked.

"Masonry is a system of deception; falsehood is the breath of its nostrils."—Dyer Burgess.

"Conspiracy and treason draw their chief strength from a thousand secret channels, and effect their aim by bringing the energies of all, unexpectedly, to burst upon a single point."—Anti-masonic Review.

"Of all the great associations of the present day, Freemasonry is peculiar and extraordinary. It claims, with the others, to be benevolent in its designs, while it hides itself like treason. It professes to meliorate the condition of man, not by supporting teachers, or by rewarding agriculture, or by any other single operation, but altogether in a general way. While other benevolent societies uniformly agree to strengthen themselves in public esteem by the fullest display of their proceedings, this alone strengthens itself in secrecy; while the others have invariably a single benevolent object in view, which they carefully proclaim, this alone carefully wraps itself up in mystery, folds its precise object in thick darkness, and . . . . replies with manifest importance, 'I am a secret.' "—Ibid.

"After an attentive perusal of the views of Washington, given in his latter days, with respect to Masonry, it is difficult to conceive how any fair or candid mind, if liberally educated, could hold him up to the admiration of young men as a distinguished Mason. It is as if one should extol another for being a great churchman when he had not been in church but two or three times in thirty years; or it is like the course of the Southern politician who used to refer to Abraham, of sublime faith, as a distinguished slave-holder."—GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

"All oaths must be lawful, allowed by the common law, or some statute; if they are administered by persons in a private capacity, or not duly authorized, they are coram non judice, and void, and those administering them are guilty of a high contempt for doing it without warrant of law, and are punishable by fine and imprisonment."—SIR EDWARD COKE.

"Not only are secret societies dangerous, but all societies whose effect is mysterious; the whole history of man is a proof of this position; in no age or country has there ever appeared a mysterious association which did not, in time, become a public nuisance."—PROFESSOR ROBINSON.

"You can't imagine what respect and curiosity my first (Masonic) degree has raised; and, which is wonderful, a famous Protestant divine, who is now of the order, is persuaded that the religion contained in it is the true source of Christianity. Oh, man! man! to what mayest thou not be persuaded? Who would imagine that I was to be the founder of a new religion?"—WIESHAUPT, an Infidel.

"The horrible and sanguinary oaths, the daggers, death-heads, cross-bones, the imaginary combats with the murderers of Hiram, and many other gloomy ceremonies, have a tendency to harden the heart; to remove its natural disgust at deeds of horror, and pave the way for those shocking barbarities which made the name of Frenchman abhorred all over Europe."—LEFRANC.

"Irreligion and unqualified liberty and equality are the genuine and original secrets of Freemasonry, and the ultimatum of a regular progress through all its degrees."—ABBE BARRUEL.

"Freemasonry pretends to anything, good or bad, and is believed to be only Deism. But she has great claims to be considered as having taken the next step; it is a wonder if she stops short of Atheism. She pretends to be a great friend to the Deity, to the Unity, and to the God of the patriarchs—that is certain. She mocks at the patriarchs, the servants of God; at the revelation, which, in the midst of a world sunk in idolatry, singly sustained the doctrine of the Unity against every foe; and her priests do not believe in the God who was born, and died, and rose again, that is certain, although the devils believe and tremble."—Review of Town's Speculative Masonry.

LITERATURE.

THE LAST PAGES OF AN OFFICER'S DIARY. 32 pages. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Co.

We have read this pamphlet with interest, both on account of its happy off-hand style, and the pointed manner in which it relates the conversion of a worldly-minded sinner, when he found that he had but a month to live. The case might be an every-day one in any one of our great cities, and we doubt not that this officer's blessed experience may help many another sinner to find Christ and heaven, simply as he did—by seeking the Saviour in earnestness. Price 25 cents.

The September issue of the Cosmopolitan Magazine is a "woman's number" so far as the authorship of its articles is concerned, but the general interest of the periodical is sustained by the variety and timeliness of the topics treated. Much interest centers about the new story by Amelie Rives, which was begun in the August number. The second part appears in the September number and the story will close in the following issue. The opening article, on Edouard Detaille, is by Lady Dilke, and is profusely and beautifully illustrated with reproductions of the famous artist's most noteworthy paintings. A Forgotten City, by Eleanor Lewis, is a romantic description of the ruins of Soluntum, the Sicilian Pompeii, embellished with photographs. Malmaison in the Market, by Mary Bacon Ford, describes the waning fortunes of the house celebrated for the residence there of the ill-fated Empress Josephine. Julia Hayes Percy describes the Ladies' New York Club in an entertaining article to which Harry Fenn has contributed illustrations. Elizabeth Bisland writes of Tattersall's, the great London horse market, and the family who have given it name and fame. Molly Elliott Seawell contributes the Romance of Count Konigsmark, the titled adventurer for whom the wife of George I. of England spent thirty years in prison; and the Countess Ella Norraikow writes of Woman's Share in Russian Nihilism, her article being illustrated with portraits of many fair conspirators. There are besides papers on the Evolution of the Society Journal, by Mrs. Roger A. Pryor; Society Women as authors, by Anna Vernon Dorsey; a pretty story, Il Mandolinista, by Daisy O'Brien, and verses by Katherine Grosjean, Mrs. Charles B. Foote, and Susan Hartley Swett, all the important articles being liberally illustrated. We furnish new subscribers with the Cosmopolitan and the Cynosure, together, for $4.80 per annum.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine for September has for its frontispiece a brilliant group of Late Show Tulips—Rose, Violet and Bizarre, and the following seasonable papers: Bulbs for House and Garden Culture; A Few Old Perennials; Valuable Currants; New Fruits; A Garden of Wild Flowers; A Handful of California Gold; The Wild Columbine; Flowers in Decoration; Inconstancy; Delphimums; Beauty of Castle Hill; Acclimating Plants; Persian Cyclamens: Augustine Guinnoisseau; Sugar Beet Fungus; The Carnation (concluded); Roses—Success and Failure; Calliopsis; Fruit Specimens; The Pecan; Pomological Society; Montbretias Hardy; Barbarous; Small Gladiolus Bulbs; Elephant's Ear; Landscape Gardening; The Great Vegetable Show; September Work; Bee Plants; Green Mountain, or Winchell; the Hybrid Canna; Nip and Tuck—a Story for Young People—continued; Editorial Miscellany. A good number. Published by James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

St. Nicholas for September is, like its preceding issues, a very attractive visitor, and one sure to be highly appreciated by the younger branches of the household. The Fortunes of Toby Trafford, by J. T. Trowbridge, Chan Ok, by J. O. Davidson, and the Swimming Hole Stories, by Walter S. Bigelow, are continued; and we have, besides, Lost in a Corn-field, by Kate M. Cleary; The Old Clock's Story, by Annie L. Hyde; Tee-Wahn Folk Lore, by Charles F. Lummis; Catching Terrapin, by Alfred Kappes; Two Lads of Block Island, by Sarah J. Prichard; The Isle of Skye, by Eleanor S. Thackera; A Prairie Home, by Maurice Thompson; The Sad History of Will o' the Wisp, by Marion C. Waterman; A Model Undertaker, by T. D. Witherspoon; How the Great Plan Worked, by Victor Mapes; Choosing a Boat, by F. W. Pangborn, and a variety of other piquant little rhymes, jingles and short stories, with pictures to match, and all designed to make little boys and girls love St. Nicholas for ever and ever. Published by the Century Company, New York City.

The demands of the Farmers' Alliance have been so thoroughly discussed within the last year that it is now time to take up each one of the demands and historically treat them and carefully analyze the same. The most exhaustive treatment of any one of the demands is the sub-treasury plan, which is treated in the June and July numbers of the Library of National Economist extras, published by the National Economist Publishing Co., Washington, D. C. It gives the origin of the plan, the causes for it, and a full and complete answer to all arguments urged against it. It proves the plan to be the only measure that will relieve the depressed agriculturalist; that it is not class legislation, and it is constitutional. These numbers should be in the hands of every member of the order, and every officer of the lodge should, by all means, be supplied with a copy. The publication of Library of National Economist extras has done much toward enlightening the people on the issues now before them. The Political Tickler will be another valuable publication. This book has been prepared with the greatest care and a very large outlay of money. It gives the people the vote on all important questions from 1860 up to date. It gives the names of the voters, the name of the party with which he affiliates, and the State he is from. This number is destined to be one of the greatest campaign documents put in print. It tells the story the truth is backing it up—no going behind the official records. The price of this monthly publication is $1.50 per year, and the first eight numbers. including the Political Tickler, can be had for $1 by addressing the Economist, Washington, D. C.—Adv.

OBITUARY.

STEDMAN GRAY was born in Gallia county, Ohio, Oct. 31, 1810, and died at Wolf Lake, Ind., Aug. 4, 1891, aged 80 years, 9 months and 3 days.

He was married to Sophronia Leach, March 31, 1829, and in 1830 emigrated to Fountain county, Ind. From there he removed to Noble county, Ind., in September, 1835. In 1851 he united with the regular Baptist church, and remained a consistent Christian until his earthwork was done. In September, 1853, he engaged in mercantile business at Wolf Lake, and was for many years one of the leading business men of that place. He removed to Wolf Lake in February, 1854, and in the following April occupied the premises where he died.

His wife died six years ago (June 23, 1885). Their married relation covered a period of 56 years, 3 months and 23 days; more than half a century. To them were born twelve children, six boys and six girls, five of whom survive him. Four of them were in attendance during the sickness of their aged father, and present at his death.

His funeral discourse was preached by Elder Blanchard, pastor of the Baptist church in Wolf Lake; after which the remains were followed by a large concourse of sympathizing friends to the village cemetery, where they peacefully rest, awaiting the resurrection of the just.

Mr. Gray had lived a long and useful life, and at his death enjoyed the confidence and respect of all who knew him.

The friend of the deceased to whom we are indebted for the foregoing sketch of his career, informs us that he was a constant reader of the Christian Cynosure, taking great delight in the advocacy of its teachings at all times and in all places. After reading each successive issue, he circulated it among his numerous friends and neighbors, with a warm solicitation for their subscriptions. He looked upon secret organizations as one of the greatest evils of the age, and the Cynosure was the last paper that he read before he exchanged life for immortality.

The death of such a man is a great loss to the world, the church and the cause of Christ.—EDITOR.

Those who believe that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure them are more liable to get well than those who don't.

If you happen to be one of those who don't believe, there's a matter of $500 to help your faith. It's for you if the makers of Dr. Sage's remedy can't cure you, no matter how bad or of how long standing your catarrh in the head may be.

The makers are the World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. Y. They are known to every newspaper publisher and every druggist in the land, and you can easily ascertain that their word's as good as their bond.

General Washington Opposed to SECRET SOCIETIES. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies." communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

ANTI-SECRECY TRACTS.

The following numbers are in stock, and can be had at the wholesale price of 20 cents per pound:

PARTAKERS IN OTHER MEN'S SINS.

It is a principle in law that men are held responsible not only for what they do, but for what they indorse. When a man suffers his name to go on his neighbor's note, it at once becomes his own note. He may not have received any consideration, but he has assumed an obligation from which he cannot escape. This is equally true of all moral obligations. We are not only responsible for our own conduct, but, so far as we consent to it, the conduct of others. Our environments, so far as we have consented to them, determine our character and make us partakers of the moral qualities of those with whom we keep company.

This is especially true of social and national sins. But a very small percentage of the people of the United States had any active participation in the sin of slavery. A much smaller proportion were at all concerned in the African slave-trade, yet the latter received the specific indorsement of the people, and for twenty years was sustained by our national Constitution. All the horrors of that unholy traffic were justly chargeable to us as a nation, and to each individual citizen who had not lifted up his voice against it. We afterwards declared it to be piracy, and made it punishable with the penalty of death; but in so doing we confessed our national participation in the most terrible of crimes. Slavery survived for more than half a century, all of which time it was consented to by the great mass of the American people, and was emphatically a national iniquity. There was no escaping a personal responsibility, excepting by earnest and consistent protest; and even this did not save us from the divine judgments that came down upon us, and were, literally, the visitations of God's mercy, poured out upon the just and the unjust.

The same principle applies to the iniquity of the liquor traffic. Relatively, very few have any interest in, or connection with, it, and yet it is our national sin. It goes on with the consent and by the authority of the great mass of the people. But a meagre minority have made any practical protest. The vast residue are morally responsible for all its abominations. Neutrality, indifference and silence are only different forms of indorsement, and all who are thus delinquent are as truly guilty as though these acts of wickedness were their own.

Perhaps no form of personal responsibility for others is so immediate as that which comes from the bestowment of Christian fellowship upon those who violate their obligations to Christ and to humanity. When we receive a brother in the name of the Lord, we indorse his character, and assume that his moral conduct is in harmony with the well-known and well-established principles of the Gospel of Christ. If he is a dram-seller, or a dram-drinker, we say by our act that these things are consistent with and a part of Christian conduct; that they are not sins to be repented of and put away, but such Christian duty as the blessing of God can rest upon, and are the fruit of, the Spirit of Christ.

The same is true of Freemasonry. He who receives a Freemason to his Christian fellowship, either does it ignorantly, or, if he knows, substantially, what Freemasonry is, he affirms that it is in harmony with the mind of Christ, and that it need not, and ought not, to be repented of as evil in the sight of God. Such persons, though they may never have assumed a Masonic obligation—though, from choice, they would forever keep out of this, or any other form of organized secretism—are as truly partakers in the sins of those whose character they thus indorse, as though they were open participants in the lodge. Nay, more, they bring upon themselves the condemnation of Him who has said: "Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil; that put light for darkness, and darkness for light."

There is another form of associate responsibility by which multitudes are made the unconscious but real partakers of the sins of others. Membership in the minor secret orders is an indorsement of membership in all others. The plea that some of the secret orders are treasonable, murderous and otherwise pernicious, while others have for their objects the promotion of human happiness by the use of means that, under the circumstances, are justifiable, is a distinction that cannot be sustained. It is doubtless true that secret orders differ very widely in their objects, and that some of them are seeking to accomplish what those outside of their membership would denounce as criminal; but it is none the less true that every secret society professes to have commendable ends. It is also true that every attempt to discriminate between different kinds of secret orders has resulted precisely as the similar attempt to discriminate between the different kinds of alcoholic drinks. There is a difference between a glass of lager beer and a glass of whisky, but the difference is not in kind, but in degree. A temperance pledge that discriminates between them is a rope of sand. The man who drinks the one consents to the use of the other. He may not be a drunkard, but he is a partaker in the sins of the drunkard and the liquor-dealers. Those religious organizations that have attempted to discriminate between the kinds of secret orders have found it impossible. The liberal wing of the United Brethren church, in their constitution of 1889, made a very fair declaration against un-Christian secret societies; but none of these societies admitted that they were un-Christian, and the result was, that in less than two years their testimony was entirely broken down, and all of the secret orders are received to their fellowship. The same is true of the Second Congregational church of Oberlin, Ohio, which, some years since, undertook to force out Freemasonry, while they let in the minor orders. But, long since, every barrier was broken down, and now nothing is considered but denominational standing. This is probably true of every religious denomination, and of every local church that has attempted to stand on middle ground on this question.

The only correct principle—the basis of all law—is, that the greater includes the less. The same law that says, "thou shalt not kill," forbids all violence and all hatred; for "he that hateth his brother is a murderer." It may seem quite innocent, and even patriotic, to belong to the G. A. R., but if any secret orders are forbidden by the letter or the spirit of the Gospel, then all minor and subordinate secret societies are also prohibited, and those who unite with them are partakers of other men's sins.

RELIGION OF DON'T KNOW.

Agnosticism is the religion of "I don't know." The word comes from the Greek Agnosco, and exactly expresses its meaning. And it is precisely the religion of "the god of this world." Every form of Christless worship "takes the worshiper's mind nowhere, and lands it upon nothing." A Rev. Dr. Meyer, an English minister of good repute, has been aiding in Mr. Moody's College for Christian Workers in Chicago. He has also preached in Dr. Goodwin's First Church. Mr. Joseph Cook's pamphlet on "Disloyal Secret Oaths," and other tracts, were sent him, and he was requested to give his opinion on secret societies, and replied that he did not know enough about them to give an opinion. He is teaching Christianity in one country, and aspires to teach religious teachers in this. And yet he has no opinion on secret societies, though the Prince of Wales, the heir of the crown of England, is the Grand Master of Freemasons; and secret societies outnumber the U. S. church three or four to one! and almost all have "altars," and practice worship! One would suppose a clergyman would be ashamed of such ignorance. But John Quincy Adams said of the clergyman in his day: "It is an ignorance which they are careful to preserve."

When Dr. Peter Waldenstrom, a clergyman, and a member of Parliament in Sweden, was in this country, the writer made the same request of him, that he "would not leave America without giving public testimony against secret societies." Dr. Waldenstrom, like a man and a Christian, replied in the Mission-Friend, which issues eighteen or twenty thousand copies weekly, in substance, that no Christian should belong to a secret society. A good pastor of a good Congregational church lately said he had just returned from Lake Bluff, where he saw persons shouting glory to God and giving thanks for their sanctification, who wore badges of these secret societies on their clothes, in sight. If a secret order is an image of the Roman beast, those badges were his "marks." If the society is secret those badges, one would think, should be kept out of sight, at least. But lodges are spiritual brothels. And both publicity and secrecy are necessary to their infamous business.

We hope Dr. Meyer will not leave this country without forming and expressing an opinion of the secret altars, which in Palestine and Asia Minor "have dried up realms to deserts."

SHALL WE PITY SINNERS?

One says we should pity ministers who seem to be good men, but adhere to secret lodges.

Doubtless we should pity them, as we pity Mormons, Jews, Romanists and spirit-worshipers. Christ died for every Mormon of them all.

But it is getting to be time for ministers to know better than to worship at false altars, and "seek first" the interest of their churches. When scribes and priests knew and confessed Christ's miracles were real, yet adhered to and "brothered" with his contemners, he pronounced on them the most fearful woes.

SHALL THE WORLD'S FAIR BE CLOSED ON SUNDAY?

A fair representation of the American Sabbath Union gathered at the Auditorium, in this city, on Wednesday, to take formal action against the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday. Both morning and afternoon sessions were presided over by Colonel Elliott F. Shepard, the editor of the New York Mail and Express.

Among the prominent divines and laymen present were: Colonel Elliott F. Shepard, New York; the Rev. J. R. Taylor, Washington; Major General O. O. Howard, New York; President Francis L. Patton, Princeton College; the Revs. R. S. McArthur, J. Ellendorf, J. K. Knowles, New York; Professor H. E. Webster, Union College; Bishop J. P. Newman, F. C. Monfort, Cincinnati; Dr. Henson, Dr. Lawrence, A. B. Hyde, Lieutenant John Howard, E. F. Cragin, Chicago.

J. P. Metts, of Chicago, and the Rev. Mr. McLean were elected Secretary and Assistant Secretary of the meeting.

The National Commission of the World's Fair then being in session at the City Council Chamber, it was decided to send a letter to the commission asking a speedy hearing. The Rev. J. H. Knowles, General Howard, and Dr. Henson were appointed a committee to take the letter to the commission and return with an answer.

In the afternoon the arrangements for the visit to the commission culminated in the adoption of a lengthy memorial and the appointment of a committee of twenty-one, eight members of which in ten-minute talks will present various phases of the argument in favor of Sunday closing. Colonel Shepard is the chairman of the committee. The memorial to be presented to the Commission was adopted in the afternoon. It cites previous actions taken at great expositions in favor of Sunday closing, and presents reasons why the Fair should not remain open on the Sabbath.

E. F. Cragin presented to the meeting the plans of the Columbian Sabbath Association for the great series of religious meetings to be held on Sundays during the World's Fair. A committee was appointed to aid in the work of preparing literature on the Sabbath question to be printed in all languages, for free distribution at the World's Fair. Before adjournment a resolution was adopted requesting the union to hold both the convention of '91 and that of '92 in Chicago.

In the National Commission, President Thomas W. Palmer, at the opening of the session, had introduced the Rev. Dr. Henson, of the First Baptist Church, who said in the course of a fervent invocation:

> We pray that Thou wilt bless our rulers; that Thou wilt give them wisdom from on high to guide them in the coming exposition for which we are making preparations. We pray that there may be such a display not only of material resources, of mechanical contrivances, of educational development, but of moral and religious power that all the representatives of the nations of the earth, who shall come up to this metropolitan city to witness this great exposition, shall be constrained to exclaim, "Blessed is the people that is in such a case; blessed is the people whose God is the Lord."

The prayer seemed to precipitate the Sunday question into the Commission, and a communication was presented from representatives of the American Sabbath Union, asking for a hearing on the general subject. The signers were J. H.

Knowles, of New York, General Secretary of the American Sabbath Union; Charles H. Howard, Secretary Columbian Sunday Association; P. S. Henson, Chicago.

The petition was granted, and a committee appointed to arrange the time, and at the same time notify the commissioners that the matter rested with the Chicago directory. The Lady Managers of the Fair subsequently refused to entertain the question of closing it on Sundays.

MUSGRAVE, THE PYTHIAN KNIGHT.

Among recent sensations is the attempt of B. R. Musgrave, a member of the order of the Knights of Pythias, in Indiana, to defraud insurance companies out of large sums of money on the pretence that he was dead. By the testimony of Frederick Markle, Musgrave's brother-in-law, and the confession of Charles M. Trout, a young real-estate dealer, who was implicated in the crime, the facts in the case have been made public, and the insurance companies have saved their funds. The arrest of Musgrave on charges of arson, conspiracy to defraud, and forgery, is a sequence that would naturally follow his exposure.

Musgrave is a shrewd operator, and the story of his conspiracy contains several points of interest, as related in the daily press. Prior to entering upon this system of fraud, it is alleged, he had participated in the forgery of a mortgage for the sum of $2,000. The fear of arrest for this crime, if the money to release the mortgage was not promptly forthcoming, appears to have been an important factor in his fraudulent designs. In the early part of August, he conceived the idea of insuring his life heavily in a number of companies, and then to disappear from the world. Acting on this idea, he took out a $10,000 accident insurance in the United States Mutual, $5,000 in the Ætna, and $15,000 in two other companies. He generously distributed the insurance in this way: Twenty thousand dollars payable to his mother, $5,000 to his sister, Miss Anna Musgrave, and $5,000 to his affianced, Miss Catherine McLaughlin, residing in Minneapolis, Minn.

On August 12 he purchased a skeleton at the store of Parsons & Co., dealers in skeletons for museum purposes at St. Louis, paying $105 therefor. This skeleton was shipped to Chicago by Wells-Fargo Express on Aug. 14 in the name of T. B. Burnham, and was taken away by Musgrave, who brought it to Otter Creek Junction, near Terre Haute, Trout accompanying him. It was contained in a box a foot square and two feet long, and was carried by Musgrave along with a valise across the prairie to the cabin.

Musgrave took up his abode in the lonely cabin, August 15. It was agreed that in order to establish that Musgrave was really in the cabin, Trout should "work" several prominent Knights of Pythias and others to go up to see him, and this was done.

Sunday night Trout and Musgrave took the skeleton out of the box. Trout said that Musgrave trembled and was so nervous he could do nothing. "This thing has gone too far to back out now," said Trout, and he laid out the skeleton in the bunk among the straw, and placed the Knights of Pythias emblem with Musgrave's name on it beside it.

Musgrave fired the cabin about 10 o'clock, and it was his tracks to the cornfield that were seen when he saw that the fire had a good start, and he crossed over to the Junction and caught the train for Chicago.

The valise and box were left in the cabin; also Musgrave's spectacles. They talked about leaving his shoes, also, but as he only had the pair on his feet, they thought it too risky to try to buy a new pair at Tecumseh or Terre Haute. Musgrave did not leave his watch, either. The skeleton was hung together by cat-gut, in the usual manner of museum skeletons.

Trout claims he tried to dissuade Musgrave from his desperate designs, but did not succeed. He also claims he was to have no share in the insurance money in case it was paid, but that is not believed.

In case the scheme worked, Musgrave was to take his mother and sister to England and live.

The authorities in Indiana were considerably mystified when the remains of the cabin and skeleton were discovered, but there was obviously something crooked in the affair, and further developments were patiently awaited, with the result above indicated. Musgrave, after his escapade, came to Chicago and hid himself, assuming the name of T. G. Thornton.

The inference by no means follows that the Knights of Pythias are all such fellows as Musgrave; but the reflection naturally arises, why does not the order exercise more caution in admitting candidates to its confidence? It professes to throw the utmost protection around its own members, but that does not protect the public against their machinations.

THE MAFIA IN PENNSYLVANIA.

A dispatch from Hazelton, Pa., not long since, noted the arrival there of Guiseppe de Comali, an Italian, who is charged with the murder of Katie Gorgano. As he stepped from the train a crowd of excited people made a rush for him, crying: "Lynch him, lynch him!" Police, however, guarded the prisoner, who was given an immediate hearing. The evidence was mainly circumstantial, but he was held for trial in bonds of $10,000. When the news of his capture reached Latimer, the home of the murdered girl, the Italians there threatened to go to Hazelton, and "hack him to pieces." The mob, however, under the influence of the mine officials, subsided. Later in the day, two prominent Italians asked the police to surrender Comali to a society composed of Italians of which they are the principals. They said the society were determined to hang him as a warning to other lawless Italians, and if necessary they would go to Wilkesbarre and take him out of court and do it. This probably refers to the Mafia.

PROHIBITIONISTS IN NEW YORK.

The State Convention of Prohibitionists met at Albany, N. Y., on the 2d inst., with an attendance of over 1,500 gentlemen and ladies. Henry Clay Bascom presided. In the evening a mass meeting was held, and on the following morning the Committee on Resolutions presented a platform, which was adopted, without amendment, as follows:

It denounces high license, affirms that legislators in this State, both Democratic and Republican, are subject to the control and dominion of the liquor interest, and calls for the submission to the voters of the State of a prohibitory amendment; favors the appointment of a non-partisan tariff commission, and says that such commission should so adjust the details of a schedule that the sum total of import duties shall not exceed the revenue requirements of the government, and the duties levied on important articles of manufacture shall be no higher than are necessary to restore to the home manufacturer whatever equality of conditions he may have lost by reason of the payment of a higher scale of wages in their production; denounces the State Department for assisting the brewers to extend their business in our sister republics of South America; favors the submission to the people of a female suffrage amendment; declares against National banks, and advocates the issue of treasury notes redeemable in gold or silver, and the maintenance of a metal reserve sufficient for that purpose, and calls for the strict enforcement of the civil service laws.

The convention, before adjourning, made the following nominations for State officers:

Governor—J. W. Bruce, a retired farmer of Canastota, Madison county.

Lieutenant Governor—George W. Halleck, a prosperous farmer of Suffolk county.

Secretary of State—William E. Booth, of Livingstone county.

State Treasurer—Francis E. Crawford, of Westchester county.

Comptroller—William W. Smith, of Poughkeepsie.

State Engineer and Surveyor—H. P. Forbes, Professor of the University of Canton, St. Lawrence county.

Attorney General—S. E. Crosser, of Buffalo.

REFORM CONVENTION IN KANSAS.

A call, signed by S. Hart, Lecompton, State Secretary; G. A. Torrence, Denison, Treasurer, and D. H. Coulter, Winchester, all members of the Executive Committee of the Kansas State Association, auxiliary to the N. C. A., and of which J. S. T. Milligan is President, has been issued for a convention to be held at Denison, Jackson Co., Kan., beginning on Wednesday evening, October 14, 1891, and continuing throughout the next day and evening.

The object is to revive the work of Reform in Kansas.

Addresses by able speakers from a distance may confidently be expected.

Friends of the cause in Kansas are urged to send delegates, and to raise and forward liberal contributions.

Delegates from adjoining States will be cordially welcomed, and free entertainment will be provided. There should be a large attendance.

—A recent note in the Advance, attributing in some degree the non-attendance of men in the churches to the multiplicity of lodges, is having a wide publication in other papers. The comparative statistics of lodge and church in our great cities given by the Advance can be repeated in their ratio from the notice column of most of our local papers throughout the country.

—The Boston organ of the Knights of Legion of Honor is quite sure that a "sermon" by a Baptist divine on an approaching Sunday evening about the order, "cannot fail to be of great service to the order, as well as to those who have the pleasure of hearing it." The "great service to the order" is understood to be found in roping in the innocents on the score of lodge charity.

—It is alleged that within the Farmers' Alliance, like a wheel within a wheel, a secret society of Socialists has been discovered; and as socialism is one of the worst enemies of good government, this discovery, if confirmed, can have only one effect—to bring disgrace and defeat upon the order that fosters or encourages it. The American people are not yet ready for anarchy or socialism.

—In a recent editorial on the Farmer's Alliance the New York Witness re-affirmed its long-standing and truthful convictions respecting the principle of secretism in such organizations. It says: "When the Farmers' Alliance gets ready to drop its secrecy, its advocacy of inflation and paternalism in general, and its attempts at cornering markets, then there will be a great future before it." The Witness is one of the first on the list of American journals on whose opinions we can rely, whatever topic is discussed.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Congressman John L. Mitchell, of Milwaukee, has offered to create twenty scholarships of $50 each in the short course in agriculture at the University at Wisconsin.

—John H. Durham (colored), of Kentucky, at present United States Consul at San Domingo, Friday was appointed by the President Minister resident and Consul General to Hayti.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard, who has been in New England for about a fortnight, assisting the New England agent in his Reform work, returned to Washington last week much encouraged. Bro. J. P. Stoddard has been ill, but is nearly recovered.

—Bro. Wm. Fenton, of St. Paul, Minn., who visited Chicago last week, kindly led the Cynosure noon prayer meeting two days. Bro. Fenton is strong in the Lord, fearless for the truth, and is doing good work in the anti-secrecy reform cause.

—By a will probated Thursday, Laura Mott, of South Hero, Vt., gives a property amounting to nearly $50,000 for the establishment of a home for destitute children under the name of the "Mott Home." The institution is to receive children under the age of 7 and educate them until they are 18 years of age.

—The generous offer of Miss E. Holmes, of Rockford, to give $100,000 for the establishment of a seminary for colored girls in Mississippi, has started quite a rivalry among several cities in that State. Not only the colored people but the whites are anxious to have the location of the school which the Illinois woman proposes to found. The principal competitors are Natchez, Greenville, and West Point. Each of these cities offers a free site and a considerable bonus to increase the endowment of the school.

THE HOME.

AUTUMN PLOUGHING.

More than the beauty of Summer
Is shed on the hills to-day,
And the fragrant breath of the vintage
Is borne on the winds away,
As, father and sons together,
The farmers are guiding the plough;
Deep and straight is the furrow
They set in the green earth now.

"Plough deep," is the old man's counsel,
As they turn the fallow field
That yet shall laugh with the harvest,
And wave with a golden yield,
"Plough deep and straight," and the sturdy
Answer rings back with a will,
As the tilth is ready for sowing
On the sun-swept reach of hill.

I watch, and over my spirit
There wafts an echoed psalm;
Sweet as a thought of our Father,
And full of heaven's balm:
God knows how deep the furrow
Needed by soul of mine,
'Ere the stony soil shall quicken
And bloom with fruits divine.

And God who cares for the vintage
When the sap is in the stem,
And God who crowns the Summer
With the Autumn's diadem,
And God who all the Winter
Beholds the world's bread grow,
May be trusted for loving-kindness,
Though his plough-share lay me low.

In the storm and sun, our Father
Hath a care surpassing ours,
That is fain to find a shelter
For our little fragile flowers.
Why do we borrow trouble,
And why resist His hand,
That sends us gifts in sorrow
That we do not understand?

HELPING.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

XIII.

"What have you got to tell me, Fanny?" she asked, after I had been with her a few minutes.

"How do you know I have anything to tell you?"

"Oh, I know by your face. Out with it."

"It isn't one bit nice."

"That is too bad. Tell me, dear."

"I am going away—going to live in another place."

"Going away? Why, I thought you were a fixture here."

"Seems I'm not."

"Where are you going?"

"West—clear West."

"What fun that will be," she said; "it is so different there from what it is here. When are you going?"

"In a month or six weeks."

She knew how I felt about it, and we said little more on the subject, but sat with clasped hands, no doubt each thinking of what might come before the month or six weeks should expire.

After awhile, she said, "I wish we could have just one more meeting all together before you go. Go and call Robert," she added, her face flushing with excitement; "he'll fix it for me."

She was very weak, but persisted until it was arranged to have all the members of the Grace Darling Society gathered quietly at her home the next morning.

Her father carried her down stairs, and we found her propped up in a large chair, dressed in simple white, with her favorite flowers, a bunch of pansies, fastened at her throat.

"I thought it would be nice for us to have one more meeting," said our Little Captain, when we were all seated about her. "So many of you are going away; and Fanny is going, never to come back, perhaps."

I have not said that several of the boys were going to college, and two or three of the girls would be away for the rest of the summer.

"Have any of you anything to report?" she asked, looking round the quiet group.

They looked from one to another, and as there seemed no answer coming, Grace went on:

"Father got a letter from Mrs. Sinclair, Peter's mother, the other day. Here, Gussie, will you read it, please?"

Gussie read as follows:

"Der sir, I want to thank yu fur al yu did to help me and Pete and I want yu to thank them yung folks wot left the muney on my tabel. I know it wus them, one of the nabors wus in and saw them do it. Im goin to be a better woman and maybe God will let me and Pete see ech other sumtime. His graveston is just what I wanted fur him. Yur frend, "ARABEL SINCLAIR."

"I'm glad," said Tom.

There was a little murmur of assent all round the room, quieted by Grace's voice. It was a very weak voice, but there was in it a strong key-note of joy.

"I think God has been so good to us. We did so little, but he has encouraged us right along."

It was not easy to talk, yet the silence was most trying. Tom felt it, and with his usual care tried to break through the restraint that was upon us, speaking up in a quick, bright way.

"Well, I know one thing, if we never are able to work together after this, we'll never be sorry we had our Society. If we boys in college remember our pledge, it will help us more than we think. And who knows what work may not spring up out in that dismal West—is it a howling desert, Fanny?—after Fanny gets there."

"No, it is not a howling desert," I said, and went on to tell them what little I knew about my future home.

Grace lay among her pillows watching us all, with a sweet smile upon her face. When I had finished talking, she said:

"Fanny, will you give one of these to each of them?" handing me a little packet of cards. I glanced at them and saw our pledge neatly written in her handwriting, signed with her name, and a little blank left for the name of the member underneath, the date of the original writing and signing of the pledge in tiny figures in one corner.

"I thought it might help us to remember what we promised to do," said our Little Captain. "We cannot all have the book it is written in, so I copied it out. There are enough for all, are there not?"

She could not have had a sweeter thought for us, as her parting one, than those simple, daintily-written little pledge-cards.

We bade her good-by after that—or rather, the others did, for though nothing was said about it, every one knew it was the last time they would greet their Little Captain on earth.

She was very tired after they had gone, and held out her hands to me with a sob, like a little child. I gathered her in my arms and carried her upstairs myself, singing to her until she fell asleep.

The days passed rapidly,—too rapidly. I could not bear the thought of leaving her while she still lived, and I could not bear the thought that she must soon die.

One lovely morning early in September, we watched the last load of household goods leave our home. In two days we would go. Mother said to me, as we went back into the dismantled house where we had lived so many years, "There, we have nothing more to do now till Thursday. I shall not need you, dear, so you may stay with Grace all you wish."

Of course I hurried away.

"How is she this morning?"

"Very weak, very weak. She was asking for you."

I went quickly up to the little room, grown so sacred to those who loved her. She reached out one wasted hand to me.

"I'm so glad you've come," she whispered.

"I can stay with you now, dear, till Thursday."

She smiled for answer. After awhile she said:

"Are you tired, Fanny?"

"No, darling. What do you want?"

"I would like to sleep, and I can't. Father is all tired out. Do you think you could hold me awhile? I feel as if I could rest, if you would baby me."

She would have laughed had she been strong enough, but her beautiful eyes were as full of their old, merry light as ever. I sat down with her in a rocking chair, holding her easily, so small and slight was she, and singing until the white lids drooped. After that, her father and I took turns holding her when she was weary, for it was the only way she could rest.

Thursday morning came.

"What time do you go?" she asked me.

"Five this afternoon."

Her eyes sought mine, and I knew all she would have said. I was holding her in my arms, and was alone with her, her father and the others having gone to snatch a hurried meal while she might rest, but the bright eyes refused to close, at first, and no rest came to the aching little body.

"Put me down, Fanny, it's no use."

"I'm not tired, darling, if you are easier here."

"You hold me so strongly—how you help me—"

She dropped asleep even while speaking. There was a little bell at my side, but though I was alarmed at the pallor of her face, I would not disturb that first rest after hours of wakefulness.

Soon she opened her eyes and looked at me.

"Why, Fanny!" her voice rang out clear, strong and joyous, "I feel well! Oh, isn't God good? Always love him, Fanny. He's so good. Now, I'll sleep again."

She nestled closer to me, first putting up her lips for a kiss. I reached out my hand to touch the bell, but she shook her head with a little smile, and slept. By and by the others came back. They started when they saw the change that had come over her. But she was breathing softly and regularly. Once more the heavy lids lifted, and she smiled up into the anxious faces.

"I was so tired," she said, "but I feel all rested now. I am ready to go,—I was too tired before. Isn't God good?" Slowly the light died out of those glad eyes, slower and slower came the life-breath, until all was still. Then they took her from my arms, and I bade our Little President good-by.

That afternoon found mother and me on board the steamer Prussia. Quite a number of friends stood on the wharf waiting to wave us a last farewell. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Clarke, with Sophia and dear little Delia. How the children had clung round my neck when I bade them good-by! Just at the last minute there appeared in a body every one of the dear class-mates—the Grace Darling Society. I watched the familiar faces when the boat moved away until I could distinguish them no longer; then my eyes rested on the distant mountain at whose foot my little friend would take her long rest.

It all happened over ten years ago, and I sometimes wonder where each of that band of helpers is, and if they hear again as often as I do our Little Captain's appeal, "Oh, don't let us not think about people ever again!"

THE END.

A BRAVE GIRL.

A fast young man decided to make a formal offer of his hand and heart,—all he was worth. He cautiously prefaced his declarations with a few questions. Did she love him well enough to live in a cottage with him? Was she a good cook? Did she think it a wife's duty to make home happy? Would she consult his tastes and wishes concerning her associates and pursuits in life? Could she make her own clothes, etc.? The young lady said that, before she answered his questions, she would tell him of some negative virtues she possessed. She never drank, smoked or chewed; never owed a bill to a laundress or tailor; never stayed out all night playing billiards; never lounged on the street corners and ogled giddy girls; never stood in with the boys for cigars and wine suppers. "Now," said she, rising indignantly, "I am assured that you do all these things, and yet you expect all the virtues in me, while you do not possess any yourself. I can never be your wife;" and she bowed him out and left him on the doorstep a wiser man.

CARRIE SCOTT'S BLUE CALICO.

A writer in the Congregationalist tells a pleasant story of Carrie Scott when she was a school girl in Miami Seminary, at Oxford, O., of which her father was president.

One day Carrie found a poor classmate in tears, and upon inquiring the reason found that the girl could not afford a new dress to wear on graduation day.

"I know I am foolish to care," she sobbed, "but I cannot help it."

Miss Scott was full of sympathy, and offered to lend her a dress from her own wardrobe. But the offer was declined, and she then set her wits to work to help her friend without wounding her self-respect. The president's daughter was a great favorite in the class, and calling her mates together a few days later, she proposed that they should all dress alike on graduation day. The girls readily agreed, and allowed her to choose the material. She chose a blue calico covered with little white sprigs. This was within the means of the poorest.

The same thoughtfulness for others had always been a leading trait in her character, and it is not strange that a man like Benjamin Harrison, when looking about for a good wife, should select such a sensible and thoughtful girl; and so it came to pass that the girl who picked out the blue calico dress came to be the mistress of the White House at Washington, and the wife of the President of the United States.

HOW HE RUINED HIMSELF.

Mrs. Stowe relates the following incident, which is worth remembering by all those who conform their action to public opinion, without special reference to justice and righteousness:

Mr. Van Zandt, a well-to-do farmer of Kentucky, was moved by a humane impulse to liberate his slaves, and removed into the State of Ohio. Governed by a similar impulse of humanity, he received and protected fugitive slaves in his adopted State. For this he was seized, imprisoned, his property attached, and he threatened with utter ruin.

Salmon P. Chase, then a rising young lawyer in Cincinnati, had the bravery to appear as his counsel. As he was leaving the court-room after making his plea, one of the judges remarked, "There goes a young man who has ruined himself to-day," and the sentiment was echoed by the general views of society.

The case went against Mr. Van Zandt, and Chase carried it to the Supreme Court of the United States. Here, also, argument and justice were utterly ignored, and the case was decided against him. But how did the young lawyer ruin himself? In this way, that a few years later, Salmon P. Chase was himself Chief Justice of the United States.

AN ACCOMMODATING EMPRESS.

The following pleasant story comes across the briny deep:

The celebrated Dr. Metzger, of Amsterdam, who last year successfully treated the Empress of Austria, has only one waiting-room for all his patients, whatever their rank and condition. Each has to wait his turn. Some time ago a poor woman who happened to be there turned to her neighbor, a lady of distinguished appearance, notwithstanding the simplicity of her attire, and said:

"How long we have to wait, to be sure! I dare say you have got a little child at home, too?"

"No."

"But when you get back you will have to sweep out your rooms?"

"No, I have folks who do that for me."

"Indeed? But you'll want to get dinner ready?"

"Not even that, for I dine at the hotel."

"Very well, as you have nothing particular to do, you might let me have your turn?"

"Very willingly," replied the lady, who was the Empress of Austria.

FOR YOUNG SPEAKERS—AND OLD ONES.

Beware of affected speech. Pronounce your words without either dawdle or twist. Don't make yourself a laughingstock by putting on airs. Yet speak as well as you know how; especially using common words, that common people understand. If an error in grammar or pronunciation is pointed out to you, drill yourself so as hereafter to wholly avoid it; for in almost every congregation is some one who knows, and may spend some of his time thinking you an ignoramus, which ought to be spent in drinking in the message of God.—Harvester.

THE BIRD WITH A BROKEN WING.

I walked in the woodland meadows,
Where sweet the thrushes sing;
And I found on a bed of mosses
A bird with a broken wing.
I healed the wound; and each morning
It sang its old sweet strain.
But the bird with a broken pinion
Never soared as high again.

I found a youth, life-broken
By sin's seductive art;
And touched with Christ-like pity
I took him to my heart.
He lived with a noble purpose,
And struggled not in vain.
But the soul with a broken pinion
Never soars as high again.

But the bird with a broken pinion
Kept another from the snare,
And the life that sin had stricken
Raised another from despair.
Each loss had its compensation;
There were healings for each pain;
But a bird with a broken pinion
Never soars as high again.

TEMPERANCE.

A FORTY-FIVE-TON SALOON COUNTER.

Col. D. Soper, member of a Chicago lumber firm, was sent out to this coast about four weeks ago by a prominent brewing company to obtain, if possible, a stick of timber over 100 feet long and four feet square. After spending some little time in prospecting, he finally found a tree in Snoqualmie Valley, in Washington, which filled the bill. The job of cutting down the tree and trimming and loading it on the cars was let to a contractor, who successfully did the work. A half mile of railroad track had to be laid to the spot where the tree stood in order to load it on the cars. The stick from this tree is 111 feet long. It is cut square, each side being four feet. It was loaded on three 34-foot cars, its weight being 90,000 pounds. The cost of getting out this stick of timber has been so far $1,300. The cost of moving it to the cars was $100, and the tarpaulin to cover it cost $100. At Tacoma yesterday the stick was viewed by Sidney Dillon, S. H. H. Clark, Edward Dickinson, and other Union Pacific officials. It arrived in Portland last evening and goes East to-day. It will be placed in a big beer hall, in which it is to be used for a counter. It will be polished up in the highest style of the art.—Portland Oregonian.

PREPARING FOR THE WORST.

A new phase of underwriting is the Liquor Trafficker's Mutual Insurance, just organizing in England, with a capital of one million pounds and provision for increasing it to five millions if necessary. The total valuation of property vested in the traffic in England and Wales is estimated at £169,000,000. Since the defeat of the Compensation Clauses the chief organ of the trade concedes that a magistrate has a perfect right to refuse the renewal of a license as he thinks best. The House of Commons refused provisional endowment for the lords of the spigot, hence this move to protect one another against the failure to obtain renewal of licenses. It is something unique in insurance, and shows that English liquor-sellers anticipate growing difficulty in obtaining renewal of their licenses.—Union Signal.

PUT DOWN THE SALOON.

From a political point of view it is to be said that the saloon has never anywhere furnished an intelligent, progressive, righteous, economical and efficient government. From its inherent nature it never will. The average saloon is ignorant, indolent, vicious, and dishonest. There are few exceptions. There has never been a reformation in the liquor traffic, and never can be. The only reformation a liquor dealer experiences is abandoning the trade as essentially and incurably evil. There is a comparatively innocent sale of wines and distilled spirits, but it is not to be found in the saloon. As a political factor, this element always has been, is now, and of necessity always will be, a degrading, dishonest and polluting one. The saloon is to-day the mainstay of that which is most corrupt in American politics, and as well of that which is most thoughtless, negligent and inefficient. The saloon in power always has been, always will be there for the sakeof the money it can get through office-holding, and to wield corrupt and corrupting political forces.

Unspeakably serious are the facts that the saloons of the United States send eighty thousand youths annually down into drunkards' graves; that wherever they exist they afflict more families and slay more bodies than war and pestilence; that they are the chief causes of pauperism, crime and insanity; that they are the chief law-breakers in every community and the resorts where crime centers and the places where men are stimulated to crimes of the worst character; that they are dens of profanity, lewdness and ungodliness; that they are the open enemies of the church of Christ and of almost every endeavor to improve the moral condition of men; that they are one of the chief foes of the home, and fill thousands of homes with discomfort, poverty, brawling, violence, torturing anxiety and long-continued suffering and anguish.

Either for or against that sort of thing Christian men are to vote this fall. There ought not to be any doubt on which side they will be found. In one locality the saloon seeks alliance with Republicans, in another with Democrats. It ought to be defeated in both. Honest differences of opinion can be settled, and more wisely and satisfactorily settled, when the saloon is excluded from political power and put under restraint.—Christian Intelligencer.

ENORMOUS WASTE.

The people of this city succeed in disposing of 47,000,000 gallons of intoxicants every year, that is, 1,504,000,000 drinks. If the big Croton reservoir at Forty-second street were filled with such beverages New Yorkers would empty it nearly two and one-half times during a year. If the big Central Park reservoir, having a capacity of 200,000,000 gallons, should be filled with liquor, beer, and wine, the consumers in the cities of New York and Brooklyn and the State of New Jersey would empty it in two years. New Yorkers spend over $70,000,000 every year for liquor, beer, and wine. There are in the city 7,787 places licensed to sell alcoholic drinks. In order to exist the smallest one of these places must sell at least $10 worth of drinks a day. Many of the best bars take in $125 to $150 a day. At the Hoffman House, where one has to pay fancy prices to bask in the smiles of classic art, the receipts are fully $500 a day. Averaging all the bars in town, they take in about $25 a day, or $70,000,000 a year.—The New York Morning Journal.

SHREWD MANUFACTURERS.

The Washburn Moen Wire Company, employing a large force of men whose weekly pay-rolls is twenty thousand dollars, were on the point of locating their works in South Chicago, purchasing sixty acres at $1,500 per acre, when the proximity to the saloons was discussed, and it was decided hazardous as a business venture to bring so many workmen under the influence of the beer-mug and whisky-bottle, so the negotiations were given up, and Waukegan, Ill., about fifty miles from Chicago, was selected as the site, provided that the citizens would agree to abolish the sale of liquor in the town. This was done, and the plant has been removed to Waukegan. The moral does not need "pointing."—Union Signal.

DEMAND CAUSED BY SUPPLY.

Whoever doubts the ability of intoxicants to create a demand for themselves when placed in the market, should study the history of liquor legislation in India. Under Moslem rule, strict prohibition obtained. The Hindo, Pesh was, in the main, continued with the same policy towards intoxicants, but with the entrance of the British came the plan of regulation. Fifty years of excise law served to debauch the nation. Not the ignorant and debased were the sole or chief victims. Strong drink came in like a flood, carrying down in ruin some of the brightest minds among the highest Hindoos.—National W. C. T. U. Bulletin.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The parable of the sheep-fold.—vs. 1–6. A noble indignation must have filled the mind of Jesus at the cruel treatment by these false shepherds of the man he had just healed; and this discourse was intended to show to the people the difference between himself and their religious leaders; as well as to show some of the distinguishing characteristics of a true pastor. (1) He enters in by the door; that is, by the way of Christ, instead of climbing up some other way, like a thief and a robber. But we must remember that it is not simply coming in the name of Christ, or holding orthodox opinions about his person and work, that is meant by "entering in at the door;" but it is coming in his spirit, ministering tenderly to the weak and halting, and searching for those who have gone astray on the dark mountains of sin and unbelief. (2) "To him the porter openeth." Here is a beautiful truth, though commentators are not agreed who is meant by "the porter," but some of the best think it refers to the Holy Spirit, who rested upon Christ and bore witness to his mission. In the case of the human under-shepherd who is a true pastor of the flock, the meaning is very clear. The porter can be no other than the Holy Spirit. Wonders and signs may be wrought by false apostles, but their work is never accompanied by the witness of the Holy Ghost. They are obliged to "climb up some other way" when One who knows all things keeps the door. (3) "The sheep hear (or heed) his voice." This is a two-fold sign, showing who are the true sheep as well as distinguishing the true shepherd. (4) "He calleth his sheep by name." Each one of his flock is individually known to the Good Shepherd, and it is no forced interpretation to say that the true pastor will always seek to cultivate a personal acquaintance with those to whom he ministers. (5) "He goes before them." Where he leads they follow. If there is any danger to confront he will be the first to meet it. How anomalous the situation when the flock goes before the shepherd; when the latter skulks in the rear instead of putting himself at the front! (6) They will flee from the voice of strangers. The spiritual-minded among the flock will not go after false teachers, however plausible their doctrines may sound. "But they understood not this parable," simple and obvious as it seems, and though their own Old Testament abounded in similar figures, the severest denunciations of prophecy being heaped on the false shepherds "who fed not the flock." Just as Rome at the present day seeks to keep the common people from reading the Bible, and supplies them instead with the husks of mere formalism and tradition, so the scribes and Pharisees seem to have discouraged in the masses any attempt to investigate truth for themselves (Luke 11: 52), until the saddest result of spiritual tyranny was reached;—they grew contented with such fare, and spurned the living bread when it was offered them.

2. The hireling shepherd.—vs. 7–13. The thief and the hireling represent two classes. The one makes no pretence of protecting or feeding the flock. He "comes only to steal and to kill and to destroy," and is identical with the "grievous wolves" spoken of by Paul,—teachers of error, whose only aim is to wreck the faith and destroy the hopes of believers. But the hireling shepherd has a certain interest in the flock, though only a selfish and mercenary one. He represents the pastor who cares more to retain or increase his salary than he does for the flock over whom God has made him minister. And so he lets sin creep in unrebuked. How many souls have been captured by the lodge wolf because their pastor was a hireling and cared more for popularity and filthy lucre than for their eternal interests.

3. The Good Shepherd.—vs. 14–16. Two points are here laid down worthy of our serious attention. The Good Shepherd knows his sheep, and he also is known of them. Do we know Jesus in the sense that our first impulse in any danger or temptation or trial is to flee to him at once for succor? Then we may be assured that we are known of him. "As the Father knoweth me." This seems to hint at an acquaintance and communion between Christ and the believer similar in some respects to that between the Father and Son. "I lay down my life for the sheep." Here we have the grand difference between the Good Shepherd and the false hireling. Wherever there is true love for souls we find the Christ-like spirit of self-sacrifice, even to the willingness to lay down life itself for their salvation. "And other sheep I have." Christ's love and compassion took in all the human race. So will ours if we are like him. Has he not many sheep outside our church-folds, who need to be gathered in? And if we cannot give our personal effort to such a work, shall we not do what we can? "One fold and one shepherd." Surely such words are a prophecy of the day when denominational lines shall no more divide the Church of God, and our Saviour's prayer be answered:—"that they all may be one, even as we are one."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—By the will of the late Eli Perry, of Albany, the American Baptist Missionary Union, the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the New York Baptist Union for Ministerial Education, and Hamilton Theological Seminary were made residuary legatees. Accordingly each of these has received a check for $76,085.03, making a total of over $300,000.

—Spurgeon is said to be tortured with the idea that he has been silenced at a time of life when he had most to say; notwithstanding the fact that he has been preaching the "old, old story" for forty years, and that his sermons have been continually read by millions, scattered abroad in all lands.

—President W. R. Harper, of the new University of Chicago, gives notice that the office of the American Institute of Sacred Literature is at 391 Fifty-fifth Street, Chicago, Ill. All mail intended for the institute, for W. R. Harper, or for the American Publication Society of Hebrew, should be hereafter directed to that address.

—The First Baptist church in Pierrepont street, Brooklyn, will sell its property to the Brooklyn Savings Bank for $200,000. The church retains the organ and furniture worth about $5,000. It owes $30,354.17. Only a part of the balance will be invested in a new church.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. W. L. Bray will close a pastorate of seven and a half years at Kenosha, Wis., Nov. 1. During these years 156 persons have united with the church, ninety-five on confession. The benevolent contributions of the church for five years preceding 1884, were $210, during this pastorate they have been $619 annually; the Sunday-school has more than doubled and a debt of over $3,000 has been paid.

—Rev. Albert Bushnell of the Tabernacle church, St. Joseph, Mo., has been on the ground right through the summer, working upon the city in preparation for a union meeting under the lead of Rev. B. Fay Mills, who is expected the middle of September. Twenty-five churches engage heartily in the work. A tent seating nearly 3,000 people will be used.

—The Congregational Ministers' Union of Chicago and vicinity resumed its Monday morning meetings Sept. 7. The subject was, as is usual after the summer interregnum, Vacation Experiences.

—Last Sunday, Dr. John H. Worcester, of the Sixth Presbyterian church, Chicago, preached his farewell sermon, prior to leaving for New York City, where he is to begin his duties as Professor of Systematic Theology in Union Seminary Sept. 23. The transition from a pastorate to so important a professorship is somewhat abrupt, but Dr. Worcester is a man of marked ability.

—Rev. Dr. Noble, of the Union Park church, Ashland and Washington boulevards, Chicago, has returned from his visit to Europe, much refreshed.

EPISCOPAL.

—Rt. Rev. William Alexander, D.D., Bishop of Derry, one of the most distinguished of churchmen in the United Kingdom, is to lecture upon the evidences of Christianity before the students of Columbia College, New York, during next Lent.

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN.

—The twenty-third convention of the General Council of the Evangelical Lutheran church in North America, will be held in the church of the Holy Trinity, Buffalo, N. Y., Rev. F. A. Kaehler pastor, commencing October 15.

FRIENDS.

—The joint conference of Northern, Wabash, and Marion (Ind.) Quarterly Meetings, on peace, temperance, Sabbath-schools and home and foreign mission work, was held at South Wabash, Indiana, 8 Mo. 19th to 21st. Each session was opened with devotional exercises. Blanche Jones, of South Wabash, gave the address of welcome, and Ella Winslow, of Fairmount, the response.

—The Friends are not dying out. A decline in their membership in Great Britain began before the end of the last century and continued down to 1860, but since that date they have been increasing. In 1881 there were 14,981 members and 5,041 "attenders" at meeting. Since that year there has been an increase of about a hundred or two every year, and the figures for 1891 are 15,836 members and 6,110 attenders.

LUTHERAN.

—Immanuel Lutheran church, in Muncy Creek, Pa., celebrated, on July 23, the centennial of its foundation. An immense concourse of friends gathered at the services, and an elaborate program was carried out. The pastor, Rev. M. H. Havice, was assisted by Rev. J. M. Stech, of Williamsport, Pa., who gave an historical address, and Rev. J. M. Reimensnyder, of Milton, Pa., who spoke on home missions, and Rev. J. R. Sample, of Montomsville, Pa., who made an address on foreign missions. The historical address showed that twelve churches have been formed from the membership of Immanuel church, twenty-one students have gone from it during the last fifty years into the ministry.

—Prof. R. F. Weidner, well known as a writer on Scriptural themes, and also as a professor in Augustana Theological Seminary, at Rock Island, Ill., has removed to Chicago. It is understood that he will preach regularly on Sabbaths, in a Lutheran church on the West Side, and will also have charge of a newly organized branch of seminary work.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The session of 1891–92 at the McCormick Theological Seminary began on Thursday, Sept. 3. Prof. Herrick Johnson delivered the opening address to the students in the chapel.

—The Presbytery of Chicago will hold a special meeting in the Y. M. C. A. building, on Monday, Sept. 14, at 10:30 A. M., to hear reports from the committee on education and from the committee appointed to prepare a minute on the departure of Dr. Worcester to New York.

—The famous pastor of the Regent Square Presbyterian church, in London, England, Rev. John McNeill, preached twice in Chicago, Sunday before last, to "overflowing houses." His style of address defies description. Such rugged eloquence must be listened to to be appreciated. He is a man of stalwart presence and has a voice of great power and compass. His speech is neither sensational nor uncouth; far from either. He preaches like a scholar, as becomes a Scotch Presbyterian minister; but he is a scholar who is terribly in earnest, and who does not hesitate to state plain propositions in plain terms.

—The Presbyterian Journal has the following concerning the relative growth of Presbyterianism in Pennsylvania and New York: "The two synods (consolidating the previously existing ones in the States,) were formed in 1882, and then in communicant membership they were almost equal. New York had 133,091 communicants, Pennsylvania, 132,251. Now Pennsylvania has 172,367, and New York 165,159. Deducting the communicants outside of the States, the State of New York has 153,555, and the State of Pennsylvania 163,027.

—The committee of the New York Presbytery, appointed to prefer charges against Professor Briggs, has about completed its work, and will be ready at the meeting of the Presbytery in October to charge him with disbelief in the Bible as the only true source of divine authority, disbelief in the verbal inspiration and inerrancy of the Scriptures, disbelief in the immediate sanctification at death of the souls of those dying in the faith; and they will cite passages from his works to prove their charges. The labor of preparing the report has fallen upon Col. J. J. McCook, lawyer and elder in Dr. John Hall's church.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Union Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, has used the Scripture Psalms up to the present time. Rev. Alex. Waddell is pastor. In accordance with his wishes, it is stated, recently a vote was taken on their continued use. By a vote of 93 to 11 the songs of the Holy Spirit were discontinued as a matter of praise in that church. Could anything be more incongruous than the exclusion of the songs of the Holy Spirit from his own worship? —Christian Instructor.

Y. M. C. A.

—All Y. M. C. A. men, and friends of the work, should remember that the next convention of the associations of Illinois is to assemble at Jacksonville, Wednesday evening, October 14. Special attention will be directed this year to practical Bible study. Rev. Alex. Patterson, of Chicago, will give three Bible readings, and Prof. R. F. Weidner, of Rock Island, will give three addresses on Bible topics. The music of the convention will be in charge of Peter Bilhorn. The committee is in correspondence with Bishop J. H. Vincent, and hopes to secure his attendance. It is also in correspondence with other workers.

—The Young Men's Christian Association Training School, of Chicago, has passed through the first year of its life, and already is an assured success. The next term began Sept. 9, in the Y. M. C. A. building, 148 Madison St.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

A cargo of 117,000 bushels of grain, the largest yet, was taken by the Western Chief through the Chicago river.

At a meeting of the Board of Education, Superintendent Howland's resignation was accepted and Assistant Superintendent E. O. Delano was appointed to act as Superintendent until a successor to Mr. Howland is elected.

The Columbian Directory's executive committee unanimously communicated to the commission an expression that the government be asked to loan $5,000,000 to the fair on the security of the first gate receipts. A favorable reception was given the communication.

Isaac Jones, while riding on a cable car, had his leg pierced by the shaft of a wagon which came into collision with the car.

The waiters' unions of the city threaten to boycott the Democracy because of the fact that non-union bartenders and waiters were employed at the picnic Saturday.

It is practically decided that a tower will be erected at the World's Fair to exceed 1,100 feet in height and to cost $2,000,000.

A rate of one fare the round trip from points within 300 miles of Chicago will be sold Oct. 6 and 7 on account of the unveiling of the Grant monument.

A thousand cabinet makers went on a strike one day last week.

The American fat and live stock show will be held at Chicago in the Exposition Building, Nov. 11–21, inclusive. The aggregate premiums have been limited to $10,000.

A carload of American tin-plate arrived in the city.

COUNTRY.

O. H. Wisely secretly married a Miss Marvin at midnight Sunday, near Findlay, Ohio, against her parents' wishes. He then rode home and shot himself through the head.

Secretary Hester, of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, reports the total crop for 1891 as 8,652,597 bales, as against 7,311,322 bales last year.

Monday, the steamship Arizona arrived in New York with eight members of the Sea Gull's crew, which was wrecked on the African coast. They were picked up in midocean.

HARVEY ITEMS.

Ground was broken for the Harvey Industrial Academy on August 25.

Work on the Harvey waterworks progresses as fast as could be expected.

The grading of Calumet Boulevard in Academy Addition is nearly completed.

The material for the building of the extensive shops of the Bellaire Stamping Company is now on the ground.

The DuQuoin Iron Works and Blakeslee Manufacturing Company have closed contracts to move their extensive works to Harvey.

We notice the name of Mrs. Emma Smith Devoe, president of the Equal Suffrage Association of Harvey, as one of the purchasers of lots in Academy Addition.

No saloons, no gambling, no paupers, no jail, but instead beautiful homes, good schools, prosperous churches and plenty of work for everybody willing to work is a good description of Harvey.

Mr. J. C. Bloodgood, President of the Prohibition Club at Harvey, has secured the contract for building the Harvey Industrial School, which is located in block A, Academy Addition. He expects to have it ready for opening by Nov. 1.

Hardly a day goes by but a new house is contracted for on the Academy Addition — the educational center — where prices are reasonable, and of which Walter Thomas Mills & Co., 161 La Salle street, Chicago, have exclusive sale. They also supply readers of the Christian Cynosure with plat showing the whole of Harvey as originally proposed.

The sales of Walter Thomas Mills & Co., 161 La Salle street, Chicago, Ill., for the past week, have exceeded those of any week since April. As Academy Addition corners down almost to the very center of the town, and has superior advantages in prices of lots, the lay of the land, nearness to the city, natural drainage, etc., it is attracting home builders.

A syndicate of business women and men has been formed to construct a mammoth hotel on block R, Academy Addition, for the accommodation of Christian and Temperance people during the World's Fair. It will contain a large hall for lectures, reading room and everything for the comfort of its occupants. It is to be the headquarters for all reform workers. Away from the noise and bustle of the city and yet within fifteen minutes' ride of the fair grounds.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from Aug. 31 to Sept. 5:

J G Grose, Rev S Collins, A J Millard, C H McIntire, Mrs J A Spring, W G Walters, A C Rothermel, Rev J S T Milligan, D H Coulter, Eld R Smith, Rev J A Richards, J Humble.

HOME AND HEALTH.

FOR THE KITCHEN.

New tins should be set over the fire filled with water, for some hours before using them.

In selecting salt mackerel, examine them carefully. If rusty in appearance reject them.

Bread that is to be kept for a week should be kneaded longer than that to be eaten soon.

Soap lasts much longer if bought by the quantity, cut in squares and kept in a dry place to harden.

Mustard for instant uses should be mixed with milk—to which a little thin cream should be added.

The sauce par excellence for broils is mushroom ketchup; and the garnish crisp lettuce, watercresses or endive.

The marrow in bones should be scraped out and used for cooking. It is more delicate for this purpose than suet.

When you have spilled anything on the stove, or milk has boiled over and a suffocating smoke arises, sprinkle the spot with salt and it will disappear.

Butter for cooking should always be clarified. In "trying out" or clarifying butter it is done when the froth begins to rise. Skim, strain, store in a cool place and keep well covered.

The water drained from macaroni, cabbage, or any other vegetable, simmered with the bones from roast beef, a little boiled rice, a bit of onion, and thickening of flour, makes a good, palatable soup.

Carbolic acid is the best disinfectant known. It not only destroys foul odors but also all germs of disease.

Rhubarb should be put in the pie without first stewing.

Paint the kitchen buff: a kitchen cannot be too light and sunny-looking.

Rice puddings are much richer and better if cooked slowly and for a long time.

Scrubbing brushes should be kept with the bristles down, and they will last twice as long; common sense will tell you if you stand them the other way the water will run down and soak into the back, loosening the bristles, whether they be glued or wired.

THE EFFECTS OF OVERWORK.

The Lancet declares that "overwork, both mental and bodily, is at once the most general and the least regarded form of illness to which we are subject in the present age." We do not pay sufficient attention to the two great essentials of timely rest and wholesome diet. The signs of overwork are easily recognized. They are want of appetite and inability to sleep. Unfortunately, however, we are not always in a position to act upon the warning afforded by this simple test.

REMEDY FOR OBESITY.

Here is a remedy recommended for obesity, which is said to be deplorably prevalent among New York women. An hour before each meal, which should consist of meats, either boiled or roasted, fish, game, poultry, with a sparing amount of eggs nnd cheese, toasted bread and biscuits, drink a pint of boiling water gently in sips, and drink nothing with the meals. Avoid going to sleep in the daytime, and take as much outdoor exercise as compatible with your strength. —Selected.

THE EGG FOR DYSENTERY.

The egg is considered one of the best remedies for dysentery; beaten up lightly, with or without sugar, and swallowed at a gulp, it tends, by its emollient qualities, to lessen the inflammation of the stomach and intestines, and by forming a transient coating on these organs, to enable nature to resume her healthful sway over a diseased body. Two, or at most three, eggs per day would be all that is required in ordinary cases; and since eggs are not merely medicine, but food as well, the lighter the diet otherwise, and the quieter the patient is kept, the more certain and rapid is the recovery.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Bald heads are too many when they may be covered with a luxuriant growth of hair by using the best of all restorers, Hall's Hair Renewer.

FOR THE TOILET

There is no more useful or elegant article than Ayer's Hair Vigor—the most popular and economical hair-dressing in the market. It causes the hair to grow abundantly and retain the beauty and texture of youth; prevents baldness, heals troublesome humors of the scalp and keeps it clean, cool, and healthy. Both ladies and gentlemen everywhere prefer Ayer's Hair Vigor to any other dressing for the hair. Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, E. Pittston, Me., writes: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time, and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and falling hair, so that I was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor, my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor to any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair." *

" " " (11 jewel) 19.50

This is a good, serviceable watch. The movement is the seven jewel Elgin. Always a reliable time piece. Perhaps more of this grade of ladies' watches are in use than any other. The case is gold filled, beautifully engraved in landscape.

Retail value.....$30.00
With the Cynosure one year..... 16.75

THE NEW LADY ELGIN.

A little beauty. The movement has just been completed and placed on the market by the Elgin Co. It is No. 0 size, 7 jewel, and a good time keeper. The Case is gold filled, the exact size of cut. This is the best cheap watch yet. With care it will wear a life time.

Retail value..... ..$25.00
With the Cynosure one year..... 15.50

OUR ELGIN MONARCH.

This watch contains the celebrated G. M. Wheeler Elgin movement, fifteen jewels, (four pair in settings), patent regulator, etc. The case is the Monarch pattern, gold filled, 14-K., hunting case with full box joints and handsomely engraved with deer, locomotive, or landscape figures. With each case is the manufacturer's guarantee that it will wear twenty-one years.

FARM NOTES.

FRUIT CULTURE.

Fruit culture, like farming, in this country, has been comparatively easy. The early settlers introduced fruits, and the apple, the pear, the plum, the cherry, and the peach, together with small fruits, were raised more or less plentifully in colonial times. As new lands were entered upon, and local markets developed, new orchards and fruit gardens were planted. But successively each branch of the industry, when extended, has found new and numerous enemies in insects and fungi; and especially is this true since railroad facilities have been increased, and quick transportation and ready markets have favored the planting of large areas. The extension of fruit-grounds and the increase of fruit enemies have proceeded pari passu, good breeding grounds and a plentiful supply of nutriment favoring the parisitic hordes, until it has seemed that their destruction was possible only by the destruction of the hosts upon which they live and rear their progeny.

For some years past one has seldom been able to see sound apples, whether the orchards have borne abundantly or sparsely. The great enemy of this fruit has been the codlin moth, and for years it baffled the ingenuity and perseverance of orchardists for its destruction. Now we have learned how to deal with it, and year after year sees the practice extending of spraying the trees with Paris green when the fruit is just formed. And this practice must be continued by all who expect to raise sound apples. Some, perhaps many, will neglect to make use of this means, and as a result will have only wormy fruit, which will command a low price in market. Those who will not take the necessary pains to secure sound fruit will eventually be driven out of the business.—Vick's Magazine.

FORMING A COLT'S HABITS.

It is a great deal easier to prevent a colt, or a horse, from forming a bad habit than it is to break him of it after it has been formed. And, as far as observation goes, it is much better for the animal, and a great deal more satisfactory to the owner. This applies to a large class of habits which are liable to be formed and which causes a great amount of mischief. Among these habits is that of running away—one of the worst habits which the horse can have, for it imperils not only the person using him, but is liable to endanger the lives of many others who may chance to be in his path. With proper care and handling from his earliest days, the horse may be so trained that he will stand where he is told to stand, and will stay where he is left until his master is ready to take him elsewhere. He can also be so accustomed to noises and to unusual sights and occurrences, that he will not be likely to be frightened at anything that may happen. Some horses are much more quiet and tractable than others, but the exceptions to the rule we have stated are very few. But a little carelessness, a little neglect, may cause a colt to run away, to kick, or to do some other act which will be the beginning of a habit which will render him unsafe to use, and will greatly diminish his value either to keep or sell. Consequently, the utmost care should be given to the handling and education of the colt, and it should be continued until his good habits are so fully formed as to become second nature. Even then there should be skill and care on the part of the man or woman who has him in charge. A safe and skillful driver will always be cautious and watchful.—American Dairyman.

FATTENING CHICKENS FOR THE TABLE.

The three prime rules to be observed are: Sound and varied foods, warmth, and cleanliness. There is nothing that a fattening fowl grows so fastidious about as his water. If water any way foul be offered him, he will not drink it, but sulk with his food and pine, and you all the while wondering the reason why. Keep them separate, allowing to each bird as much as you can spare, spread the ground with sharp, sandy gravel, and take care that they are not disturbed. In addition to the regular diet of good corn, make a cake of ground oats or beans, brown sugar, milk, and mutton suet. Let the cake lie till it is stale, then crumble it, and give each bird a gill measureful morning and evening. No entire grain should be given to fowls during the time they are fattening—indeed, the secret of success lies in supplying them with nutritious food without stint, and in such a form that their digestive mill shall find no difficulty in grinding it.—Journal of Agriculture.

Sallow and leaden-hued complexions soon give place to the loveliest pink-and-white, when the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla is persisted in, and cosmetics entirely abandoned. Nothing can counterfeit the rosy glow of perfect health, which blesses those who use this medicine.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors one gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.
